Amendment No. 8: Page 5, line 9:

"War Shipping Administration: Notwithstanding the provisions of section 203 of the First Supplemental National Defense Appropriation Act, 1943 (Public Law 678), the Office for Emergency Management, War Shipping Administration, may expend during the fiscal year 1943 not to exceed $294,430 for travel."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8 and concur in the same.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

Amendment No. 37: Page 16, line 16, insert as follows:

"GEOLOGICAL SURVEY

"To enable the Geological Survey to meet obligations incurred by it arising from cooperative work pending reimbursement from cooperating agencies in accordance with the provisions of the act of February 27, 1925 (43 U. S. C. 39, 40); May 10, 1926, as amended (43 U. S. C. 48); June 17, 1935 (43 U. S. C. 49); March 4, 1915, as amended (31 U. S. C. 686); and July 2, 1943 (56 Stat. 537-539), fiscal year 1943, $400,000, which amount shall be placed to the credit of the 1943 appropriation account of the Geological Survey: Provided, That there shall be returned to the Treasury not later than 6 months after the close of the fiscal year 1943 out of reimbursements received from cooperating agencies an amount equal to the sum herein appropriated."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37 and concur in the same.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

Amendment No. 41: Page 17, line 18:

"Defraying deficits in treasuries of municipal governments, Virgin Islands: For an additional amount, fiscal year 1943, for defraying the deficit in the treasury of the municipal government of St. Croix because of the excess of current expenses over current revenues for the fiscal year 1943 (56 Stat. 560), $45,000."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41 and concur in the same.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that amendments numbered 60 and 61 be considered simultaneously, as they relate to the same matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report Senate amendments numbered 60 and 61.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 60: Page 48, line 19, strike out all of line 19 and the balance of page 48 and strike out lines 1 to 9, inclusive, on page 49.

Amendment No. 61: Page 49, line 10, strike out "305" and insert "304."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 60 and 61.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, as a substitute I move that the House recede and concur in Senate amendment numbered 60 with an amendment, which I sent to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, a motion to recede and concur with an amendment is not in order.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman state the reason?

Mr. TABER. That has been the ruling right along as I have understood it.

The SPEAKER. The motion has not been reported yet. The Clerk will report the motion.

Mr. TABER. I beg pardon.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HOBBS moves that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment No. 60, with an amendment as follows: Substitute in lieu of the Kerr or committee amendment stricken by the Senate amendment No. 60, the following:

"SECTION 304

"1. It shall be unlawful for any person to be employed in any capacity, in any department or agency of the Government of the United States created by or by virtue of an act of Congress, whose compensation is paid from funds authorized or appropriated by any act of Congress, who has engaged in activity subversive of the Government of the United States.

"2. It shall be unlawful for any person to be employed in any capacity, in any department or agency of the Government of the United States created by or by virtue of an act of Congress, whose compensation is paid from funds authorized or appropriated by any act of Congress who has been a member of or associated with any organization, any part of the aims or purposes of which is or has been subversive of the Government of the United States.

"3. It shall be unlawful for any person employed in any capacity, in any department or agency of the Government of the United States, created by or by virtue of an act of Congress, whose compensation or any part thereof is paid from funds authorized or appropriated by any act of Congress, to have membership in or association with any organization, any part of the aims or purposes of which is or has been subversive of the Government of the United States.

"4. Any person who may have been or may be employed in violation of section 1, 2, or 3 hereof shall be immediately removed from such employment, and thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by any act of Congress shall be used to pay the salary or other compensation of any such person.

"5. Any person who is the head or acting head of personnel procurement for any department or agency of the Government of the United States created by or by virtue of an act of Congress, in which any person may have been employed in violation of section 1 or 2 hereof, or any other officer responsible for employment of any person in violation of section 1 or 2 hereof, or any officer who permits any employee to continue in employment in violation of section 3 hereof, if he knew, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence could have known of such violation of section 3 hereof, shall be immediately removed from the position or office held by him, and thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by any act of Congress shall be used to pay the salary or other compensation of such officer.

"6. It shall be unlawful for any person to accept employment in any capacity in any department or agency of the Government of the United States created by or by virtue of an act of Congress, whose compensation or any part thereof is paid from funds authorized or appropriated by any act of Congress, if he be ineligible therefor under sections 1 and 2 hereof.

"7. Any person who may have been employed in violation of sections 1 and 2 hereof and who shall remain in such employment after this act shall have become a law shall be guilty of a high crime and misdemeanor, and thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by any act of Congress shall be used to pay his salary or other compensation.

"8. That the phrase 'subversive of the Government of the United States' as used in this act shall mean any act or conduct, membership, or association, or advocacy of principle or doctrine inimical to the Government of the United States or the tendency or which is to undermine any of the institutions or to distort any of the functions or to impede any of the projects or to lessen any of the efforts of the Government of the United States; whether any such subversive influence exerted or sought to be exerted be open or direct or subtle or indirect, whether such subversive activity may have been by spoken or written words or by acts or conduct, and whether or not such subversive activity produced subversive result.

"9. Any person who violates any of the foregoing provisions of this act, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or be imprisoned for not more than 2 years, or both."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that the amendment is not in order; first, because it is legislation on an appropriation bill; and second, because it is not germane.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, this would take the place of and is offered as a substitute for the so-called Kerr or committee amendment. The Kerr or committee amendment, or any other legislation of that character, is made in order by the proviso of House Resolution 105 which was duly and legally adopted by this House. Therefore, if the House should decide to substitute this amendment, which has just been read, for and in lieu of the Kerr amendment it would be perfectly in order.

It is germane because it deals with the same identical subject matter which is covered by the Kerr amendment. The Kerr amendment deals, it is true, with only three named persons, but this sets up the same standard, only more rigorous, which was sought to be set up in the Kerr amendment. It accomplishes the same purpose that the Kerr amendment was designed to cover as to three men, for all in the Government employ in departments or agencies created by or by virtue of an act of Congress whose salaries are paid from funds authorized or appropriated by Congress.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I maintain that on neither the ground of lack of germaneness, nor on the ground that it is legislation on an appropriation bill, is the point of order well taken. This simply seeks to do in a lawful way, within the province and power of the Congress, what the Kerr amendment seeks to do in an unconstitutional and illegal way. This will really work the will of Congress, and it includes the same identical subject matter which the Kerr amendment seeks to cover. The Kerr amendment differs from this substitute, insofar as germaneness is concerned, only in this: It named three men as the objects of its legislative wrath, whereas my substitute sets up a standard by which the eligibility of all in an indicated class must be judged and requires that anyone whom the cap fits must wear it.

The modus operandi of the Kerr amendment is more direct than would be that under mine. But being direct is not a virtue if so we forget our oaths of office and assault the Constitution. Lynching is more direct than the execution of the death sentence imposed by the court in accordance with the verdict of the jury after a fair trial in a court of law. But none of us advocates lynching.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

The gentleman from Missouri makes the point of order against the motion of the gentleman from Alabama, first, that it is legislation on an appropriation bill, and second, that it is not germane. The Chair in this instance will pass only on the germaneness of the motion of the gentleman from Alabama, because he does not deem it necessary to pass upon the other point.

The provision of the Senate amendment that the gentleman seeks to amend by his motion very definitely applies to three individuals and no more. The motion of the gentleman from Alabama would cover numberless people if numberless people came under the provisions of his motion. The language of the bill is specific. The language of the motion of the gentleman from Alabama is general. The Chair must, therefore, hold that the motion is not germane, and sustain the point of order.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the Record at this point and include therein quotations from the Supreme Court of the United States and other courts and from the Constitution, and to make certain citations of authority.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, every Member of the House agrees 110 percent with all the tributes that have been paid to the Kerr committee. Beginning with the chairman and going through, there is not a single man on that committee who has not the love, respect, and admiration of this House. The same thing goes for the great Appropriations Committee, out of which this subcommittee was created.

No adverse criticism is due the Kerr committee, either because of the method employed in the conduct of the hearings held or of the conclusions reached in the reports they have made. These reports show judicial poise, fairness, and a sense of high responsibility in handling a delicate problem. The members of the Kerr committee heard the evidence, including the testimony of each man under investigation. They had the opportunity of observing the demeanor of each one of the accused. Their report to the House that Messrs. Watson, Dodd, and Lovett are unfit at this time for employment in the Federal Government is entitled to great weight in any balanced thinking on the subject. In my judgment the conclusions reached and reported are right.

THE ISSUE

But was that the issue presented by the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina, Judge KERR—with the approval of the full Appropriations Committee—to the urgent deficiencies appropriation bill?

Certainly not.

The issue thus presented is whether or not the amendment offered to the urgent deficiencies appropriation bill should have been adopted. The amendment reads:

No part of any appropriation, allocation, or fund (1) which is made available under or pursuant to this act, or (2) which is now, or which is hereafter made, available under or pursuant to any other act, to any department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States, shall be used to pay any part of the salary, or other compensation for the personal services, of Goodwin B. Watson, William E. Dodd, Jr., and Robert Morss Lovett: Provided, That this section shall not operate to deprive any such person of payment for leaves of absence or salary, or of any refund or reimbursement, which have accrued prior to the date of the enactment of this act.

The sole and single question presented by this amendment was, Is such legislation within the power of Congress?

CREATION OF KERR COMMITTEE

House Resolution 105, adopted by the House on February 9, 1943, reads as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations, acting through a special subcommittee thereof appointed by the chairman of such committee for the purposes of this resolution, is authorized and directed to examine into any and all allegations or charges that certain persons in the employ of the several executive departments and other executive agencies are unfit to continue in such employment by reason of their present association or membership or past association or membership in or with organizations whose aims or purposes are or have been subversive to the Government of the United States. Such examination shall be pursued with the view of obtaining all available evidence bearing upon each particular case and reporting to the House the conclusions of the committee with respect to each such case in the light of the factual evidence obtained. Any legislation approved by the committee as a result of this resolution may be incorporated in any general or special appropriation measure emanating from such committee or may be offered as a committee amendment to any such measure notwithstanding the provisions of clause 2 of rule XXI.

For the purposes of this resolution, such committee or any subcommittee thereof is hereby authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses, and the production of such books or papers or documents or vouchers by subpena or otherwise, and to take such testimony and records as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued over the signature of the chairman of the committee or subcommittee, or by any person designated by him, and shall be served by such person or persons as the chairman or the committee or subcommittee may designate. The chairman of the committee or subcomittee, or any member thereof, may administer oaths to witnesses.

On February 5, 1943, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HENDRICKS] offered the following amendment to the Treasury Department appropriation bill:

Page 12, line 22, after the word "Treasury", strike out the period and insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That no part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used to pay the compensation of William Pickens, Frederick L. Schuman, Goodwin B. Watson, William E. Dodd, Jr., Paul R. Porter, John Herling, Paul F. Brissenden, David J. Saposs, Maurice Parmelee, Harold Loeb, Sam Schmerler, Emil Jack Lever, David Lasser, Tom Tippett, Henry C. Alsberg, David Karr, Guiseppi Facci, David Wahl, Hugh Miller, Walter Gellhorn, Karl Borders, Jack Fahy, Nathaniel Weyl, Robert Morss Lovett, Merle Vincent, Alice Barrows, Arthur F. Goldschmidt, Marcus I. Goldman, Leonard Emil Mins, Henry T. Hunt, Mary McLeod Bethune, Harry C. Lambertson, T. A. Bisson, Katherine Kellock, Jay Deiss, Milton V. Freeman, George Slaff, A. C. Shire, and Edward Scheunemann."

On the same day, after the defeat of the amendment just quoted, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HENDRICKS] offered another amendment as follows:

On page 12, line 22, after the word "Treasury", strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That no part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used to pay the compensation of William Pickens."

It will be noted that both the Kerr and the two Hendricks amendments propose to act in exactly the same way to accomplish the removal of those named in them, respectively, from the Government service. Of course, the Hendricks amendments were applicable only to the money appropriated in the Treasury Department bill, while the Kerr amendment was applicable not only to the then pending bill but also to any future appropriation bill. Then, too, there is a proviso in the Kerr amendment which is not in the Hendricks amendments. But the essential procedure of removal is the same in each—named officers or employees in the executive branch of our Government were to be denied payment of their salaries by the legislative branch of our Government.

When, on February 5, 1943, we were considering the first Hendricks amendment, the distinguished gentleman from Georgia, Judge TARVER, called the proposed procedure "legislative lynching." See page 651 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

It is true that he predicated his characterization upon the qualification:

At the same time I do not want to participate in any legislative lynching of men who have simply been charged with communistic affiliations without the submission of adequate proof to sustain the charges.

But many of us thought then, and think now, that his characterization of the modus operandi of the Hendricks amendment was perfectly apt, no matter how much proof could be made before a legislative committee when the Constitution requires a trial in court before punishment may be inflicted. Many of us also were then and now of opinion that such a procedure was an unconstitutional intrusion into the exclusive province of the executive branch of our Government, and an attempt to usurp its prerogative of removal of its officers and employees.

In somewhat similar vein were the remarks of the distinguished minority leader, Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts, speaking on the resolution to create the Kerr committee:

Let us give Pickens his day in court. That does not mean this House is to be shaken from its determination to eliminate from the Government pay roll all who are joining in attacking the American system of government.

The bureaucrats will never do the job; they dare not; Congress can and will. But let us do it in the orderly way, the just, fair way, and the American way. (See page 736 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 9, 1943.)

On May 18, 1943, as reported on page 4581 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the distinguished gentleman from Missouri, Hon. CLARENCE CANNON, chairman of our great Appropriations Committee, spoke thus of the second Hendricks amendment:

Mr. Chairman, the committee will recall that in February, during consideration of an appropriation bill, a situation arose on the floor in which the House—almost by concert and with practical unanimity—proposed to summarily arraign, try, condemn, and execute, without benefit of clergy or legal process, certain Federal employees charged with subversive activities.

Those charged were to be given no opportunity to be heard. They were to be tried without notice on hearsay and rumor and by what practically amounted to mob action.

In that crisis, by agreement and direction of the leadership on both sides of the aisle and both ranking members of the committee in charge of the bill, I submitted to the House a resolution providing for the appointment of a subcommittee to investigate the charges, hear testimony, give accused opportunity to be heard, and thereupon, in due time, to bring the result of its deliberation before the House.

It was exactly this mode of procedure in the Hendricks amendments that caused many of us to vote against them. We believed that the creation of the Kerr committee for the full investigation of each case and requiring a report to the House with respect to each such case might result in the preparation by the committee of legislation within our power and province, which would accomplish the result desired by an overwhelming majority of the membership of the House, to wit, a separation from the Government service of those found to be unfit to continue in such employment by reason of their present or past association with or membership in organizations whose aims and purposes are or have been subversive of the Government of the United States.

Many of us hoped that the study of this entire problem by the Kerr committee would cause it to sponsor legislation within the power of Congress to enact, which would accomplish the desired end with reference to every Government officer or employee guilty of subversive activity or affiliation.

But the legislation proposed by the Kerr committee with the approval of the full Appropriations Committee is just as subject to constitutional objections as was the legislation proposed in the Hendricks amendments.

Does the fact that in February the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HENDRICKS] offered the amendments while in May the gentleman from North Carolina, Judge KERR, offered one proposing esentially the same action, render the action any the less objectionable?

Does the change of the legislative committee sponsoring the charges change the Constitution?

Many of us thought the big idea was to do the job legally—within our power and province.

EFFECTIVE CONSTITUTIONAL LEGISLATION POSSIBLE

Let no one say that legislation that would accomplish the desired purpose and within the power of Congress to enact, cannot be drawn. Congress has a perfect right, for instance, to fix by law the standard by which personnel procurement shall be governed and provide that no money appropriated by Congress shall be used to pay the salary of any person who does not square with that standard. Such legislation could also constitutionally provide that the head of every department or agency be held responsible for any employment not in conformity with the congressional standard, and that no money appropriated by Congress should be used to pay the salary of any such head of a department or agency who should fail to discharge his full responsibility in this respect. And in conjunction with such legislation, Congress could have submitted to the head of each department or agency of government the reports of the Kerr committee, as well as the reports of the Dies committee and of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Such legislation would be based upon the fundamental principle that Congress can regulate "the hiring and firing" in whatever agencies or departments of government it has created or may create—Myers v. United States (272 U. S. 52, 161); United States v. Perkins (116 U. S. 483) excerpts quoted infra.

Such legislation would not be a usurpation of the power of appointment or removal, which are vested by the Constitution in the executive branch of our Government. Neither would it be within the condemnation of the constitutional prohibition against bills of attainder.

My suggestion of such a substitute for the Kerr amendment is as follows:

1. It shall be unlawful for any person to be employed in any capacity, in any department or agency of the Government of the United States created by or by virtue of an act of Congress, whose compensation is paid from funds authorized or appropriated by any act of Congress, who has engaged in activity subversive of the Government of the United States.

2. It shall be unlawful for any person to be employed in any capacity, in any department or agency of the Government of the United States created by or by virtue of an act of Congress, whose compensation is paid from funds authorized or appropriated by an act of Congress, who has been a member of or associated with any organization, any part of the aims or purposes of which is or has been subversive of the Government of the United States.

3. It shall be unlawful for any person employed in any capacity, in any department or agency of the Government of the United States, created by or by virtue of an act of Congress, whose compensation or any part thereof is paid from funds authorized or appropriated by any act of Congress, to have membership in or association with any organization, any part of the aims or purposes of which is or has been subversive of the Government of the United States.

4. Any person who may have been or may be employed in violation of sections 1, 2, or 3 hereof shall be immediately removed from such employment, and thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by any act of Congress shall be used to pay the salary or other compensation of any such person.

5. Any person who is the head or acting head of personnel procurement for any department or agency of the Government of the United States, created by or by virtue of an act of Congress, in which any person may have been employed in violation of sections 1 or 2 hereof, or any other officer responsible for employment of any person in violation of sections 1 or 2 hereof, or any officer who permits any employee to continue in employment in violation of section 3 hereof, if he knew, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence could have known of such violation of section 3 hereof, shall be immediately removed from the position or office held by him, and thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by any act of Congress shall be used to pay the salary or other compensation of such officer.

6. It shall be unlawful for any person to accept employment in any capacity in any department or agency of the Government of the United States created by or by virtue of an act of Congress, whose compensation or any part thereof is paid from funds authorized or appropriated by any act of Congress, if he be ineligible therefor under sections 1 and 2 hereof.

7. Any person who may have been employed in violation of sections 1 and 2 hereof and who shall remain in such employment after this act shall have become a law shall be guilty of a high crime and misdemeanor, and thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by any act of Congress shall be used to pay his salary or other compensation.

8. That the phrase "subversive of the Government of the United States" as used in this act shall mean any act or conduct, membership or association, or advocacy of principle or doctrine inimical to the Government of the United States or the tendency of which is to undermine any of the institutions or to distort any of the functions or to impede any of the projects or to lessen any of the efforts of the Government of the United States; whether any such subversive influence exerted or sought to be exerted be open or direct or subtle or indirect, whether such subversive activity may have been by spoken or written words or by acts or conduct, and whether or not such subversive activity produced subversive result.

9. Any person who violates any of the foregoing provisions of this act, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or be imprisoned for not more than 2 years, or both.

If it be thought that such legislation would not be drastic enough, we could, of course, abolish any department or agency that we created, and, in reconstituting it, we could prescribe the standards for employment and removal of officers and employees.

A BILL OF ATTAINDER

If the Kerr amendment is a bill of "pains and penalties" within the meaning of the Constitution prohibiting bills of attainder, then, under our oaths of office binding us to uphold the Constitution, we must reject it. That the Kerr amendment is a bill of "pains and penalties" within the meaning of the constitutional prohibition "No bill of attainder * * * shall be passed," article I, section 9, is clear.

A bill of attainder is a legislative act which inflicts punishment without a judicial trial. If the punishment be less than death, it is a bill of pains and penalties. As the term "bill of attainder" is used in the Federal Constitution, it includes both bills of attainder particularly, and bills of pains and penalties (Cummings v. Missouri (71 U. S. (4 Wall.) 277, 18 L. Ed. 356); Drehman v. Stifle (75 U. S. (8 Wall.) 595, 601, 19 L. Ed. 508); Pierce v. Carskadon (83 U. S. (16 Wall.) 234, 239, 21 L. Ed. 276)).

If, then, the Kerr amendment inflicts punishment, it is a bill of pains and penalties, since there has been no judicial trial. This is not to say that the legislative hearings given by the Kerr committee were not judicial in a sense, but this committee was certainly not a court, and nothing short of a trial by a court constitutes a judicial trial.

The only question open for discussion and decision, therefore, is, Would this amendment, if it should become law, inflict punishment?

Throughout this debate it was frankly admitted that this amendment is intended to and will, if enacted, effectively exclude Watson, Dodd, and Lovett from the Government service.

That is punishment.

Take the cases of Cummings v. Missouri (71 U. S. (4 Wall.) 277, 320) and Ex parte Garland (71 U. S. (4 Wall.) 333, 337). These are State cases, not Federal. But the provisions of the Federal Constitution are almost identical as to State and Federal limitation of power. As to congressional power, the Constitution of the United States reads:

No bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed (art. I, sec. 9).

As to State power, the Constitution of the United States reads:

No State shall pass any bill of attainder, ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts (art. I, sec. 10).

So the Cummings and Garland cases are perfectly in point as authorities in our consideration of the pending amendment, under the above quoted limitation upon congressional power.

In the Cummings case the defendant was a Roman Catholic priest who was indicted and convicted of the crime of teaching and preaching as a priest and minister of that denomination without first having taken the oath prescribed by the Constitution of the State of Missouri, and was sentenced to pay a fine of $500 and to be committed to jail until said fine and costs of suit were paid. This prosecution was under the constitution of Missouri of 1865 which provided that no person shall be permitted to practice as an attorney or counselor at law nor be competent as a bishop, priest, deacon, minister, elder, or other clergyman of any religious persuasion, sect, or denomination, to teach, preach, or solemnize marriages, unless such person shall have first taken, subscribed, and filed said oath—which oath required a statement that the affiant had never been in armed hostility to the United States or been in sympathy with rebellion or, except under overpowering compulsion, submitted to the authority or been in the service of the so-called Confederate States of America.

The Supreme Court of the United States in its decision in the Cummings case said:

The disabilities created by the Constitution of Missouri must be regarded as penalties—they constitute punishment. We do not agree with the counsel of Missouri that "to punish one is to deprive him of life, liberty, or property, and that to take from him anything less than these is no punishment at all." The learned counsel does not use these terms—life, liberty, and property—as comprehending every right known to the law. He does not include under liberty freedom from outrage on the feelings as well as restraints on the person. He does not include under property those estates which one may acquire in professions, though they are often the source of the highest emoluments and honors. The deprivation of any rights, civil or politieal, previously enjoyed, may be punishment, the circumstances attending and the causes of the deprivation determining this fact. Disqualification from office may be punishment, as in cases of conviction upon impeachment. Disqualification from the pursuits of a lawful avocation, or from positions of trust, or from the privilege of appearing in the courts, or acting as an executor, administrator, or guardian, may also, and often has been, imposed as punishment (Cummings v. Missouri (71 U. S. (4 Wall.) 277, 18 L. ed. 356)).

In the Garland case the defendant was an attorney and counselor at law and was prosecuted under the same section of the Missouri Constitution of 1865 as was the defendant Cummings in his case.

The Supreme Court of the United States in the Garland case said:

And exclusion from any of the professions or any of the ordinary avocations of life for past conduct can be regarded in no other light than as punishment for such conduct. The exaction of the oath is the mode provided for ascertaining the parties upon whom the act is intended to operate, and instead of lessening, increases its objectionable character. All enactments of this kind partake of the nature of bills of pains and penalties and are subject to the constitutional inhibition against the passage of bills of attainder, under which general designation they are included (Ex parte Garland (71 U. S. (4 Wall.) 333, 337, 18 L. Ed. 366)).

In the Cummings case the exclusion was from the priesthood. In the Garland case the exclusion was from the practice of law. In the cases now before us the exclusion is from the Government service. The decisions from which the above quotations have been taken are directly in point and condemn any such enactment as the Kerr amendment as a bill of pains and penalties subject to the constitutional inhibition against the passage of bills of attainder.

Therefore the Kerr amendment is, in my judgment, plainly violative of the constitutional prohibition "No bill of attainder * * * shall be passed." If this conclusion be sound, and I most respectfully submit and urge that it is, that ends discussion—we need go no further; for if any piece of legislation comes within the prohibition of any one part of the Constitution, it is as void as though it offended each and every provision.

THE KERR AMENDMENT VIOLATES "SEPARATION OF POWERS" PRINCIPLE

But the pending amendment not only violates the constitutional mandate against bills of attainder, but it also violates the principle—implicit throughout the Constitution—of separation of powers, and the explicit creation of a government composed of three separate but coordinate branches—legislative, executive, and judicial.

The doctrine of the "separation of powers" of the executive, legislative, and judicial branches of the Federal Government is fundamental in the American theory of constitutional government. One branch is not to encroach upon the other, except insofar as authorized by the Constitution. Essential functions of the legislature are not to be usurped by the executive nor by the judiciary. Similarly, the legislature is not to interfere with the other coordinate departments of the Government except where an intermingling of spheres of action is authorized or contemplated by the Constitution itself. (The Federalist, Nos. 47 to 51.)

The power to "fire" an employee of the executive branch of the Government belongs to the Executive exclusively. Meyers v. United States (272 U. S. 52). In the Meyers case the Supreme Court further held:

The power to remove inferior executive officers, like that to remove superior executive officers, is an incident of the power to appoint them, and is in its nature an executive power. The authority of Congress given by the excepting clause to vest the appointment of such inferior officers in the heads of departments carries with it authority incidentally to invest the heads of departments with power to remove.

The Supreme Court recognized in the case of United States v. Perkins (116 U. S. 483) that Congress, in committing the appointment of such inferior officers to the heads of departments, may prescribe incidental regulations controlling and restricting the latter in the exercise of the power of removal; but the Court never has held, nor reasonably could hold, that the excepting clause enables Congress to draw to itself, or to either branch of it, the power to remove or the right to participate in the exercise of that power. To do this would be to go beyond the words and implications of that clause and to infringe the constitutional principle of the separation of governmental powers.

Further quoting from the decision of the Supreme Court in the Meyers case:

Assuming then, the power of Congress to regulate removals as incidental to the exercise of its constitutional power to vest appointments of inferior officers in the heads of departments, certainly so long as Congress does not exercise that power, the power of removal must remain where the Constitution places it, with the President, as part of the Executive power.

When Congress abolished the Radio Commission and created in its stead the Federal Communications Commission—United States Code Annotated, title 47, section 154—it authorized the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint the seven Commissioners and gave to the Commission the power to appoint the employees of the Commission subordinate to the Commissioners. Congress did not prescribe incidental regulations controlling and restricting the Commissioners in the exercise of the power of appointment or removal.

The exclusive right of the Executive to remove officers within the executive branch of the Government was reiterated in the case of Morgan v. T. V. A. (115 Fed. (2d) 990, certiorari denied, 61 Sup. Ct. Rep. 806).

The doctrine of separation of powers is reemphasized in the case of Humphrey's Executor v. United States (295 U. S. 602):

The fundamental necessity of maintaining each of the three general departments of government entirely free from the control or coercive influence, direct or indirect, of either of the others, has often been stressed and is hardly open to serious question. So much is implied in the very fact of the separation of the powers of these departments by the Constitution; and in the rule which recognizes their essential coequality. The sound application of a principle that makes one master in his own house precludes him from imposing his control in the house of another who is master there. James Wilson, one of the framers of the Constitution and a former Justice of this Court, said that the independence of each department required that its proceedings "should be free from the remotest influence, direct or indirect, of either of the other powers" (Andrews, the Works of James Wilson (1896), vol. 1, p. 367). And Mr. Justice Story in the first volume of his work on the Constitution, fourth edition, section 530, citing No. 48 of the Federalist, said that neither of the departments in reference to each other "ought to possess, directly or indirectly, an overruling influence in the administration of their respective powers" (295 U. S. at pp. 629–630).

The argument on the purse strings premise is blasted by an opinion of former Attorney General Mitchell, as follows:

Congress holds the purse strings, and it may grant or withhold appropriations as it chooses, and when making an appropriation may direct the purposes to which the appropriation shall be devoted and impose conditions in respect to its use, provided always that the conditions do not require operation of the Government in a way forbidden by the Constitution. Congress may not, by conditions attached to appropriations, provide for a discharge of the functions of government in a manner not authorized by the Constitution. If such a practice were permissible, Congress could subvert the Constitution. It might make appropriations on condition that the executive department abrogate its functions. It might, for example, appropriate money for the War Department on condition that the direction of military operations should be conducted by some person designated by the Congress, thus requiring the President to abdicate his functions as Commander in Chief (37 Op. Atty. Gen. 56, 61 (1933)).

Supporters say with twinkling eyes and a smile, "Yes, but this is not firing; this is merely denying the money to pay his salary. We do not say he cannot work for the Government; we simply say no Government money can be used to pay him."

Specious. Sophistry. What of the law we passed that no one can work for nothing?

The more serious-minded supporters add: "Seriously, though, Congress has the power to abolish the whole outfit, including Watson, so, if we were to do that, we'd be getting him just the same."

The answer to this is also obvious. Granting that Congress might abolish the Federal Communications Commission, and that if that were done, that would get Watson, that is not what is being done. Maybe the Federal Communications Commission should be abolished. Congress has the power, undoubtedly, to abolish it; why not act within our power and do so? I challenge any and all of you who think that should be done, because of the employment of Watson and Dodd, or for any other reason, do it. But do not forget your oath of office to uphold the Constitution and trample it under contemptuous feet by passing this bill of attainder which intrudes into the inviolable province of the Executive.

Who made it possible to employ Watson and Dodd? Congress did. We granted the Commissioners the power to appoint whomsoever they might please. The only restriction we have ever placed upon this grant of power is the requirement that no one who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of our Government by force or violence, shall be paid. We so wrote the law. Under that single restriction these men were employed. No contention has been made that they, or either of them, come within that condemnation. After they were employed, we, very wisely, changed the criterion. The special subcommittee constituted to investigate and report to the House how Government employees squared with the new criterion, has made two reports which show judicial poise and careful analysis. The gentlemen who compose this subcommittee are estimable, careful, honorable. Their reports are entitled to the full faith and credit their judgment and honesty of purpose demand. Those who have the power to hire and fire should give the most respectful and serious consideration to these and any further reports, and only the weightiest evidence contra should cause them to fail to follow the report that they are unfit for the present to continue in Government employ, and discharge all that that "cap fits." But ours is not the power to hire or fire, nor have we the right to go out of our own house into theirs and rule.

It is true that the resolution creating the Kerr committee provided:

Any legislation approved by the committee as a result of this resolution may be incorporated in any general or special appropriation measure emanating from such committee or may be offered as a committee amendment to any such measure notwithstanding the provisions of clause 2 or rule XXI.

But, of course, this meant any legislation within the power of Congress to enact; that is, not in conflict with the Constitution.

We can abolish the Federal Communications Commission. We can prescribe incidental regulations to control or limit the appointing powers or the powers of removal we grant, but we cannot violate the Constitution by passing a bill of attainder, such as the Kerr amendment, nor usurp the power of either separate and coordinate branch of our Government. The power of removal of officers or of employees in the executive branch of our Government is in the Chief Executive. Congress may remove its own but not those of the Executive.

What has been said as to Watson and Dodd applies for the most part and just as cogently to Lovett.

The fact that Congress adopted the method of removal now proposed in the case of David Lasser, neither changes the Constitution nor justifies the procedure. One wrong never justifies another.

The claim has been made that thousands of Communists were taken off the Government pay roll when the Federal Theater Project of the W. P. A. was abolished. But that was the abolition of a project, not the mere removal of employees. Congress may abolish any organization it creates or authorizes, and such abolition kills the jobs of the employees of the agency abolished. But that is in accord with the Constitution, not in violation of it.

Just as fiercely as we resent attempts to encroach upon our exclusive province, does the executive branch of our Government have the right to resent this encroachment attempted by us. Why cannot we of each separate, coordinate branch of our Government learn and practice the truth that the only road to the sunlit highlands of happiness and success is cooperation?

WHAT POWERS HAS CONGRESS?

All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

ART. I, SEC. 1

The provision—

All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress—

means that Congress—

within the limits of its powers and observing the restrictions imposed by the Constitution may, in its discretion, enact any statute appropriate to accomplish the objects for which the National Government was established (Burton v. United States, 202 U. S. 344, 367 (1906)).

The only legislative powers vested in Congress are those "herein granted."

Whenever, therefore, a question arises concerning the constitutionality of a particular power, the first question is whether the power be expressed in the Constitution. If it be, the question is decided. If it be not expressed, the next inquiry must be whether it is properly an incident to an express power and necessary to its execution. If it be, then it may be exercised by Congress. If not, Congress cannot exercise it. (Justice Story, Commentaries on the Constitution, sec. 1243, quoted with approval in United States v. Harris, 106 U. S. 629, 636 (1883).)

The Government of the United States is one of delegated, limited, and enumerated powers. Therefore, every valid act of Congress must find in the Constitution some warrant for its passage. This is apparent by reference to certain provisions of the Constitution, for example, (a) article I, section 1, that all legislative powers granted by the Constitution shall be vested in the Congress of the United States; (b) article I, section 8, which enumerates the powers granted to Congress, and concludes the enumeration with a grant of power—

To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper to carry into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof.

And (c) the tenth amendment which declares that—

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people. (Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 1 Wheat. 304 (1816); McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316 (1819); Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1 (1824); United States v. Harris, 106 U. S. 629, 635 (1883)).

In the Constitution are provisions in separate articles for the three great departments of Government—legislative, executive, and judicial. But there is a significant difference in the grants of powers to those departments: The first article, treating of legislative powers, does not make a general grant of legislative power to Congress; it vests in Congress all legislative powers herein granted. The second article, on the other hand, vests the executive power in the President. Similarly, the third article states that the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in a Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as Congress may establish. From the language thus used in these three articles, it has become established that the entire executive and judicial power of the Nation are vested in the President and the Federal judiciary, while only those legislative powers granted by the Constitution may be exercised by Congress. "The proposition that there are legislative powers affecting the Nation as a whole which belong to, although not expressed in the grant of powers, is in direct conflict with the doctrine that this is a Government of enumerated powers." Congress has no inherent sovereign powers in the realm of domestic legislation (Kansas v. Colorado, 206 U. S. 46, 81 (1907)).

The powers of Congress in respect to investigation and legislation are not absolutely identical, but the power of investigation is the wider and extends to matters on which Congress could not constitutionally legislate directly, if they are reasonably calculated to afford information useful and material in the framing of constitutional legislation.

Interstate Commerce Commission v. Harriman (157 Fed. 432 (1908)), order modified in Harriman v. Interstate Commerce Commission (211 U.S. 407 (1908)); Kilbourn v. Thompson (103 U. S. 168 (1881)).

No power of appointment to office except within itself is granted Congress by the Constitution; nor is there granted, nor implied, any power of removal from office except within the legislative branch of our Government; plus the power of impeachment.

In short, the power of Congress may be summarized thus: To make the law under and in accordance with the Constitution.

WHAT POWERS HAS THE EXECUTIVE?

The Executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America (art. II, sec. 1).

The Executive power—all of it. Not merely those granted in the Constitution, as the Constitution limits the powers of Congress; but all Executive power—the whole of it.

But in addition to this all-inclusive grant of the whole of Executive power, the Constitution expressly grants to the executive department of our Government the exclusive power of appointment of all its officers, superior and inferior.

And, of course, the power of removal is but an incident of the power to appoint, and is a part of it.

In Myers against United States the Court had before it the question of the Executive power of removal, and since the Constitution is silent on the subject—with the exception of removal upon impeachment—it necessarily had to consider the extent of the Executive power in general. It was therefore brought to examine clause 1 of section 1 of article II of the Constitution. The Court stated:

Our conclusion on the merits * * * is that article II grants to the President the executive power of the Government, i. e., the general administrative control of those executing the laws, including the power o appointment and removal of executive officers—a conclusion confirmed by his obligation to take care that the laws be faithfully executed (272 U. S. 52, 163 (1926)).

He shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law: But the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments (art. II, sec. 2).

The word "inferior" is not here used in the sense of petty or unimportant, but it means subordinate or inferior to those officers in whom respectively the power of appointment may be vested—the President, the courts of law, and the heads of departments.

Collin's Case (14 Ct. Cl. 568 (1878)); United States v. Germaine (99 U. S. 508, 510 (1879)).

Further, while the power of appointment to office is essentially an Executive function, Congress has power to prescribe conditions to the complete investiture of an office; and qualifications for office, provided scope is left for the judgment and will of the appointing authority. And it may control appointments through the control of appropriations for salaries. This control may take effect in the refusal of appropriations; or it may create a liability for services antedating issue of commission, and allow back pay for any cause which Congress shall deem sufficient.

United States v. LeBaron (19 How. 73, 78 (1856)), filing of bond and taking oaths of office; 13 Opinion Attorney General 516, 524 (1871); In re Miller, 5 Mackey (D. C.) 507 (1887), writ of error dismissed (140 U. S. 690 (1891)), upholding the civil service laws; see Foote v. United States (23 Ct. Cls. 443 (1888)). 7 Opinion Attorney General 215 (1855); Bennett v. United States (19 Ct. Cls. 379 (1884)).

When Congress by law vests the appointment of inferior officers in the heads of departments, it may limit and restrict the power of removal as it deems best for the public interest. The head of a department has no constitutional prerogative of appointment to offices independently of the legislation of Congress, and by such legislation he must be governed, not only in making appointments, but in all that is incident thereto—United States v. Perkins (116 U. S. 483 (1886)), involving a cadet engineer in the Navy, appointed under statute by the Secretary of the Navy. The case specifically left undecided the question whether or not Congress could constitutionally restrict the power of removal of officers appointed by the President with the consent of the Senate, page 484.

See also Eberlein v. United States (257 U. S. 82 (1921)).

In Myers against United States the specific question was raised, whether a postmaster of the first class, appointed with the consent of the Senate under a statute—19 Statutes 80, section 6—which provided that such postmasters "shall be appointed and may be removed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall hold their offices for 4 years unless sooner removed or suspended according to law" could constitutionally be removed before the expiration of 4 years by the President alone. And it was held that he could, that the restrictions and removals in the act of 1876 were unconstitutional, and—

That article II excludes the exercise of legislative power by Congress to provide for appointments and removals, except only as granted therein to Congress in the matter of inferior offices; that Congress is only given power to provide for appointments and removals of inferior officers after it has vested, and on condition that it does vest, their appointment in other authority than the President with the Senate's consent; that the provisions of the second section of article II, which blend action by the legislative branch, or by part of it, in the work of the executive, are limitations to be strictly construed and not to be extended by implication; that the President's power of removal is further established as an incident to his specifically enumerated function of appointment by and with the advice of the Senate, but that such incident does not by implication extend to removals; the Senate's power of checking appointments; and finally, that to hold otherwise would make it impossible for the President, in case of political or other differences with the Senate or Congress, to take care that the laws be faithfully executed (272 U. S. 52, 164 (1926)).

The authority of Congress to condition the President's power of removal by fixing a definite term and restricting removal except for cause depends upon the character of the office. Where an office is predominantly quasi-judicial and quasi-legislative rather than executive, the President has no constitutional power to remove for reasons other than those specified by law. So held, that the President had no power to remove without cause a Federal Trade Commissioner, when the act establishing the Commission (38 Stat. 717) provides for removals for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance only (Humphrey v. United States (295 U. S. 602 (1935)).

Generally the power of the executive branch is to execute the law.

WHAT POWERS HAS THE JUDICIAL?

The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish—article III, section 1.

It is the duty of the courts only to judge. It is, emphatically, the province and duty of the judicial department, to say what the law is. Those who apply the rule to particular cases must of necessity expound and interpret that rule.

Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dall. 419, 433 (1793); Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cr. 137, 177 (1803); Ex parte McCardle, 7 Wall. 506, 514 (1869); Cohen v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 264, 447 (1821).

Generally: To declare the meaning of the law.

JUDGE KERR'S AUTHORITIES

In spite of the fact that when the Kerr amendment was adopted by the House, the time allowed for debate of that issue—2 hours—was under the exclusive control of proponents, who gave only 10 of the 120 minutes to those of the opposition for actual utterance on the floor, and although among the able supporters of the amendment were some of the best lawyers in the membership of this body, there were only four citations of authority made by the proponents, and not one of these four was in point.

Hart v. United States (16 Court of Claims Reports 484; 118 U. S. 62).

The first one of these four citations is the Hart case, cited supra. Judge KERR quotes therefrom as follows:

The absolute control of the moneys of the United States is in Congress and Congress is responsible for its exercise of this great power to indicate a class of persons who shall not be paid out of general appropriations, but shall come to Congress for relief.

It will be noted at a glance that even if this case were an authority on the subject here under consideration—the removal of a Federal employee by denying the use of money carried in an appropriation bill for the payment of his salary, which it is not, it still does not hold that named employees may be denied payment of their salaries by legislative mandate. Of course, the part that the gentleman from North Carolina, Judge KERR, quoted is the most favorable part of this decision toward his contention. But even this merely says that the money power of Congress may be used "to indicate a class of persons who shall not be paid out of general appropriations." What we are doing here is not indicating a class of persons, but naming individuals. We have a right to set up a standard for employees of any agency of government we create and to require that no employee ineligible under that standard may be employed or retained in employment; such legislation is entirely proper; it indicates a class of persons who are to be ineligible for employment and anyone whom that cap fits must wear it. But this leaves the power of removal in the executive branch of our Government. It simply requires the Executive power of removal to be exercised upon any member of the class indicated. It does not substitute action by Congress for action by the Executive authority.

But the Hart case was not an employee case. It was a suit filed in the Court of Claims by one who had sold flour, corn, and forage to the Federal Government for the use of its army during the War between the States. Congress had passed a law saying that no one who was a sympathizer with the Confederacy could be paid for any property he might have sold to the Federal Government on credit. This was the class indicated by Congress, no member of which should be paid out of appropriations made by Congress. The Court of Claims held in the Hart case that the seller was a sympathizer with the Confederacy and therefore came within the indicated class of those who could not be paid out of Federal appropriations, and the Supreme Court of the United States affirmed that decision.

So the Hart case, far from being an authority in point and in favor of Judge KERR's position, is really contra.

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEYS GENERAL, VOLUME 7, PAGE 215

No such language as that quoted by the gentleman from North Carolina, Judge KERR, appears on that page in that volume. It is, of course, to be assumed that the gentleman from North Carolina, Judge KERR, simply made a mistake in his citation and that he was quoting from some other opinion of an attorney general.

The opinion cited by Judge KERR relates to "ambassadors and othe public ministers of the United States." It has nothing to do with inferior officers of the United States, appointed by Department heads under specific authority of Congress. This opinion points out that as the office of public minister is in fact a constitutional, not a statutory one, the President might appoint without the act of Congress and in virtue of the Constitution.

CRENSHAW v. UNITED STATES (134 U. S. 99)

Crenshaw was appointed to the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis under and by virtue of an act of Congress. Before his graduation, a later Congress changed the law by repealing that part of the law under which Crenshaw was appointed, which provided that every appointee who graduated should be commissioned in the Navy and substituting a provision that only those graduates who attained a certain grade in their studies should be commissioned. Crenshaw did not make the grades entitling him to a commission under the second act of Congress.

The Crenshaw case holds that it is not within the power of one Congress to deprive its successor of the power of repealing an act creating a public office. This is sound, well-recognized law and has nothing whatever to do with cases like those of Watson, Dodd, and Lovett, who were appointed to the inferior offices they hold by the executive branch of the Government under authority granted by Congress and not repealed or changed by subsequent statute. Crenshaw was never inducted into his office by commission. At the time he accepted his appointment as a midshipman he was fully and indisputably chargeable with notice that the law under which he was appointed could be changed by any succeeding Congress. He accepted appointment as a midshipman, received the benefits of a splendid education at Government expense, and was given a certificate of graduation from the Naval Academy. But before being commissioned, the law was changed by a succeeding Congress so that he not having attained the grade which would have put him in the class indicated by the second act, he was not entitled to be commissioned. He brought suit for the salary he would have received had he been commissioned. The Court held that he had no property or contractual right which entitled him to a commission nor to the salary he would have received had he been commissioned.

SPEECH OF HON. JOHN RANDOLPH TUCKER

In 1879 in the debate in this House on the then pending Army appropriation bill, Hon. John Randolph Tucker, of Virginia, made an exceedingly able speech in which he demonstrated beyond question that the money power of the House of Commons in the British Parliament had been used to curb usurpation and oppression by the Crown. No one has ever questioned this historic fact.

But what has this to do with the question whether or not Congress has the power to punish Watson, Dodd, and Lovett without a court trial and if Congress has the constitutional right to usurp the power of removal which our Constitution vested as an incident of the express power of appointment in the executive branch of our Government?

It must be borne in mind that England has no constitution except its statutes. We have a written Constitution which is the supreme law of the land, and in and by which the powers of Congress are strictly limited.

The issue in the debate in which the Honorable John Randolph Tucker participated was whether or not, in an appropriation bill for the maintenance of the Army of the United States, Congress had the power to provide that the Army should not be used to regulate elections. Bear in mind that the Constitution of the United States grants no power to the President to raise or maintain troops. Congress has power "to raise and support armies." (Constitution of the United States, art I, sec. 8, clause 12.)

The President of the United States has no such power, the King of England has.

Furthermore, Congress has power "to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces"—Constitution of the United States, article I, section 8, clause 14. The King of England has this power, the President of the United States has not. The King of England is Generalissimo. The President of the United States is Commander in Chief of the land and naval forces—Constitution of the United States, article II, section 2. Mr. Tucker says on this point:

> It thus appears the power of the President is far less than that of the King, and of Congress far greater than that of the Parliament as to the Army. But Congress and Parliament have the power of the purse alike. Now if in England Parliament can limit and has limited the use of troops by the King, and notably in the case of their use and presence at elections, is it revolutionary or against the letter or spirit of the Constitution for us to condemn the supply for support of the Army upon their nonuse at elections? If it be, then is the case of American citizens as to liberal and free elections less favorable than that of the subjects of the British monarchy?

Mr. Tucker further aptly says:

> The President is ex officio no more as Commander in Chief than the General in Chief of the Army, * * * he is the Executive Director of the troops in military operations. But how, where, and when he and they are to be used is within the power of Congress to direct, not in his.

CONCLUSION

So it is perfectly apparent that not one of the four authorities cited by supporters of the Kerr amendment supports their contention.

This leaves the case for the Kerr amendment unsupported by any authority whatsoever save the ipse dixit of its proponents. And this is based, I respectfully submit, upon a mistaken conception that the power of the purse is omnipotent and can override the Constitution of the United States.

For the opposition, however, not only the Constitution speaks clearly and forcibly, but so also does the Supreme Court of the United States. How anyone can read the Constitution and the cases of Cummings v. Missouri (71 U. S. (4 Wall.) 277), Ex parte Garland (71 U. S. (4 Wall.) 333), Myers v. United States (272 U. S. 52), United States v. Perkins (116 U. S. 483), Humphrey's Executor v. United States (295 U. S. 602), and Morgan v. T. V. A. (115 Fed. (2d) 990), in which certiorari was denied in 61 Supreme Court Report 806, and still contend that Congress has the right to pass the Kerr amendment, is beyond my comprehension.

GAS RATIONING IN THE MIDDLE WEST

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 4 minutes on the subject of the gas situation in the Middle West.

The SPEAKER. Is that agreeable to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFF], who has a special order at this time?

Mr. HALLECK. I have discussed the matter with the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana to proceed for 4 minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, the suggestion that middle western gasoline rationing be placed on a par with Eastern States rationing should be approached with the utmost care. Either a great service or a great disservice might be done by such a step.

I think I can speak advisedly on the situation because I am familiar with both sides of the picture. As a part-time resident of the District of Columbia, I know the many inconveniences which arise from being on short gas rations. Again, as a resident of the State of Indiana, I am fully aware of the desire of the residents of the Middle West to maintain their present gasoline allowances. They accepted rationing in the first place not because of gas shortage but because they were told that rationing was necessary to conserve rubber. Clearly they should not be asked to go along with further curtailment just because misery loves company.

The entire crux of the question centers on whether further restriction of the use of gasoline in the Middle West would be of any material advantage to eastern car drivers. Would the cutting of the value of gas coupons in the Middle West or the prohibition of all pleasure driving put any more gas in the tanks of eastern drivers? Or would such further restriction simply mean that the car owners in my part of the country would suffer and the eastern driver would not be benefited in the slightest?

I am frank to say that I think the latter is correct. Some say that the proposed restriction would mean 15,000 more barrels of gas daily to the eastern user. Even if this is true, it seems a relatively small amount to me. I should think that any move for more gas should produce a greater new supply than 15,000 barrels before it would scarcely be worth while. In any event, if transportation facilities in use in the Midwest are needed to move gasoline east, let the O. D. T. take them. But do not put more restrictions on our people unless shortages in supply indicate the necessity therefor.

If it is proved absolutely that the proposed restriction would cure the eastern situation, then a case can be made for it. But certainly there should be no restrictions imposed on Indiana and other States merely to compel motorists in all parts of the Nation to suffer alike. I do not believe that either my colleagues or eastern motorists would approve such a selfish plan.

It is imperative that the entire question be given a thorough hearing before any restrictive step as proposed is taken. Let us get the facts.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under special order heretofore made, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFF] for 30 minutes.

THE PLIGHT OF THE CANNERS

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Speaker, the Wisconsin delegation in the House of Representatives met with a group of outstanding canners from the State of Wisconsin in my office Saturday forenoon, June 5, for the purpose of discussing the unfortunate situation in which the canners of Wisconsin now find themselves, through no fault of their own.

As long ago as October 1942, the Wisconsin canners, through individuals and through their association, have been attempting to reach some sensible adjustment of their problems with the Office of Price Administration, and in spite of that early start, they find themselves face to face with the canning season and utterly unable to carry on because of lack of labor with which to take care of the season's pack.

If these canners had been negligent or had attempted through evasive measures to avoid cooperating with the Government agencies, it would be their own fault, but I can truthfully say that the record of the Wisconsin canners is outstanding in that they have faithfully adhered to the regulations of the various departments, no matter how foolish, and up to the present time not a single one of them has been hailed into court because of any violation of Government regulations. This shows that the Wisconsin canners are making a very earnest and honest effort to meet the demands of the Government, both in respect to price regulations and in respect to increased production of food.

In the October meeting these gentlemen were assured of attention to their problems and told that the matter would be taken care of in December. In December of 1942, another meeting was held, and no decisions were made which met the problems of the canners. They were then advised to meet again in February of 1943, at which time there was further delay and procrastination. On several occasions I have personally conferred with the various gentlemen in the agencies, who manifested a sympathetic interest but did nothing. These canners, many of whom are known to me personally, are capable, energetic, honest, and sincere, striving to take care of their growers, their employees, their customers, and the Government's demand for increased production, while at the same time they are badly handicapped by rules and regulations which are more of a hindrance than a help.

I need not go into the great service rendered by the canning industry to the food problems of the average American home, but I would like to take this occasion to point out that when the Axis forces surrendered at Tunisia they had guns, munitions, equipment, and food, but the food was raw, and the drive against them had been so pressing that they had had no time to process that raw food, with the result, as explained by many prisoners, both German and Italian, that they had not eaten for 2 days and had to quit because of a lack of prepared food. On the other hand, our boys, as well as the French soldiers and the British soldiers, had canned food which could be prepared very quickly, and in that manner our armed forces could be fed and the drive sustained. It was canned food that sustained our boys and the lack of canned food that was one of the leading factors in making the Axis soldiers quit in Tunisia.

If Corporal Hitler had deliberately set out to sabotage our canned-food program, he could not have done a much better job than is now being done by many of the rules and regulations, impossible of fulfillment, that are laid down by the Office of Price Administration.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF CANNERS

In our conference with the canners and their representatives we asked them to point out specific recommendations, and they were all agreed that the chaotic conditions in the food-canning industry, at this critical season, demand that control of the food-canning industry, including wages and prices, be concentrated in a single Government agency with full authority and responsibility for production and distribution, and with such State or regional agencies so that unforeseen problems could be met as they arose, without the long and painful and expensive necessity of spending 4 or 5 days every month in Washington.

Many Members of Congress, both in the House and in the Senate, have been urging for months that the question of food production, through all its various ramifications, be centralized in one specific administrator so that there would not be a half dozen agencies to which each industry would be referred in regard to its problems. Personally, I would prefer that such administrator should be Chester Davis, who understands agriculture and knows what is needed to produce food. And I want to protest with all the earnestness and vehemence at my command against the practice of putting hundreds of half-baked lawyers, who never tried a lawsuit, at desks writing regulations and questionnaires for men who were born and raised in their particular industry and who know more about it in their sleep than these pencil pushers will ever know about it. And I want to add while I am at it that I do not believe because some fellow learned what Karl Marx wrote and received a master's degree or doctor of philosophy degree by writing a thesis on the cranberry and how it cares for its young that he is a competent, experienced official to deal with the problems of growing and processing food.

WISCONSIN'S IMPORTANCE

The State of Wisconsin is the second largest canning State in the Union, being exceeded in its output only by California. However, if you subtract the fruits canned in California from its output, Wisconsin comes first. It is the largest vegetable canning State in the Union. There are 154 active canneries in my State, a number of which operate in my district. Last year, Wisconsin canners produced 20,000,000 cases of canned vegetables. This is a lot of food, and it is badly needed in these trying times. The north African campaign shows what canned food can do for a sustained drive in military operations, and we should take that lesson to heart. If these men cannot get adequate help, then the food will rot on the ground and never be canned. This would be a sin against our armed forces, to say nothing of the starving millions in the unhappy countries of Europe and Asia. But, you cannot get help unless you pay for it. Last year, we were able to get men to work in the plants for 35 and 40 cents an hour. This year canners will be lucky if they can get them for twice that much, but the O. P. A. will not even permit them to pay more than 60 cents an hour.

Take the case of trucks to move this product. You have to have trucks and the trucks have to have drivers. Last year you could hire a truck and a driver at $1.00 per hour, which was the going rate, but this year $1.50 is the going rate, and canners cannot get trucks and drivers at any price less than that.

SPECIFIC PROBLEMS

As to specific problems, the canners submit:

First. The Office of Economic Stabilization must live up to O. P. A.'s promise that wage increases approved by the War Labor Board will be reflected in increased ceiling prices. May I point out in this connection that the 10-cent-per-hour increase recently permitted the canning industry in no case will bring more than 65 cents an hour, while in most cases it will mean a ceiling of 50 and 55 cents an hour for male help in the canneries. It is utterly impossible for canners to secure any male help at these wages, as any male individual less than 70 and more than 12, can get better wages in practically any other industry. To illustrate: A canner at Union Grove, Wis., is restricted to 60 cents per hour for male help, while in the same community, which has only about 1,000 inhabitants, a hemp mill is paying twice that much. There is no chance on earth for the canner to compete successfully in the market against higher wage prices with the ceiling fixed as at present.

Second. The canners believe this is not the time to force Government grades on the industry, but if a single centralized agency in charge of the canning industry determines, after consultation with the industry, that compulsory Government grading is necessary for price-ceiling enforcement, they will cooperate in making such program as practical and workable as possible. This recommendation can only be worked out by a frank, open discussion in an informal manner with those who know what the subject is all about.

Third. The canners are opposed to subsidies in principle but have now made firm commitments to growers, at the Government's direction, and expect the Government to fulfill its part of the obligation either by increased ceiling prices or by subsidies to the canners.

In that connection, I should like to point out that in 1942 there was a 25-percent increase of price over 1941 in canned goods, but that all this increase in price went to the grower. In 1941 the canner paid the farmer $48 a ton for peas, in 1942, $64 a ton, and in 1943 he will pay the farmer $84 per ton. It is apparent from these facts and figures that the canner does not get the increase in price for his product, but that such increase is passed on to the grower. The profits last year to the canner were less than in 1941, and that in the face of the fact that the 1942 pack was the largest in the history of the State. In 1941, 7,500,000 cases of peas were packed in Wisconsin, while in 1942, 13,000,000 cases of peas were packed, but still the canner made less money.

Fourth. In all cases the experience of the industry should be consulted in advance of promulgation of regulations directly affecting the canning industry, as required by law. Time and again canners have been called in to consult with administration officials only to find that the regulations had been already made, and that the summoning of canners for a conference was merely a meaningless gesture.

A study of these specific problems submitted by the canners would lead any fair-minded individual to the conclusion that the suggestions herein contained are fair, just, and equitable and should receive serious and favorable consideration. These canners are in earnest in their desire to produce food, and in order to avoid a serious food shortage they will work night and day to pack every can of food it is possible to pack. In view of that fact they should not be handicapped and hamstrung by regulations which continuously interfere with their production, nor should they be shuttled from pillar to post when they come to Washington to present their difficulties and seek a sympathetic hearing on their problems.

The canner is a patriotic, loyal citizen whose sons are in the service and who is anxious to render every possible aid to his country. Let us give him a chance.

In that connection I just want to point out one thing. I know a case that happened back in my district, where a canner canned peas. He got a carload order for peas, carrots, and beets. He himself did not produce the carrots and beets, so he bought them from another canner. He sold those to his customer. The O. P. A. regulation had stated that when a canner bought in the market.

from another canner he could sell at wholesale prices. That is what this man did. But the O. P. A. reversed itself a short time afterward and said, "No; the wholesale prices under such situation do not prevail." They said he would have to sell at the processor's price. This man was hailed into a State court and the State judge threw the case out. He said it was outrageous. He was then hailed into Federal court and assessed triple damages. All his troubles and the troubles of most of these canners are the result of fantastic regulations that have been written in many cases by law students, hundreds of them down in the departments who never tried a lawsuit, who are not familiar with the industry; and they placed restrictions and regulations upon these men that they cannot understand and cannot interpret. I had a letter only last week from an attorney, an outstanding attorney, who has been a circuit judge, who said that he was utterly unable to advise his client, a canner, in regard to the O. P. A. regulation which the canner had brought to him, and said he could not make head or tail out of it.

I want to add in that respect that these men cannot possibly abide by these regulations that are written by somebody either, as I say, who is just out of law school and knows nothing whatever of the problems, or else had read a book by Karl Marx, or has received a doctor's degree on some thesis that he wrote on the cranberry and how it cares for its young. That is the sort of thing that these men are up against.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I thank the gentleman for his statement. I think our primary objective should be to get food for the American people and for our armed forces, and by assisting the canners in their difficulties with the O. P. A. and other agencies we are assisting the American people in getting canned foods. The gentleman has indicated that the canners are paying the producers higher prices for corn, peas, and some other vegetables. That is true, but they are paying the higher price because the Department of Agriculture ordered them to pay such price, and they were to be reimbursed through the payment of a subsidy which they had already passed on to the producer.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. That is right.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The Commodity Credit Corporation claims it has the authority to pay this subsidy. Commitments have been made in contracts with the canners which they have signed with the producers. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] offered an amendment in the Committee on Banking and Currency to the Commodity Credit Corporation bill which would prohibit paying these so-called subsidies to the canners for the canners to turn over to the producers. I hope that when the gentleman from Texas follows you he will explain how they are going to take care of the producers of these vegetables for canning purposes.

Mr. DILWEG. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I yield.

Mr. DILWEG. In regard to the question propounded by the gentleman from Minnesota, added to the amendment offered in the Committee on Banking and Currency was an amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY] to the effect that any commitment made by the Commodity Credit Corporation would not be affected by its subsidy amendment until 60 days after the enactment of the act, in which event it would not affect the 1943 crop.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I read the amendment carefully, and I have tried to construe it, but the amendment is not very clear. If there is any question about the payment of these obligations that the Department has already made, it should be made clear when the amendment comes up for consideration.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Incidentally, I notice by the paper that Senator MURRAY has offered some amendments which I thought were excellent amendments. I should like to see them adopted. I do not want to go into the details of those amendments here.

Mr. DILWEG. I would suggest that the gentleman include the amendment that was offered by Senator MURRAY in his remarks. I think the House is entitled to look at those amendments as they review your remarks made here today.

There is another question I would like to ask the gentleman, and that is: It appears that the canners are confronted today with two problems. One is the question of getting labor and being permitted to pay them a reasonable amount to induce them to work, and the other is where they stand on the subsidies. Is that correct?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. That is right.

Mr. DILWEG. Can you give us additional information covering the approximate cost per can, that is the increased cost per can, that the reasonable wage paid to this labor that is so necessary would involve?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. About one-fourth of a cent per can.

Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SHAFER. I would like to add that another trouble is the failure of the O. P. A. to set ceiling prices in many instances. The Michigan canners were here Saturday along with the Wisconsin canners, and in one instance where the O. P. A. had failed to set ceiling prices on food packed in glass bottles, one canner had more than 200 cases on the floor of his warehouse for more than 8 months. Certainly there is no excuse for that.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. That is right.

Mr. SHAFER. Another thing I want to bring out here in support of the gentleman's statement, in which I appreciate very much, his bringing up this subject today, is the fact that the canners are unable to compete with wartime labor in our section, and certainly with most of these canners that is true, particularly if they are located in small towns. One instance, in the little town of Fremont, Mich., a town which I think has a population of 700, in the canning season they employ possibly 600. In their canning factory in the last year, due to the failure of the O. P. A. to set ceiling prices, fix a higher wage for them, they have had more than 1,800 employees in that factory as a result of their turnover.

I could go on here for quite a while, but I just want to point out one more thing, that is, the failure of the O. P. A. to do this job has caused the Michigan farmers to lie back and not produce and the canners cannot make a contract with the farmers.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I yield to my colleague from Wisconsin.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Is it not a fact that 75 percent of the Wisconsin pack is going for military purposes?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. That is right.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Another thing in this matter is the delay which is occasioned by the O. P. A. in passing on the request the canners have had pending for a month, for some increase under the wage order that will permit them to pay a fair rate to their help in these packing plants.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. That is correct. Now, let me add that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SMITH] has a canner down in his district at Union Grove, a place of about 1,000 inhabitants, where he is up against this problem. He can only pay 55 cents, or something like that, as a ceiling when, at the same time, there is nearby a hemp mill that is being built where they are paying about $1.25 an hour.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. One dollar and ten cents, to be exact.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. One dollar and ten cents. That is just double.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. That is correct.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. We are indebted to the gentleman, and I appreciate very much his bringing this matter to the attention of the House.

I might point out that it has been called to my attention that the growers of peas in my State are mowing their peas down and are using them for stock feed because they absolutely cannot afford to take the prices the canners can pay. In other instances they are going to turn their hogs in on them because they cannot do anything else.

I would like to ask the gentleman this question: Do you not think that the agencies that fix the price of wages, as well as the price of food, wholesale, retail, and to the processor, should concern themselves with adequate food production; and is that being done?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I think they should. I think that could have been done if we had had the same system that Great Britain has, where they centralize control in one man. But, by diversification, they have had to run around to six or seven agencies and never can come to an understanding, and it has left these men in such a plight that they want to get out of the business.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. ANGELL. I want to commend the gentleman for his discussion of this subject, which is vitally important, not only to the districts here in the East and the Middle West, but away out West in my district, in Oregon.

I desire to call attention to two problems, one price ceiling and the other wages. The growers are just about now ready to market a large crop of berries, strawberries. I received a telegram only today saying that the entire crop is going to be destroyed unless they are permitted by the Government authorities, those in charge, to pay wages that will compensate the workers on a parity with the wages paid in the districts.

In that connection, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may include at this point in the RECORD an item from the New York Times, and also a telegram I received from the Paulus Brothers Packing Co., of Salem, Oreg.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana). Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

[From the New York Times]

PROCESSORS FEAR LOSS OF VEGETABLES PACK—NORTHWEST GROUP LAYS SITUATION TO FEDERAL AGENCIES

PORTLAND, OREG., June 5.—Food processors of the Pacific Northwest today charged that the fumbling of manpower and price problems by Federal agencies had caused the loss of thousands of tons of early vegetables. The processors made their charges at a conference called by the Federal Farm Credit Administration, which makes loans to most of the cooperatives that were represented at the meeting.

J. W. Mayo, executive secretary of North Pacific Canners & Packers, Inc., accusing the Office of Price Administration, the War Labor Board, and other Government agencies of regarding the manpower and price situations as "apparently political rather than economic problems," said:

"It's just fumble, fumble, fumble all the time. Already we have lost thousands of tons of spinach, asparagus, and peas, and the season has only started. If the problem is not solved within 10 days, Gresham (a growing center near Portland), for instance, may not have a strawberry pack this year."

The processors contended that adjustments in wages and price ceilings must be made immediately to insure handling of an estimated $8,000,000 worth of canned, frozen, and dehydrated fruits, vegetables, and milk products in Oregon and southern Washington. The lowest practicable wage scale that could attract adequate manpower was 85 cents an hour for men and 70 cents for women in metropolitan areas, 5 cents less in rural sections, they said; an increase of 2½ to 5 cents over current scales.

SALEM, OREG., June 14, 1943.

Hon. HOMER ANGELL,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.:

Recent press release by Dr. Noble of Seattle War Labor Board, stated that National War Labor Board had approved his recommendation of basic cannery wage scales of 66½ cents for women and 80½ cents for men in metropolitan areas and 3 cents less in outlying districts. Upon contacting him we find, first, these wages affect common labor scale only. In other words we cannot raise wages of workers now being paid more than base scale, result of which puts experienced keymen on pay basis less than common labor which this year is comprised mostly students and old men. Second, that these wage advances can be made only if no increase in our ceiling prices is asked for from office of Price Administration. Our annual pay roll is approximately $500,000, an increase which we are asked to assume would total $125,000 and to assume this as you can readily realize would put us out of business. We have already lost numerous highly trained men to war industries due to their higher wage scales and it is imperative now that we increase wages of balance of our regular employees as well as seasonal employees necessary to process rapidly ripening crops. We have about 100 regular employees and we employ 1,600 people during our peak period of summer. The War Labor Board's job-freezing order instead of being help is detriment insofar as securing necessary help is concerned. We will appreciate any assistance you can give us by forcing immediate action by Office of Price Administration in allowing us to include wage advance in our price ceilings and also relief from War Labor Board in connection with wages of workers affected by basic scale ruling. Above situation is typical of practically every canner in Oregon and entire Northwest and is so serious that unless something is done immediately the processing of crops may be impossible.

PAULUS BROS. PACKING CO.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS. I wish to say to the gentleman that what he has outlined is not only applicable to his State, but is applicable to every State in the Union, and more or less to thousands of growers and canners in the State of Ohio.

The Food Study Committee that has been studying this problem for the last month or so has a special subcommittee that has given a great deal of attention to this matter. They have had witnesses before them, they have had growers and canners and they have developed this one fact—I think the gentleman knows about it already—there are great quantities, especially of asparagus, in the warehouses in California and some eastern sections of the United States, great quantities of asparagus that is in the way, on which the price has not been fixed, and it is apparently the congestion, or the inability, or the recklessness or whatever the trouble is down below which just paralyzes things, and it is so far-reaching that it is almost going to be a cataclysm.

Furthermore I wish to say that the Ohio delegation representing the canners last week, last Friday or Saturday, went down to see Mr. Vinson. Everybody knows whoever sat in this Congress when Mr. Vinson was a Member of this House that he is one of the most brilliant men who ever served here, capable and brilliant in every way, and I am sure he will make a good administrator if they will let him alone; but these men went down and talked with Mr. Vinson. He, of course, is a new man on the job. He gave us every assurance that he would be glad to do all that he could, but he said this, which has developed in so many instances: "You have got to bring the matter up from below, bring it up from some other source to me and I will pass on it."

I want to see the time come that a bill which has been recommended by our Food Study Committee passes this House establishing all this agricultural activity under one head, and let it be Chester Davis. I think every Republican would be satisfied if it were Chester Davis, but let us get unison, let us get centralized. Then we will go somewhere.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. The other day when there was a discussion here the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] said he favored Chester Davis, and I think most of us who knew Mr. Davis and had contacts with him have a lot of confidence in him, because he has understood agriculture and he would know what to do with its problems.

The gentleman spoke of Mr. Vinson's statement that the matter had to come up from below to Judge Vinson. My only answer is that if you do not do it there will not be anything to bring up from below because you all know that these foodstuffs are highly perishable; you cannot hold them, they spoil overnight. We are going to be in the fix where we have either got to go ahead and can or else let it rot, and it will not take long.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I have had a great deal of experience with these supermen down in O. P. A., and I have come to the conclusion that they are more interested in putting over their favorite ideas than they are in securing the production of food for the American people and for the men in our armed forces.

As I size up the situation, these canners need to pay additional wages in order to get the help to can these vegetables. The War Labor Board has granted an increase but the O. P. A. refuses to add a few cents per case to cover this extra overhead.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Is it not a fact that already Chester Davis is being bypassed and these complaints and questions taken to Mr. Vinson?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I do not want to pass on the priorities down in the agencies, but I do want to state the difficulty the canners are in and I want to see the canners get more help.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I think I read the gentleman's mind: That we are not particular who does it nor what party nor what faction does it.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. That is right; we want to get it done.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. All we are interested in is getting this done; and if we do not get it done it is not going to be the canners who will suffer, it is going to be the American people.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. And it is not going to do us any good to appropriate money to get labor in here from Jamaica, Bermuda, or anywhere else to raise produce if we do not see that the produce gets into the cans after it is produced.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I yield.

Mr. HULL. I wish to call attention to one situation which has come up since our meeting with this gentleman in his office yesterday; it came in this morning. We have 25 large pea canneries in my district. The draft boards are taking the boys now who are arriving at the age of 18, I believe it is, boys who were trained in last year's canning operations to manage certain lines in the canneries. The consequence is that this skilled labor which has been obtainable from the high schools in some of these canneries is not going to be available unless we get a reversal of the draft boards' orders on these young men.

Another thing, there is a great shortage of help in our section of Wisconsin. We have had a very cold, backward spring, but things are coming along all right now. We are likely to have at any time very hot weather. That will rush the pea crop and it will take an extra force of men and women to handle the product or else it will spoil before it is ready for canning.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Speaker, let me say in conclusion that this is not a matter of political parties or political philosophy. It is merely a matter of getting some food out and getting it out now when the time is ripe for the production of this food. It cannot be delayed. It is one of those things that is seasonal, the crop is highly perishable, and if it is not produced now it never will be for this year and we will have to go into next year. I might add that most of these men, being small independents, cannot stand the loss they would have to take financially and they might be put out of business. We need them badly next year even if they cannot turn out anything this year.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today after all previous orders have been completed, I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HARTLEY]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous special order, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

ONE FOOD AGENCY

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I was very much interested in what the gentleman from Wisconsin had to say about one food agency. Much consideration and thought has been given to that question. It is a very serious question. The Congress, as has been discussed here, not wanting to place confidence in the Office of Price Administration, at one time when a price-control bill was before it, inserted an amendment which provided that the Secretary of Agriculture must approve all prices relating to agricultural commodities. That divided responsibility.

Now we go to the O. P. A., we insist on a certain thing, and the O. P. A. will say: "Well, we have submitted to Agriculture our proposition how to cure this. Agriculture does not agree with us." We go to Agriculture and Agriculture says: "O. P. A. is wrong. We want to do it thus and so." Therefore, there is no agreement and there is nothing to go to the economic stabilizer on because nothing has been done to unstable the economic situation. If a price increase is recommended, then it goes to the Director of the Board of Economic Stabilization, but unless there is an increase in price recommended there is nothing to become unstable, and it does not go to the Director of the Board of Economic Stabilization.

So the point is that this divided authority leads to much confusion and often it is against the war effort. It is also against the interest of the people. When we know this we should make an effort to adjust it and I think the best way to adjust it is by having one agency.

ECONOMIC STABILIZER SHOULD HAVE POWER

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] introduced a bill which provides that that one agency shall be the Department of Agriculture. I have an amendment to a bill approved by the Banking and Currency Committee which would provide that the Honorable Chester Davis, who is Food Administrator at this time, should be that one person to have complete and full charge of foods, including production, distribution, price, and everything else. But I have been studying this a great deal and I have come to the conclusion that we are both wrong, and I do not say that I am committed, that I will not change. I think we should have that power in the Director of Economic Stabilization, then we would have that one person to look to. If we have a problem like you have with the canneries, you have one person to go to who can make the decision. If we send it to Agriculture and give them all the power there is another step to be had. After he makes his decision it goes to the Board of Economic Stabilization and we have not finished. We are dealing with someone who does not have the final authority. If we place it in the hands of Chester Davis and he makes his decision, if it is against us it does not go to the Board of Economic Stabilization at all. If it is for an increase in price, we will say, and there is a tendency to unsettle the economic situation, then it goes to the Board of Economic Stabilization and it is passed on by that agency. The point is we are placing it in people, or attempting to, who will not have the final say. So why not now place it in the Director of Economic Stabilization and say to him, "It is your duty, it is your responsibility; we are looking to you and looking to you only." If we do that, I think we will have an opportunity of getting these mistakes and errors that are clear and unmistakable adjusted in much quicker time.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. If the gentleman puts it in the hands of the Economic Stabilizer, that Economic Stabilizer has a thousand things to do. He is going to be stabilizer of everything, not only of foods, but he will have everything else to stabilize.

Mr. PATMAN. That is very true.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. You are doing exactly what you ought not to do if you want to centralize it.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman is asking a good, constructive question. At the same time he will have the responsibility. While he has the power, he has the responsibility. Any man will have plenty to do that has this in charge. He can refer part of it to Mr. Davis, he can refer part of it to O. P. A., he can refer part of it to Mr. Wickard, but the point is that he will be charged with the responsibility. He cannot say, "Go and see Mr. Wickard," "Go and see Davis," "Go and see Brown." Mr. Vinson is the man that has it in his own hands, the responsibility is on him, but he may ask other people to make the investigation and report to him. However, he is the man who has the responsibility.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I know the gentleman is aware of the fact that one of the main complaints against the O. P. A. is due to the large number of inexperienced men down there who have made certain policies.

They have not had any practical experience either with canning or with agriculture or with the production of food, and they have refused to listen to men who are experienced in these lines. Does not the gentleman believe it would be much better for this agency to go over into the Department of Agriculture, where they have men trained and experienced in food production and food distribution?

Mr. PATMAN. I heard the gentleman last week when I asked him to name some who were objectionable. I think he named a Mr. Hoffman, did he not?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Hoffman resigned this morning.

Mr. PATMAN. I know, but he went back to Agriculture.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I named others. I named Dr. Galbraith, I named Mr. Hamm, I named Mr. Ginsburg, and I named Mr. Baker, and I could give the gentleman the names of scores of others.

Mr. PATMAN. I think the gentleman will be rendering a distinct service if he will give those names for the RECORD at different times and give them to Mr. Brown—I presume he sees the RECORD—and insist that corrections be made. I do not believe we should have inexperienced men at the head of these departments. If they are inexperienced and know nothing about the business, then they do not know how to take competent advice and they are not qualified to pass on it.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. They are the ones who have been doing it.

Mr. PATMAN. I do not say that all of them are that way, and I do not believe the gentleman says they are all that way. I will say that too many of them have been that way in the past. Even one is too many. When we find one like that, we should try to get rid of him. Some of them have been discharged.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. They have had some very fine, practical businessmen in the O. P. A. and they still have some, but I know of several who have gotten out of there and resigned, or were forced to resign, because these superintellectuals, as I call them, would not listen to practical advice and experience.

Mr. PATMAN. We want to get rid of that type of person, but at the same time we must remember that we are in the legislative branch of this Government. The Constitution, when it was made, clearly defined our duties. I sometimes believe that Members of Congress hold out too much hope to their constituents. When they come to us with their problems we are more or less inclined to become optimistic and say, "I am going to help you get that adjusted; we will get it changed." Yet it is something that is in the executive department, it is not in the legislative branch at all. We have no power to hire and fire people in the executive department. We have a duty that is clearly defined. The makers of the Constitution, this great document of ours, said the Executive would have charge of faithfully executing all the laws, and he is responsible to the people, he is elected by the people just as we are. I just wonder sometimes if the legislative branch of the Government does not sometimes try to go too far in running the Executive's part of the Government.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I think we are reaping some things that have been sowed during the past 10 or 12 years, when the majority in Congress have built up this tremendous bureaucracy who now fail to recognize the legislative branch of the Government and do just exactly as they please irrespective of the intent of Congress. We are trying to recapture some of that power. A good many men have come into the administration who do not believe in Congress.

Mr. PATMAN. That is very true. The gentleman says, "have come into the administration who do not believe in Congress." I do not know about that. I cannot certify to that. If the gentleman knows, of course I am not questioning his veracity on it at all.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. During my years in Congress—and I have been here a good many years with the gentleman—there has always been at least some cooperation between the majority party and the administration that is in control so that they could adjust some of these things, but now even the best Democrats cannot go down and do anything with these men who have taken over the control of our administrative affairs.

Mr. PATMAN. We have more problems today than we ever had before in history. We had no notice of that Pearl Harbor attack. We did not know it was going to happen. It threw our country into lots of confusion. We were not prepared. We should have been prepared long years ago. We have made lots of mistakes. We made a mistake by not helping China 6 years ago. We made a mistake by not fortifying those bases out in the South Pacific. We made mistakes by not preparing this country, but those mistakes are in the past. When we were attacked by an enemy we had to begin to get ready. In order to get ready we had to change our whole form of government. We had to regiment the people. We had to do lots of things they were not used to. We had to deprive the people of things they had gotten used to and which they do not like to be deprived of. So we have had more problems than we ever had before.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. As the gentleman says, we Congressmen have come to be not only Representatives in Congress but representatives in Washington of our constituents, attempting to secure information and advice for them.

To come back to this canning situation, I confess that I have been unable to devote much time to the study of the situation, but may I ask the gentleman this. Is it true that we face the probability that we shall lose a canning crop because of the regulations from Washington?

Mr. PATMAN. I hope not, certainly; if it were all under one person I am sure it would not happen.

We have more problems than one. We have a manpower problem, and we have transportation, and lots of other problems in connection with this matter. They all cannot be ironed out by O. P. A. or by Agriculture, or by Manpower. It takes all of them working together, but if we have them under one person then I do not think that one person would let these mistakes be made, and that is what I would like to see. I would like to see it under one person.

FACING RUN-AWAY INFLATION

Mr. Speaker, this is what I wanted to say when I rose first. Our country is facing ruinous inflation. There are more signs of run-away inflation today than I have ever seen in this country. I could point out to you lots of signs that really represent the handwriting on the wall. This Congress should be doing something about it. It means almost equal to losing the war, if we lose this fight against inflation. There are two major problems facing us. One is winning the war, and the second one is preventing inflation here at home to save our country on the domestic front. Last week the people of this Nation asked for and received $300,000,000 in new money. They put that money in their pockets, or in their socks, or between their mattresses. At least they kept the money out of the banks. They kept it out of a place where a record might be made—$300,000,000. During the past 12 months $5,000,000,000 have been taken out like that in new money, and hoarded. It is $10,000,000,000 more than the normal amount needed in the pockets or in the tills of the people to do business that the people do. There is something wrong about that. Why are they doing it? Is not that a kind of arrow pointing in a certain direction? Two or three things could happen.

Of course, some people say they can handle transactions in cash and maybe avoid income taxes. I do not think many people do that. I think the number that would draw out cash and keep it for that purpose would be insignificant, and would not amount to much, but there are people who say that they are afraid of forced savings. If they have their money in the banks, and a bill should be passed or a regulation enforced that seizes or freezes those savings, they would not have a chance to get the money back, and if they have it in their pockets, or between their mattresses, it cannot be reached through forced savings. I do not know what is happening, but it looks like a flight of money to commodities, when people are willing to pay any price to get certain things.

I hear it said all the time that in England they have only a few hundred people enforcing the price administration, and I heard the statement made the other day that in Canada there are less than 100 people enforcing the price laws of Canada. They have only about 8 lawyers, while down here we have 2,700. Let me tell you something of the difference which you ought not to overlook. In England and Canada the people are taxed very heavily. The money that would normally go into channels of trade, used to purchase goods essential or not essential, is taxed and taken away from the people to pay the war debts of England and Canada. They do not have much money to buy these goods, and price control is a very simple problem.

If we taxed the people of this country today to pay our debts on the same basis and according to the same ratio as they tax them in England, price control would not be much of a problem in this country, because the people would not have all of these tens of billions of dollars to buy these different commodities with. So, with all of the money that we have and the low taxes, we have got to control prices in some way or face ruinous inflation in this country, and inflation is something that will destroy a nation. One of these days, if something is not done to stop it, the people in the civil service, in your home towns, the postmasters and the rural carriers, and the clerks will write you a letter and say they appreciate the $300 increase which you gave them, but they now find that they can only buy half as much with the money they have with the increase and some say they can only buy one-quarter as much and the first thing you know our dollars will be worth dimes because the value of that money is going down all the time and if we do not realize the importance of ruinous inflation and do more to stop it, our country can lose as much in property values as we could lose if we would lose the war. We must face the issue with taxes.

We must absorb a great deal of this additional purchasing power. That is one way. There are many other ways it can be done, but that is the main way to do it. The President has asked for $16,000,000,000 more to draw that money off, not only to pay debts with it, but to keep it out of competition and keep people from bidding too high on different goods. We have not done much about it. We passed a bill; instead of giving a lot of extra money we are forgiving a lot of money which is in the direction of inflation and not in the direction of deflation.

So I say this Congress must realize that taxes must be levied and assessed until it hurts, because it is necessary to prevent ruinous inflation, and ruinous inflation would destroy the country.

I heard it said the other day that price control is so easy. I do not agree with that. I know many mistakes have been made in price control. I could enumerate many things that I detest and I cannot understand why they have been done. But at the same time we must have price control. There are 8,000,000 commodities in this country that are subject to price control. You cannot control 8,000,000 commodities or half that number without a lot of confusion. There will naturally be a lot of confusion. Some people say we should not have luxuries under price control. They say, Why have furs under price control? Why have diamond rings and pianos? I will tell you why. A fur dealer who makes $100 profit on selling furs has that $100 in his pocket in competition with all of the other money that is seeking the same commodities that he will want. The man who sells a diamond ring or a piano and makes a handsome profit, has that handsome profit in his pocket and it goes into competition with all the other money held by people who are seeking a supply of goods, which causes more run-away inflation. So I say to you that one of the most serious problems facing this country today, one of the major problems, is to stop this trend toward run-away inflation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes after the special order of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HARTLEY].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes after the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HARTLEY] is recognized for 10 minutes.

THE OIL SITUATION ON THE ATLANTIC COAST

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, this afternoon my distinguished friend and colleague from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] took occasion to call attention to the fact that those of us on the eastern seaboard are endeavoring to find some of the answers to the very grave gasoline and fuel oil crisis that exists in our territory. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] took occasion to warn us that we should not ask for an extension of rationing unless that extension of rationing into district No. 2, the Midwestern States, would provide some relief for us. I want to assure my colleague that the attitude of those of us on the eastern seaboard is not that we wish to have our headaches and our troubles extended to the Midwest or any other section of the Nation unless by so doing, by extending rationing, it will provide some relief for us.

May I add that I believe we are prepared to prove that an extension of rationing and the release of these supplies from district No. 2 will not, as the gentleman suggested, release more than 15,000 barrels of fuel oil per day, but we will be prepared to show that we can obtain upward of 200,000 barrels of petroleum per day.

Our difficulty is, in large measure, the result of lack of long-range planning. One of the suggestions that our committee or our conference has already adopted is that the Baruch committee, which has the confidence of the American people, be reorganized to investigate the entire gasoline picture and make whatever recommendation it deems advisable. I am satisfied that if that is done, if the Baruch committee is reorganized and tells those of us on the eastern seaboard that we have to give up all but essential driving, our people will be only too willing to comply with that recommendation. But as the matter stands today, there is no really organized planning. There is nothing but confusion. There are a number of people who are under the impression that this entire problem is under P. A. W. That is far from the fact. As a matter of fact, O. P. A., in my opinion, one of the most infamous agencies of this Government, is largely involved. I call the attention of this House to the fact that it does not make any difference whether we have a million or two or three million barrels coming into the eastern seaboard as long as the present coupon system of gasoline rationing is still in effect by the O. P. A.

I hold in my hand a copy of the Newark News of Thursday evening last. The leading headline points out that in one small cleaning and dyeing establishment 35,000 gas coupons were seized, the value of which is a total of 110,000 gallons of gasoline. As I said before, it does not make any difference how much gasoline is transported to the eastern seaboard, as long as this inefficient coupon system is in effect it will do us no good. So it is not only a question of adopting a proper long-range program on the part of P. A. W., but also to bring some sense into the rationing on the part of O. P. A. I am satisfied that if the barge canal system and the Great Lakes system were fully utilized, if additional pipe lines were constructed that should be constructed, and if the tank cars that are now being used in district No. 2, which are still hauling petroleum into district No. 2, were put into service in the East, the situation would be greatly relieved. I want to make it clear that there is no disposition on the part of our committee to attempt to spread our troubles to any other section of the Nation unless by so doing we will find some relief.

This is not just a war for the eastern seaboard. It is a war in which the entire country is involved, and I do not believe that it is proper on the part of any Representative to get up and suggest that if by extending rationing the eastern situation will be relieved, that it should not be done.

Only on Saturday morning the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] pointed out that although his district is an oil-producing district, and although an A coupon in his district is worth 2½ gallons, petroleum is being shipped out of his district across the river into Ohio, where an A coupon is worth 4 gallons and where there is no ban on pleasure driving. To me that does not make good sense. I do not want anyone to get the impression that in the eastern seaboard we are interested only in pleasure driving. But let me call your attention to a recent O. P. A. ruling. That ruling provides that a person may not drive his car to his summer home unless he is going there for the purpose of closing it up and then making the return trip. He cannot drive to his summer home, stay there all summer, and then return at the end of the summer.

I am not attempting to defend the business of making a trip every week end and back, but I would like anyone to show me how any more gasoline is saved by permitting a person to drive to his summer home, close it up, and come back than if he goes and stays all summer and comes back at the end of the summer. And yet that is a sample of some of the O. P. A. rulings. And, just to make it clear, and I do not want to have any particular argument with my friends from the Middle West, because we have no desire to harm them, but we are merely interested in seeing that we get gasoline on the eastern seaboard, and we are going to take such steps as we can to see that we do get gasoline and fuel oil for our constituents.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

GASOLINE SHORTAGE AND TRANSPORTATION

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, we in the Middle West, particularly Ohio, have no argument or quarrel with our friends in the East. There is no shortage of gasoline at the source; there is no shortage of supply at the source. This is clearly a problem of transportation. Let me call to the attention of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HARTLEY] and our other colleagues from the East, that the O. P. A. is not the only agency responsible for our dilemma. The Office of Defense Transportation is not efficiently handling the tank cars which are used for transporting gasoline. There are 150,000 tank cars in the United States, of which 55,000 have been allotted to district 1, that is the district on the east coast. These tank cars according to O. D. T. regulations are supposed to make a round trip from source to refinery in 15 days or an average of 10 miles per hour in speed. However, the O. D. T. directives are not being enforced, because the trains carrying the tank cars are permitted to pick up other freight en route from the source to refineries. If the oil trains ran as fast as commercial freight manifests, the oil delivered on the east coast could be tripled or even quadrupled.

Those trips involve some 3,600 miles, and as long as that practice is engaged in, you are going to have a shortage of supply in the East, with the shortage of sufficient pipe lines which are not being constructed as speedily as they should be.

Let me call attention to the number of workmen diverted to the construction of war plants which are not now being used; in my own city, if those men had been used in the construction of pipe lines you would not have as grave a problem in the East as you have, and if the 55,000 cars allotted to district 1 in the East traveled even for the 15-day period allotted by the Office of Defense Transportation, you would not have the shortage that you have experienced in the East.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The O. D. T. told me only Friday that Mr. Eastman had issued a directive to the presidents of the railroads telling them to immediately ship back empties at rapid speed from the destinations from which they came, which would help considerably if that were done.

Mr. BENDER. I will say to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts that the seat of the trouble is that we have confusion worse confounded right here in Washington. One agency issues orders and another countermands, creating a bedlam as a result of the lack of coordination on the part of the agencies involved not only in the distribution of gasoline but affecting every other problem.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It would be much better, where the Petroleum Administration is concerned, if the one office handled price control and distribution and all matters pertaining to oil and gas.

Mr. BENDER. I think the gentlewoman is absolutely right.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. And Canada has been warm throughout the whole winter when we have suffered cold throughout the East. Does not the gentleman believe that a revival of the Baruch committee, to give this subject the same impartial study it gave to synthetic rubber, might help a lot in view of the public confidence there would be in the accuracy of its statements?

Mr. BENDER. I will agree with the gentlewoman insofar as the manner of handling this problem as the rubber problem was handled, but the gasoline rationing program in our part of the country was put into effect because of the alleged shortage of rubber.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. That was the original reason in the East; a reason that proved to be a fallacy.

Mr. BENDER. Exactly. Under the present policy, however, you have wholesale absenteeism due to this gasoline rationing in your part of the country.

You have curtailment in the production of agricultural products. It does not make sense since there is a shortage of food, and every farm expert tells us that there will be a shortage of food, to have the condition extended to our part of the country and create more absenteeism and a greater shortage of food as a result of invoking of the additional rationing in the Middle West.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would remind the gentleman that there is another special order pending.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman realize that gasoline stocks in district 2 are some three or four million barrels higher than they were a few months ago, whereas our stocks are very materially lower? It would take only 2 or 3 months, bringing in 200,000 or even 150,000 barrels a day, for us to get our stocks up a little so we could go ahead with some of our business.

Mr. BENDER. I am sure if the gentlewoman heard the statement I made regarding the 55,000 tank cars being used for the East as they should be rather than having them wait at various places to take on additional freight, if those cars were used as they should be exclusively in trains made up of gasoline cars or oil cars rather than running them in with all kinds of mixed freight, I am sure the gentlewoman would have the relief she craves—that together with the extension of pipe lines—with greater dispatch.

In our part of the country we are just as patriotic as folks in any other part of the country, and we are just as anxious as they to win this war as speedily as possible, but it would be a rather short-sighted policy to extend this rationing without first exploring the entire issue and without first coordinating all these agencies so we might have a unified program. I am sure no one in Ohio is happy about the conditions in Massachusetts or New Jersey; I am sure there is a very decided feeling that this matter should be corrected, and that it should be corrected soon.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman go with us and will the people of his district go with us to Secretary Ickes and those in authority and see that something is worked out? I am sure the distinguished gentleman would share with us for 2 or 3 months some of the gasoline they have. We have suffered for a year and a half under rationing.

Mr. BENDER. We would most certainly do everything in our power to see that the gasoline needed in the gentlewoman's section of the country is made available to the greatest extent it can be made available through the proper use of transportation facilities. These facilities are not being used to anything like their maximum capacity.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Would you be willing to give up pleasure driving for a time?

Mr. BENDER. I can speak for only myself, but I may say that as far as pleasure driving is concerned in my own State I do not believe there are many people who are using gasoline to any great extent that is not absolutely essential, because the quantity of gasoline allotted to us, the gentlewoman can appreciate from her experience with the gas allotted to her, is not adequate.

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. HARTLEY. We are not revealing any military secrets when we state that our difficulties are very largely the result of the great demands for petroleum products on the part of our armed forces.

Mr. BENDER. That is right.

Mr. HARTLEY. That with the prospective events we believe to be in view the situation is not going to get any better but may get considerably worse.

Mr. BENDER. The gentleman is right.

Mr. HARTLEY. Does not the gentleman believe there is a very great need for a long-term program and a study of such a program, a far more comprehensive program than has been set up to the moment?

Mr BENDER. The gentleman is absolutely correct. The main objectives, our chief objective, today, is to supply our armed forces with the gasoline and other oil products they need. We realize that as well as the gentleman does.

If there were a proper coordination of all the interests here, if there were an intelligent handling of this problem in Washington, I am sure we would have relief as you would have relief in your part of the country.

Mr. HARTLEY. Does not the gentleman agree that the coordination of all phases of the petroleum problem, even transportation, rationing, price fixing, and everything else, should be placed under one head and that there would be greater efficiency?

Mr. BENDER. We have been asking for that for the last 6 months, but we have had no results.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. As the gentleman knows, 80,000 tons of gasoline have been shipped to Spain. Gasoline and oil are being constantly sent there, and that has to be taken into consideration in connection with our losses.

Mr. BENDER. And I am wondering how friendly that nation is to us.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am wondering, too, if that nation ever received it—if it has not been diverted to the Nazis.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial that appeared in the Baltimore Evening Sun of May 28.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEOGH]?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous special order of the House, the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include certain recommendations made by Mr. W. P. Hedden, Director of Port Development, Port of New York Authority.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS]?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am going to insert in the RECORD in connection with my remarks the complete recommendation of Mr. Hedden, but I would like to read just one paragraph briefly because I want the Members to consider it now.

He states as follows:

In order to deliver to the Northeast the maximum quantities of motor fuel for the next 90 days in available tank cars and inland barges, the Petroleum Administrator should direct the movement of at least 200,000 barrels per day from district 2 to district 1.

As I stated before, district No. 2 has upward of 4,000,000 additional barrels of gasoline than it had some months ago Whereas the east coast has a pitifully small amount. A much smaller supply than it had at the same period.

I want to direct the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that we on the east coast have been rationed for months, not only so far as pleasure driving is concerned, but in the use of gas for the actual conduct of our business. Business has not been allowed to progress because the gasoline was not available. The war effort has been retarded.

Mr. HARTLEY. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HARTLEY. Is it not a fact that because of the sufficiency of the stock of petroleum in district 2 that they could send to us 200,000 barrels per day for the next 3 months without having to come to the rationing status that we in district No. 1 on the eastern seaboard are in today?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. That is absolutely true, and that is what I am going to bring out. It has been interesting to me in that I recently have seen a good many people, businessmen and others, from the second district and they have told me of the quantity of gasoline they have, not only for the operation of their business but for pleasure driving. As the Members know we have not the necessary number of votes on the east coast to pass adequate legislation in order to protect ourselves. If the Members from district 2 would join us I believe we could secure the legislation that would at least give us a fighting chance for our protection. Everybody knows due to the lack of fuel oil the suffering that we endured during the last winter on the east coast, particularly in New England, and so far as kerosene is concerned, most particularly in Massachusetts. The largest percentage of the kerosene used is burned in New England as compared with the rest of the country, and by far the greatest use of it is in my own State. It took us some time to make the Administrator realize how vital an adequate supply of kerosene is.

It has been suggested to me and I have been working on the matter that plenty of trucks are now available to carry gasoline from the barges that can come through the inland waterways and that those trucks could be made available to carry the gasoline down through New York, New Jersey, and to New England. I will ask the Members to join with me in seeing that that be done.

Mr. HARTLEY. Is it not true that the Keystone Pipe Line from Buffalo to Philadelphia, which has a capacity of about 20,000 barrels a day, is not in use simply because the stocks in Buffalo are not available, yet if the barges on the Great Lakes were used the supply would be plentiful in Buffalo?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes; that is correct. Those barges should continue now on their way and should be met by trucks. I am told there are plenty of trucks to take the gasoline.

I believe those of us on the east coast must have assistance in making our case strong enough for those in authority to give us results. It is not a matter of mere pleading. We are all in the war together. We all ought to be willing to share any hardship or difficulty, but in this matter it is not hardship we ask of district 2; it would only be asking those of the Midwest to give up temporarily their pleasure driving. The east coast has been grossly discriminated against. Any fair-minded person will agree we are heartily tired of the injustices.

I wish to commend the gentleman from New Jersey. He should be given the greatest praise for his tireless efforts ir working out some sort of a solution in order that we may be given relief on the east coast. It has been a task of love, one might say, but it has been an exhaustive task for us over these long months, and it seems to be an endless one. Immediate relief should be given us.

The statement of Mr. W. P. Hedden, director of port development, the Port of New York Authority, follows:

THE NORTHEASTERN GASOLINE AND OIL CRISIS—A PROGRAM OF RELIEF

THE PRESENT EMERGENCY

Adequate supplies of gasoline are vital to farming, transportation of war workers, maintenance of deliveries of foodstuffs and other essentials in the Northeast. The winter heating emergency is over, but supplies of fuel oil and heavy oil are necessary for current operation of war industries and public utilities, and for the building of stocks in anticipation of next winter.

The damage to pipe lines and delays to rail and inland water transport caused by unprecedented floods, plus increasing demands for overseas shipments to the Army and Navy, have created a grave emergency. The administration officials have properly taken steps to apportion the current supplies to the most essential services. However, the present shortage is curtailing not only pleasure driving but transportation which is essential to the civilian population of the Northeast.

Mr. Chester Dumond, New York State Commissioner of Agriculture, is quoted in the New York Times of June 2 as saying, "The cold fact is that at this moment our current check indicates that many of the farms of New York State are right up against the danger of total absence of gasoline for plowing. * * * Nine of the 21 gasoline distributing bulk plants operated in New York State by the Grange League Federation have had no gasoline for several days. The dry plants are in Steuben, Erie, Allegany, Ontario, Chenango, Wyoming, Monroe, Cattaraugus, and Wayne Counties."

The city situation for war workers is just as critical. Every day 385,000 New York and New Jersey residents must cross the Hudson River between their homes and places of business. The railroad tubes take care of a portion of them but 150,000 travel on rubber and use gasoline, either in busses or private cars. Transportation in private cars has been drastically reduced, despite the fact that clockings in April showed that 70 percent were engaged in essential travel. The load thrown on the interstate bus lines has jumped from 46,000 per day in 1941 to 77,000 in March 1943. In rush hours, the busses are crowded to 45 and 50 passengers, including standees. Now the critical gas shortage has forced a cut of 20 percent in bus service, while at the same time the use of private passenger cars has been cut 30 percent.

It is imperative that these restrictions be eased as soon as practicable. The problem is obviously one of increasing the supply in the critical Northeast area as quickly as possible, insofar as this can be done by adjustments in consumption and stocks in other sections which will permit a greater daily delivery to the Northeast from points were transportation is available. Prompt steps should be taken in this direction. Our specific suggestions in this regard are elaborated under an immediate program.

In order that the present situation in the Northeast States shall be neither dragged out for an unduly long period, nor suddenly occur a third time, we believe that certain steps should be taken at this time in a longer range program which will effect supplies next winter and next year.

IMMEDIATE PROGRAM

More gasoline by rail from Midwest

In order to deliver to the Northeast the maximum quantities of motor fuel for the next 90 days in available tank cars and inland barges, the Petroleum Administrator should direct the movement of at least 200,000 barrels per day additional from district 2 to district 1.

Mr. Ickes has already hinted that this move may be necessary. He was reported in the New York Herald Tribune of June 2, as warning that the effects of the shortage might soon extend inland to Midwestern and other States, and that if diversion of Midwest oil supplies to the East would help ease the crisis, that course would be followed. It should be started without delay.

By reason of the shorter turn-around from storage tanks and refineries in district 2 (Midwest) as compared to district 3 (Gulf territory), total deliveries by tank car would be increased 50,000 barrels per day by drawing 150,000 barrels more by rail from the Midwest. The same tank cars can deliver 150,000 barrels per day of gasoline from the Midwest on a 12-day turn-around as against 100,000 barrels hauled from the Southwest on an 18- or 20-day turn-around. At present, 80 percent of the total movement is from long-haul points in the Gulf territory.

Gasoline stocks in district 2 are approximately double those of district 1, even under the present rationing. They could be drawn upon at the rate of 200,000 barrels per day above present shipments from district 2 for 2 or 3 months and still not pull these stocks down below those on the east coast.

Furthermore, an additional supply out of current production could be made available to the east coast if the restrictions on driving were equalized to a greater extent. At the present time, the basic allowances in district 2 are three times those in district 1, and there is no pleasure ban on the use of the gasoline in district 2.

More gasoline at Lake ports for water movement to East

In addition to the more effective use of tank cars which could be accomplished by making greater quantities of gasoline available from district 2, inland waterway equipment which may otherwise be wasted, could be utilized in transport from the Great Lakes area to the Atlantic coast, if greater supplies were provided at Lake ports, such as Toledo, Detroit, Cleveland, and even Chicago.

The New York State canal system from Buffalo and Oswego to the Hudson River, which supplies petroleum products direct to points in New England, New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania, is easily capable of handling 150,000 barrels per day. Governor Dewey and the New York State Legislature have recently authorized improvements which will be completed very shortly in anticipation of a movement of 122,000 barrels a day. Instead, the available supply was first set at 70,000, and more recently at 40,000 barrels per day by the Petroleum Administrator. This limitation in supplies for water movement reflects the absence of any planned program to equalize stocks between the Midwest and the East, and to provide more out of current production by equalizing consumption with the east coast.

The barge, tug, and self-propelled tanker equipment in operation on the New York State canals in 1941 demonstrated ability to move 77,000 barrels per day west-bound. With a late start in reversing this movement in 1942, the east-bound movements were 52,000 barrels per day on the average. With adequate supplies available at points like Toledo, rational allocations of the lake-tanker fleet and the migratory self-propelled barges which operate on both the Lakes and canal, and quick completion of improvements in transhipment facilities at Buffalo and Oswego, there is no doubt that the water movement from now until December 1 could be stepped up to double or triple of what is now in prospect. The whole program, except the contribution of the State of New York, is lagging because of lack of assurance that adequate supplies will be available at Great Lakes ports. This assurance can only be given if a vigorous policy is pressed by the Petroleum Administrator, with whatever help is needed from the Office of Price Administration rationing authorities, and the Office of Defense Transportation officials in charge of allocating water movements on the Lakes, and carried through, if necessary, by definite orders upon the petroleum industry to make these diversions from the Midwest to the East, rather than to content itself with supplying the usual nearby customers.

Use of pipe lines from lake area to east coast

Additional relief in moving supplies to the east coast can be secured by utilizing existing pipe lines and pressing the completion of another pipe line connecting the Midwest with the east coast. The Atlantic Co.'s Keystone line from Buffalo to Philadelphia, with a capacity of about 18,000 barrels per day, is still not reversed, on account of lack of supplies at the western end. Additional supplies at Buffalo would permit the employment of this line. A new pipe line has been authorized from Chicago to Toledo, with an estimated capacity of 30,000 barrels per day, under the sponsorship of the War Emergency Pipelines. If this is completed promptly, additional products can be made available at Toledo as against Chicago, making it possible to bring petroleum by water from Toledo to Buffalo on a 3-day turn-around instead of the longer 9-day turn-around of Chicago to Buffalo by way of Lake Michigan and Lake Huron.

Further economies in transportation mileage and lake tanker equipment might be achieved by an exchange of products whereby Canadian refineries at Sarnia (near Detroit) could make available supplies to move east on a short haul to the Buffalo end of the canals and pipe lines in return for American refined products to be hauled from Chicago to Canadian destinations in Lake Superior.

The efficient utilization of the lake-canal system of the pipe line from Buffalo, and of tank cars in short haul from the Midwest against long haul from the Gulf, depends fundamentally upon adjustment of supply program (and perhaps the rationing program in the Midwest) to provide adequate amounts for movement from district 2 to district 1. Relief to the severely curtailed Northeast to the extent of over 100,000 barrels per day could be obtained from this source.

LONG-RANGE PROGRAM

In addition to the emergency program already outlined, which, if carried through, would give continuing relief not only for the summer but also for 1944, provision should be made for construction of additional small self-propelled tankers (of the "migratory" type, capable of operation on the Great Lakes, New York State Canal, Hudson River, Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, Long Island Sound), and additional steel barges and tug equipment to distribute the increasing volume of rail and pipe-line deliveries which will terminate at concentrated refining and storage centers in the New York, Philadelphia, and Richmond areas. The Big Inch pipe line, the 20-inch pipe line, and the Plantation pipe line extension, together with older pipe lines reversed from west to east, will deliver by next winter over 600,000 barrels per day of petroleum products to 3 concentrated areas on the east coast. The distribution from that point on to the ultimate consumer will require ample small tanker and barge equipment to place the products at secondary bulk terminals and distribution points, from which truck delivery can be made to the consumer. There are nearly 500 of these secondary bulk terminals in New York Harbor and Long Island Sound alone, with hundreds more in southern and eastern New England, Delaware River, and Chesapeake Bay points. Practically all of these secondary bulk terminals are located on the water. Water equipment should be used in this lateral east coast service to release tank cars, as far as possible, for the shuttle service from the major oil-producing points to the east coast.

It is probable that there will be a shortage of steel tank barge equipment in 1944 to accomplish this necessary transportation between the primary refining and pipe line and rail terminals and the secondary local distribution tanks in New England, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, and Virginia. Because of the necessity of clearing steel requirements through the War Production Board and arranging for small tanker and tug motive power and barge construction, this program should be pressed immediately.

Provision has been made for conversion of over 100 dry cargo units to petroleum use on the Mississippi-Ohio waterways, and the building of 168 new steel tank barges for use on the same waterways. Also, provision has been made for tugs and wooden barges to handle heavy oils in the Gulf and the South Atlantic intracoastal waterways. However, no program has been planned for the Northeast, largely because of lack of any definite supply program, which will leave idle certain existing barge equipment in the Northeast in the winter of 1933-44. Looking to 1944, however, it is imperative that the steel tank barge equipment in the northeast (including that which operates on the Barge Canal and the Great Lakes during the open season from April to December) be augmented to take care of continued movement east from the Great Lakes; north and northeast from pipeline and rail terminals at New York to the Hudson River territory, and New England, locally in the Delaware River and Chesapeake and Delaware Canal territory from Philadelphia, and locally in the Chesapeake Bay territory from the Richmond terminals of the Plantation Line. This program should be immediately sponsored by the Office of Defense Transportation, with the cooperation of the Petroleum Administrator, who must estimate and plan the supply picture so that the barge equipment can be fully utilized.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 9, 1943

(Legislative day of Monday, May 24, 1943)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock noon, on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. John R. Edwards, D. D., district superintendent of the Methodist Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, Father of all mankind, we acknowledge in reverence our dependence upon Thy daily providence. Thy mercies have proved unfailing. We remember, too, the grace of God, which abundantly pardons. In the light of Thy character and faithfulness our human imperfections are reflected. Our personal and national selfishness is registered in narrow conceptions of life and citizenship which hinder Thy holy purposes for human welfare and world brotherhood. We make our confessions and ask Thy forgiveness. May this our repentance be registered in nobler and fuller living. We recognize Thy chastenings, and accept them as expressions of Thy wisdom. Yet our hearts have not fully turned back, neither have our steps declined from Thy way.

Strengthen today every worthy endeavor. Give us increased nobility of heart.

We pray for Thy servants who gather in our legislative halls, the President of the Senate, and others who have chief responsibility.

We pray for our comrades in the task of world brotherhood, especially for those whose lives are exposed to great danger, for their families and all their interests.

May the blessing of God rest this day upon the bereaved family of Thy servant, who had led a great Christian church in our midst, upon his people, and upon all others who mourn his loss.

We pray for the nations of earth who differ from us in thought and purpose. In the midst of strife may we learn nobility of character which shall be free from unholy prejudice and vindictive passion. In the name of the Great Saviour. Amen.

PRODUCTION OF FARM MACHINERY

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the clerk be permitted to read a letter which I have just received from Donald M. Nelson, Chairman of the War Production Board, dealing with farm machinery. It is a very short letter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WAR PRODUCTION BOARD,
Washington, D. C., June 9, 1943.

Hon. SCOTT LUCAS,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SCOTT: I am happy to inform you that a substantially increased program for the production of farm machinery will get under way July 1.

A total of 300,000 tons of carbon steel, with other materials in proportion, has been allocated to the farm machinery program for the quarter beginning July 1. To assure continuous and balanced production, advance authorizations totalling an additional 200,000 tons of steel have also been approved for each of the three quarters from October 1, 1943, to July 1, 1944.

During the third quarter of this year, special emphasis will be given to the manufacture of harvesting machinery for this year's crops.

The total authorizations for the quarter and for the year beginning July 1 will make it possible to meet the farm machinery production program requested by the War Food Administration.

Within a few days the War Production Board will issue a new farm machinery order to replace L-170, under which the industry has been operating. Farm equipment manufacturers are being authorized today by telegram to place orders for materials for the new program. The telegrams include allotment numbers under the Controlled Materials Plan which will make it possible for the companies to place authorized orders immediately. Detailed certificates of authorization will be mailed within a few days.

In order to assure adequate production, distribution, maintenance, and repair facilities, the new order will eliminate the concentration features of L-170. It will provide for production of new machinery at approximately 80 percent of the 1940 level.

The whole farm machinery program has been stepped up by advancing the completion dates for the quotas established in L-170 for the year which began October 1, 1942, and placing the farm machinery industry on a new annual basis beginning July 1. Of the 300,000 tons of carbon steel allotted for the third quarter of this year, 83,723 tons will be used for completion of the increased program of harvesting machinery decided upon in March, and the remainder will constitute first quarter authorizations under the new order.

Sincerely,

DONALD M. NELSON.

Three memorials of the House of Representatives of the State of Florida; to the Committee on Appropriations:

"House Memorial 8

"A memorial requesting Congress to continue the appropriation for the work of the Farm Security Administration

"Whereas the Farm Security Administration is rendering a much needed service to a great underprivileged class of our citizens; and

"Whereas no other agency, either governmental or private, will properly assume the task of elevating this large group to financial stability and responsible citizenship; and

"Whereas the need for more and more food and related farm produce will be best served by continuing this worthy agency: Now therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the Congress of the United States of America in its wisdom continue the appropriations for the activities of the Farm Security Administration; be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this memorial under the great seal of the State of Florida be immediately forwarded by the secretary of State to the President of the United States of America, to the President of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States Congress, to the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, and copies be forwarded to the delegation representing the State of Florida in both the House and Senate of the United States Congress; be it further

"Whereas it is just and equitable that the persons who suffered loss as aforesaid should be compensated for such loss; and

"Whereas such relief should be provided by an act of the Congress: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida:

"SECTION 1. That the Legislature of the State of Florida does hereby unanimously endorse the bill that has been introduced in the House of Representatives of the United States Congress for the relief of Floridians who suffered loss in the campaign to eradicate the Mediterranean fruit fly in 1929 and requests the Members of Congress to enact the same into law.

"SEC. 2. That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the Florida Members of Congress.

"Approved by the Governor May 17, 1943."

"House Memorial 14

"Memorial to the Congress of the United States petitioning the Congress to appropriate adequate funds for cooperative forest extension and fire protection and for the continuance of funds for forest research

"Whereas the extension of good forestry practices is essential to the continuing supply of vital forest products; and

"Whereas continuance of cooperative forest fire protection is likewise essential to the future of our forest products; and

"Whereas experimental forest research continues to add to the value of forests and forest products: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Congress be petitioned to appropriate the full amount of $4,000,000 recommended by the House Agricultural Appropriation Subcommittee and an additional $3,000,000 to provide fire protection for interior military establishments; and be it further

"Resolved, That Norris-Doxey funds be appropriated to the amount of at least $500,000 and that the United States Forest Service funds be increased by $500,000 for the continuance of the experimental forest research; and be it further

"Approved by the Governor May 17, 1943."

A memorial of the Florida Legislature; to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

"Senate Memorial 2

"Whereas because of unfavorable weather conditions, a late freeze necessitating replanting in many cases and because of increased costs of fertilizer and seed, as well as of labor, and of every other movement incidental to planting, growing, and harvesting this season's crop of Irish potatoes; and

"Whereas the so-called ceiling price of the incoming crop of Florida potatoes, as set by the Office of Price Administration, is not sufficient to meet the added costs, as above enumerated, and is certainly not in line with the prices allowed and named on other essential food products: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the members of the senate and of the house of representatives of the legislature of the State of Florida, do respectfully memorialize and petition the Office of Price Administration in the recommendation that a substantial increase be ordered in the ceiling price of new Florida potatoes comparable with prices fixed on other vegetable food products, and to make possible a reasonable financial return to the growers to compensate them for their work, time, and labor in food production as a valuable contribution to sustain our citizens, our workers, and soldiers in the all-out effort toward winning the war; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this memorial be transmitted to the Office of Price Administration, the Federal Department of Agriculture, and to each Senator and Representative in Congress from the State of Florida.

"Approved by the governor May 22, 1943."

"House Memorial 3

"Memorial to the Congress of the United States requesting that provision be made for the establishment of a national monument at the site of Fort Caroline at St. Johns Bluff, on the south side of the St. Johns River, about 5 miles from the mouth of said river

"Whereas St. Johns Bluff and the area immediately adjacent thereto is of tremendous historical interest, yet has been ignored and neglected by United States Government for some inexplicable reason; and

"Whereas this was the site of Fort Caroline, a colony and fortification established by the French in 1564, was the birthplace of the first Protestant white child on the North American Continent, was the site of the first battle between the armed forces of two European nations in the New World, when the Spaniards, under Pedro Menendez, captured the fort, killing most of the French garrison, and of the battle 2 years later when the French, under DeGourgues, recaptured the fort, killing most of the Spanish garrison, and it is probably the only spot in the United States which was actually fortified by five different nations—France, Spain, England, the Confederate States of America, and the United States of America; and

"Whereas this site is a place of great natural beauty: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the Congress of the United States be and it is hereby respectfully requested to establish the Fort Caroline National Monument at St. Johns Bluff, in Duval County, Fla., as a part of the post-war program for recreational centers; be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be sent to the President of the United States, and to each of Florida's Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States, to the Secretary of the Interior, to the Director of the National Park Service, and to each member of the Advisory Board on National Parks, Historic Sites, Buildings, and Monuments; said copies to be under the great seal of the State of Florida.

"Approved by the Governor May 17, 1943."

A memorial of the Florida Legislature; ordered to lie on the table:

"House Memorial 12

"To the Honorable FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT, PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA:

"Whereas it is very necessary that war industry not be stopped for any cause for the duration; and

"Whereas the coal industry is important and vital to the welfare of this country, and to the armed forces, and necessary for our victory over the barbarians of the world; and

"Whereas it is important that workers, miners, and employees at similar work stay on the job; and

"Whereas many miners and other workers have sons and daughters in the armed forces; and

"Whereas it is detrimental to the morale of the armed forces to have workers quit their jobs during this time; and

"Whereas our great President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, has met this emergency with his usual good judgment and appeal to the patriotism of the workingman: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the house of representatives and senate concurring, That the President of the United States, Franklin D. Roosevelt, be commended by the Legislature of the State of Florida for his handling of the miner's problem, and for his radio broadcast appeal to the patriotism of the miners, and for his action in the emergency.

"That this resolution be spread upon the minutes of this session, and that a copy be forwarded to the President and our Representatives and Senators in Congress.

"Approved by the Governor May 20, 1943."

RESOLUTIONS OF THE FLORIDA JUNIOR CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Mr. PEPPER presented resolutions adopted by the Florida Junior Chamber of Commerce, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas millions of the flower of American youth are now engaged in a life and death struggle for the very preservation of our system of government; and

Whereas when the complete victory has been accomplished many of these men will return home to begin life anew and will undoubtedly face serious problems of rehabilitation brought on by this global struggle: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Florida Junior Chamber of Commerce in annual war conference assembled at Miami Beach, Fla., does take cognizance of the foregoing facts and does hereby recommend that the Congress of these United States immediately provide the proper means for the preparation of a competent rehabilitation program to aid and assist these returning civilians of tomorrow to the end that they may once again take their rightful places in our democratic economy.

Whereas the United States of America is now engaged in a total war against the Axis countries; and

Whereas to win this war it is the duty of every person or groups of persons who enjoy the freedom, privileges, and protection of our country to support loyally and patriotically the Government in the all-out effort for victory; and

Whereas a strike during war is a strike against the Government, and regardless of the apparent right to strike such action is dangerous, ill-advised, and unpatriotic, resulting in disunity, crippling of production, and consequent loss of countless lives of our soldiers at the front; and

Whereas John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers of America called a strike of all miners, thus repudiating a solemn no-strike pledge made to the President of the United States in December 1941: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, The Florida Junior Chamber of Commerce in annual session assembled at Miami Beach, Fla., deplores and condemns this arbitrary, unpatriotic action of John L. Lewis as an effort to force the Government to accede to his demands without submitting to orderly democratic arbitration through the proper Government channels; be it further

Resolved, That the Florida Junior Chamber of Commerce does support and commend the President of the United States as Commander in Chief for reopening production of these vital mines under the flag of the United States of America.

To the Committee on Pensions:

Resolution to provide the same amount of pension for the widows and children and dependent parents of war veterans who were permanently and totally disabled in combat, but who have died by reason of some other disability, as if they had died by reason of such combat disability; and

Ordered to lie on the table:

Resolution expressing appreciation to Past Commanders C. T. Hoverson and Walter Johnson, manager and veterans' contact officer of Veterans' Bureau, Fargo, N. Dak., and also to Dr. P. A. Waters, Veterans' Bureau, Fargo, N. Dak., for their counsel and guidance on the many problems before the Disabled American Veterans convention.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I also ask consent to introduce for proper reference a number of bills prepared by the Disabled War Veterans of North Dakota.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bills introduced by the Senator from North Dakota will be received and appropriately referred.

(For the bills introduced today by Mr. LANGER, see the end of Mr. LANGER'S remarks.)

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, the first bill is entitled "A bill to provide for liberalized adjudication of claims of veterans for service connection for disabilities with which they may be suffering."

I may add, Mr. President, that the Disabled War Veterans of North Dakota is a very active body, perhaps the most active of any organization in the United States. Realizing that the Disabled War Veterans were not receiving a square deal, and also that some of the other veterans, in their judgment, were not receiving the kind of deal to which they were entitled, they asked that I prepare certain bills for them. Some of these bills they prepared themselves. With respect to others I assisted in the preparation.

The second bill is entitled "A bill to remove limitations on time for making application for veterans' benefits."

The third bill is entitled "A bill to authorize and direct the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to include provision for payment of total disability benefits in national service life insurance policies."

The fourth bill is entitled "A bill to amend section 19 of the World War Veterans' Act so as to provide that insurance judgments shall be binding upon the Administrator until modified by court order."

The fifth bill is entitled "A bill to require the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to furnish copies of medical records to persons discharged from the armed forces."

The eighth bill is entitled "A bill to amend paragraph IV of Veterans Regulation Numbered 1 (a) so as to provide increased pensions to surviving dependents of deceased veterans who, at the time of their death, were suffering from permanent and total service-connected disabilities but whose death resulted from other causes."

The ninth bill is entitled "A bill to authorize the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to furnish orthopedic or prosthetic appliances to any honorably discharged veteran in need thereof."

The tenth bill is entitled "A bill to prohibit the reduction of permanent disability ratings except in case of fraud or clear and unmistakable error."

The eleventh bill is entitled "A bill to extend eligibility for adjusted compensation to certain World War provisional, temporary, or probationary commissioned or warrant officers."

The twelfth bill is entitled "A bill to provide full payment of compensation or pension to hospitalized veterans having neither wife, child, nor dependent parent."

The fourteenth bill is entitled "A bill to authorize payment of pensions at combined rates to veterans entitled to benefits for both partial service-connected disabilities and permanent total non-service-connected disabilities."

The fifteenth bill is entitled "A bill to provide for a national cemetery in the State of North Dakota."

The seventeenth bill is entitled "A bill to change the definition of permanent total disability for pension purposes, as to World War veterans, so as to base it upon an individual, rather than an average, basis."

The eighteenth bill is entitled "A bill to provide that inability of the individual veteran to follow any substantially gainful occupation resulting from service-connected disability shall be deemed to be permanent total disability."

The twenty-fourth bill is entitled "A bill to increase to $60 per month the amount of compensation otherwise payable to widows of deceased World War veterans whose deaths were caused by their service-connected disabilities."

The twenty-fifth bill is entitled "A bill to provide for adjudication of any claim for compensation, pension, or retirement pay upon evidence in file at time of death of the veteran."

The thirty-fifth bill is entitled "A bill to give honorably discharged veterans, their widows, and the wives of disabled veterans, who themselves are not qualified, preference in employment where Federal funds are disbursed."

The thirty-sixth bill is entitled "A bill to extend eligibility for compensation to the widows and children of deceased World War veterans who had disabilities caused or aggravated by examination, hospitalization, or medical treatment."

The thirty-seventh bill is entitled "A bill to establish a Board of Appeals and Reviews in the Army for hearing and passing upon petitions for correction of records of persons discharged under other than honorable conditions."

The thirty-eighth bill is entitled "A bill to establish boards of appeals and reviews in the Navy and Marine Corps for hearing and passing upon petitions for correction of records of persons discharged under other than honorable conditions."

The thirty-ninth bill is entitled "A bill to provide for a statutory award of $10 per month to any war veteran who was wounded, gassed, injured, or disabled by an instrumentality of war in a zone of hostilities, and for other purposes."

And the fortieth bill is entitled "A bill to liberalize the bases of eligibility for receipt of disability retirement benefits as to emergency, provisional, probationary, and temporary officers of the World War."

Mr. President, I wish to state that, as I have said before, all the bills were carefully drawn by the disabled war veterans of the State of North Dakota. After having gone over them and examined them with experts who have been in touch with the Veterans' Bureau, there does not seem to be any disputing the fact that the disabled war veterans of the United States have not been receiving the kind of treatment to which they feel they are entitled, and to which I think they are entitled, in view of the fact that they were disabled in World War No. 1.

The bills introduced by Mr. LANGER were severally read twice by their titles, and referred, as indicated:

ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION FOR POSTAL SERVICE EMPLOYEES

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I also introduce a bill to amend the act entitled "An act to provide temporary additional compensation for employees in the Postal Service," so as to increase by $300 the amount of additional compensation payable under such act. I introduce the bill for the reason that I find, upon investigation, that the letter carriers and some of the other postal employees are not receiving sufficient pay, in view of the increased cost of living, to enable them to maintain a decent standard of living.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 1216) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide temporary additional compensation for employees in the Postal Service," so as to increase by $300 the amount of additional compensation payable under such act, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

WARTIME SUBSIDIES—ARTICLE FROM BUSINESS WEEK

[Mr. MAYBANK asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Wartime Subsidies," published in the May 22, 1943, issue of Business Week, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE CRITICAL CANNED-FOOD SITUATION

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I desire the attention of the Senate for a few moments in order to speak on a subject which I believe merits the attention of this body. I have just returned from my State of Wisconsin. There I found a condition which is truly tragic. The canning factories of the country are having difficult times. My State under normal conditions cans about 36 percent of the peas canned in the Nation. If the pea crop in other States this year does not improve, we in Wisconsin may be called upon to can in the neighborhood of from 40 percent to 45 percent of the total crop. The help problem, of course, arises from the war situation. Help in canning factories, which ordinarily would be paid from 40 to 50 cents an hour during the seasonal period, has all been taken into the war plants. In the war plants the workers are paid from $1.10 an hour up. The result is that we are likely to lose a great deal of very vital food. How important is that food? Mr. President, let me refer to an article I have before me which was published by the Milwaukee Journal, reprinted from the New York Times. The article indicates that the defeat in Tunisia of the Germans and Italians was due in no small measure to the fact that the Germans were undernourished. They had plenty of food, mind you, but they did not have the cooked food. They had plenty of ammunition. What they lacked was the nourishment which comes from cooked food, canned food. Our boys who did such a fine job had canned, cooked food.

I simply want to take a moment to read a paragraph or two from the article. The article was written by Frank L. Kluckhohn:

> But what we are most interested in here is that, far from fighting to the last cartridge, these Germans surrendered with boxes of ammunition in quantity, neatly stacked under trees, at Cap Bon. And that they marched in with enough food to last them a long while—our chief difficulty in feeding them with it has been that their rations are uncooked, whereas most of our front-line rations come prepared in cans. It was not alone that the Germans marched in briskly in military formations to give themselves up rather than face the destruction of their outfits to save time for Adolf Hitler, who sent troops into Africa as late as May 5.

Now let me read another paragraph:

> Most of the Hitlerites were despondent when they came in. After a square meal many of them expressed the view that they were going to beat us in the war. The way they had acted was forgotten. They talked of being "tired" of war when they came in. They talked of victory after being fed.

They did not talk of victory before they were fed. They surrendered. After they had received a square meal of American rations, cooked rations, they talked of victory, the article says.

The paragraph concludes:

> A major, who had entered the German Army when he was 15, said he was glad to have his fighting over.

Mr. President, last week, before I returned to my State, there came to my office representatives of the canneries of the State. They were rather dejected. They want to do all they can do. I put them in contact with Marvin Jones. One of the issues is, Can they raise their wage 10 cents an hour? Since the men in the plants in the neighborhood are receiving $1.10 an hour, where else would anyone want to work? However, this problem involves more than the interests of the canners, more than the interests of the State of Wisconsin. It goes to the very question of whether we shall win the war. Food will win. The lack of food will defeat us.

I read a paragraph from a letter which I received this morning from William Opitz, of the Elkhorn Canning Co., who is a patriotic citizen:

> We must make Washington realize, before it is too late, that canned foods are the No. 1 munition of war. No food and you need no shells, cannon, tanks, airplanes. You can kill more people by starvation than any mechanical device that man can produce.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. In connection with the matter which the Senator is discussing, let me say that I received two letters from the parents of boys in New Guinea. One of them wrote to his folks saying that he could not understand why the people in the United States were being rationed. He said that the boys were not getting any American food. He said that they were getting Australian beef, which was rather poor, but no American canned goods. He said that the Australian canned beans and some other articles were all right, but that most of the canned goods were of very poor grade. This soldier, writing to his parents, said that he had not been paid for 5 months. He said that the boys could buy all the American food they wanted in the canteens, but that they were not being furnished American food.

I took up the question with the War Department and was informed that the Department would immediately take it up by wire with the authorities in New Guinea. The War Department officials said that there was no reason why the boys should not get American food.

As I have said, I received two letters, one from a boy's parents in Billings, Mont., and one from a boy's parents in Helena, Mont. Both of them told exactly the same story.

So far as the farmers in my State are concerned, I have received no complaint from them with reference to the prices of their products; but there is this question: If we are to get plenty of food we must have labor. I read a statement by Mr. Hoover and one by the Governor of New York to the effect that they fear that there will be a food shortage. Other persons have told me that there is bound to be a food shortage. If we are to bring about a greater production of canned goods, we must have labor. We must give the farmer a price such that he can furnish the materials with which to produce the food. It seems to me it is a short-sighted policy to say that we will not give the farmer or the canner a price sufficient to pay his workers so that the workers can be kept on the farm or in the factory.

Complaints in similar vein to the complaint cited by the Senator from Wisconsin have come from the canners of my State.

Mr. WILEY. I thank the distinguished Senator. I do not know whether our canned goods are going through to Australia. I do know that under the lend-lease arrangement Australia is giving a great deal of food to our boys there. Lend-lease there is a two-way street, and, so far as I know, there is no complaint as to the quality or quantity of food which the boys are getting.

I am not speaking on that point. I am stressing the point that the Senate of the United States can no longer "pass the buck." For some years we have been talking about the need of a war cabinet. We have sensed that an over-all authority was needed. We need someone at the head who can make the final decision. We hoped that when Jimmie Byrnes was appointed as "assistant President" the war cabinet would go into action. The trouble in the past has been that someone decides what the wages shall be; someone else decides this thing or that thing, but they are in different departments, and there is no person having over-all authority. Here is hoping Byrnes will coordinate this whole matter—wages, prices, priorities, and so forth.

Mr. President, in the next few weeks the question of whether or not certain crops are to be preserved in this country must be decided. It will be decided by the action which is taken in relation to providing labor for the factories.

Three weeks ago when I was in the West there had been heavy rains in Indiana, Ohio, and other States. Much of the land was under water. On my return trip yesterday and this morning I was glad to see that a great deal of that land is coming through in fine shape. Of course, the corn is behind. That means a delay in canning and production in that area.

However, let me stick to the point which I am making. I repeat the language of Mr. Opitz, of the Elkhorn Canning Co.:

> We must make Washington realize, before it is too late, that canned foods are the No. 1 munition of war.

What are we going to do? What is Congress going to do about it? What is Marvin Jones going to do about it? What are the authorities at the other end of the Avenue going to do? Are they going to neglect the problem? If they do, we may find our boys in the same situation as were the Germans in north Africa. They had plenty of munitions, plenty of food, but not plenty of guts. Why? Because they did not have cooked food.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article to which I have referred be printed in its entirety in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GERMANS WILL QUIT! LESSON OF TUNISIA—THEY WERE NOT OUT OF AMMUNITION OR FOOD, BUT WHEN THEY SAW THEY WERE TO BE DEFEATED THEY CAVED IN QUICKLY

(By Frank L. Kluckhohn)

ALLIED HEADQUARTERS IN NORTH AFRICA.—Why did the German and Italian troops in Africa suddenly collapse after 6 months of sturdy battling against the Allied forces? In the answer to this question one can find many lessons of prime importance for the future. All of us who saw the Germans in action knew that technically they were as expert as any troops could be. They used tanks, artillery and antitank guns, men, and airplanes almost perfectly. They seemed to those opposing them to be as courageous as any soldiers that could be found. Yet suddenly they went to pieces. Why?

The Germans were beaten militarily by superior fire power. They were mauled by Allied planes with complete control of the air, but this does not tell the whole story. This is that they collapsed, that they gave up when they saw the odds were overwhelmingly against them. When it came to the showdown they did not after all have the inspiration of the men of Bataan, the willingness to die for a lost cause and gain vital time, that the Russians showed at Stalingrad. There was something wrong. We know what it was and that is the point of this report.

NOT A MATTER OF NUMBERS

When it is said they bowed to superior fire power, that does not mean they were overwhelmed by numbers. The official count of prisoners shows that 200,000 Axis soldiers, at least two-thirds of them Germans, were captured, in addition to those who died, row on row, as the Americans drove into Bizerte and the British into Tunis. In the actual line, Gen. Sir Harold R. L. G. Alexander probably did not have a number greatly in excess of that.

Thousands of pieces of artillery of all types, hundreds of intact implements of warfare like tanks were taken. The odds were not terribly uneven on paper. When one talks of superior fire power one means that the Allied tanks were better concentrated than the German, that the American artillery and British, too, were far more effective than that of the enemy, that our boys were willing to die—and many of them did—to bring to bear the small-arm fire necessary to get to their objective. These were Allied troops—British, American, French—seasoned by long months of fighting the Germans, to beat them at their own game.

OUTGENERALED ARNIM AND CAPTURED HIM

That only steel thrown faster than the Germans can hurl it would beat the superb masters of warfare most informed Americans have long known, but when the Germans came in as prisoners and asked to see our "automatic" big guns, it showed that the novel American method of employing artillery had them on their heels. When our Infantry charge sheer 2,000-foot cliffs and drove the Germans out it was because they could throw more lead than the enemy in a superior position.

When Col. Gen. Jurgen von Arnim was captured not so far from Enfidaville, it demonstrated that he had been outgeneraled—General Alexander had held important elements of the Axis army there by the mere name of the Eighth Army, while he transferred three of its divisions to the First Army farther north for the knock-out blow.

It is indeed good news that we can outshoot, outfight, and outgeneral the opposition. No one here thinks that the inevitable entry into Europe is going to be anything but hard or that the battle afterward is going to be any easier than the long, difficult struggle in Tunisia. It is dangerous to be overoptimistic because of what has happened.

NAZI INVINCIBILITY?

But in this Tunisian campaign we have shown that the Germans can be beaten in their chosen field—battle—just as they were in 1918. We have proved that Nazi invincibility is a myth.

We have learned, moreover, all the Nazi tricks in using tanks, placing guns, and employing whatever one has most effectively. After we had learned what the Germans knew, we improved our methods and invented tricks of our own.

But what we are most interested in here is that, far from fighting to the last cartridge, these Germans surrendered with boxes of ammunition in quantity, neatly stacked under trees at Cap Bon. And that they marched in with enough food to last them a long while—our chief difficulty in feeding them with it has been that their rations are uncooked, whereas most of our front-line rations come prepared in cans. It was not alone that the Germans marched in briskly in military formations to give themselves up rather than face the destruction of their outfits to save time for Adolf Hitler, who sent troops into Africa as late as May 5.

What is important also is that Prussian generals tried to escape in small boats, or burst into tears after capture; that Germans marched in making the "V" for victory sign, hoping this would please the British and Americans; that others fought over the chance to get away in the limited number of small boats available—most of which subsequently were destroyed; that, in brief, they cracked.

LIKE A FOX ROMMEL RAN

Maybe Field Marshal Gen. Erwin Rommel, who left his men at some time yet to be definitely determined, was ill. That would be a natural thing for the German propaganda machine to say of this national idol. Marshal Rommel was the fox—and like the fox, he ran. Generals have commanded battles from a litter.

No one can minimize the tremendous part the British Navy and Allied air forces played in keeping supplies away from the Axis here, yet the forces of Der Fuehrer and Il Duce had ammunition and food when they gave in. It is on the record that a week was counted on to get from Medjez el Bab to Tunis, yet it took only a day and a half after the planes blasted a way open, smashing gun and infantry positions with concentrated bombing. But the Russians have taken the same sort of bombing, and I saw British and American troops stand up against hourly bombings for days on end in the early stages of this campaign.

Let us boil it down to a fact that the Germans did not fight well with the odds against them. Many of them, moreover, were the Germans who appeared to many invincible when they crushed Poland, France, and Greece with the odds in their favor. That is what it comes down to. When the typical German becomes convinced that he cannot win, he will not fight.

NOT LIKE OUR MEN

Can the reader imagine American troops surrendering by units and when they found that the enemy did not have men available to guard them, marching docilely to the rear? I remember those Hampshire men who died in such numbers near Tebourba that only a few were left. They did not yield a yard. This was against superior numbers with no support in sight. I remember the Americans at Kasserine, out on their feet from weeks of steady and unfavorable fighting, men who thought strongly, perhaps, that they were being misused, who stood their ground though many were killed, and finally turned the tide.

Most of the Hitlerites were despondent when they came in. After a square meal many of them expressed the view that they were going to beat us in the war. The way they had acted was forgotten. They talked of being "tired" of war when they came in. They talked of victory after being fed. A major, who had entered the German Army when he was 15, said he was glad to have his fighting over. Someone asked, "When will the war be over?"

LACKS REAL CONVICTION

"I cannot say," he replied in English. "It may take us 5 or 6 months to recapture Africa."

Summing up, from what I can gather the German has been schooled in war and has fought until his enthusiasm has gone. He is a perfect soldier with regard to technique, both individually and en masse. He is brave enough when he thinks he stands a chance to win, but he lacks the conviction of men with real ideals. He seems to have none of the will to fight when all appears lost that sometimes turns defeat into victory, or at least into glory.

It does not really matter what these men think of Herr Hitler. It is important that the Hitler system has not given them "what it takes."

Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower said this week the Allies could find "hope" in what has happened here. We who have seen something of the dirt and blood, who have felt the extreme discomforts of front-line life, who know the nerve-shattering effects of today's high explosives, who have watched the Germans fight, know we have a long, hard row ahead, but we know that if we can pay the price the German military machine will crack. It may be expected to be a high price, but the Nazis will not fight to the bitter end.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). The clerk will state the next committee amendment passed over.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 89 it is proposed to strike out lines 4 to 14, inclusive, as follows:

FARM TENANCY

Salaries and expenses: To enable the Secretary to carry into effect the provisions of title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act approved July 22, 1937 (7 U. S. C. 1000-1006), $500,000 for necessary expenses in connection with the making of loans under title I of said act and the collection of moneys due the United States on account of loans heretofore made under the provisions of said act, including the employment of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, exclusive of printing and binding as authorized by said act.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

LOANS, GRANTS, AND RURAL REHABILITATION

To enable the Secretary to continue to provide assistance through rural rehabilitation and grants to needy farmers in the United States, its Territories, and possessions, including (1) farm debt adjustment service, and making and servicing of loans and grants under this and prior laws; (2) loans to needy individual farmers; (3) grants; and (4) liquidation as expeditiously as possible of Federal rural rehabilitation projects under the supervision of the Farm Security Administration, $29,607,573, which sum shall be also available for necessary administrative expenses incident to the foregoing, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; compensation of experts (including the Administrator and not to exceed three Assistant Administrators of the Farm Security Administration) without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; purchase of lawbooks, books of reference, periodicals, and newspapers; purchase, operation, and maintenance of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; and printing and binding: Provided, That the War Food Administrator shall transmit to the Congress semiannually a progress report with respect to the liquidation of Federal rural rehabilitation projects under the supervision of the Farm Security Administration, showing by name and by States all dispositions of such projects, or parts thereof, together with the amounts of Federal funds expended in the process of liquidation, and any losses incurred in the use of such funds.

In making my grant payments under this act, the Secretary is authorized to require with respect to such payments the performance of work on useful public projects, Federal and non-Federal, including work on private or public land in furtherance of the conservation of natural resources, and the provisions of the act of February 15, 1934 (5 U. S. C. 796), as amended, relating to disability or death compensation, and benefits shall apply to those persons performing such work: Provided, That this section shall not apply to any case coming within the purview of the workmen's compensation law of any State, Territory, or possession, or in which the claimant has received or is entitled to receive similar benefits for injury or death.

For additional funds for the purpose of making rural rehabilitation loans to needy individual farmers, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and directed to make advances to the Secretary upon his request in an aggregate amount of not to exceed $97,500,000. Such advances shall be made (1) with interest at the rate of 3 percent per annum payable semiannually; (2) upon the security of obligations acceptable to the Corporation heretofore or hereafter acquired by the Secretary pursuant to law; (3) in amounts which shall not exceed 75 percent of the then unpaid principal amount of the obligations securing such advances; and (4) upon such other terms and conditions, and with such maturities, as the Corporation may determine. The Secretary shall pay to the Corporation, currently as received by him, all moneys collected as payments of principal and interest on the loans made from the amounts so advanced or collected upon any obligations held by the Corporation as security for such advances, until such amounts are fully repaid. The amount of notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations which the Corporation is authorized and empowered to issue and have outstanding at any one time under the provisions of law in force on the date this act takes effect is hereby increased by an amount sufficient to carry out the provisions of this paragraph.

None of the moneys appropriated or otherwise authorized under this caption ("Loans, grants, and rural rehabilitation") shall be used for (1) the purchase or leasing of land or for the carrying on of any land-purchase or land-leasing program; (2) the carrying on of any operations in collective farming, except for the liquidation as expeditiously as possible of any such projects heretofore initiated; or (3) the making of loans to any individual farmer in excess of $2,500.

The Secretary of Agriculture may expend funds administered by him as trustee under the various transfer agreements with the several State rural rehabilitation corporations only for purposes for which funds made available under this caption may be expended, and the limitations applicable to such funds shall also be applicable to the expenditure of such trust funds by the Secretary of Agriculture.

The appropriation and authorizations herein made under the heading "Loans, grants, and rural rehabilitation," shall constitute the total amount to be available for obligation under this heading during the fiscal year 1944 and shall not be supplemented by funds from any source.

No part of the appropriation herein made under the heading "Loans, grants, and rural rehabilitation" shall be available to pay the compensation of any person appointed in accordance with the civil-service laws.

FARM TENANCY

To enable the Secretary to carry into effect the provisions of title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, approved July 22, 1937 (7 U. S. C. 1000–1006), as follows:

Salaries and expenses: For necessary expenses in connection with the making of loans under title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, approved July 22, 1937 (7 U. S. C. 1000–1006), and the collection of moneys due the United States on account of loans heretofore made under the provisions of said act, including the employment of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, exclusive of printing and binding as authorized by said act, $1,326,070.

Loans: For loans to individual farmers in accordance with title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, approved July 22, 1937 (7 U. S. C. 1000–1006), $30,000,000, which sum shall be borrowed from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation at an interest rate of 3 percent per annum: Provided, That the amount which is available to any State or Territory for making loans under such title I shall be distributed by the Secretary, in accordance with rules prescribed by him, among the several counties or parishes in such State or Territory, except that he shall not distribute to any such county or parish in excess of three times the amount which would be distributed to such county or parish were the entire amount available to the State or Territory distributed among the several counties or parishes in such State or Territory on the basis of farm population and the prevalence of tenancy; and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized and directed to lend such sum to the Secretary upon the security of any obligations of borrowers from the Secretary under the provisions of title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, approved July 22, 1937 (7 U. S. C. 1000–1006): Provided, That the amount loaned by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall not exceed 85 percent of the principal amount outstanding of the obligations constituting the security therefor: Provided further, That the Secretary may utilize proceeds from payments of principal and interest on any loans made under such title I to repay the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the amount borrowed therefrom under the authority of this paragraph: Provided further, That the amount of notes, bonds, debentures, and other such obligations which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to issue and to have outstanding at any one time under existing law is hereby increased by an amount sufficient to carry out the provisions hereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the question of subsidies was discussed yesterday on the floor of the Senate, and is being generally discussed by a great many persons throughout the country, I wish to call attention to an editorial appearing in the Chicago Daily News of June 3, 1943.

It will be recalled that the publisher of the Chicago Daily News is the Secretary of the Navy, a member of the Cabinet.

The editorial states:

IT BUTTERS NO PARSNIPS

The Office of Price Administration's roll-back on retail butter prices is hailed as a blow at the rising cost of living. The housewife who paid 46 cents a pound for butter can now buy the same grade for 41 cents. It's wonderful. It's all done with mirrors.

In order to accomplish this boon to suffering humanity, the butter producer or wholesaler is forced by law to sell the butter to the retailer at 5 cents a pound less than the former price.

I do not know of any law which requires it. I think it is an edict of the department.

The editorial continues:

He, in turn, will be subsidized by the Government at the rate of 5 cents a pound. He will make as much money on the transaction as formerly, the new dealers point out; the retailer will make as much as formerly; the consumer will be benefited by a saving of 5 cents a pound. It is as simple as all that. But is it?

That 5-cents-a-pound subsidy paid to the wholesaler must come from somewhere. Can it be possible that it comes, via the United States Treasury, out of the pockets of the taxpayers of the country—the people who buy butter and those who can't afford butter but have to be content with oleomargarine? Could be.

And what about the elaborate machinery that will have to be set up to enforce and administer this system, police the retailers and the wholesalers, keep the accounts, write out the subsidy checks, deliver them to the wholesalers, compile the reports and statistics inevitable in such a Nation-wide activity? Will this complicated machinery require the employment of many clerks and accountants and stenographers and typists and regional directors and superdirectors? The answer is, "Yes." And will these Government employees be paid salaries and wages for their services? You said it, brother, they will.

The roll-back is, therefore, merely an optical illusion. The consumer, instead of paying 46 cents a pound for butter over the counter, will pay 41 cents over the counter. Then, sooner or later, he will pay out of another pocket the 5-cent subsidy that goes to the wholesaler, plus a few cents additional in taxation to pay for the army of Government employees necessary to administer the device.

Instead of rolling back the price of butter and lowering the cost of living, the subsidy plan, by increasing the administrative load that the consumer must support, will increase the ultimate cost of butter.

The Office of Price Administration may call it a roll-back now; but eventually it will be a kick-back.

I wish to compliment the Secretary of the Navy for this very able editorial which appears in his newspaper, the Chicago Daily News.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I agree with the Senator from Montana that the editorial is an able one; but the Senator does not believe that the Secretary of the Navy really wrote the editorial, or knew it appeared, or had anything to do with it, does he?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not know whether he wrote it or not.

Mr. HILL. My understanding is that since Mr. Knox became Secretary of the Navy he turned the management of his newspaper and its policies, as well as its program, over to certain of his partners and employees. So I really think the Senator, however much he might agree with the editorial, is according the Secretary of the Navy a tribute which I doubt the Secretary of the Navy deserves in this particular instance. I question whether the Secretary of the Navy had anything to do with the editorial.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not know whether he had anything to do with it, and I do not believe that my friend, the acting majority leader, knows whether he had anything to do with it. But, whether he had anything to do with it or not, I agree with the editorial thoroughly, and if the Secretary of the Navy was responsible for it, he should be complimented for it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I think in fairness to the Secretary of the Navy it should be said that merely because the editorial is a good one it should not be assumed that the Secretary of the Navy did not write it. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan, being a newspaperman, ought to know that.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, in addition to what the Chicago Daily News has said in the editorial which I have just read, I wish to say that I am opposed to the granting of subsidies on another ground. I am not saying this because it is being done by a Democratic administration. I am opposed to it in principle. Sooner or later the people of this country must realize that when prices are rolled back and subsidies are granted the money for such subsidies must come out of the pockets of the people in the way of taxes. I agree with the statement made in the editorial that there will have to be provided another army of Federal employees and bureaucrats to check up on all the various stores. The final result will be that it will cost the American people more money than it would cost to permit the consumers to continue to pay the prices which they are paying at the present time.

Furthermore, subsidies are bad in theory, a bad principle, in a democratic republic, because politicians, whether they be Republicans or Democrats, will say to farmers, merchants, and this group and that group, "If the opposition comes into power, you will not receive this subsidy." If various groups of the people are put under obligation to the Government, sooner or later, if this program continues and this group is to be subsidized and that group is to be subsidized, and some other group is to be subsidized, it will not be long before all the people of the country will be on some kind of a subsidy. When that is done the principles of democracy in a democratic republic will be in danger.

Other forms of government may do it. It has been pointed out that England has done it. But it must be recalled that the British Isles are a much smaller territory than this vast country of ours.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. It also ought to be realized that the British Government is the importer of 90 percent of the food which the people there eat; and, of course, it is easy for that Government, as the importer of 90 or 95 percent of the food products coming into Great Britain, to grant a subsidy by a reduction in the price to the food distributors. But that is no reason why it would work in a country such as ours, under a proposal which seeks to deal with the production and processing of food products. It seems to me that those who have assumed that, because it works in Great Britain to check inflationary price rises, it would work in this country, have wholly left out of consideration the vast difference between what is here proposed and the situation in England.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. I agree with the observations of the Senator from Georgia. I should like to invite the attention of the Senator from Montana to this aspect: The sinister part of the subsidy program is that the administration is not coming to the Congress for authority to pay subsidies. It is going to the R. F. C., and the various other corporations which have been created by the Government. A subsidy program has already been instituted in this country when Congress on at least two occasions, has said that no subsidy should be paid.

Furthermore, when Mr. Jesse Jones was before the Joint Committee for the Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures he testified that the R. F. C., without any authority of law whatever, had already agreed to pay $450,000,000 in subsidies on meat and butter, to the processors, not to the farmers. The big packers are the ones who are to receive the subsidies.

The Senator is probably aware that some time ago Mr. Henderson testified it would cost $5,000,000,000 to put the subsidy program in operation It will result in complete regimentation of all the farmers and processors of food. As the Senator has said, the $5,000,000,000 must be raised through taxation of future generations at a time when they will be less able to pay than are the people today.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator from Georgia called attention to the fact that the situation in England is different from ours because most of its food is imported. I think it should be stated that a large part of the food imported is obtained through lend-lease from the United States Government, and that the food is then sold to the British people. Pounds sterling are received by the British Government, which, of course, are of no value to us, and are not paid to us. They are available to the British to pay subsidies on foodstuffs acquired elsewhere than in the United States. So not only is the situation different in England, but the subsidy there is paid at our expense instead of that of the British Government.

I wish to call attention to the fact that there is a bill on the calendar, Senate bill 1108, Calendar No. 289, which has been reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency, containing an amendment prohibiting the use of funds of the Commodity Credit Corporation for the payment of subsidies. When that bill comes before the Senate I intend to offer, if no other Senator does, an amendment imposing a general prohibition against the use of R. F. C. money, or any other money, for subsidies, except under certain specified conditions, where Congress may have approved the policy, or where it may desire to approve the policy. I hope the Senator from Montana will support such a movement which will bring this question directly to issue in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator need not worry about my supporting it, for I certainly shall do so.

I also call attention to the fact that when subsidies are granted to various industries and various sections people who may never use the particular article are called upon to pay their share of the subsidy so that someone else may obtain the article at a cheaper price. Take, for instance, a subsidy on coal and oil for New England. The question came up in the Senate in connection with a bill proposing to pay subsidies, and it was shown that because we had loaned or given to England a number of our oil tankers it was impossible to ship oil to New England by tankers, but it had to be shipped by rail. Under that bill subsidies are being granted so that the people of New England can get cheaper oil.

I wish also to call attention to the fact——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I shall yield in a moment. I desire to call attention to the fact that the people of Montana who already pay a higher price for their gasoline and oil than the people of New England pay are going to have to pay the subsidy or a part of the subsidy which goes to the people of New England. The same thing is true of coal. I point that out as an illustration of how bad subsidies are and what a sinister influence they are on the people of this country as a whole.

Now I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator realizes, of course, that there have been times when there was no oil or coal at any price in New England.

Mr. WHEELER. I so understand.

Mr. LODGE. I hope the Senator does not really mean that it is a sinister thing for the Government to give a little assistance to a section of the country whose productive facilities, leaving out of consideration for the moment human beings, are entirely necessary to the war effort. I cannot believe that the Senator really thinks that New England has received any special favoritism at the hands of the Government, for if he does think so, I am sure he will find that there is no one in New England who agrees with him.

Mr. WHEELER. I appreciate the fact that New England has been badly hit by reason of the shortage of coal and the shortage of oil, and, coming from New England myself, I sympathize very greatly with the people of New England. But I am pointing out the effect of subsidies generally. When subsidies are given on one article to one section of the country, then the rest of the people have to pay for the cheaper product the subsidized section is getting when they themselves derive no benefit from the subsidy at all.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I think one of the cases where a subsidy is justified is on the ground that, because of war conditions, certain transportation costs have greatly increased. That situation affects the people in different sections of the country in different ways. For instance, a plant may be using coal in making war products in Pittsburgh with no increased cost for coal at all, whereas a plant in New England has a very large increase solely due to the war. I think the one exception I would make to the general prohibition against subsidies is a provision that the Government may equalize the cost of transportation where inequality arises because of war emergency conditions. I think in such a case it is not really a subsidy to the particular people involved, but rather an attempt to nullify the inequality caused by war conditions between different people.

Mr. WHEELER. I am perfectly willing to agree that, if there is any instance where a subsidy should be given, it is in the particular instance referred to by the Senator from Ohio. On the other hand, I point out that in my State, for instance, and in some of the other Northwestern States, oil is produced in those States, but notwithstanding the fact that we produce oil and cement and other articles, we have to pay on sugar, for instance, the San Francisco price plus freight to Billings, Mont., right where the sugar factory is located, where the beets are grown. Likewise we pay on oil, which is taken out of the ground in Montana, the Oklahoma price plus the freight to Montana. The same thing is true of various other articles produced in that State. Those States are not only being discriminated against at this time but they are discriminated against at all times. That is why, let me say to Senators from New England, the people of my State are asking, Why should a subsidy be given to New England? Why should a subsidy be given to this section or that section when we are already paying a higher price than they are paying and when of necessity we will have to help pay the taxes in order to provide the subsidies? That is an illustration of the effect of subsidies generally upon various groups of people and upon various sections of the country.

I say that, in principle, a subsidy by the Government of the United States is wrong and is bound, in my judgment, to have a kick-back, as the editorial in the Chicago Daily News points out. Under any theory of government, the principle of subsidies, in my judgment, cannot be defended.

I condemn the action of the R. F. C. in providing funds for subsidies, and of the administration when in order to pay subsidies, money is taken out of the R. F. C. and out of the Treasury of the United States. It amounts to the same thing, for taking it out of the R. F. C. means taking money, the taxpayers' money, out of the Treasury of the United States, without any appropriation by the Congress of the United States and without any law.

As I pointed out, some people say that England is paying subsidies. After all, if England is doing something, that is no reason why the United States should do it. I have heard it repeatedly stated on the floor of the Senate that we ought to do a certain thing because it is what England is doing; we even hear it stated, "This is what Germany is doing, and, consequently, we have got to do the same thing." We are taking a leaf out of the book of Mr. Hitler and out of other books, and saying that the people of the United States have to take certain action because some other country has taken it.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH. I have noted statements that different committees are against subsidies, and I take it from the sentiments expressed here that the Senate is against them. Then, why is there not presented a bill to notify the administration and our people that, so far as the general principle of subsidy is concerned, we will legislate against it? The question has arisen before different committees. The question of the butter and meat subsidy is before my committee. The testimony which was given against a subsidy on those products was amazing. Here we are talking about subsidies; committees are investigating the subject but nothing is done, and in the meantime subsidies are in operation. Why not stop it now?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I understand that there is a bill now pending before the Senate and on the calendar which, if enacted, would prevent the use of money by the R. F. C., and, as I understood him a few moments ago, the Senator from Ohio said that if no other Senator does so, he intends to offer an amendment to that bill prohibiting all subsidies of every kind and character.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to say that, so far as I know, there has been no application to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate for the money with which to pay a subsidy, but a few days ago, as the Senator from Virginia has just explained, the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Jesse Jones, whom we all know and whom we all like and admire, came before the Byrd committee and told us very frankly that $450,000,000 had been set aside to pay subsidies on beef and butter, as I recall, or meat and butter. We asked him to whom he was going to pay the subsidy, whether he was going to pay it to the producers. He was rather vague, as I recall. I have sent for the testimony so as to put his exact words in the RECORD, in order that there may not be any mistake about it, since I would not want to do him an injustice. The answer in substance was, however, that they were going to pay the subsidy to the meat packers.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. I asked him what about the producers. He said the producers would get the benefit of it, as I recall the testimony, by the stabilization of prices. In other words, that through the $450,000,000 which the Government would turn over to the packers, in some way, somehow, by some method I could not understand—if it can be done in the way explained I am unable to understand it—the producers would indirectly get the benefit by not having to take a lower price for their products. To my mind the payment of $450,000,000 to the packers of the country, as indicated in the statement given us by Mr. Jones, will be merely a kindly, agreeable, costly gift by the Government to the packers.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SMITH. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. When the question of the roll-back was before a subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry a point was brought out by the Senator from Oregon to which I should like to call attention. A question was asked as to how much wages had increased in the last 2 years, as I recall the question. The answer was that they had increased 100 percent. Then the question was, "How much have farm prices increased?" The answer was "22 percent." Mr. Jones was asked, "Do you not think that with this tremendous advance in wages a pay-as-you-go plan might be inaugurated, and that those who are getting this tremendous increase in wages should pay the 46 cents which the Department of Agriculture has fixed, rather than reduce the price to 41 cents, and pay the processor?" We said, "Which do you think would be better, to have the one who receives increased wages pay that out of his 100 percent increase, and leave the producers of milk and cream to get 46 percent?" Mr. Jones' answer was, "You have me cornered."

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly; of course he could not say anything else but that he was cornered. I can understand that there may be a few articles which heretofore have not been produced in this country and which our people have been denied because of the war, and which it is necessary to produce here, and that it might be necessary to give subsidies in order to encourage the planting of some new crop which the farmers have not heretofore produced, and perhaps they do not know whether they can produce them at the price fixed.

Mr. SMITH. And the Government pay for the experiment.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; in other words, let the Government pay for that particular experiment. But to give a subsidy on butter, to give a subsidy on meat products, to give subsidies on this and on that, in my judgment, is absolutely wrong and should not be permitted by this Government.

Mr. President, I hope that Congress will do something about this matter and that the Congress will pass a law prohibiting the money of the R. F. C. being used for the purpose of paying subsidies unless request is made of Congress and a law is passed by the Congress permitting that sort of thing to be done.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. When Mr. Jones testified before the Joint Economy Committee it appeared that, in addition to the $450,000,000 for subsidy payments on meat and butter, he was already paying the following subsidies annually:

Petroleum and petroleum products	$225,000,000
Sugar	17,805,000
Coal	25,000,000
Chilean nitrate	3,250,000
Fiber	1,100,000
Petroleum coke	250,000
Aluminum rods and bars	250,000

In addition to that he has agreed to pay excess production costs on copper and some other commodities of which he did not have an estimate of the cost. So we have already embarked upon the subsidy policy. He has agreed to pay premiums for the domestic production of copper, lead, and zinc in excess of the 1941 production, at an estimated cost of $30,000,000 each year.

Mr. WHEELER. I find a widespread opinion that because the subsidy is being paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or is being paid by the R. F. C., the people are getting the benefit of it but will not have to pay for it. They think it is possible to take it out of the so-called rich men of the country. They do not realize that, after all, the taxes have to come out of all classes of people, either directly or indirectly, and that if we took all the money of all the so-called ultrarich, there would not be enough money to pay the interest upon our bonded indebtedness at the present time.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I now have Mr. Jones' testimony before me, and I read from page 1135:

The CHAIRMAN. What I mean is this $450,000,000, how are you going to get it back to Tom Jones who sells the hogs over 3 or 4 months, how does he get his part of it?

Secretary JONES. He will get his part of it, because the packer will continue to pay the prevailing prices.

The CHAIRMAN. It all goes to the packer then?

Secretary JONES. No; it does not go to the packer.

Senator McKELLAR. Who ultimately receives it?

Secretary JONES. It reaches the animal man.

I judge he means the man who produces the animal.

Senator McKELLAR. Who actually receives the money?

Secretary JONES. The packer, the producer.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, the packer gets it. He does not give it back to the producer of the animal.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me finish the quotation:

Senator McKELLAR. The packer actually receives it?

Secretary JONES. Yes.

Senator McKELLAR. It depends on whether or not anybody else gets it.

Secretary JONES. I would not think so.

There he admits that the producer of the meat gets no part of the money, but that the packer gets the money, and that in some way, by the stabilization of prices, keeping prices where they are now, the producer will get the benefit. There is a ceiling on the price.

Mr. WHEELER. What I assume he means is that the packers were saying that they were being squeezed because they could not afford to pay the prices which had been fixed by the O. P. A. to the stock growers, and then process the product at the price at which they were required to sell it.

So in order to stabilize the price, in order to give the consumer a cheaper price, the packer was given a subsidy. I do not know whether the packer is today receiving a sufficiently high price for his product, but let us assume that he is not receiving the price he ought to receive. Some persons in the United States eat more meat than do others. Some persons do not eat any meat. Some persons require more meat than others. The payment of the subsidy means that the person who does not eat any meat and the person who eats very little meat will be asked to pay taxes in order that the person who eats more meat can have cheap meat. The same thing applies all the way down the line. Some families possibly cannot buy butter because they cannot afford to pay the price for it, and therefore must use oleomargarine. If some families must use oleomargarine because they cannot afford to buy butter, they either directly or indirectly are obliged to pay taxes in order that others may be enabled to buy butter at a lower price.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] a moment ago stated that lead, copper, and zinc receive subsidies. Of course they are in a different category altogether from butter, cream, and beef, for the reason that the Government is the only purchaser of zinc, lead, and copper, and these metals are being used altogether in the war effort. The subsidies which are being paid for the production of these metals go only to new producers. Old producers of copper, lead, and zinc, who were operating prior to the war, receive no subsidies whatever for what they produce. The subsidy, or incentive payment, is given only to the new producers.

Mr. BYRD. That was not the testimony which Mr. Jones gave, although I agree with the Senator from Colorado that the metals present an entirely different question. Mr. Jones testified that premiums are paid for domestic production which is in excess of the 1941 production.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. BYRD. I asked Mr. Jones the specific question if it would not apply to the Anaconda Copper Co., and he said it would.

Mr. WHEELER. I think Secretary Jones is wrong in that respect. The subsidy would apply to that company only as it developed some new property.

Mr. BYRD. No; the Secretary said that for production which was in excess of 1941 production the company would receive a subsidy.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. No; that statement is wrong for the reason that the Anaconda Copper Co. is not producing as much now as it did in 1941.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator from Montana spoke of new producers. If the Anaconda Copper Co. were to produce more now than it produced in 1941 it would be eligible to receive a subsidy.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. BYRD. It would not necessarily have to be a new producer. An old producer who increased his production over that of 1941 would receive a subsidy.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Certain regulations are drawn around that provision, however.

Mr. BYRD. I am not objecting to that particular form of subsidy. I am simply calling attention to what the Secretary said.

Mr. WHEELER. The Government has fixed the price of copper at 14 cents. During the last war the price of copper was 27 cents. Perhaps the price of copper was too high at that time. At this time an increase in price of copper has been sought by producers. Rather than grant a general increase in the price of copper a subsidy has been provided to be paid only for copper produced in mines or portions of mines which were not previously producing to any great extent. With respect to the production of main mines I am quite sure that under the present rules and regulations the producers receive no subsidies.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield once more so the RECORD may be made absolutely correct?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I find an additional statement in the hearings with reference to the $450,000,000:

The CHAIRMAN. All the farmer gets is the fact that his price is not reduced.

Secretary JONES. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. He gets the same price that he now gets?

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. I continue to read:

Secretary JONES. That is correct.

Senator McKELLAR. The subsidy goes to the packer, the processor, and the distributor.

The Secretary did not answer my last statement, but it was made in connection with the general discussion. I call attention to that testimony in order to show that so far as this enormous subsidy of $450,000,000 is concerned every dime of it, every cent of it, goes to the packer or to the distributor. Not a single cent of it goes to the farmer who produces the meat or the butter.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. BYRD. Let me say that the $450,000,000 represents simply the beginning of the subsidy program.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes, of course; it is simply the beginning of it. Anyone who knows anything about subsidies must be aware that if we begin giving subsidies to one group or to another group, every other group in the country will come to Washington clamoring for subsidies and saying, "We cannot continue to produce and to meet the war requirements without receiving a subsidy."

As the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] has pointed out, the Government purchases or takes all the copper which is produced in this country. The Government could have accomplished the same purpose without giving subsidies simply by saying, "We will give you 16 cents or 17 cents for the copper you produce over what you produced last year."

Subsidies are wrong in principle, whether paid to copper companies, or to packers, or to manufacturers, or to any other group in the United States.

Mr. BYRD. Especially is it wrong to take the subsidy money out of the funds of the R. F. C., which is a banking institution and which was not created by Congress for the purpose of making appropriations which are nonrecoverable. The R. F. C. is a banking institution supposed to make loans which will later be repaid, or at least such part of them as it is possible to recover. In this instance the R. F. C. is being used as a means to bypass Congress, so Congress will not have anything to say about the matter at all. Thus the funds which Congress authorized for banking purposes are being given away and will never be recovered.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, we see day by day attempts being made by various bureaus and departments to bypass Congress in every possible way, shape, and form. Yet those who cry the loudest about preserving democracy and parliamentary government in this country constantly shout that it is necessary for these bureaus and departments to bypass Congress because they cannot get everything they want from Congress through the ordinary methods which are established and under the ordinary principles of a democratic republic.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. It is also true, is it not, that anyone who accepts subsidies from the Federal Treasury accepts at the same time regulation by the different bureaus?

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct. I repeat what I said at the beginning, that I think subsidies are wrong in principle. I wish to compliment the publisher of the newspaper in which the editorial previously mentioned was published and the Secretary of the Navy for permitting the publication of the editorial, if he did permit it, and I wish to say that I sincerely hope I shall be afforded an opportunity to vote on legislation which will forbid the R. F. C., or any other agency of Government, from granting subsidies unless the subsidies are first approved by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 89, after line 3, it is proposed to strike out:

FARM TENANCY

Salaries and expenses: To enable the Secretary to carry into effect the provisions of title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act approved July 22, 1937 (7 U. S. C. 1000–1006), $500,000 for necessary expenses in connection with the making of loans under title I of said act and the collection of moneys due the United States on account of loans heretofore made under the provisions of said act, including the employment of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, exclusive of printing and binding as authorized by said act.

And to insert:

LOANS, GRANTS, AND RURAL REHABILITATION

To enable the Secretary to continue to provide assistance through rural rehabilitation and grants to needy farmers in the United States, its Territories, and possessions, including (1) farm debt adjustment service, and making and servicing of loans and grants under this and prior laws; (2) loans to needy individual farmers; (3) grants; and (4) liquidation as expeditiously as possible of Federal rural rehabilitation projects under the supervision of the Farm Security Administration, $29,607,573, which sum shall be also available for necessary administrative expenses incident to the foregoing, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; compensation of experts (including the Administrator and not to exceed three Assistant Administrators of the Farm Security Administration) without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; purchase of lawbooks, books of reference, periodicals, and newspapers; purchase, operation, and maintenance of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; and printing and binding: Provided, That the War Food Administrator shall transmit to the Congress semiannually a progress report with respect to the liquidation of Federal rural rehabilitation projects under the supervision of the Farm Security Administration, showing by name and by States all dispositions of such projects, or parts thereof, together with the amounts of Federal funds expended in the process of liquidation, and any losses incurred in the use of such funds.

In making any grant payments under this act, the Secretary is authorized to require with respect to such payments the performance of work on useful public projects, Federal and non-Federal, including work on private or public land in furtherance of the conservation of natural resources, and the provisions of the act of February 15, 1934 (5 U. S. C., 796), as amended, relating to disability or death compensation, and benefits shall apply to those persons performing such work: Provided, That this section shall not apply to any case coming within the purview of the workmen's compensation law of any State, Territory, or possession, or in which the claimant has received or is entitled to receive similar benefits for injury or death.

For additional funds for the purpose of making rural rehabilitation loans to needy individual farmers, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and directed to make advances to the Secretary upon his request in an aggregate amount of not to exceed $97,500,000. Such advances shall be made (1) with interest at the rate of 3 percent per annum payable semiannually; (2) upon the security of obligations acceptable to the Corporation heretofore or hereafter acquired by the Secretary pursuant to law; (3) in amounts which shall not exceed 75 percent of the then unpaid principal amount of the obligations securing such advances; and (4) upon such other terms and conditions, and with such maturities, as the Corporation may determine. The Secretary shall pay to the Corporation, currently as received by him, all moneys collected as payments of principal and interest on the loans made from the amounts so advanced or collected upon any obligations held by the Corporation as security for such advances, until such amounts are fully repaid. The amount of notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations which the Corporation is authorized and empowered to issue and to have outstanding at any one time under the provisions of law in force on the date this act takes effect is hereby increased by an amount sufficient to carry out the provisions of this paragraph.

None of the moneys appropriated or otherwise authorized under the caption ("Loans, grants, and rural rehabilitation") shall be used for (1) the purchase or leasing of land or for the carrying on of any land-purchase or land-leasing program; (2) the carrying on of any operations in collective farming, except for the liquidation as expeditiously as possible of any such projects heretofore initiated; or (3) the making of loans to any individual farmer in excess of $2,500.

The Secretary of Agriculture may expend funds administered by him as trustee under the various transfer agreements with the several State rural rehabilitation corporations only for purposes for which funds made available under this caption may be expended, and the limitations applicable to such funds shall also be applicable to the expenditure of such trust funds by the Secretary of Agriculture.

The appropriation and authorizations herein made under the heading "Loans, grants, and rural rehabilitation," shall constitute the total amount to be available for obligation under this heading during the fiscal year 1944 and shall not be supplemented by funds from any source.

No part of the appropriation herein made under the heading "Loans, grants, and rural rehabilitation" shall be available to pay the compensation of any person appointed in accordance with the civil-service laws.

FARM TENANCY

To enable the Secretary to carry into effect the provisions of title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, approved July 22, 1937 (7 U. S. C. 1000–1006), as follows:

Salaries and expenses: For necessary expenses in connection with the making of loans under title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, approved July 22, 1937 (7 U. S. C. 1000–1006), and the collection of moneys due the United States on account of loans heretofore made under the provisions of said Act, including the employment of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, exclusive of printing and binding as authorized by said Act $1,326,070.

Loans: For loans to individual farmers in accordance with title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, approved July 22, 1937 (7 U. S. C. 1000–1006), $30,000,000, which sum shall be borrowed from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation at an interest rate of 3 per centum per annum: Provided, That the amount which is available to any State or Territory for making loans under such title I shall be distributed by the Secretary, in accordance with rules prescribed by him, among the several counties or parishes in such State or Territory, except that he shall not distribute to any such county or parish in excess of three times the amount which would be distributed to such county or parish were the entire amount available to the State or Territory distributed among the several counties or parishes in such State or Territory on the basis of farm population and the prevalence of tenancy; and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized and directed to lend such sum to the Secretary upon the security of any obligations of borrowers from the Secretary under the provisions of title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, approved July 22, 1937 (7 U. S. C. 1000–1006): Provided, That the amount loaned by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall not exceed 85 per centum of the principal amount outstanding of the obligations constituting the security therefor: Provided further, That the Secretary may utilize proceeds from payments of principal and interest on any loans made under such title I to repay the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the amount borrowed therefrom under the authority of this paragraph: Provided further, That the amount of notes, bonds, debentures, and other such obligations which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to issue and to have outstanding at any one time under existing law is hereby increased by an amount sufficient to carry out the provisions hereof.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, under rule XVI, I make the point of order against the committee amendment now under consideration, beginning in line 4 on page 89.

Paragraph 2 of rule XVI provides that:

The Committee on Appropriations shall not report an appropriation bill containing amendments proposing new or general legislation, and if an appropriation bill is reported to the Senate containing amendments proposing new or general legislation, a point of order may be made against the bill, and if the point is sustained, the bill shall be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations.

Paragraph 4 of the same rule provides that:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

Mr. President, the provisions included under the caption "Loans, grants, and rural rehabilitation," were not in the bill as it came over from the House of Representatives, and there has never been any authority in law for this appropriation. This program was started by Executive order in the Federal Emergency Relief Administration in 1934. On April 30, 1935, the President issued an Executive order creating the Resettlement Administration, which took over that part of the F. E. R. A. program, as well as certain activities of other agencies. On September 1, 1937, the Secretary of Agriculture issued a memorandum creating the Farm Security Administration as successor to the Resettlement Administration, which had been transferred to the Department of Agriculture by Executive order of the President on December 31, 1936.

The Congress has never enacted legislation creating the Farm Security Administration, and has never authorized by law the program known as Loans, Grants, and Rural Rehabilitation.

Mr. President, I ask the attention of the Senate to the language on page 90, beginning in line 5 "without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended."

That is certainly legislation, because it sets aside existing law.

In line 9 we find the language:

Provided, That the War Food Administrator shall transmit to the Congress semiannually a progress report with respect to the liquidation of Federal rural rehabilitation projects under the supervision of the Farm Security Administration, showing by name and by States all dispositions of such projects, or parts thereof, together with the amounts of Federal funds expended in the process of liquidation, and any losses incurred in the use of such funds.

The rules have repeatedly been interpreted to mean that any additional duty or responsibility placed upon any agency of the Government, especially when such agency was not authorized by law, is regarded as legislation.

The language of the amendment beginning on line 18 on page 90, and continuing to and including line 5 on page 91, can certainly be regarded as legislation.

I also invite attention to the language beginning in line 6 on page 91, as follows:

For additional funds for the purpose of making rural-rehabilitation loans to needy individual farmers, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and directed to make advances to the Secretary upon his request in an aggregate amount of not to exceed $97,500,000.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is a change in existing law.

Mr. BYRD. Yes, that is a change in the existing law, and is in the same category as the legislative amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia with respect to the loans of $30,000,000 to be made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under the Rural Electrification Act.

Mr. President, it seems very obvious to me that, with the exception of perhaps that part of the amendment on page 92 beginning with line 5 and ending in line 13, which represents restriction, the remainder of the amendment offered by the committee down to and certainly including the first paragraph on page 93 is general legislation upon a general appropriation bill.

In accordance with the rules of the Senate, Mr. President, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I believe that clearly under the precedents of the Senate the point of order made by the Senator from Virginia in this instance is not well taken and should be overruled. The Senator has stated there is no statutory authority for these rehabilitation loans. I respectfully invite his attention to title II of an act of Congress approved July 22, 1937. It reads as follows:

TITLE II—REHABILITATION LOANS

BORROWERS AND TERMS

SEC. 21 (a). Out of the funds made available under section 23, the Secretary shall have power to make loans to eligible individuals for the purchase of livestock, farm equipment, supplies, and for other farm needs (including minor improvements and minor repairs to real property), and for the refinancing of indebtedness, and for family subsistence.

That is the statutory authority delegated by an act of Congress, which has never been repealed, to the Secretary to make loans for rural rehabilitation.

I ask Senators to refer to line 19 on page 89 beginning with the words "farm debt adjustment service." There is statutory authority found in this act for the carrying out of that service, and I read from section 22 of the same act from which I have already read, which was approved, as I have said, on July 22, 1937:

The Secretary shall have power to assist in the voluntary adjustment of indebtedness between farm debtors and their creditors and may cooperate with and pay the whole or part of the expenses of State, Territorial, and local agencies and committees engaged in such debt adjustment. He is also authorized to continue and carry out undertakings with respect to farm-debt adjustment uncompleted at the time when appropriations for the purpose of this section are first available. Services furnished by the Secretary under this section shall be without charge to the debtor or creditor.

I further invite the attention of the Senate to title I of the same act which provides as follows:

The Secretary of Agriculture (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary") is authorized to make loans in the United States and in the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii and in Puerto Rico to persons eligible to receive the benefits of this title to enable such persons to acquire farms.

(b) Only farm tenants, farm laborers, sharecroppers, and other individuals who obtain, or who recently obtained, the major portion of their income from farming operations shall be eligible to receive the benefits of this title.

Then follow a great many details with regard to the making of loans to farm tenants, to farm laborers, and to sharecroppers to enable them to purchase farms.

So, Mr. President, so far as concerns the charge which has been made that the Congress has never approved rural rehabilitation loans, I thought it was well for me to read these items in the act—this still live statute—to show that Congress has had ample authority in times past for a comprehensive program of rural rehabilitation. The appropriations which have been made from year to year for the purpose of making these loans have been made to the Secretary of Agriculture and not to the Farm Security Administration. The Farm Security Administration is the agency which has been utilized by the Secretary. But so far as the bill before us is concerned, the appropriation would be made to the Secretary of Agriculture just as has been the case in times past.

There are some portions of this amendment, Mr. President, which are legislative in character. The reference made by the Senator from Virginia to the provision authorizing borrowings from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation does not appear in the basic act to which I have referred. However, Mr. President, I do not depend, in opposing the point of order, solely upon statutory authority for the detailed program set forth for the making of rural-rehabilitation loans. This amendment was reported by the committee in the bill on the strength of one of the most elementary rules of both legislative bodies. It has always been recognized that where one body legislates upon a subject the other body has a right to amend it in any way it sees fit so long as the amendment is germane to the question which is referred to in the bill which comes before it. Every provision of the amendment is germane to a program of rural rehabilitation.

Mr. President, I submit that the House, by inserting by a floor amendment the language found on page 89 of the pending bill appropriating $500,000 for necessary expenses in connection with the making of loans under title I, and by inserting the words—I will read from line 9—"and the collection of moneys due the United States on account of loans heretofore made under the provisions of said act," legislated thereon. It makes no difference how slender the thread of legislation may be which comes to us from the other House. If there is any legislation there at all we are entitled to transform it into a steel cable, or a steel beam, so long as the amendment which we offer is germane to the general subject.

The provision in the House bill is undoubtedly legislation. I wish to submit to the Senate the language of section 6 of the act approved July 22, 1937. A comparison of this language with the House provision clearly demonstrates the fact that the latter is legislation:

SEC. 6. To carry out the provisions of this title, there is authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $10,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, not to exceed $25,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and not to exceed $50,000,000 for each fiscal year thereafter.

I hope Senators, without regard to their views on the merits of this issue, will listen to the language which I shall now read:

Not more than 5 percent of the sums appropriated for any fiscal year in pursuance of this section shall be available for administrative expenses in carrying out this title during such fiscal year.

I hope Senators will mark that language well—not more than 5 percent of the amount appropriated in any fiscal year for carrying out this section for the purpose of making loans, shall be available for administrative expenses.

Mr. President, when the House struck out on the floor all the loan money and appropriated $500,000 for the collection of outstanding loans, without making any authorization for loans, it made an appropriation of 100 percent of the sums which were available for loans, and there is no way of escaping the fact that that is legislation. It may be minor, but it has the effect of repealing section 6 of the basic act which was approved in 1937. So long as the House of Representatives legislates in any respect the Senate has a right to go fully into the whole question of rural rehabilitation and tenant purchase loans.

The point made, Mr. President, at the outside, can only present the question as to whether or not the amendment is germane under paragraph 4 of rule XVI. I contend if the House of Representatives undertakes to repeal an act in a general appropriation bill, that the Senate may strike out the language repealing the act and provide for amending the act in the general appropriation bill. To rule otherwise would be absolutely to reverse every precedent the Senate has ever established in dealing with this question. It is undoubtedly in order for this committee amendment to come before the Senate and to be considered on its merits unless it is desired to repeal every precedent the Senate has established concerning the powers of one House to deal with an amendment of the other House which has the effect of changing existing law.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Suppose the Senate amendment had been adopted by the House, all except the provision for $97,500,000 to be loaned by the R. F. C., and the Senate committee had then attempted to insert that amendment in the House amendment, would not that be new and general legislation?

Mr. RUSSELL. No, I do not think so. If there was any piece of legislation in the House provision we have a right to amend it in any words which are germane to the subject.

Mr. TAFT. Suppose the House feels that because of the authority of existing law these appropriations are justified, and the Senate comes along and passes an entirely new provision that is not authorized in existing law but brings a new element into the picture and appropriates $97,500,000, would not that be an amendment proposing new legislation? Why is it not the same thing if it is included in the amendment which the Senate committee proposes to the House amendment?

Mr. RUSSELL. I am sorry the Senator from Ohio missed the point I was undertaking to make. I am making the point that the House did legislate on this question. If we go on the supposition that the House did not legislate on the subject, but that it merely conformed to the Rehabilitation Act of 1937, the amendment would have been subject to a point of order, but the House did not content itself with dealing with any provision of existing law; it undertook by this language to repeal and to nullify section 6 of the act to which I have referred, which provided that for administrative expenses the appropriations should never exceed 5 percent of the amount which was made available for loans.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, paragraph 4 of rule XVI provides:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

Why is not the provision about the R. F. C. general legislation and why is not the amendment itself subject to the rule?

Mr. RUSSELL. Because, Mr. President, the first clause of subdivision 4 of rule XVI relates to amendments which propose legislation de novo. It does not relate to amendments undertaking to amend legislative provisions which come to the Senate from the House of Representatives. The second clause of the paragraph provides—

Nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject matter contained in the bill be received.

That is the only language in the entire rule which might be applied to the amendment now under consideration.

Mr. TAFT. It seems to me that is very much more damning to the proposal, because the amendment is purely general legislation not proposed by the House. I cannot understand the basis of the contention of the Senator from Georgia that it is not general legislation. There is no statutory authority for us to tell the R. F. C. to get into the picture and loan $97,500,000.

Mr. RUSSELL. I concede that, but the Senator still misses the point. The first clause of the rule is only to be applied in the event there is no legislation in the bill before the Senate. If there is legislation in the bill before the Senate, the Senate has a right to proceed to change the legislative provision which comes before it from the other House, provided the changes proposed are germane.

Mr. TAFT. I think it is perfectly clear that in this bill there cannot be inserted in the committee amendment a new provision of law, even one relating to such a matter as including employees under the civil service, which is not in the House amendment and not authorized by any existing law and which no one ever heard of until the Senate committee inserted it as an amendment. I cannot understand the argument of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not think that the Senator from Ohio wishes very strongly to understand it. The fact is, nevertheless, that, without regard to the views of the Senator from Ohio, the established precedent of the Senate is that where the House itself has violated the rule against legislation on an appropriation bill the Senate has the right to legislate on the same subject in the Senate. The only rule that pertains to it is as to whether or not the Senate proposal is germane to the House amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator is quoting precedents. Does he know of any single precedent in the whole history of the Senate where it has ever been held that because the House chooses to legislate on an appropriation bill with regard to one particular item the Senate, therefore, under its own rules, or the Appropriations Committee, has authority to legislate in any other way it might desire? In other words, assuming the Senator's own argument that the House has legislated with regard to the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, the Senator's argument would lead anybody to believe that, therefore, the Appropriations Committee, under the rules of the Senate, has authority and power to legislate on anywith the subject of farm tenancy.

Mr. RUSSELL. No; I never made any such contention.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But it is a logical result of the Senator's argument.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is what the Senator from Missouri contends. The Senate committee has not undertaken to deal with any new question. The only questions we are dealing with are the ones that have always been contained in this bill, under the act referred to in the House bill, and which the House undertook to repeal when it inserted this provision in the bill. All of them have been carried on under the general act providing for rural rehabilitation loans, for tenant purchases, as well as for rural rehabilitation where purchase loans were not involved. There can be no question that this amendment is germane to the act in question. The rural rehabilitation loans are in the same bill that carries the tenant purchase loans which are referred to in the House provision which is before the Senate. If the House undertakes to legislate and does legislate in any degree upon any question, certainly the Senate has a right to legislate upon the same question. That is absolutely fundamental, and no other ruling has ever been made, Mr. President, in the period I have been in this body; and, I am not familiar with any precedent to the contrary.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator was reading from an act which was approved July 22, 1937.

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes.

Mr. BYRD. To create the Farmers' Home Corporation. I am reliably informed that that corporation has never been created and is in a state of innocuous desuetude. Is the Senator assenting that because of this law, which has never become operative, this particular corporation has never been organized?

Mr. RUSSELL. No; the question of the Senator from Virginia demonstrates unfamiliarity with this entire question.

Mr. BYRD. I would thank the Senator very much for an answer.

Mr. RUSSELL. I wish to point out that there is no mandatory provision here for the establishment of that corporation.

Mr. BYRD. I asked the Senator a question, and I am entitled to an answer from the Senator.

Mr. RUSSELL. I regret if I seemed to be abrupt with the Senator.

Mr. BYRD. I think the Senator was quite abrupt.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am sorry.

Mr. BYRD. I asked a very courteous question of the Senator. The Senator always tries to make these debates personal, which I do not think is proper. I have my right to my convictions, just as the Senator from Georgia has a right to his.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have absolutely no desire to infringe on any conviction the Senator may have.

Mr. BYRD. I certainly have a right to ask a question, which the Senator should not object to. The Senator was quoting from an act to create the Farmers' Home Corporation, which, he contended, gave legislative authority for the purchase of livestock, farm equipment, and supplies, and I ask this question, Has the Farmers' Home Corporation ever been organized?

Mr. RUSSELL. Not that I know of.

Mr. BYRD. It is a dormant corporation; is it not?

Mr. RUSSELL. It is dormant, because the Secretary, under the specific terms of the law, was given two methods of procedure. One of them was that he could proceed under title I or title II to lend funds through any agency of his own choice, or he could proceed through the Farmers' Home Corporation.

Mr. BYRD. He is not proceeding through the Farmers' Home Corporation.

Mr. RUSSELL. I know that, and there is nothing in the act to require him to do it. It is absolutely optional. He may create the Farmers' Home Corporation. He never saw fit to do it, but that does not curtail his power to make loans under title I and title II.

Mr. BYRD. But this is what it says:

Out of the funds made available under section 23, the Secretary shall have power—

And so forth. Section 23 applies to the Farmers' Home Corporation, which has never been organized. The act was passed, and was approved July 22, 1937.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, if the Senator will read section 23 he will see that it does not apply to the Farmers' Home Corporation. It says:

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, the balances of funds available to the Secretary—

Not to the Farmers' Home Corporation, but—available to the Secretary for loans and relief to farmers, pursuant to Executive Order No. 7530—

And so forth. It has no reference to the Farmers' Home Corporation, and there is nothing in the act to make it mandatory on the Secretary to establish that corporation. It was an alternative. For some reason the Secretary saw fit to exercise the powers contained in titles I and II of the act, and he never saw fit to create the Farmers' Home Corporation.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALLGREN in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. As I understand the contention of the able Senator from Georgia, it is that the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations stems from the provision written by the House of Representatives, which appears on page 89, entitled "Farm Tenancy."

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator states my position correctly.

Mr. LUCAS. Will the able Senator tell me what part of the amendment applies strictly to the farm-tenancy program, provided for in what is known as the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act?

Mr. RUSSELL. It is my contention that when the House of Representatives proceeds to legislate with respect to one title of this act, the Senate has a right to legislate with respect to all titles of the Farm Tenant Act.

Mr. LUCAS. I do not say that I disagree with the able Senator on that, but I was wondering whether it could be segregated and broken down to the point where we would know definitely which portion of the amendment specifically applied to the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act; or is the entire amendment a part of the Bankhead-Jones Act?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senate provisions are offered to make appropriations for the Secretary with respect to general powers contained in titles I and II of the Bankhead-Jones Act.

Mr. LUCAS. I appreciate that, and I understand it thoroughly, but I think there is confusion.

Mr. RUSSELL. We go further than the Bankhead-Jones Act, I concede freely, but if the House has the right to deviate from the Bankhead-Jones Act in one respect, to legislate on the question of rehabilitation and tenant loans, we have a right to deviate so long as our deviation is germane.

Mr. LUCAS. In other words, the Senator's contention is that once the House opens up the field, there is no limit as to how far the Senate may go, so long as it is dealing with loans for rehabilitation in connection with farms.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator is exactly correct and the position is sound.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Am I to understand that if the House had legislated on the Bankhead-Jones Act without violating it in any way or attempting to impose any additional legislative provisions, then the Senate, under the Senator's amendment, would be barred also from general legislation?

Mr. RUSSELL. I think that is correct.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator claims that because the House, dealing with the Bankhead-Jones Act, proposes one kind of general legislation—I do not admit it, except for the purpose of this question—therefore the Senate may impose an entirely different kind of general legislation, in spite of the Senate rule that no general legislation may be proposed to an appropriation bill?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; so long as it is germane, and I contend that paragraph 4 of rule XVI relates only to new legislation and not to changing legislation which comes before us from the House of Representatives.

Mr. TAFT. But it seems to me clear that the amendment dealing with the R. F. C. is new legislation. It may have reference to a provision that is related to the Bankhead-Jones Act, but it is new legislation, and I cannot see how it can be said it does not come under the rule.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have undertaken to give my own position on that question. It is my construction that paragraph 4, which the Senator is discussing, relates only to new legislation which might be offered in the bill, but when the House has deviated from the rule which provides there shall be no legislation on an appropriation bill, undoubtedly, under all the precedents, if the House legislates in any respect, then the only qualification on the Senate provisions is that they must be germane to the general subject involved in the legislation, and this amendment is undoubtedly germane to the general purposes of the Bankhead-Jones Act, which is referred to in the House legislative provision which appears on page 89 of the bill.

Mr. TAFT. I should like to ask the Senator one other question. I cannot see why the Senate provision is not one dealing in general legislation. There is merely a failure on the part of the House to appropriate for some of the purposes of the act; but that is not a violation of the act.

Mr. RUSSELL. The language in the House provision which undertakes to liquidate the question by adding the words "and the collection of moneys due the United States on account of loans heretofore made" shows that it is legislation, because section 6 of the basic act, which I have once read, says that no money shall be allowed for administrative expenses in excess of 5 percent of the amount that is allowed for loans. The House did not allow a dollar for loans, therefore, if they had appropriated $5 for administration it would have had the effect of anulling section 6 of the basic act, which provides that the administrative expenses shall not exceed 5 percent of the amount made available foi loans.

Mr. TAFT. It seems to me that can hardly be said to be a violation. Possibly the $500,000 appropriation is void.

Mr. RUSSELL. It is not void; it is legislation, because it is made in derogation of the express terms of the statute, and contrary to the express terms of the statute. There can be no question about it being legislation. It might as well be provided in the appropriation bill that the Bankhead-Jones Act is repealed. Then would the Senator contend that we could not strike out that provision and offer an amendment which amended the Bankhead-Jones Act?

It is clear to me that, under the rule, the only question possible in this matter is whether the amendment is germane. Suppose the House tries to repeal some act in an appropriation bill and their action comes to the Senate. The Senate is not compelled to accept this House provision. The Senate has some rights. If the House went to the extent of saying in a general appropriation bill that an act approved on such and such a date "is hereby repealed," undoubtedly and unquestionably, in view of every precedent, the Senate could go into that matter, and amend the act which the House sought to repeal or reject the House amendment. Any other ruling would deny the Senate coordinate powers with the House.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief statement, because I think this is a very important question. I wish that Senators could disassociate the issue involved in the amendment and consider the matter from the standpoint of the parliamentary situation. I know it is always difficult to do that, but there was very sound ground, Mr. President, for the provision in the rule that an appropriation bill should not carry general legislation. It gave too great opportunity for abuse of the great power of lumping together legislation with appropriations, and making it impossible either to vote against or for the measure without involving the question of appropriations. So I want it generally understood that I am in deep sympathy with that provision of the rule.

But, as I see it, that is not the issue now at stake. The issue at stake is the question of whether or not the Senate shall maintain its unbroken precedents holding that it has the right to explore any field of general legislation which the House of Representatives may have entered. That, Mr. President, is a vital question; it is a question of great extreme importance as affecting the power of the Senate.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Of course, it is not a question of the power of the Senate. It is the Senate's own rule which is being violated. It is a question of what the Senate wants. The Senate can set aside the rule if it wants to do so. The Senate can change the rule. It is not a question between the Senate and the House of Representatives; it is merely a question whether we shall abide by our own rules.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator will bear with me, perhaps I cannot convince him, but, at least, I will have an opportunity to state why I think it is of great importance. If, for example, the Senate should take the position that the House of Representatives, having legislated upon a subject, the Senate could not pursue that field and alter, amend, enlarge, change, or shrink the action of the House, it would bind itself to a legislative provision in an appropriation bill, which must pass in order that a particular department or agency may continue to function. The Senate would be helpless; it could not change, it could not alter the action taken by the House of Representatives.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. The Senate can strike out the legislative provision which the House has inserted.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

Mr. TAFT. That is entirely within its power.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; it is within its power, Mr. President; but if the conferees on the part of the House maintain their position, the Senate is ultimately confronted with either yielding to the ipse dixit and the legislative action of the House without amendment, change, or alteration, or killing the appropriation bill. That is the whole theory behind this general rule. The purpose of the rule is to preserve the power of the Senate to act in any way the majority of the Senate sees fit, whenever the other body may have entered the field of legislation. It could not have been better put than it was put by Vice President Marshall when he said:

> Notwithstanding the rule of the Senate to the effect that general legislation may not be attached to an appropriation bill, still when the House of Representatives opens the door and proceeds to enter upon a field of general legislation, the House having opened the door, the Senate of the United States can walk in through the door and pursue the field.

Mr. President, I contend that it is absolutely necessary that we maintain that precedent. It is clearly a question here of the House having entered the field. The question which is raised in paragraph 4 of rule XVI is certainly one which could be given consideration, namely, whether the legislative action of the Senate committee is germane to the legislative action taken by the House of Representatives. I agree in that respect 100 percent with everything that has been said by the able Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], and I think he has proven beyond peradventure of argument that the action of the Senate committee is germane.

But the question at issue is not as yet one of germaneness. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] has raised the point of order that the amendment proposes general legislation, and I appeal to the Senate, and I appeal to the Chair, not to sustain such a point of order, not to reverse the unbroken precedents of the Senate, but to maintain the legislative power of the Senate on a parity with the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand that the Senator from Wisconsin has raised the question of relevancy?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; I did not raise it. I said that it could be raised.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I desire to follow the invitation extended by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] in one of his more courteous moments, and discuss this matter as a matter of parliamentary procedure rather than on the merits of the substantive proposition involved.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that we have listened to a very remarkable demonstration this afternoon. I have often heard it cited as the height of extreme statement that a man could take a match stem and run it into a lumber yard. But the Senator from Georgia has gone even beyond that in tenuous theory. The Senator from Georgia proposes to take a match stem and run it into a vast forest, into great sulphur mines, great factories, great railroad transportation systems, a lease-lend act, into great steamship facilities to transport the products of the match stem overseas.

Mr. President, the argument advanced by the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Wisconsin, reduced to its simplest terms, simply means that if the House of Representatives in a general appropriation bill violates its own rule by the inclusion of any item of legislation, by that act it automatically suspends the rule of the Senate as to the inclusion of legislation in general appropriation bills, not only as to the item with which the House has dealt, but as to any other item which in its wisdom the Senate Committee on Appropriations may desire to tack onto it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I merely wish to correct the Senator's statement that I made any such contention. I said that the amendment had to be germane.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am stating the effects of the argument made by the Senator from Georgia, as I understood it. I was not proposing to quote the Senator from Georgia verbatim. But the argument of the Senator from Georgia is that by reason of the fact that the House of Representatives in a provision beginning in line 5 and extending through line 14 on page 89, according to the contention of the Senator from Georgia, has changed the proportion set up by the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, a specific act approved July 22, 1937, as to the proportion of administrative expenses, therefore the Committee on Appropriations is authorized under the Senate's own rules—and that is the only contention here as to the rules of the Senate; the contention is not made with respect to the right of the Senate as a whole to act, but as to the procedure under the rules of the Senate, that, therefore, the Appropriations Committee is authorized under the rules of the Senate to report an amendment dealing with any other legislation connected with agriculture or farm tenancy which the committee may see fit to report. That, as I see it, is the only issue before the Senate.

Mr. President, this is a specific act in connection with which the House is accused of having legislated. I do not desire to waste the time of the Senate in arguing whether the provision which is stricken out in the House bill, to which I referred, is or is not legislation, because that is not necessary for the purpose of my argument. For the purpose of the argument I am perfectly willing to concede the proposition of the Senator from Georgia that the House has legislated by changing the requirement of the original act of July 22, 1937.

But, Mr. President, in the interest of orderly legislation, in the interest of preserving the rules of the Senate, in the interest of preventing appropriation committees constantly proposing substantive legislation on general appropriation bills, I deny the proposition that if the House has legislated with regard to the provisions of a specific bill, namely, the so-called Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, approved July 22, 1937, the Appropriations Committee of the Senate has a right to go afield and take in any other subject which in its wisdom it deems desirable to take in in order to affect the question of farm tenancy or of agriculture in general. That is the question before the Senate.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Do I correctly understand that the contention of the distinguished senior Senator from Missouri is simply that, insofar as the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act is concerned, the Committee on Appropriations had the power and authority to explore any field in connection with that one piece of legislation?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes, Mr. President; the Senator is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. And that when the committee goes beyond that, regardless of whether the legislation it recommends affects the farmers, the legislation which the committee then proposes is subject to the point of order?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, the Senator has admirably stated the position. In other words, a while ago the Senator from Wisconsin quoted a decision of a distinguished former Vice President in which he said, "the gate was left open and the Senate had a right to go through it." However, the Senate has no right, under its own rules, to do so. I desire to draw a proper distinction relative to the question of the right as between the two bodies. The Senate has a right to do anything it wants to do; but the Senate, under its own rules, as a matter of procedure cannot go through the gate the House has opened, and knock down both sides, and pour through as a general horde.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does not the Senator's whole argument turn on the question of germaneness?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It does not.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It would seem to me that it does.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The point of germaneness would apply, let me say, to the Senator from Michigan, to the question of whether a particular amendment would be germane to the provisions of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act. No Senator has contended—at least, I have not heard any Senator do so—that there is anything in the amendment which is germane to the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I contend that it is germane to it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, with all due respect to my friend, the Senator from Georgia, I must say that I suspect that, in claiming germaneness, the proponents of the committee amendment are endeavoring to escape from the provisions of the rule, and to submit the matter to a majority vote of the Senate on the question of germaneness, because the rule specifically provides for a majority vote on the question of germaneness. It seems to me there can be no question as to germaneness to the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act when the committee takes up an entirely different act—in fact two different acts; they were cited by the Senator from Georgia himself—and goes beyond that, and changes that act or those acts by legislation, sets up new machinery under the R. F. C., and goes entirely outside the field of any administration of the Bankhead-Jones Act, which is the legislation claimed by the Senator from Georgia as his original authority for new legislation in the bill. I say there is no justification for going clear outside that act and setting up entirely new authorities—different acts—and setting up entirely new duties and different questions of personnel classification.

Mr. President, as I say, I intend to discuss at this time only the parliamentary situation, because I think a very important parliamentary question is involved. I think the whole practice of the Congress of restricting legislation on appropriation bills is involved in this question. If the practice—a practice more exemplified by this bill than by any other I have ever seen—of having the Appropriations Committee of the Senate absolutely substitute its judgment for that of the legislative committees involved is indulged in and carried out, then I think the other committees of the Senate and of the House might as well be abolished, because there is no use in having any other legislating done if the Committee on Appropriations, in a "must" bill, a bill which is very necessary to be signed, a general supply bill, is to come along and do the legislating.

Mr. President, of course, the reason for the rule which has always existed in the Senate and always existed in the House, at least for many years—certainly for all my lifetime—is very readily evident. Legislation comes before either body of the Congress for consideration upon its merits. It is open to serious discussion, at least in this body, and formerly was in the House; it is open to amendment; and it is open to any legislative action which the body concerned may see fit to take. It may be passed by one body, may fail of passage in the other body, or may pass both bodies and be vetoed by the President, without the sense of compulsion which applies in connection with general appropriation bills.

As to the great supply bills necessary to be passed in order to have the Government continue to operate, they have always been given a high state of precedence, as we say in the Senate, or privilege, as is said in the House; they have been protected against dilatory amendments and various other kinds of amendments, in order to expedite their passage. They are recognized as "must" bills in both the Senate and the House of Representatives; and only under the most extraordinary circumstances has a President of the United States vetoed a general supply bill.

Mr. President, it is for that reason, for that very justifiable reason, that both Houses have from time immemorial adopted rules against having their own Appropriations Committees, in the first instance, or individual Senators or Representatives, in the second instance, offer propositions for legislation on general appropriation bills.

As I said a while ago, this bill is the most remarkable bill I ever saw. I think there are 116 amendments to it. Approximately 100 of them have been subject to points of order. I am not certain as to the exact number; the Senator from Georgia can correct me if I am in error.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I may say that the Senator has slightly exaggerated.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Certainly a great many of them have been subject to points of order; have they not?

Mr. RUSSELL. I think that 5 or 6 out of the 116 have been. The Senator is slightly mistaken.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A great many of them have been subject to a point of order, and the Senator has recognized that fact by serving notice, under the rules of the Senate—as he has a perfect right to do—to suspend the rule.

However, Mr. President, as to this amendment, involving—as it does—open, flagrant legislation in every line of it—at least, until we reach the second paragraph on page 93, which is the fourth page of the amendment involving legislation—attempt has been made to railroad it through, on the theory that because the House has dealt with one bill, the Senate Appropriations Committee is relieved of its obligation under the rule, and can, as it sees fit, deal with any other measure in any way connected with the whole subject of agriculture.

Mr. President, I do not believe that a more important parliamentary question has been presented to the Senate during my membership in the Senate. I believe that if the Senate should adopt the view of the distinguished Senator from Georgia it might very well proceed to abolish all the standing committees of the Senate except the Committee on Appropriations, because the Committee on Appropriations would then be made the sole judge of what should be in an appropriation bill and what should not be in it. When that is done, the authority of the standing committees of the Senate is completely annihilated.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the rule in this case is perfectly clear:

> The Committee on Appropriations shall not report an appropriation bill containing amendments proposing new or general legislation.

In another place:

> No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

It is admitted that this is general legislation. It is said that because of some precedents or rulings there should be incorporated into these provisions an exception which is not there. It is not in the rule. Not a word is said about it in the rule. The exception is said to be "unless the House, in dealing with the matter, has proposed some general legislation." There may be rulings to the effect that there should be such an exception in the rule, but it is not there. I do not see why we should not abide by the rules of the Senate as they are written. I cannot understand how we can write an exception into a perfectly clear rule of the Senate.

There is no doubt that this is general legislation; but it is claimed that the House has violated the law. I do not even admit that. I do not see how the House has violated the law. The House simply authorized $500,000 for necessary expenses in carrying on this law, because there are some things to carry along. It appropriated no money for the general purposes of the Bankhead-Jones Act. Therefore, it is said that it violated the section of the law which says that—

> To carry out the provisions of sections 1001 to 1006 of this title, there is authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $10,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, not to exceed $25,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and not to exceed $50,000,000 for each fiscal year thereafter. Not more than 5 percent of the sums appropriated for any fiscal year in pursuance of this section shall be available for administrative expenses in carrying out sections 1001 to 1006 of this title during such fiscal year.

That is section 6, title I, of the Bankhead-Jones Act.

Frankly, I do not believe that the House violated the law. If the House did not choose to appropriate anything for loans under this act for this year, I see nothing in this provision that is intended to prevent the appropriation of the necessary funds for administrative expenses. In other words, the amendment did nct purport to deal with any such situation. In order to prevent extravagance, the act provided that the general cost of administering loans should not exceed 5 percent of the figure authorized for any particular year. It was not the intention, if Congress should choose not to appropriate anything, to say that it should appropriate nothing for administrative expenses. Certainly, to hang on to that supposed violation of the House rule the power to suspend the entire Senate rule and step out into general legislation to authorize the R. F. C., under no legislative authority whatever, to advance $97,500,000, or twice as much as is authorized under the Bankhead-Jones law, is hanging a tremendous argument on a very small point.

I do not believe that the House violated the law. I do not think that that section of the Bankhead-Jones law would prohibit Congress, if it chose to stop loans, from appropriating a sum to administer the loans which have already been made.

So, Mr. President, it seems perfectly clear to me that under the express terms of the rule this is general legislation; it is admitted to be general legislation, and it should be ruled out of consideration by the Senate.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words in support of the position taken by the distinguished Senator from Georgia. It seems to me that sometimes a little common sense can solve most of these technical arguments.

I quite agree with what the Senator from Wisconsin has said. The question here is whether or not the Senate will undertake to prevent itself from dealing with matters of legislation which have come to it from the House in an appropriation bill. However we may wish to obscure that question with technical argument, that is the fundamental question which remains. The only question here is whether or not, under paragraph 2 of rule XVI, the Committee on Appropriations is bringing in new or general legislation. The common-sense view is to determine what was meant by the phrase "new or general legislation." It is my understanding that the precedents of this body, without exception, support the contention that the rule was designed to prevent the Appropriations Committee of the Senate from initiating new or general legislation. It was not intended, and has never been enforced, to prevent the Senate Committee on Appropriations from dealing with legislative matters which come to it from the House in an appropriation bill. That is the explanation of the decision so clearly laid down by Vice President Marshall, which was quoted by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Would not the Senate be in a very unique position if it were to follow the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio and discard all the precedents and rulings which have been made by the presiding officers interpreting the rules of the Senate, and start now to interpret them de novo, and in the strictest sense of the word, as he argues the rule must be interpreted? It seems to me that we must take into consideration the precedents and interpretations of the rule if we are not to discard a large body of procedure by which the Senate has been governed for many years.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I quite agree with the Senator from Wisconsin.

The common-sense view of the situation is perfectly clear. The House of Representatives has dealt with this subject matter, which has been in the appropriation act for 5 or 6 years, and which therefore cannot be regarded as new legislation. The proposed appropriation is supported by Budget estimates which have come to the House and to the Senate.

These provisions are now stricken out to a certain degree by the House in a legislative amendment. The House, acting within its rights, wrote this legislative amendment into the bill, in effect repealing a legislative enactment which has been on the statute books for 5 or 6 years. The Bankhead-Jones Act not only deals with tenant purchases, but also with loans and rehabilitation. So the House, having acted and sent the bill to the Senate, we must acknowledge that the House was acting within the scope of its rights.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator does not claim that the House could not refuse to appropriate any money simply because an act was in force; does he?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly not. The House could have refused to appropriate, but it did not do so. The House dealt with a law which has been on the statute books for 5 or 6 years, and which dealt with a subject which has been handled in appropriation bills for 5 or 6 years, and undertook to modify the whole system.

As we all know, the purpose was to destroy the Farm Security Administration. I am ready to acknowledge that there are and have been features about the Farm Security Administration which have not had my support. The Appropriations Committee has attempted to deal with that question, and has provided for the termination of those activities; but the legislative judgment of the Senate and the House has been that the Bankhead-Jones Act ought to be maintained, and that loans for rehabilitation purposes should be made to small farmers. The House, acting within the scope of its legislative power, sent to the Senate this legislative amendment to the bill.

Those who desire to destroy the Farm Security Administration are urging the technicality of the Senate rule against new or general legislation upon an appropriation bill. I submit to the Senate that that rule was directed against the initiation of new legislation in the Senate committee. It was not intended and never has been interpreted as preventing the Senate from dealing with legislative matters which have been sent to this body by the House of Representatives in an appropriation bill.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I have been necessarily absent from the Chamber for a time and have not heard all the debate. I should like to propound a question to the Senator from Wyoming. Does the Senator from Wyoming take the position that the House of Representatives may repeal a law by refusing to appropriate money for performing the functions provided for in the law and that, as a result, the Senate does not have any right to disagree with the House?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. In effect, that is the position that is taken.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. That is certainly not the position.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I said it was, in effect.

Mr. TAFT. The House may pass a bill, and we may vote into it an appropriation of $50,000,000 without the slightest question. There is no question about our right to disagree with the desire of the House to end the Farm Security Administration.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I was merely trying to answer the question of the Senator from Minnesota and stating my opinion. As I understood his question, he has correctly stated the situation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator's understanding is very incorrect.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I was incorrect in that. There were two questions. The second question concerns relevancy, whether or not the changes which have been made by the Senate Commitee on Appropriations in the legislative amendment which came from the House are relevant. That is a question which must be passed upon by the Senate. But I do contend that the rule does not prohibit the amendment being submitted.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have no desire to interrupt the Senator from Wyoming in a statement of his position. My reason for asking him to yield was that in answering the question of the Senator from Minnesota, the Senator from Wyoming apparently undertook to state the position of those of us who believe the point of order is well taken, and he stated it 1,000-percent erroneously, and I desire to challenge the statement of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I said, in response to the Senator from Minnesota that, in effect, what he stated was correct.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. On the question of relevancy I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming—relevant to what? What is the test of relevancy?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The test is the subject matter——

Mr. GEORGE. Of what the House inserted?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Of the whole legislative enactment of what the House put in and what it struck out.

Mr. GEORGE. It did not strike out anything, Mr. President. In plain language, it put in a provision which is said to be contrary to an existing provision of the original law. How are we to test the rule of relevancy? What has that to do with the civil service? What has that to do with the R. F. C.? What has that to do with enlarging the powers of the R. F. C.? I am worried about what is the standard of relevancy.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Allow me to say to the Senator from Georgia that, as I see it, the standard of relevancy is the act under which and for which this appropriation has been and is here being made. It has been made for 4 or 5 years, and there have been provisions in other appropriation bills authorizing the R. F. C. to advance money to be used for loans and rehabilitation under the Bankhead-Jones Act. My contention is—and I think it is the contention of the Senator from Georgia, the chairman of the subcommittee, but I would rather have him speak for himself—that the amendment reported by his committee is altogether relevant to that general subject matter.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I desire to add only one word further. The Senator from Missouri has stated this is something entirely new and we are trying to railroad it through the Senate. I merely wish to say that this program has been in effect for a number of years. The provisions relating to the borrowing of funds from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation have been enacted into law year after year for at least the last 4 years. I have not checked the dates; I think it has been for 5 years, but I know it has been for at least 4 years.

Mr. President, this provision was one of those which came to the floor of the House of Representatives without the benefit of a rule which is usually accorded the Appropriations Committee by the Committee on Rules. Due to the fact that the provision was legislation in the House, the entire matter went out on a point of order on the floor of the House. The chairman of the subcommittee who had charge of the bill in the House then offered the amendment which I contend amply supports any provision which the Senate sees fit to place in this bill which is relevant to the whole question of rehabilitation of farm tenancy in this country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Georgia yield for a question by the Chair?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia raise the question of relevancy?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; I say the entire amendment is relevant.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator from Virginia has already made a point of order on the whole amendment on the ground that it involves new legislation in contravention of paragraphs 2 and 4 of rule XVI. The point of order I make is that the Senator from Georgia cannot supersede the point of order of the Senator from Virginia by a different point of order which has to do with the question of germaneness The rule provides for a different treatment as between the point of order on the ground of new legislation, and the point of order on the ground of germaneness. My point of order is that the point of order involving the question of new legislation, already having been made by the Senator from Virginia, it cannot be superseded and put aside by the Senator from Georgia raising the question of relevancy.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming will state it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Am I correct in understanding that the original point of order which was raised by the Senator from Virginia was based upon the interpretation of paragraphs 2 and 4 of rule XVI? My reason for asking the question is that paragraph 4 of rule XVI is the one which raises the question of relevancy. If the point of order of the Senator from Virginia was based upon paragraph 4 for the purpose of raising the question of relevancy, then the question has already been raised.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit, the point of order of the Senator from Virginia refers to paragraph 4 of rule XVI and has to do with the first two lines, which read as follows:

> No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

Now, under that the amendment is certainly subject to a point or order.

Another ground is contained in paragraph 4—an entirely different ground—which relates to the question of germaneness. It reads as follows:

> Nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject matter contained in the bill be received; nor shall any amendment to any item or clause of such bill be received which does not directly relate thereto, and all questions of relevancy of amendments under this rule, when raised, shall be submitted to the Senate and be decided without debate.

Mr. President, that provision as to submission to the Senate does not apply to the first ground for the point of order under paragraph 4 of rule XVI, which was the ground relied upon by the Senator from Virginia in his point of order.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, on a parliamentary question I am always unhappy to be placed in a contrary position to that assumed by the Senator from Missouri, who is an able parliamentarian, but in this case I must disagree with him most heartily. There is no question that section 4 is complete. The question as to whether or not the amendment is general legislation, as I have insisted, applies only as to whether it is substantially new legislation; and the question of relevancy is one that addresses itself as to whether or not the proposal which is offered is relevant to the legislative proposition which it seeks to amend. I have insisted all the way through that it is entirely relevant because of the fact that the Bankhead-Jones Act, which was approved July 22, 1937, provides for the rehabilitation loans which are carried in this provision as well as for the tenant purchase loans which are carried in it.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, does the Senator say that he is relying upon the Bankhead-Jones bill which was approved in 1937?

Mr. RUSSELL. No; I do not rely upon it. I say that we escape the point of order made by the Senator from Virginia that we are proposing new general legislation, because the House has already legislated on this subject, and having opened the door, even by one-half inch, the Senate has a right to march in as a body, if it sees fit, so long as the amendment approved by the Senate is relevant and germane to the House provision.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator relies upon the authorization of loans to provide rural rehabilitation under the act to create the Farmers' Home Corporation; but that corporation has never been created—it is a dormant corporation.

Mr. RUSSELL. The corporation was never created; but I have undertaken to point out—and I will read the entire act if Senators wish—that its creation was wholly discretionary with the Secretary of Agriculture. Title I provides for the farm-tenant purchase loans. Title II provides for the rehabilitation loans, just as is suggested in this amendment. Title IV provides for the Farmers' Home Corporation. I want to read from title IV to show that really the question of the Farmers' Home Corporation has nothing to do with this question:

> (b) The Secretary shall have power to delegate to the corporation such powers and duties conferred upon him under title I or title II or both.

It says he shall have the power to do it, but there is nothing in the act which requires him to do it. As a matter of fact, he has never proceeded under the powers which were conferred upon him by the Congress in title I and title II. Mr. President, we have heard argument raised here not only as to the sanctity of the appropriation bill, which has carried this provision for some 4 or 5 years, but as to the time limitation that is involved. I wish to point out that not only has this provision been in the bill for years but it was submitted in the Budget estimates to the Congress for the current year. This question has not been voted on up or down on the floor of either body of the Congress.

I say, Mr. President, not only is the question of relevancy involved but that we ought to face this issue squarely and determine whether or not this program, which has been in effect for some 6 or 8 years, shall be discontinued on a point of order which is raised by one Member of the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I understand the Senator to say that the item was contained in the Budget estimates. The Senator does not mean to state to the Senate, does he, that the legislation contained in this amendment was also submitted by the Budget?

Mr. RUSSELL. Oh, yes; I do.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the Senator mean to say that all these provisions were in the Budget estimates?

Mr. RUSSELL. They were submitted this year, and last year, and passed both bodies.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Where did the Budget Bureau get the authority in submitting items of appropriation to submit legislation?

Mr. RUSSELL. If the Senator will pardon me, I should not like to be diverted to the question of the authority of the Budget Bureau. I was merely answering the Senator's argument that this was an entirely new proposition which we were trying to railroad through.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator said the amendment in its present form was submitted by the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. RUSSELL. I did not say that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am bound by what the Senator says because he has the information and I have not.

Mr. RUSSELL. I did not mean to say that it is in the identical form suggested by the Budget.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator admits it is legislation.

Mr. RUSSELL. There is no question about that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Was the legislation, as well as the estimate, submitted by the Budget?

Mr. RUSSELL. The language of the amendment which refers to the authority to borrow from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was contained in the language submitted by the Budget Bureau.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. As to the other legislative provisions, such as those requiring reports and as to personnel——

Mr. RUSSELL. No.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And as to loans, and also the provision on page 90 down to line 5 on page 91, were they also submitted by the Budget?

Mr. RUSSELL. The language on page 90 from line 18 to line 12 on page 91 was submitted by the Budget.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. So that the Budget is now itself submitting legislation?

Mr. RUSSELL. I assume that that language was inserted by the Budget because of the fact that the Congress had put that language in the bill for several years. The amendment may be legislation, but it is all relevant to the House provision. The Budget submitted language providing for the prosecution of the 195 rural rehabilitation projects which have, in one manner or another, come under the jurisdiction of the Farm Security Administration. I do not wish to debate the details of those projects because they are not pertinent to this discussion, but I should like to say for the benefit of those who have condemned the Farm Security Administration because of rural rehabilitation projects that only 8 out of 195 were inaugurated by the Farm Security Administration. The remainder have been inherited either from the Resettlement Administration, which was directed one time by Mr. Tugwell, or from the several State corporations which were established for resettlement under the Work Projects Act.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. The effect, I understand, if the point of order were sustained, would not be to eliminate the Farm Security Administration but would be to send the bill back to the committee, and I presume the committee could eliminate all legislative matters and report it back with an appropriation of, say, $50,000,000 tomorrow, even though the point of order is sustained. I do not think it is quite fair to say that this is a method simply to eliminate the F. S. A. It seems to me that it is rather a method of holding it within the original legislative authority of $50,000,000.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator now is referring to the tenant purchase program and not to the rehabilitation program. There are some $400,000,000 of loans outstanding on that program on which I think the Government has some claim and on which I believe it will make collections.

Mr. TAFT. I was intending to refer to the rural rehabilitation section, section 6, title I.

Mr. RUSSELL. There is no earthly way that this bill can be reported back to the Senate with any provision for the liquidation of these projects which is not in some respects legislative, because it would be necessary to provide, if for nothing else, for collecting the loans made by the predecessor of the Farm Security Administration, which would be legislation I insist it makes no difference about it being legislation, for if the House of Representatives puts just one thin string of legislation in the bill, omitting, as it does, section 6 of the act, the Senate has a right to legislate thereon, and the only question that can possibly be raised against the committee amendment is whether or not it is relevant and germane to the House amendment, and, as to that, I think there can be no doubt.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I should like to make clear exactly the point I made. I read paragraph 2 of rule XVI:

> The Committee on Appropriations shall not report an appropriation bill containing amendments proposing new or general legislation, and if an appropriation bill is reported to the Senate containing amendments proposing new or general legislation, a point of order may be made against the bill, and if the point is sustained, the bill shall be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations.

I next read the first two lines of paragraph 4:

> No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

Mr. President, I desire to advert to the claim made by the Senator from Georgia that he relies for authorization for rural rehabilitation loans and grants upon the law which is entitled:

> An act to create the Farmers' Home Corporation, to pro vote more secure occupancy of farms and farm homes, to correct the economic instability resulting from some present forms of farm tenancy, and for other purposes.

The Senator from Georgia did not inform the Senate that the Farmers' Home Corporation has never been organized; it is dormant; it has never been put into operation.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I made no contention that we were relying upon the Farmers' Home Corporation. I said specifically on the floor that that organization was to be established, under the powers delegated, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture. It has never been established, and the powers contained in the Farmers' Home Corporation Act have no connection with the powers contained in titles I and II of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenancy Act. It is stated in the first paragraph of the act on which I am relying that—

> This act may be cited as the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act.

Mr. BYRD. If the Senator will permit me to finish, I will make my point.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am sorry.

Mr. BYRD. In response to a question from the Senator from Virginia, the Senator stated a few moments ago that he did rely upon this act for the authorization of the loans and grants for rural rehabilitation. In section 21 of the act it is provided:

> Out of the funds made available under section 23, the Secretary shall have power to make loans to eligible individuals for the purchase of livestock, farm equipment, supplies, and for other farm needs (including minor improvements and minor repairs to real property), and for the refinancing of indebtedness, and for family subsistence.

Let me call the attention of the Senate to section 23, which provides:

> For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938—

Remember, this corporation has not even been organized, and is not operating—> the balances of funds available to the Secretary for loans and relief to farmers, pursuant to Executive Order No. 7530 of December 31, 1936, as amended by Executive Order No. 7557 of February 19, 1937, which are unexpended on June 30, 1937, are authorized to be appropriated to carry out the provisions of this title.

Of course, there are no such funds available now. That was on June 30, 1937. Those balances have been used for other purposes. Then paragraph (b) provides:

> The President is authorized to allot to the Secretary, out of appropriations made for relief or work relief for any fiscal year ending prior to July 1, 1939, such sums as he determines to be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title.

There will be no funds after July 1 that are going to be appropriated for relief or work relief.

Section 6 of the act provides:

> To carry out the provisions of this title, there is authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $10,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, not to exceed $25,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and not to exceed $50,000,000 for each fiscal year thereafter.

No part of that has been appropriated.

Mr. President, I think that during my membership in the Senate I have never known a more strained construction placed upon the rule relating to legislative provisions—for that is what it is in this appropriation bill—than to rely upon an act which creates a corporation which has not even been organized, which is still dormant, still inactive, and then to rely upon appropriations which are not available at this time.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Is it the opinion of the able Senator that if the point of order made by him were sustained it would knock out of this appropriation bill all funds for the Farm Security Administration?

Mr. BYRD. No; the opinion of the Senator from Virginia is that the bill, under paragraph 2 of rule XVI, would go back to the committee and be reported back to the Senate.

Mr. PEPPER. If the Senate Committee on Appropriations was not able to insert the provision in the appropriation bill when it had the bill before it, how would it be able to insert it on any other occasion?

Mr. BYRD. It could insert it if it did not provide for general legislation, and if it did, then the alternative is to present a motion for a suspension of the rules, as the Senator from Georgia has done in a number of other instances in connection with the same bill.

Mr. PEPPER. If the rule were to be suspended, would that require a two-thirds vote?

Mr. BYRD. It would; the requirement is the same as to all other legislative provisions. If the Senate rule means anything, it means that.

Mr. PEPPER. That would mean that an appropriation for the Farm Security Administration would require a vote of two-thirds of the Senate, whereas if the point of order should not be sustained then the item could be preserved in the bill by only a majority.

Mr. BYRD. It will do one of two things, it will either require the Senate rule to be carried out, namely, to return the bill to the Committee on Appropriations, or require a suspension of the rules by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. PEPPER. In the opinion of the able Senator from Virginia, is it necessary that the provisions accompanying the item here in dispute must be contained in the bill in order to effectuate the continuation of the Farm Security Administration?

Mr. BYRD. The Senator should ask someone who favors the Farm Security Administration. I do not know. I know that in my judgment the provision does contain legislation. It is in defiance of the Senate rules, and should be treated as such. If the Senate wishes to suspend the rule, as the Senator from Georgia has asked in regard to a number of other legislative matters, which will be included in the bill, that is the privilege of the Senate. If the Senate does not wish to suspend the rule, it should permit the bill to go back to the Committee on Appropriations, in accordance with the rules of the Senate.

Mr. PEPPER. Has not the Senator already stated that if it went back to the Committee on Appropriations, the committee still could not insert the provision subject to the point of order?

Mr. BYRD. Of course, it could not insert legislative provisions, any more than it can now.

Mr. PEPPER. What the able Senator from Virginia means, then, is that this matter should go back to the Committee on Appropriations and should not come before the Senate under any circumstances except in such form as will require two-thirds of the Senate to pass it?

Mr. BYRD. Does the Senator approve of the Senate rule which prohibits——

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

Mr. BYRD. Let me ask the Senator a question. He asked me several questions, and I should like to ask him one. Does the Senator approve the Senate rule which prohibits general legislation on appropriation bills?

Mr. PEPPER. As a general matter; yes.

Mr. BYRD. Why as a general matter? It has to apply to all matters or none.

Mr. PEPPER. The case now before the Senate I think certainly presents a close question, about which the Senate is entitled to exercise its discretion in passing on the point of order. I am very much persuaded by the reasonableness of the explanation made by the able junior Senator from Georgia that this is not new legislation since similar legislation has been on the statute books for 4 or 5 years.

If the Senator will permit me to ask him one last question, did I understand him to say that he opposed the Farm Security Administration being continued?

Mr. BYRD. I am in favor of transferring the operations of the Farm Security Administration to the Farm Credit Administration. There is no secret about it. I am the chairman of a committee that brought in such a recommendation a year ago. The Senator is well informed about that.

Mr. PEPPER. If I did not misunderstand, I thought I heard the Senator say a moment ago that that could be answered by someone who favored——

Mr. BYRD. The Senator asked me whether the Committee on Appropriations could bring back an amendment containing legislative provisions. I am not on the Committee on Appropriations, and I did not think it was proper for me to answer that question.

Mr. PEPPER. Was it the thought of the able Senator from Virginia that if the transfer of the Farm Security Administration to the Farm Credit Administration were made, the functions which previously had been exercised by the Farm Security Administration would continue to be exercised?

Mr. BYRD. That is my contention.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator did not expect to diminish any of the activities——

Mr. BYRD. I did not say they should not be diminished. I think the appropriations should be cut down, but I say that as to the permanent activities of the Farm Security Administration—and the debate on that will come later—they should be transferred to the Farm Credit Administration.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, when the Senate passes upon the point of order it is doing something far more extensive than passing on the rules of the Senate. What it is actually doing is depriving over 450,000 farm families, scattered all over the United States, practically of the means of subsistence above the level of impoverishment and squalor. As a matter of fact, the very condition under which the loans in question have been made to the Farm Security Administration tenants is that they cannot get funds from any other source. This is their alternative, their only hope. Take this privilege away from them, and they are left utterly destitute.

These loan provisions not only make it possible for workers to produce for the war, but involved in the item which is under attack here now by the able Senator from Virginia, who has been frank in his expression of not particularly favoring continuance of the Farm. Security Administration, is opportunity for hospitalization, opportunity for some medical service, opportunity for some dental service, opportunity to obtain seed with which to plant their crops, opportunity to get a new cow if the only cow they possess dies, a new mule if the mule they have passes away, or the very food necessary for the nourishment of their families. All these would be taken away on a point of order by the remote Senate of the United States.

I say remote, Mr. President, because I doubt if we were to walk over the threshold of one of those dependent families and face the issue of depriving them of that succor which is all they have, or sustaining the principle of a point of order relative to parliamentary procedure, I doubt if many of us could make the decision in favor of the parliamentary technicality under the Senate rule against the lives and living conditions of those American families.

Mr. President, remember, if we had before us the statistics of the Selective Service, we would find that many a boy in the front lines comes from one of those homes, and if this point of order is sustained, it means that his mother and father and his brothers and sisters behind will be deprived of means and sustenance, because of a point of parliamentary procedure.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. I do not admit that what the Senator from Florida says is correct. The Senator has no right to say that by the transfer of these activities to the Farm Credit Administration this great mass of citizens will be denied any relief or succor of any kind.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Virginia, of course, knows that if this is legislation it is certainly legislation to undertake to transfer these functions to the Farm Credit Administration.

Mr. BYRD. Let us have such a provision in a legislative bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is much more violative of the Senate rules than the provision now under consideration, which is predicated on the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act.

Mr. BYRD. The provision can be placed in a legislative bill. I cannot permit to go uncontradicted the broad statement made by the Senator from Georgia. It is not correct.

Mr. RUSSELL. It could not be done in this bill, I said. The Senator knows that if this provision is subject to a point of order, certainly if we were to attempt to transfer all these functions under titles I and II of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, it would be subject to a point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, a motion to suspend the rule and make this subject matter in order would certainly be in order before the Senate, and if the motion to suspend the rule to adopt the committee amendment were adopted, then any other germane amendment would be in order to that, and the whole question would be before the Senate, but that would be in accordance with the rules of the Senate instead of being in derogation of the rules.

Mr. PEPPER. But, Mr. President, the able Senator from Missouri would readily admit that a two-thirds vote of the Senate would be required in order to do that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Certainly. That is what the rules of the Senate provide. The Senator from Florida always comes in and deplores something because it is prohibited by the rules of the Senate, or prohibited by the Constitution of the United States, or by the laws of the United States.

Mr. PEPPER. No, I am not deploring something because it is prohibited by the rules of the Senate, or by the Constitution of the United States. I am deploring the poverty in the homes of Farm Security Administration tenants, and I am saying that the Senate does not have to take away from them their sole means of succor upon the parliamentary point which is presented here today, which is a mere technicality about which honest men may have a difference of opinion.

Mr. President, if this were an effort made flagrantly in the face of some direct provision of the rule of the Senate, or of the Constitution, that might present a different case. We lawyers always have heard it said that hard cases make bad law. But there are precedents which justify the item which the Appropriations Committee of the Senate has brought to the Senate today. There is certainly a reasonable difference of opinion as to whether or not this is new legislation. Everyone knows it is not new legislation to keep the Farm Security Administration in existence. It is simply a continuation of that agency, and its functions, which is proposed by this amendment. That is the substance of it. After all, even a court of law is justified in looking behind the technicality, through the veil of technicality, and looking at the substance which is behind. If this were some irrelevant and extraneous matter which was brought here that would be different, but there is not an item, as I understand, that is involved in the point of order which is not a proposed continuation of what has been going on heretofore. The able Senator from Virginia was correct in saying that this matter should be handled by new legislation. Yet the able Senator from Virginia would not tell his colleagues that he proposes any such legislation now. I am not at all sure——

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I will be glad to propose legislation to make transfer to the Farm Credit Administration.

Mr. PEPPER. But would that not be legislation?

Mr. BYRD. The Senator asked me whether I was willing to propose such legislation, and I said I was.

Mr. PEPPER. Does the Senator contemplate the introduction of any such legislation if the item in question is knocked out?

Mr. BYRD. I have not given consideration to that question.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator propose to destroy this item without introducing legislation to take care of the situation?

Mr. BYRD. Wait a moment. I will agree to introduce legislation tomorrow.

Mr. PEPPER. How long does the able Senator from Virginia think it will take to have such legislation adopted?

Mr. BYRD. The judgment of the Senator from Florida is as good as my judgment with respect to that matter. I think we can succeed in passing such legislation with the assistance of the able Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. But the Senator proposes to diminish the Farm Security Administration as it now exists. It is not the present Farm Security Administration, with its present functions, that the Senator proposes to continue. It is something else.

Mr. BYRD. Of course, I do not propose to continue the present Farm Security Administration. If I did I would vote for this amendment.

Mr. PEPPER. Very well. I think the Senator from Virginia has made clear that he is against the Farm Security Administration. Therefore he proposes to knock it out on a point of order.

Mr. BYRD. I resent that statement. I have a high regard for the rules of the Senate. I regard this proposal as being contrary to the rules of the Senate, and as a Senator I have a right to invoke the rules of the Senate without having my motives impugned.

Mr. PEPPER. I do not think it is news to any Member of the Senate that the Senator from Virginia has not been generally favorable to the Farm Security Administration. I do not deny the Senator's right to feel the way he does.

Mr. BYRD. I have never denied that I am opposed to the waste and extravagance in the Farm Security Administration, which is the greatest in any single bureau of the Government, and I will attempt to discuss that matter when the occasion to do so is presented. But when the Senator from Florida says I am prompted primarily by my opposition to the Farm Security Administration when, as a matter of fact, I am attempting to make certain that the rules of the Senate shall be sustained, he is incorrect in his statement.

Mr. PEPPER. I wish to do the Senator from Virginia, for whom I have the highest respect, no disservice. I thought it was a matter of common knowledge that the able Senator from Virginia did not agree with many of us in our esteem for the Farm Security Administration. I believe in it, and want to continue it. If I had the power I would increase its appropriation instead of diminishing it.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator from Florida would be willing to continue it even in defiance of the rules of the Senate, as I understand. That is the difference between the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. PEPPER. I will say, Mr. President, that if I have on the one hand the proposal to take away from nearly one-half million American farm families the opportunity they have to borrow a single dollar to buy a new mule, or a new cow, or the seed to go in the ground, or the money with which to harvest their crops, or the few dollars with which to pay a doctor or a dentist, or go to the hospital, or with which to buy food or to continue engaging in producing for the war itself, with a good record in producing food for the war—if that proposal were submitted on the one hand, and on the other I have before me a doubtful question of parliamentary technicality to decide, I should certainly resolve that doubt, Mr. President, in favor of the 450,000 farm families, and trust the Senate to preserve the integrity of its own parliamentary rules.

For I know, Mr. President, and every other Senator on the floor knows in his conscience, that if this item is knocked out of the bill today, if the point of order shall be sustained, it will mean that on the 1st of July the functions of the Farm Security Administration will terminate, and there will not be adopted by the Senate or the House any new legislation continuing those functions.

So, Mr. President, we are in substance voting on the square-cut, clear-cut issue of whether we are going to destroy, on the basis of a technicality, the Farm Security Administration, or whether we are going to resolve the doubt in favor of this item, which comes to the Senate not from a single Senator, but from one of the most distinguished committees of the Senate. We are voting on whether we are going to resolve the doubt against the technicality and in favor of the 450,000 needy farm families scattered all over America, with a creditable record of producing for the war and a finer record of sending their sons to fight in the war, or whether we are going to sit here as if we were automatons, as if we had no people's lives on our consciences and say, "Well, at all events, whatever be the consequence, we have got to maintain the technicalities of the Senate rules against one of the Senate's own committees, and against a rational and reasonable difference of opinion between parliamentary experts on the legality of this item."

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me preface my remarks by saying that I shall vote for the farm security proposal. I am in favor of it. However, I am wondering whether the statement made by the Senator from Florida is accurate—that if the proposal is voted down, that will be the end of the farm-security activities. I did not so understand the statement made the other day by the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee. I felt that if this item should be voted down, the Senator would offer an amendment increasing the amount of the appropriation for the Farm Security Administration, to be obtained from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or appropriating the money directly from the Treasury. Am I correct or incorrect in that respect?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, let me say that I think it would be next to impossible to continue the Farm Security Administration without having some of the provisions of the amendment which are in the nature of legislation. There is no question that the provision for borrowing from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is legislation. There is no question that the Senate committee provision requiring the liquidation of the Rural Rehabilitation projects is legislation. My position is that if the House has legislated on these questions, as it unquestionably has done in this bill, the Senate has a right to legislate on them. I shall never admit that when a legislative matter comes from the other body on an appropriation bill, the Senate is tied hand and foot, and is limited to striking out the provision. Legislation coming to us, as a House of equal dignity with the other House, certainly gives us the right to take action similar to that taken by the other body.

Mr. President, I think sustaining the point of order would be very likely to relegate provision for continuing the functions of the Farm Security Administration to legislation; it would have to pursue all the courses of legislation; and, in effect, in view of the fact that the appropriation expires by the 1st of July, it would mean the death of the Farm Security Administration as such.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, if the Senator will further yield, let me say that the point I have in mind is whether the Senator would be able to submit to the appropriation bill an amendment providing the necessary money.

Mr. RUSSELL. There is no trouble about the legislative sanction for the tenant-purchase program.

Mr. WHEELER. I see.

Mr. RUSSELL. But if the rehabilitation program is to be carried on as it is now carried on, legislation would be required in order to grant leave to borrow from the R. F. C. or to exceed the appropriation which has been allowed.

The Senator from Virginia read the list of allocations which have been made under that act for the maintenance of that work. I freely concede that all the funds for that work have been expended, or practically so; a very small balance remains. But the Appropriations Committee, as I understand, has a right to exceed the authorization under the bill. I do not think that question is now involved.

Mr. BYRD. If the Senator will yield to me, let me say that a direct appropriation for that purpose, instead of a provision granting authority to borrow from the R. F. C., would not be legislation.

Mr. RUSSELL. Oh, yes.

Mr. BYRD. But the Senator from Montana said there was no way around the difficulty, without enacting legislation.

Mr. RUSSELL. I say that, as a practical matter, with the time now remaining in which it will be possible to provide a direct appropriation for these purposes, and with the opposition which already has been evinced across the Capitol to these matters, it would be impossible to obtain such legislation.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, what I am attempting to find out, and what is confusing to me, is whether we could not appropriate the amount of money required to carry on these necessary operations, without involving the question of legislation. I do not care whether the money is taken from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, provided the Congress directs that that be done or whether it is taken directly from the Treasury of the United States. Either one procedure or the other would have the same result. What I am wondering is whether, by increasing the appropriations and by writing in the bill an amendment to the appropriation items of the bill, we could not accomplish the same purpose.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, if the Senator will further yield, let me say that I think we undoubtedly would have a right to make direct appropriations for most of those functions. We could not liquidate the resettlement projects, nor could they be carried on, by provisions under the appropriation. We could not either maintain or liquidate them without having direct legislation. But so far as direct loans to the farmers are concerned, I think we could make them under the provisions of this act. We could not, except by legislation, take care of any grants to farmers who have been subjected to losses caused by the ravages of floods in recent months; because an authorization to do that would be in excess of the powers contained in title II of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I thank both Senators for what they have said. I shall conclude what I have to say. I am not an expert on these matters, but I have been in the homes of farmers receiving such aid, and I know what will happen if the aid is cut off. I know that the consensus is that sustaining the point of order would jeopardize, if it would not absolutely assure cutting off, the services rendered farmers by the Farm Security Administration.

Mr. President, from time to time the Senate has voted on the question of sustaining points of order. If the question is a close one, sometimes the Senate has gone on one side of the line, and sometimes on the other side of the line. There is no flat or fixed rule on the subject. Certainly the House of Representatives has opened the doors to this irregularity, if it is one, by legislating on the subject first. The Senate Appropriations Committee did not inaugurate the delinquency, if it is one. Our committee is simply building on what the House did. I believe there are in this body a sufficient number of able Senators to protect the integrity of our rules. I simply submit that in a case of this sort, one which means so much to so many people, if there is any possible doubt about the decision we should make, it is better to bend a little on the side of humanity and the preservation of lives and the standard of living, meager as it is, of these 450,000 families, than to sit back as if we lived in a vacuum, and wash our hands, like Pilate, of the decision, and say, "I shall have nothing to do with this matter because to give these people help offends my sense of discretion and judgment about what should be done on this technical point under the parliamentary rules of the Senate."

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Georgia for a moment so that I may obtain his thought on this matter.

Under title II—Rehabilitation Loans, subtitle "Borrowers and Terms," subsection 21 (a) reads as follows:

Out of the funds made available under section 23 the Secretary shall have power to make loans to eligible individuals for the purchase of livestock, farm equipment, supplies, and for other farm needs—

And so forth.

I repeat the first words:

Out of the funds made available under section 23.

Now, turning to section 23, the title of which is "Appropriation," we find that subsection (a) reads as follows:

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, the balances of funds available to the Secretary for loans and relief to farmers, pursuant to Executive Order Numbered 7530 of December 31, 1936, as amended by Executive Order Numbered 7557 of February 19, 1937—which are unexpended on June 30, 1937, are authorized to be appropriated to carry out the provisions of this title.

Mark this well, Mr. President—

Having quoted those two provisions, let me say that of course the Senator knows, as do all other Members of the Senate, that the funds which were unexpended as of June 30, 1937, have been exhausted. Is not that correct?

Mr. RUSSELL. I am not sure that all of them have been exhausted. They are practically exhausted.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. Prior to the creation of the Resettlement Administration under W. P. A., State corporate organizations for rural resettlement and rehabilitation were set up. Some of those funds are still available in the States, but the amount is very small.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have been advised that the funds have been expended.

Mr. RUSSELL. They are practically exhausted.

Mr. TYDINGS. They are the funds which were authorized to carry out the provisions of the act.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. If those are the funds which were authorized to carry out the provisions of the act, and were the funds which were unexpended on June 30, 1937, they are the only funds authorized, because, turning back to rehabilitation loans, the first line reads:

Out of funds made available under section 23—

I have just read section 23. Therefore it seems to me to follow, regardless of the merits of the Farm Security Administration's program, whether we are for it or against it, the language and the import of the language are definitely clear. The only funds authorized by act of Congress to carry out the provisions of this act were those which were unexpended as of June 30, 1937.

I am arguing this question in good faith. I am not trying to take any technical advantage of the law; but I am trying to find out what the law is. Before the Senator comments, I wish to commend him for his candor in answering the inquiries of the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Virginia. In my judgment he was completely honest in his answer to those inquiries and did not reserve anything which might have been in his favor when he said that legislation was necessary to do some of the things he enumerated.

Mr. RUSSELL. There is no question about that

Mr. TYDINGS. I am glad the Senator is candid, because we can arrive at a decision when men are candid.

Mr. RUSSELL. I always try to be candid in dealing with the Senate not only in connection with this bill but in all other matters. I have not reserved anything, and have no intention of doing so. In the first place, I have no motive for doing so, because I think we can legislate as far as we want to go under the rules.

Mr. TYDINGS. I rose to ask the Senator only this question: As I understand, the Senator does not take issue with what I have presented, but he does say that inasmuch as the House has legislated he feels at liberty to carry out that legislation?

Mr. RUSSELL. Exactly.

Mr. TYDINGS. But if the House had not legislated, a point of order would lie because, unless the rule were waived, there would be no reason why the Senate Appropriations Committee should put in the bill the provision referred to. The Senator feels that, the House having adopted a provision relating to the subject, the Senate has a right to proceed.

Mr. RUSSELL. There are some legislative provisions in this amendment. I made that statement in the very first moments of my remarks when I presented my views on the point of order. There are undoubtedly some legislative provisions. The provision which requires the liquidation of farm security projects is legislation.

Mr. TYDINGS. I wished to direct my attention to this one provision.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am not impressed with the argument of the Senator from Maryland that because of the limitations in section 23 we cannot make appropriations. Of course, the Senator is familiar with the rule that the Committee on Appropriations may recommend appropriations in excess of the authorization, so long as the purposes of the appropriation are defined by legislation.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct; but let me ask the Senator what is the authorization, if we strike down section 21, entitled "Rehabilitation Loans"?

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not think it is stricken down—not by the point which the Senator raises.

Mr. TYDINGS. The point I am raising, to make it specific, is that when we see what that authorization is we find these words:

> Out of the funds made available under section 23.

Therefore no other funds were made available, and the committee had no right to legislate funds into the bill unless they were in accordance with the authorization.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not understand that to be the determining factor as a limitation on the committee. If, instead, the language read, "Not to exceed $1,000,000 shall be appropriated to the Secretary for these purposes," under rule XVI the Senate committee would have a right to recommend an appropriation of $5,000,000 for that purpose, so long as it was recommended for purposes which were authorized by law.

I do not think that that point is as pertinent as is the objection which has been raised to the legislative provisions of the amendment. But whether it is or not, I take the ground—and I have never been more convinced that I am right from a parliamentary standpoint—that if the House legislates on the subject, even to the slightest degree, the Senate has the right to canvass the whole field and take away from, add to, explain, expand, or contract that which the House has done in dealing with the matter, subject only to the rule as to whether it is relevant or germane to the action the House has taken.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I inquire whether all this debate is not out of order, unless the Chair wishes to be informed. I ask the Chair whether he needs any more information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is ready to rule whenever the Senate is through undertaking to advise the Chair.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I have not the slightest disposition to delay the Senate. However, in reading the law I could not find any authorization for the committee action. The law provides that out of funds made available under section 23 these things may be done.

What is section 23? It provides that only moneys which are unexpended as of June 30, 1937, are authorized to be appropriated to carry out the provisions of this act.

I believe that if the question were submitted to the parliamentarian he would agree with the point which I have made. The Senator from Georgia does not let that point be the determining factor in arriving at his conclusion. The Senator from Georgia takes a new position, which he has a right to take, namely, that the House has legislated——

Mr. RUSSELL. I have not taken any new position. I have insisted on that position from the beginning.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not saying this in criticism. I believe that the point is material, because the law provides that no funds may be used which were not then expended as of June 30, 1937. The first provision of the law says that only out of funds made available under section 23 may these activities be carried on. Section 23 provides that no funds may be used for these purposes except the unexpended balances which existed on June 30, 1937.

Mr. RUSSELL. If the Senate has a right to provide that such funds shall be borrowed from the R. F. C., it has a right to change that language.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not know that I would agree to the statement that the Senate has that right, because borrowing is only another way of appropriating.

Mr. RUSSELL. I was predicating my statement on the assumption that the Senate has the right.

Mr. TYDINGS. The point remains that the authority for the purchase of livestock, farm equipment, supplies, and other farm needs relates only to funds made available under section 23; and section 23 very clearly states that no money shall be used for such purposes except funds which were unexpended on June 30, 1937. Such funds are authorized to be appropriated to carry out the provisions of the act.

It seems clear to me, therefore, that there is no legislative authority for the provisions written into the bill. As to whether or not the House, by writing in the legislative provision, has given the Senate the right to go ahead, I am not discussing that point at this time. I do not think it has; but aside from that point, there is no clear authority for the appropriation of these funds.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, may I ask the very patient and distinguished Senator in charge of the bill another question on the subject of germaneness?

Mr. RUSSELL. Certainly.

Mr. TAFT. It occurs to me that the two sections of the Bankhead-Jones Act, one relating to rural rehabilitation and the other to tenant loans, are distinct measures, and that in this case the House, by its alleged violation of the tenant-purchase section, may have opened up the tenant-purchase end of the question; but I do not see how it could have opened up the rural rehabilitation loan question. In other words, I do not see that this is, in fact, germane to the matter which the House has opened up. Will the Senator give us his views on that question?

Mr. RUSSELL. In my opening statement I suggested that that question might arise in the minds of some Members of the Senate. I stated that, in my opinion, so long as we dealt with the general subject of rural rehabilitation loans, we were clearly within the rights and powers of the Senate. That is a question which addresses itself to the discretion of each Senator. In my judgment, the entire committee amendment is absolutely germane to the purposes of rural rehabilitation and farm tenancy.

Mr. TAFT. Are not the two matters distinct?

Mr. RUSSELL. Oh, yes.

Mr. TAFT. Does not the Senator regard the farm-tenancy program as separate from the rural rehabilitation-loan program?

Mr. RUSSELL. In connection with what I said in my opening remarks, I read both title I and title II as being the legislative background.

Mr. TAFT. But as I understand, the alleged violation of the House relates only to the tenant-purchase program.

Mr. RUSSELL. I freely grant that, but I am happy that the Senator admits that it is a violation, because if the House is guilty of a violation in regard to the tenant-purchase program, the whole question of rural rehabilitation is open to the Senate. There is no way on earth to escape that conclusion.

I invite the Senator's attention to the language which appears in the title of the House provision. What does it say? It says farm tenancy. So long as we are dealing with the question of farm tenancy, and rehabilitation, whether the persons be sharecroppers or laborers, the Senate is not only within its full rights, but also its duty.

Mr. TAFT. I believe very strongly in the farm tenant purchase end of the program, but it is the rural rehabilitation program which I think is doubtful. I think the two are distinct. It seems to me that if the House has opened up only one of them by violating the rule with respect to tenancy, that cannot be said to open up to general legislation the whole subject of rural rehabilitation loans, the law regarding which the House has not violated in any way.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is the view of the Senator from Ohio. I entertain a contrary view. I think that when the House opens up this question, as it undoubtedly did, whether it was with respect to title I, title II, or any other part of the law pertaining to rural rehabilitation, the Senate has a right to legislate on that subject so long as the legislation is relevant to the whole question of rural rehabilitation. The Senator from Ohio has a perfect right to regard a part of it as being relevant and a part of it as not being relevant; but it is my firm conviction that if we reverse the precedents and say that we are not able at this hour to legislate, the Senate will surrender substantial rights, and the question will come back to plague and hamper us. What is the danger in it? Let the Senate say whether or not it is relevant or not relevant, and what parts, if any, of these amendments should be adopted. If we place a limitation on our power by adopting the precedent suggested, in years to come the House will legislate and our hands will be tied by a limitation on our power which will enable us only to accept or reject a House legislative amendment to an appropriation bill.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I invite the attention of the Senate to paragraph 2 of rule XVI, which reads as follows:

> The Committee on Appropriations shall not report an appropriation bill containing amendments proposing new or general legislation, and if an appropriation bill is reported to the Senate containing amendments proposing new or general legislation, a point of order may be made against the bill, and if the point is sustained, the bill shall be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is ready to rule.

The present occupant of the chair will undertake to state the parliamentary situation as he understands it.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] raised the point of order basing his objection, as he has said, on paragraph 2 of rule XVI, and, as the Chair understood, also on the first two lines of paragraph 4 of rule XVI.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have restated the point of order. I rely exclusively on paragraph 2 of rule XVI.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was the understanding of the Chair that the Senator relied also on the first two lines of paragraph 4. The Chair now understands that the Senator from Virginia relies only on paragraph 2 of rule XVI.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] has raised the question of the relevancy of the committee amendment, based upon a part of the language of paragraph 4. The Chair will read a part of paragraph 4:

> And all questions of relevancy of amendments under this rule, when raised, shall be submitted to the Senate and be decided without debate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Chair permit an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He will.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I invite the attention of the Chair to the fact that when the question of relevancy was raised, not by the Senator from Georgia but by the then occupant of the chair, who is not now the occupant of the chair, I then made the point of order that the point of order of the Senator from Virginia, which had to do with new legislation, could not be superseded by a point of order having to do with relevancy under another clause of the rule.

I now call attention of the Chair to the fact that my point of order was the last point of order made, and therefore is the pending point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is mindful of what the Senator from Missouri has said, but feels that it is the duty of the Chair, under paragraph 4 of rule XVI, to submit the question to the Senate. This question, under the rules of the Senate—which, by the way, are whatever a majority of the Senate determines at any particular time—is not debatable. The Chair therefore submits to the Senate this question: Is the committee amendment relevant to the House language?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, a point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I renew my point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is not debatable. The Chair has submitted the question to the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not desire to debate. I desire to renew my point of order. I make the point of order that the Chair, by his own action, is attempting to supersede the point of order made by the Senator from Virginia with another point of order. I make that point of order and ask for a ruling upon it from the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair, the Senator from Missouri is out of order. The Chair has submitted the question to the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I insist on a ruling on my point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not make a mistake when he submits a question to the Senate for its decision.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I insist on a ruling on my point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Is the committee amendment relevant to the House language?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I suggest the absence of a quorum. Under the Constitution the Chair cannot overrule that point, although the present occupant of the Chair is likely to overrule anything.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Guffey	O'Mahoney
Andrews	Gurney	Overton
Austin	Hatch	Pepper
Bailey	Hawkes	Revercomb
Bankhead	Hayden	Reynolds

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. RUSSELL. The question pending before the Senate submitted by the Chair is as to the germaneness of the committee amendment, is it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Is the committee amendment relevant to the House language?

Mr. RUSSELL. And those who agree with the committee's action should vote "yea"?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the Chair's understanding, if the yeas and nays are ordered, but the yeas and nays have not been ordered.

Mr. RUSSELL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BYRD. I inquire, Who made the point of order with respect to germaneness?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands it was made by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BYRD. Did the Senator from Georgia make it? The clerk tells me he did not make it.

Mr. RUSSELL. I urged throughout my entire remarks that the only question possible could be that of germaneness.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator from Georgia did not make the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator from Georgia raised the question of relevancy.

Mr. BYRD. The clerk tells me that the Senator from Georgia did not make the point of order. This is the most remarkable procedure I have ever known.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair ask the Senator from Georgia did he raise the question of relevancy?

Mr. RUSSELL. No. I contended throughout my entire argument that the amendment was relevant. That is my contention.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator from Georgia did raise the question. If he did not raise it, the Chair will not submit it.

Mr. BYRD. If the Senator from Georgia did make the point, it should be a matter of record. I ask that the record be read to see whether he made it.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the amendment under consideration is relevant to the provision contained in the House bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I make the point of order that the point of order made by the Senator from Virginia cannot be supplanted by a point of order that the amendment is relevant.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will submit the question raised on the point of order by the Senator from Georgia, in view of the record that has been made.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have insisted that the only question to be submitted to the Senate was the question of relevancy.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant was not in the chair all the time, but the present occupant of the chair was informed that the Senator from Georgia had raised a point of order, and the Chair has a written memorandum on his desk to the effect that the Senator from Georgia had raised the question of relevancy.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I do not know what the Journal shows, but the RECORD tomorrow will show, and all Senators who are present must know, that I have insisted all along that this amendment was relevant to the House provision. That is the sole ground I took.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will submit to the Senate the point of order made by the Senator from Virginia if the yeas and nays are ordered. Is the Senate ready for a vote?

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the question be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the point of order raised by the Senator from Virginia. The Chair will request that the point made by the Senator from Virginia be put in writing so that the clerk may read it to the Senate.

Mr. LUCAS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Gurney	Overton
Austin	Hatch	Pepper
Bailey	Hawkes	Revercomb
Bankhead	Hayden	Reynolds
Barbour	Hill	Russell
Bilbo	Holman	Scrugham
Bone	Johnson, Colo.	Shipstead
Buck	La Follette	Smith
Burton	Langer	Stewart
Bushfield	Lodge	Taft
Byrd	Lucas	Thomas, Okla.
Capper	McCarran	Thomas, Utah
Caraway	McClellan	Tobey
Chandler	McFarland	Tunnell

Ellender	Moore	Wherry
George	Murdock	White
Gerry	Murray	Wiley
Gillette	Nye	Willis
Green	O'Daniel	Wilson
Guffey	O'Mahoney

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I merely wish to point out that the point of relevancy was raised by me, and I am sure the RECORD and Journal of the Senate will so show.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I am preparing the motion and will submit it in a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair say to the Senator from Virginia that the Senator from Georgia has now informed the Chair that the RECORD will show that he raised the point. If he raised the point, the Chair is of opinion that it ought to come in as it was originally presented, and, if he did not raise it, the Chair is of opinion that the point can be decided on the motion of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. RUSSELL. I should be glad to let the RECORD be read, but every Senator knows that my argument was that since the House has opened this question, the Senate amendment was relevant and germane.

Mr. BYRD. I ask that the Journal be read to determine whether or not the Senator from Georgia made the motion.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I do not see how the Senator from Georgia could have made the point of order, because the point of order would have had to be that the amendment was not germane. He certainly did not make such a point of order.

Mr. RUSSELL. Oh, no.

Mr. TAFT. He could not make the point of order that it was germane, because that is the question the Senate is required to determine.

Mr. RUSSELL. No; I do not understand that I was required to make a point of order. The only thing that was required of me was to make the contention that this amendment was germane to the House provision. That has been the basis of the argument I have made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the same question can be decided on the point made by the Senator from Virginia. So the Chair wishes to submit it on the point of order of the Senator from Virginia in order that the Senate may have a direct vote on the question.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I think I have the right to know what the Journal shows, and I should like to know. I have not myself talked with the Journal clerk, but he is a gentleman of very high class who has kept the Journal for a long time, and I should like to know what the Journal shows on this question. As I have said, I have not talked with the Journal clerk. I should like to know what the Journal shows.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I submit the point of order in writing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair state the point of order of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, as a Member of the Senate, I should like to know what the Journal shows in regard to this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As soon as the clerk reads, the Chair will hear the Senator from Georgia. The clerk will now read the point of order submitted by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD].

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

I make the point of order under Section 2, Rule XVI, that the pending amendment contains new legislation and is therefore, under the rules of the Senate, in violation of paragraph 2, rule XVI, which reads as follows:

"The Committee on Appropriations shall not report an appropriation bill containing amendments proposing new or general legislation, and if an appropriation bill is reported to the Senate containing amendments proposing new or general legislation, a point of order may be made against the bill, and if the point is sustained, the bill shall be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Now the Chair wishes to hear what the Journal shows with respect to the question of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; and I want to make a point of order against the point of order, on the ground that it involves the relevancy of this entire matter. The whole matter of relevancy is involved, whether it is new legislation or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair hear what the Journal shows.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BYRD makes point of order that matter inserted by committee was, under Rule XVI of the Standing Rules, general legislation and not authorized by existing law, on a general appropriation bill.

Mr. RUSSELL made point of order that the House of Representatives having inserted legislation in the bill on the floor of the House by making an appropriation in excess of the amount allowed for administrative expenses under the basic act, to provide for the collection of moneys due the United States on account of loans heretofore made under the provisions of title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act of July 22, 1937, the committee amendment was germane and the Senate had the right to legislate on the subject matter.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I say that brings the whole question of relevancy before us, and I see no reason for deviating from the custom of the Senate. The rules have always provided that the question of relevancy in these matters should be submitted to the Senate, and I ask that the question of relevancy now be submitted by the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion now that upon the question of the Senator from Virginia the Senator from Georgia expressly stated he did not raise the question of relevancy, and the question of relevancy is not raised on the Journal.

Mr. RUSSELL. I make the point of order against the point of order of the Senator from Virginia that it should be decided on the question of relevancy of the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that it is too late to make the point now, and the Chair is now going to submit the point of order raised by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. TAFT. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio will state it.

Mr. TAFT. Is the Chair asking the opinion of the Senate on the point of order under rule XVI, and will a majority vote prevail no matter which of these questions is submitted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the ruling of the Chair. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Chair state, for the information of the Senate, the effect of the vote, that is, the effect of a vote "yea" and the effect of a vote "nay"?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the point of the Senator from Virginia shall be sustained, the bill will be recommitted to the committee.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I understand that; but should a Senator desire to sustain the point of order of the Senator from Virginia, will he vote "yea" or "nay"?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question the Chair will submit to the Senate now is, Shall the point of order be sustained? Those who vote "yea" will vote to sustain the point of order, those who vote "nay" will vote against it.

Mr. HILL. To overrule the point of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (after voting in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], who, I am advised, if present would vote "nay," and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. McCLELLAN (after voting in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON]. I am not advised how he would vote if present. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], who, I am advised, if present would vote "nay," and permit my vote to stand.

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is absent on official business for the Committee on Military Affairs. I am advised that if present and voting, he would vote "nay."

The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS] is detained in an important committee meeting.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] is absent on official business for the Special Committee to Investigate the National Defense Program.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK] is detained on important public business. I am advised that, if present and voting, he would vote "nay."

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] is necessarily absent. I am advised that if present and voting, he would vote "nay."

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], who is detained on important public business is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE]. I am advised that if present and voting, the Senator from Maryland would vote "yea" and the Senator from West Virginia would vote "nay."

Mr. McNARY. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS], who if present, would vote "yea," is paired on this question with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER], who if present, would vote "nay."

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] would vote "nay" if present.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BALL], and the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] are members of the Truman committee and are attending its meeting in Kansas City.

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] are members of the congressional committee attending the funeral of the late Representative Guyer, and are therefore necessarily absent from the city.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 54, as follows:

So the Senate refused to sustain Mr. BYRD's point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I do not desire to detain the Senate on the question. I merely wish to remark that the vote just taken is a complete illustration and justification of the statement I have often heard made by a great man in years gone by, that the Senate had very few rules and did not pay the slightest attention to the few it had.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not generally indulge in debating a question when it is once settled, but in view of the remarks made by the distinguished Senator from Missouri, I wish to state that an examination of the precedents of the Senate will show that the Senate, by an overwhelming vote, has sustained the universal precedents on the issue involved in this parliamentary question.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, if I may claim the floor again, since the Senator from Wisconsin brought the matter up, I undertake to say that the Senator cannot adduce one single precedent which is applicable to the present case, a case where the House has simply legislated with regard to one law—even if that should be legislation, which I deny, in this case—where it has been held that that action furnishes justification to the Senate, in derogation of the Senate rule, to legislate on an entirely different question. That is the question presented here.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have cited one case, and I could cite many others, and I pointed out that the Senator from Missouri in the discussion of this question has not cited a single precedent to support the position which he has taken.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I cited the Senate rule.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, do I correctly understand that the committee amendment under consideration begins on page 89 and continues to the third line on page 95? Is that all one committee amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio is correct. The committee amendment ends in line 3 on page 95.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I ask for a division of the amendment. Perhaps the division should occur at the end of line 4 on page 93.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator place his suggestion in writing and send it to the desk?

Mr. TAFT. I would suggest that first we consider the part of the amendment striking out the language under the head of "Farm Tenancy", then the part under the head of "Loans, grants, and rural rehabilitation", and then on page 93 the part of the amendment under the heading "Farm Tenancy". There is a clear distinction between those parts of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the language in question is all one amendment, but I think the Senator from Ohio unquestionably has a right to ask for a division of the amendment, and I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be divided, as requested by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. RUSSELL. I reiterate that I consider it to be all one amendment, but I have no objection to dividing it. In order to bring the matter to a clear parliamentary understanding, I ask that the Senator consider first the item on page 89, after line 3, to strike out the language under the heading "Farm tenancy."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? None is heard.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is purely for the purpose of convenience. It is all one amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first part of the committee amendment as it has been divided.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 89, after line 3, it is proposed to strike out:

FARM TENANCY

Salaries and expenses: To enable the Secretary to carry into effect the provisions of title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, approved July 22, 1937 (7 U. S. C. 1000-1006), $500,000 for necessary expenses in connection with the making of loans under title I of said act and the collection of moneys due the United States on account of loans heretofore made under the provisions of said act, including the employment of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, exclusive of printing and binding as authorized by said act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 89, beginning in line 4.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next portion of the amendment as it has been divided.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 89, after line 14, it is proposed to insert the following:

LOANS, GRANTS, AND RURAL REHABILITATION

To enable the Secretary to continue to provide assistance through rural rehabilitation and grants to needy farmers in the United States, its Territories, and possessions, including (1) farm debt adjustment service, and making and servicing of loans and grants under this and prior laws; (2) loans to needy individual farmers; (3) grants; and (4) liquidation as expeditiously as possible of Federal rural rehabilitation projects under the supervision of the Farm Security Administration, $29,607,573, which sum shall be also available for necessary administrative expenses incident to the foregoing, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; compensation of experts (including the Administrator and not to exceed three Assistant Administrators of the Farm Security Administration) without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; purchase of lawbooks, books of reference, periodicals, and newspapers; purchase, operation, and maintenance of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; and printing and binding: Provided, That the War Food Administrator shall transmit to the Congress semiannually a progress report with respect to the liquidation of Federal rural rehabilitation projects under the supervision of the Farm Security Administration, showing by name and by States all dispositions of such projects, or parts thereof, together with the amounts of Federal funds expended in the process of liquidation, and any losses incurred in the use of such funds.

In making any grant payments under this act, the Secretary is authorized to require with respect to such payments the performance of work on useful public projects, Federal and non-Federal, including work on private or public land in furtherance of the conservation of natural resources, and the provisions of the act of February 15, 1934 (5 U. S. C. 796), as amended, relating to disability or death compensation, and benefits shall apply to those persons performing such work: Provided, That this section shall not apply to any case coming within the purview of the workmen's compensation law of any State, Territory, or possession, or in which the claimant has received or is entitled to receive similar benefits for injury or death.

For additional funds for the purpose of making rura rehabilitation loans to needy individual farmers, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and directed to make advances to the Secretary upon his request in an aggregate amount of not to exceed $97,500,000. Such advances shall be made (1) with interest at the rate of 3 percent per annum payable semiannually; (2) upon the security of obligations acceptable to the Corporation heretofore or hereafter acquired by the Secretary pursuant to law; (3) in amounts which shall not exceed 75 percent of the then unpaid principal amount of the obligations securing such advances; and (4) upon such other terms and conditions, and with such maturities, as the Corporation may determine The Secretary shall pay to the Corporation, currently as received by him, all moneys collected as payments of principal and interest on the loans made from the amounts so advanced or collected upon any obligations held by the Corporation as security for such advances, until such amounts are fully repaid. The amount of notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations which the Corporation is authorized and empowered to issue and to have outstanding at any one time under the provisions of law in force on the date this act takes effect is hereby increased by an amount sufficient to carry out the provisions of this paragraph.

None of the moneys appropriated or otherwise authorized under this caption ("Loans, grants, and rural rehabilitation") shall be used for (1) the purchase or leasing of land or for the carrying on of any land-purchase or land-leasing program; (2) the carrying on of any operations in collective farming except for the liquidation as expeditiously as possible of any such projects heretofore initiated; or (3) the making of loans to any individual farmer in excess of $2,500.

The Secretary of Agriculture may expend funds administered by him as trustee under the various transfer agreements with the several State rural-rehabilitation corporations only for purposes for which funds made available under this caption may be expended, and the limitations applicable to such funds shall also be applicable to the expenditure of such trust funds by the Secretary of Agriculture.

The appropriation and authorization herein made under the heading "Loans, grants, and rural rehabilitation," shall constitute the total amount to be available for obligation under this heading during the fiscal year 1944 and shall not be supplemented by funds from any source.

No part of the appropriation herein made under the heading "Loans, grants, and rural rehabilitation" shall be available to pay the compensation of any person appointed in accordance with the civil-service laws.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection——

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I offer as a substitute for the committee amendment, the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The substitute amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia will be stated.

LOANS AND RURAL REHABILITATION

Making and servicing loans: To enable the Secretary, through the Farm Credit Administration and through existing agencies under its supervision, including the Crop and Feed Loan Division and Production Credit Association, to administer all activities, projects, facilities, and functions heretofore carried on under the caption. "Loans, grants, and rural rehabilitation," the continuance of which is authorized under the terms of this appropriation, and to provide assistance to needy farmers in the United States, its Territories and possessions, unable to obtain credit elsewhere, through making and servicing of loans under this and prior law, $12,000,000, of which $8,000,000 shall be available to the Extension Service of the land-grant colleges in the States to provide such farm and home management assistance as may be necessary to borrowers: Provided further, That none of the funds herein appropriated or made available for these purposes shall be used for the maintenance or establishment of regional offices.

Loan fund: For additional funds for the purpose of making rural rehabilitation loans to needy farmers, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and directed to make advances to the Secretary of Agriculture upon his request in an aggregate amount of not to exceed $40,000,000. Such advances shall be made: (1) With interest at the rate of 3 percent per annum payable semiannually; (2) upon the security of obligations acceptable to the Corporation heretofore or hereafter acquired by the Secretary pursuant to law; (3) in amounts which shall not exceed 75 percent of the then unpaid principal amount of the obligations securing such advances; and (4) upon such other terms and conditions, and with such maturities, as the Corporation may determine. The Secretary of Agriculture shall pay to the Corporation, currently as received by him, all moneys collected as payments of principal and interest on the loans made from the amounts so advanced or collected upon any obligations held by the Corporation as security for such advances, until such amounts are fully repaid. The amount of notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations which the Corporation is authorized and empowered to issue and to have outstanding at any one time under the provisions of law in force on the date this act takes effect is hereby increased by an amount sufficient to carry out the provisions of this paragraph.

None of the moneys appropriated or otherwise authorized under this caption ("Loans and rural rehabilitation") shall be used for (1) the purchase of land or for the carrying on of any land-purchase program; (2) for carrying on any experiment in collective farming, except for the liquidation of any such projects heretofore initiated; or (3) for making loans to any individual farmer in excess of $2,500.

Mr. BYRD. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as a whole as a substitute for the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment of the Senator from Virginia will be considered as a whole as a substitute for the committee amendment.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask the acting majority leader if he will not be willing to let the amendment be printed—it will create considerable discussion—and allow its consideration to go over until tomorrow. Obviously, we cannot conclude discussion of it this evening, and probably some other section of the bill could be taken up and disposed of today. I should like the Members of the Senate to have the benefit of having the amendment before them in printed form, and of having it available tomorrow.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I was interested in the amendment when it was read, but I could not follow it clearly. I should like to have its consideration go over until tomorrow, inasmuch as action on the bill cannot be concluded today.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, of course, I would not undertake to oppose the wishes of the Senator from Oregon in this matter, because I know his views on the question. However, I understand that the amendment of the Senator from Virginia is practically the same as the House committee amendment, which went out on a point of order in the House. I think it is practically the same as the amendments proposed by the House committee, commonly known as the Farm Bureau amendments, so far as the accomplishment of functions is concerned. I think most Members of the Senate have some familiarity with it.

Mr. McNARY. I could not tell from the reading; but I thought that probably its consideration could not be completed this afternoon; and probably we could take up some amendment not so controversial, and could consider the amendment of the Senator from Virginia tomorrow.

Mr. RUSSELL. I understand that the two remaining amendments—one relating to rural rehabilitation and the other authorizing borrowing from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to finance the Rural Electrification Administration—are controversial, as will be any mendments offered to them. If the Senator from Oregon desires to have the bill go over until tomorrow, I shall not interpose objection, but I should like to point out that whatever remains will be controversial. We shall not relieve ourselves of any controversy.

Mr. McNARY. I am satisfied that we can complete action on the bill tomorrow. It is now almost 5 o'clock, and many Members of the Senate have not had an opportunity to be in their offices today.

Mr. RUSSELL. I would not resist the request. I have no objection to having the Senate take a recess at this time.

REPORT FROM THE ALEUTIANS—INVITATION TO WITNESS MOTION PICTURE

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, the Signal Corps has just completed a motion picture entitled "Report From the Aleutians." It is in technicolor, and runs for 42 minutes.

On the surface, Report from the Aleutians is the intimate, factual story of our men and their fight to establish attack bases along the finger of islands pointing to the heart of our enemy, Japan.

Actually, it is the story of how all services and arms of the American fighting forces—air, sea, and land—have teamed up for victory.

As we well remember, in June of 1942 the Japanese, aiming at our continent, struck at Dutch Harbor and Midway. Reeling back from that attack, the remnants of the foe sought refuge at Kiska and Attu, in the Aleutian chain. Immediately it became necessary for us to establish ourselves within striking distance of that new danger.

The motion picture is the record of how we succeeded, how our fighting forces converted a spongy, barren, storm-ridden island into an attack base, how they built an airfield out of a lagoon, how they transported all their food, munitions, machinery, and men thousands of miles through submarine-infested seas.

Senators will see the actual bombing of Kiska, now a daily mission; they will see a graphic record of the kind of soldier the American man can be.

Tomorrow, Thursday, first at 2 o'clock and again at 3 o'clock, in the caucus room of the Senate Office Building, the Members of Congress are cordially invited to see the motion picture. Of course, members of the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate will be expected to attend.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 9, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Dr. Daniel A. Poling, minister of the Baptist Temple, Philadelphia, and president of the World's Christian Endeavor Society, offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we thank Thee that Thou art God of our fathers, God of our country, and our God. Thou hast companioned us through dark days. Thou art the comrade of our lives. We invoke Thy presence. Pour out the spirit of courage, of fortitude, and of faith upon our country. Be with the President of the United States and all who are associated with him in leadership above us and beneath Thee, that we will remember our sons who are on all fronts of the world—on the land, on the sea, and in the air—offering now the last full measure of devotion that freedom shall not perish from the earth.

We do not seek deliverance from responsibilities. We do not ask exemption from sorrow and from sacrifice. We pray for wisdom and for power. May we for those times be adequate as were those in other times for their occasions. We pray Thy blessing upon this institution, upon these Representatives of the American people. We pray that they shall give now not only for ourselves alone but for all men and all women and all little children everywhere the stored resources of the years. Lead on, O King Eternal. May we find a just and lasting peace as we win this war and may we win the peace not only for ourselves and for our sons and daughters but for the children of men through generations that are to be. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 133. Joint resolution to permit additional sales of wheat for food.

The message also announced that the Senate had adopted the following resolution (S. Res. 157):

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. ULYSSES S. GUYER, late a Representative from the State of Kansas.

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the President of the Senate to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased Representative.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now take a recess until 12 o'clock meridian tomorrow.

The message also announced that pursuant to the provisions of the above resolution the Presiding Officer had appointed Mr. CAPPER and Mr. REED members of said committee on the part of the Senate.

POSTAL RATES ON FIRST-CLASS MATTER

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to an agreement with the Speaker, and the majority and the minority leaders and the ranking Members on both sides of the Ways and Means Committee, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 134, to continue the temporary increase in postal rates on first-class matter, and for other purposes, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 1001 (a), as amended (relating to temporary increase in first-class postage rate), of the Revenue Act of 1932, and section 2, as amended (authorizing the President to modify certain postage rates), of the act entitled "An act to extend the gasoline tax for one year, to modify postage rates on mail matter, and for other purposes," approved June 16, 1933, are further amended by striking out "July 1, 1943" wherever appearing therein and inserting in lieu thereof "July 1, 1945", and by striking out "June 30, 1943," wherever appearing therein and inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1945".

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, just long enough for the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] to explain the purpose of the bill.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Ohio will recall, this resolution was unanimously reported by the Committee on Ways and Means. It simply extends for the present the 3-cent postal rate for another 2 years.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. How much money will this bring in?

Mr. COOPER. The report of the Post Office Department is that the estimated revenues yield, due to the additional 1-cent postage on first-class matter, is $130,000,000 per year. The estimated total yield of first-class mail for 1942 is $492,885,000. The estimated total yield of second-class mail for 1942, is $26,793,000.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to object to the consideration of this proposition, but it seems to me that when several publications in this country that might well be dispensed with at the present time are getting a rake-off of many millions of dollars a year each in their postage reductions, we might at least give some consideration to the individuals in America who have to pay this 3-cent postage—the mothers and fathers who write their sons in the armed services. I understand that the deficit caused by these publications amounts to around $100,000,000 a year, almost as much as they now ask to take from the masses of the American people who write individual letters. If we are going to continue this policy, I submit that both these matters should be brought before the House and be given consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

BROOKLYN SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, in Brooklyn tomorrow, June 10, there will be celebrated the one hundred and fourteenth anniversary day parade of the Brooklyn Sunday School Union. I have on previous occasions called this event to the attention of the House, and I feel justified in doing it again because that celebration does not have a counterpart any place in the world. I wish I could describe it to you. One hundred thousand or more men, women, and children participate, proudly marching under the militant banner of godliness. They are on a holiday of holiness. All the public schools are closed and all business is usually suspended. Today, particularly, I think we should look to events like this for what is needed is such lights to shine not only when the world is bright and at peace, but particularly when the world is dark and dreary and at war. There has been written for me an original poem commemorating the day, and it is as follows:

One hundred and fourteen years record
This Anniversary Day Parade
As proud we march to praise the Lord,
With stirring floats and flags displayed.

We and our children here have trod
In Brooklyn's day of holiness
To honor Brooklyn, Church and God
Whose love and grace our people bless.

This year's parade is doubly dear
For Brooklyn's bravest far away,
Our heroes who cannot march here—.
Remember them this holy day.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

PRESENTATION OF AMBULANCE BY CAPITOL EMPLOYEES

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow at 11:45 a. m., on the east plaza of the Capitol, the Capitol employees will present to the Government of the United States an ambulance for use by the United States Army. The Capitol employees raised more than $2,000 from their campaign for funds sponsored by the Congressional Secretaries Club, composed of secretaries to Members of Congress, in order to provide the money to purchase this ambulance. The ambulance completely equipped will cost $1,539. The Capitol Hill employees exhibit an example of loyalty and generosity that might well be emulated by many other groups in this country. It stands as a most commendable and constructive act.

The ambulance will be accepted by Brig. Gen. Wilton B. Persons, Edward W. Smith, and Maj. Gen. Norman T. Kirk, newly appointed Surgeon General of the United States Army, in behalf of the United States. We are all invited to stop by the east steps of the Capitol tomorrow and witness the presentation ceremony.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

DISPOSITION OF SURPLUS GOVERNMENT PROPERTY

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 248, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2795) to amend the Budget and Accounting Act, 1921, to provide for the more efficient utilization and disposition of Government property other than land or buildings and facilities or fixtures appurtenant thereto, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as shall have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

This resolution makes in order consideration of a bill dealing with the disposition of surplus property owned by the Government of the United States. It has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. The discussion of the bill before the Rules Committee indicated that there is not much opposition. I have no disposition to consume time on the rule, and as soon as the gentleman on the minority side consumes such time as he may desire, I think we can adopt the rule and proceed with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the ranking minority member of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, from which this resolution comes, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, there seem to have been several requests for time, therefore I will proceed under the rule.

You may feel that this is not an important matter. It is of importance to me because of the fact that we are making almost our initial bow before the Congress. The Committee on Expenditures is actually reporting a bill today.

I felt that I ought to revive your memory as to the powers and duties of the Committee on Expenditures. That committee was heralded as one of the most useful in the House. After my many years of service I was made the ranking minority member, or the chairmanship in the event of Republican control. I was made to feel that it would be a very important assignment.

We soon learned that no administration would probably ever allow much of an investigation of its own activities, and I have sometimes feared that if I became chairman of the committee under a Republican regime my own leadership might try to suppress any activity in investigating things happening under the Republican rule.

I have considered that question many times, and wondered what my response might be. However, I read something this morning that interested me much. It seems Wendell Phillips once said that when a statesman, so-called, arrives at 70 and when he no longer has any hope of being President, you can get the truth out of him. I qualify, partially at least.

As to the importance of this committee I will revive your memory regarding its supposed powers and duties. The examination of accounts and expenditures of the several departments, independent establishments, and commissions of the Government, and the manner of keeping those accounts; the economy, justness, and correction of such expenditures; their conformity with appropriation laws; the proper application of public moneys; the security of the Government against unjust and extravagant demands; retrenchment; the enforcement of the payment of moneys due to the United States; the economy and accountability of public officers; the abolishment of useless offices, shall all be subjects within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

This seems to cover many highly important activities and most-exacting duties.

It has been held that the committee may make investigations without specific direction from the House, unless it decides to compel testimony.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MASON. Would you say, after that description of the territory that this committee is supposed to cover, and from action we have had from the committee during at least the last 6 years, that the committee and its functions and its activities should be described as a hoopskirt; one that covers everything and touches nothing?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes. But the point I wanted to make is that sometimes I have felt that new Members may have thought I was shirking my duties, but the older Members will remember that for several years in the critical periods of New Deal excesses, I obtained the floor, demanding many investigations. I introduced many orders to investigate departments. I was always confronted with a sort of whitewash from the department, and the leaders would then lay the order on the table and no discussion was in order, under the rule.

I often suffered the weariness of futility, but kept it up for a long time. I frankly confess that since this war has been upon us, I have somewhat lost my urge for investigation, lest it give the appearance of interfering with the war effort. Today we find a different situation. The administration itself wants something, and this committee seems to be the refuge to which they must repair for favorable action. They now want a transfer of authority from the Congress to the Executive in the matter of disposal of property. This right has been carefully guarded by this body. You gentlemen might well study the bill that was first presented.

In the Congress rests the full authority and the duty of the disposal of property. The Executive can only act under authority specially delegated by the Congress. After the war there will be a stupendous amount of such property. It is estimated at not less than $50,000,000,000. The original bill would have transferred from the Congress to the Bureau of the Budget, which is a bureau controlled by the Executive, the full authority in the disposal of that property.

The Comptroller came before us and I asked him if he still felt that he was an official representative of the Congress rather than the Executive, and he insistently replied, "The Congress. But the Comptroller General was appointed by the present President." We may well feel that he should be fearless, inasmuch as he is appointed to serve for 15 long years and can only be removed by this body.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that the House is not in order.

Mr. GIFFORD. I think the House is in very good order. I can see that my Republican friends are listening carefully. This ought to be a joyful day for the members of this committee. I think it is. It is a most satisfactory day to me, for here I am speaking in behalf of a report from this committee, rather than making a protest. I am approving the action of the committee. How different. I am in accord with this bill. But the entire membership has greatly curtailed its original broad and dangerous provisions. I recall the old adage: "He who gives too soon will be soon called upon to give again." We have given but little and we have taken 4 months doing it. We have been careful. We have had prolonged hearings. We have heeded the fears of the Army, the Navy, the Treasury, the R. F. C., and many others. We have tried to protect those agencies from too much meddling in their affairs. If you read the bill carefully you will find that we have not yielded very much authority, but I for one want to be fair enough to acknowledge that certainly there is real necessity for providing for a great deal of surplus, most especially the quantities left over after liquidation of several activities. One illustration ought to be enough. Much property of the W. P. A., estimated at some $40,000,000, is now deteriorating and should be transferred where needed. Certainly that ought to be disposed of in the proper manner. The Director of the Budget will take control of that surplus property through the Procurement Department of the Treasury, and make proper rules and regulations. The original bill provided for too great a taking from the power of the Congress. We would not delegate the power over $50,000,000,000. This must be considered later. There is a provision in the bill that a joint committee be appointed by the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate to consider the proper method for the disposal of that huge amount of surplus material left after the war is over. Industry and the businessmen of the country may well worry over the disposal of that $50,000,000,000.

We must be very cautious in its disposition. We do not want a recurrence of the conditions after the First World War, when vehicles of all sorts were sold across the water, at such low prices that they could be bought and reshipped to the United States and sold to our citizens at a large profit. We thought they would not enter into competition with their own manufacturers, but they did.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I think the membership of the House is rightly concerned over the proper sale of surplus property and commodities. I wonder if the gentleman would agree with me as being genuinely exercised over the tremendous purchase of lands and property by the Federal Government during the period of the war. Is it not also a very serious problem?

Mr. GIFFORD. I might take the time to enlarge on that and to express my own opinion about it. We know so little about it; that is, we have so little factual knowledge. But we feel certain that the military have taken off the market enormous quantities of goods that the civilian population needs and ought to have, simply because they might need it in the future. We hardly dare criticize the military for doing that, unless we can show they have done so. However, I have no doubts about it.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I wonder if the committee has gone into the amount of property in the shape of real estate that the United States Government owns? At a recent meeting in Omaha, Nebr., of county officials, the fact was brought out that the United States Government was the owner of about 375,000,000 acres of land. I think they own about 52 percent of the land in Wyoming.

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes; indeed we have, and we cut all real estate out of this bill.

There is one bone of contention in this bill. I want to say that one of the members of our committee seems very much exercised about it. It is relating to the special joint committee to be appointed. Some of the members do not want to give up the prerogatives of the committee. Many special committees of investigation have been set up, especially by another body. Many members of our committtee feel that they are competent to pass on this whole matter of surplus goods disposal.

I have hopes that this bill will amount to something in that there is not now in the law proper authority to dispose of much property now destroyed or wasted. How many letters I have received—you must also have received many—telling of the waste incident to the building of these cantonments. Hundreds of acres of woodlands cleared for them and for airports. People needed that chopped wood—the Army, of course, could not give it away lest they be accused of favoritism. They had no authority to sell that wood so they simply burned it—at great expense to the Government. That sort of thing must be stopped. The military have a proper system of bookkeeping so that they probably know every day exactly what they have on hand. But that is bookkeeping only and the accountants must accept reports of much property simply accounted for by being marked "condemned." I understand that is a popular and efficient method used to account for disappearance of property which, if authority had been granted, could have been sold, or at least given away.

We find that officers in the Army have too little authority in the matter of disposal of property. It is claimed under this bill that regulations will be formulated to cure this situation. This bill is full of exceptions. The Army, the Navy, the R. F. C., and others seem to be satisfied with it. We should feel safe in voting for it.

Mr. ROWE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ROWE. If authority is extended to the agency to dispose of this material, has there been cautionary moves made so that no particular line of material will be a drug on the market by loading it up?

Mr. GIFFORD. There would not be enough of that under this bill to disturb the market. We have carefully considered that phase and postponed authority to dispose of the great surplus expected later.

As to the details of this bill, if you can read the King's English it would not be difficult except for the many references in it to the many acts heretofore passed. A copy of the hearing will give you the complete Budget and Accounting Act, and title III, which sets up the Comptroller General and General Accounting Office.

I particularly want to congratulate the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON]. He is a perfect marvel at detail, and I am delighted to support him in this measure. I congratulate him sincerely on his grasp of detail. I might, also, discuss these details. I might feel competent to do it. But I preferred to give you the over-all picture. It is the intent of the legislation that, from the very beginning, interested me, and if you will read the hearings you will find how carefully we looked into that and questioned as to the broad powers we were asked to grant to the executive department.

Before I get through with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON], may I say one thing further. I paid the gentleman a high compliment just now and I meant it. I want to remind you of those former days when I was trying to get investigations, when he was like the Rock of Gibraltar in not allowing anything of that sort to be done by the committee. Today is the first time he has come into his own, though not really the chairman. He is acting chairman, the chairman being away, and in matters of detail he will be able to answer any questions you may possibly think of relating to the bill. You know, Mr. WHITTINGTON, "one rooster does not help another rooster by scratching in the same spot." I intend to let you make full explanation of the provisions in the bill.

Mr. CHURCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHURCH. I want to join with the gentleman in his praise of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON]. I do want to reserve one objection, however. I know the gentleman from Mississippi will explain every detail of the bill and I know that every Member of the House will be glad to ask questions. There is one thing in which I disagree with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] and that is in reference to section 4 of this bill. This committee has been diligently acting for 4 months and the committee should continue the job. Therefore, I point out one disagreement only to my fine friend.

Mr. GIFFORD. I may wish to take some time later. As I stated, this bill may be a little difficult to read because of the references. You may wish to know a little about it, but I assure you that the committee has taken 4 months and we have tried to understand it. Sometimes, the less we know the more we suspect. I imagine some of you may possibly suspect a great deal.

The message of the President amused me when it came in last fall. He said that by Executive order he had done much but preferred affirmative authority from the Congress. I should think he would. As an illustration, he hinted that he might like to take from the Government buildings our air-cooling machinery for nongovernmental industries. Somehow or other that did not come to our committee, although he addressed our committee. It was seen fit to send that matter to the so-called Lanham committee. That was one item on which the President perhaps found he ought to go lightly, because Congress might have awakened if he had taken our air-conditioning from us. So he mentioned that he should have affirmative authority from us. I think he was very wise not to have awakened too much curiosity as to what he was really doing under executive authority, alone. If the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON], who is such a splendid cross-examiner, would get busy with the Executive himself I think the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] would find a great many things that the Executive would have to explain.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I may say I have tried to protect the Congress in this bill. Later on when the disposal of $50,000,000,000 of surplus property comes up for consideration, I think we will have much more to say. However, it has been a pleasure to act on the floor as the ranking minority member of the committee, and to prove to the House that the committee is still really in existence and ready to go under another administration.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER].

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] outlined the history of this committee, its program, and the reason for the committee's organization. Frankly, the committee has been a burial ground for practically every bill that has come before it. It was intended to be a burial ground. It was intended to be the administration's burial ground for measures that were controversial and offensive to it.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman will recall that it has been the burial ground for proposals which have been made to reorganize our defense establishments, especially the War and Navy Departments, to create one over-all Secretary, with Under Secretaries for the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force. Year after year, or a dozen occasions, I have requested but been denied a hearing on creating a Department of Defense. I congratulate the gentleman from Ohio for trying to give a hearing on that important subject.

Mr. BENDER. Frankly, on almost every occasion, whenever a bill was referred to our committee, we had very little time for consideration, and the bill was killed before it had a chance to be discussed.

I join my friend from Massachusetts in saying that I am utterly amazed to think that finally a bill has come out of the committee and has the committee's approval. I am surprised and pleased to find the Committee on Rules ready to act on this bill. I wish the Committee on Rules was as ready to act on the resolution continuing the Tolan committee, the only committee that has not been renewed by this Congress. The Committee on Rules has been sitting on that resolution, why I do not know. But they did not sit on this bill very long, apparently because all the teeth have been pulled from the bill.

This bill is very different from the bill that was originally presented. It has been completely butchered. The Army came in and objected to its coming under the provisions of this bill, so the Army was taken out. The Navy objected to coming under the provisions of the bill, so the Navy was excluded from its provisions. In fact, every objecting agency was taken out of the bill. So you have here a bill that provides for the disposal of surplus commodities exactly as the administration wants it, displeasing no one, and providing for something that of course is at least an approach to the problem.

This bill is necessary. There is a need for some authority to dispose of surplus commodities. The Army, in purchasing lands for army camps, had hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of agricultural implements on hand at a time when farmers were crying for agricultural implements, but the Army had no way of disposing of them. It had no authority to dispose of them and had to use the device that is commonly used and is known as an Executive order, or directive, in order to dispose of the property.

I am sorry the bill does not carry some of the provisions it carried originally, when it was introduced. Even though the Bureau of the Budget is the right arm of the administration, there are many men in that bureau who are career men and who are trying to do a fine job. I believe they are conscientious and have an earnest desire to see that the taxpayers get as much money as possible back for all these excesse that have been purchased at any time, particularly during this war period. This bill provides for the disposal of surplus commodities, not including real estate, during wartime, and we shall have more legislation to provide for the disposal of properties after the war is over.

Speaking very frankly and very bluntly, there is no need of kidding ourselves about this bill. This bill is exactly what the administrative members of the committee want. That is why it is going to pass through this Congress like a cat goes through a dog show.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman who has just taken his seat complimented the Committee on Rules to some extent for having reported out the rule on this bill, and took occasion to refer to the fact that the Committee on Rules has not reported a resolution on the Tolan committee.

The pending bill provides for an investigation of this subject further by a special committee. In this session of Congress I have supported resolutions authorizing legislative committees, such as that on naval affairs and military affairs, to make investigations as to how the administration of the legislation coming through those committees is being handled. But I have opposed the appointment in this session of Congress of special investigating committees. I think we shall soon have reached the point where we will be confronted with the necessity of appointing a special committee to investigate the special investigating committees. This Tolan committee, for instance——

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order, first, that the House is not in order; and, second, since we are listening to a very fine speech on the main point of this bill, that a quorum is not present.

Mr. CLARK. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. CHURCH. I am very anxious that the gentleman be heard by the Members of the House.

Mr. CLARK. I would prefer to yield the floor than have the gentleman insist on the point of order.

Mr. CHURCH. I realize that, but in a few minutes we go from the House into the Committee of the Whole, and we have present only a few Members.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to take the gentleman from North Carolina off his feet by a point of no quorum?

Mr. CHURCH. I desire to make the point of order that a quorum is not present in order that the gentleman may be heard by more than just a handful of Members.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has already made the point of order that a quorum is not present, and he cannot make a speech now.

Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and twenty-three Members have answered to their names, a quorum. Without objection further proceedings under the call will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, at the time the point of no quorum was made, I was on the verge of moving the previous question on the pending resolution. My distinguished friend, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH], said he made the point of order because he thought I was making a good statement, which the membership ought to hear. Of course, I appreciate that compliment, but I think the situation is rather that he was so startled by the fact that I was undertaking to say anything on the floor for more than 1 minute that he was shocked into making the point of order of no quorum. Perhaps it would be right for me to say since more of the membership are on the floor, that the pending resolution would make in order the consideration of a bill for the disposition of surplus personal Government property, and to set up a committee to investigate the perplexing question of just how we shall dispose later on of the vast amount of real estate owned by the Government in this country and abroad. In that connection the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] mentioned the fact that the Rules Committee, while promptly reporting the rule on this bill, had declined so far to report a rule continuing the Tolan special investigating committee, whereupon I was moved to say that, while I approved the practice of having investigating committees of various subjects by the various legislative committees of the House, I did not approve the practice which has become so prolific, of appointing special committees to investigate this, that, and the other subject, and that in my judgment we soon will have reached the point where we will have to set up a special investigating committee to investigate these special investigating committees.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK. Not at this moment. We have given the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the Military Affairs Committee authority to investigate subjects in the line of their jurisdiction, and lately we have conferred such authority upon the Agricultural Committee with reference to the Farm Security Administration, which is all right, but it will be rare instances in which a situation will arise where an investigation should not more properly be made by some legislative committee of the House. With all due respect to the Tolan committee, we all know that it was appointed to investigate the subject of migratory labor, resulting after the storm in the Dust Bowl, and all that. If you will read the last report of that committee, you will find that it has completely left that subject, and it files a report in which it almost takes over the whole war effort. We appointed the Dies committee to investigate subversive activities, and un-Americanism, and so forth, and about the only activity I have been able to notice about that committee lately is that a subcommittee of the Dies committee is now in California investigating the internment of Japanese in California, and I am unable to conceive how that special committee could think it has jurisdiction to go out and deal with a question so loaded with dynamite as that question is. I am simply making the suggestion to the House that I think it is about time we put the brakes on the appointment of some of these special committees to investigate these various questions. I now yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the force of the gentleman's remarks but I am inclined to think that this measure may lead to a great deal of confusion if adopted. I notice, for instance, in defining the term "property" it says it does not include any land, building, or their appurtenant facilities or fixtures, or any gold or silver. Then on page 17 it provides under subsection (b) of section 4 for full and complete study and investigation of tangible property, both real and personal. Certainly it seems to me that the committees which have charge of matters of this character ought to be able to determine that, and I am afraid that we will have confusion worse confounded unless this bill can be explained in such a way that it will lay aside the objections that seem apparent on the face of it.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me to answer the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Just to say to the gentleman from Texas that the committee authorized will not deprive any legislative committee of its jurisdiction. The purpose of this committee is to make recommendations to Congress, and those recommendations would be referred to the proper committees.

Mr. LANHAM. I am not opposing that feature of this bill, because we will have at the close of the war a vast amount of real estate in this country and in other countries. I happen to be chairman of the committee having to do with war housing, and a great deal of land has been acquired. We make our investigations and are authorized to do so and it seems to me that we are in a better position to know about that situation than any independent committee investigating the matter, or that it could possibly know.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK. Yes.

Mr. BENDER. I respect the gentleman's opinion, and his attitude toward special committees, but the gentleman will agree that many special committees have been created during this Congress, as for example the Dies committee, the Smith committee, the Cox committee, the Committee on Small Business, the Committee on Wildlife, the Canners committee, the Committee on Newsprint, and the Kerr committee. The Select Committee on Defense Migration has come before the Rules Committee only after receiving the favorable opinion of the Speaker of the House and the majority and minority leaders on the desirability of continuing the work of the committee for a year.

The committee proposes, if continued, to begin at once hearings on farm manpower and migration, so as to report immediately to Congress. This has been the committee's practice throughout its existence: Under House Resolution 113, Seventy-seventh Congress, passed March 1941, reports were issued at least every 3 months. That resolution called on the committee to concentrate its attention on problems arising from the migration of workers to war jobs, and that we have done.

The committee's present proposal is to focus its primary attention on the problems of agricultural labor supply, with which it was concerned under House Resolution 63, Seventy-sixth Congress.

In support of the request for continuation the committee would urge its demonstrated ability to take a comprehensive view of a problem and to make vigorous recommendations for correcting existing confusion. Any reader of the press or Washington reporter knows that the committee's reports on industrial manpower are largely responsible for the proposals now being urged upon the President for a national manpower policy. We believe we can do as much for the farm manpower problem.

In response to the question, "What does the committee propose to do about it?" we refer the Rules Committee to the following excerpt from pages 15 and 16 of our final report under House Resolution 113, Seventy-seventh Congress, where we said:

> In the estimation of the committee the shortcomings of these programs to date closely parallel those of the industrial manpower programs.
> There has been the same failure to recognize the need for great expansion of war production and curtailment of nonessential civilian goods. There has been the same easy optimism about the use of customary methods of handling labor supply. And with respect to the draft, the absence of adequate occupational deferment machinery has struck agriculture even more heavily than industry. In agriculture, moreover, the need for a close correlation between the utilization of available manpower and other productive facilities is even greater than in industry. This country should long since have related agricultural manpower and production to the work of individual county war boards and local draft deferment boards.

The above quotation will indicate the line we think any legislation should follow. We cannot afford to have agricultural goals calling for more milk or more peanuts, and no coordination between the manpower program and the agricultural program.

To permit the committee to keep up with the problems of war-induced industrial migration, which is draining agriculture of its labor supply, House Resolution 36—Seventy-eighth Congress—continues in force the authority granted under House Resolution 63—Seventy-sixth Congress—and House Resolution 113—Seventy-seventh Congress. No extension of the mandate previously granted the committee is requested.

Support for the work of the committee from the press and public comes from papers throughout the country, including the Detroit Free Press, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, the Louisville Courier-Journal, the Catholic journals—America, the Sign, and the Commonweal—the Protestant Home Missions Council, the National Travelers Aid, many columnists and commentators, including Raymond Clapper and Baukhage, organized labor including the A. F. of L., C. I. O., and railway brotherhoods. Libraries of schools and colleges throughout the country have made extensive demands for the committee's hearings and reports. Large numbers of Federal, State, and local officials have written indicating their reliance on the proposals of the committee. Witnesses have universally praised the committee for the courteous way they have been received. In 2½ years of work the committee has never used a subpena.

Mr. CLARK. I appreciate the force of the gentleman's statement. I have no disposition to discriminate, as far as I am concerned, against the Tolan committee. I voted against the appointment of all of these special committees. The complaint I have against them is that if you will compare their final reports with the resolution by which they were authorized you will see that in 9 cases out of 10 they have wholly departed from the jurisdiction that was originally conferred upon them. I have seldom seen any concrete results from the appointment of these special committees, except in very extraordinary cases.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. With reference to the statement made by the gentleman from North Carolina about the subcommittee of the Special Committee to Investigate Un-American and Subversive Activities on the West Coast, I wish to state that that subcommittee was sent there by the chairman to investigate charges that had been placed with him by Members of this House and the Senate and by reputable people throughout the country that subversive aliens or people born in America of Japanese descent had been released, who were members of subversive organizations and were dangerous people and should be investigated. That is the sole purpose of the committee in going out there.

Mr. CLARK. My only point about that is that it occurred to me when I read the dispatch in the press that that committee was dealing with a very touchy subject that probably belonged with the military or State departments.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. I think that is part of the reason why this committee undertook that investigation, because it is not within the direct jurisdiction of the War Department but the War Relocation Commission. I will say to the gentleman that in my opinion, having lived on the Pacific coast many years, where the Japanese abound, that if what this subcommittee said about the release of the Japanese in their last report is true, this situation should be investigated by some committee, and that committee should report to Congress so that the Congress could take proper action.

Mr. CASE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. CASE. Can the gentleman state what happens to the funds that will be realized from the sale of surplus properties under the bill which this resolution proposes to make in order?

Mr. CLARK. I prefer that that question should be answered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON], who will have charge of the bill.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I will say that the bill contemplates a vast improvement upon the existing policy, and unless it involves reimbursable funds or special funds, it provides that those funds shall be covered into the general Treasury of the United States.

Mr. CASE. The point that disturbed me, if I may say to the gentleman, is that on page 10 of the bill there is a sentence which indicates that the proceeds could be credited back to the appropriation of the agency or department interested, and thereby augment the funds of that administrative agency or unit, and the funds would not be in the control of the Congress.

Mr. FORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. FORD. In view of the statement of the gentleman with reference to a special committee to investigate investigating committees, I wonder if Judge SMITH'S committee, which is supposed to be investigating whether executive departments are going outside of their jurisdiction, would investigate some of these other committees that you and I think are going beyond their jurisdiction?

Mr. CLARK. I do not know that I could add anything to the gentleman's knowledge along that line.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may revise and extend the remarks I shall make in Committee of the Whole and include certain computations made by myself and certain records of February 3, 1942, with reference to the soldier's residence.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AMENDING THE BUDGET AND ACCOUNTING ACT OF 1921

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2795) to amend the Budget and Accounting Act, 1921, to provide for the more efficient utilization and disposition of Government property other than land or buildings and facilities or fixtures appurtenant thereto, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 2795, with Mr. BONNER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, at the risk of repeating a statement that is often made when legislation is being considered, I venture to say that there are few matters of more importance to the people and to the Congress than those embraced in the bill now under consideration. Under the Constitution the Congress is vested with the control of the purse and property of the people of the United States.

The bill under consideration is an amendment to the Budget and Accounting Act of 1921. The passage of that act, under a Republican administration, in June 1921 was a great step forward in executive administration. That act provided for the Bureau of the Budget, the financial management arm of the Chief Executive. It provided for the General Accounting Office, often and properly called the arm of the Congress. The bill under consideration does not change or modify or amend the Budget and Accounting Act with respect to the powers of the Director of the Budget or of the Comptroller General. Their powers remain. The amendments are additions to implement and specify more exactly what the committee conceives to be the purposes that Congress really had in mind in the establishment of the Budget and General Accounting Offices, and to utilize the experience of the Government over the past 20 years in implementing the purposes of that act.

Congress can control the purse strings of the Nation in making appropriations; as long as the appropriation remains in the form of money it is subject to the control of Congress, but when the appropriation is converted into services and the purchase of equipment, materials, and supplies, other problems arise.

To get rid, for instance, of the services of Federal employees no longer needed, recently the Director of the Budget has been directed to canvass the situation and to provide for the elimination of employees wherever possible. But unfortunately the Congress has not provided adequately for the efficient management of property in the hands of executive agencies, or for the disposition of the surplus property belonging to the Government and accruing inevitably from its operations. Those properties are being increased day by day. The surpluses are piling up.

Equipment, materials, and supplies and other property may be considered generally under three heads—to wit, procurement, utilization, and disposal of surplus. First, as to the procurement agency of the Government: The Director of Procurement is nothing more nor less, generally speaking, than the purchasing agent under legislation that the Congress has passed. In the various departments rests the determination of the properties that they need, and he has no veto power; his authority is merely to purchase the property. There is not any over-all requirement or standard of management with respect to the utilization of property once that property has been acquired.

I have referred to the procurement of property and its utilization, I come now to the disposition of the property.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman allow me to complete my explanation, and then I will be glad to yield to any Member?

The first essential requisite of proper management and utilization of property is for the Government to require inventories, provide for standards, to provide for the transfer of that property from one agency to another, to provide for full utilization of property already on hand if a new agency is established, which needs equipment or material, or if material has been acquired by one department of the Government and it has served its purpose, then it should be made available to another department of the Government requiring such property. So the question of utilization is an important one. In the matter of disposition of surplus, after its existence has been ascertained by proper investigation, the law is wholly inadequate.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question at that point?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman allow me to complete my statement? I want to make a connected statement if I can.

Inevitably the surpluses pile up. They piled up during the First World War. With no legislation to provide for their disposition, President Wilson issued an Executive order. The order was amended by the Congress to apply only to the First World War. There were great losses to the Treasury resulting from the utterly inadequate provisions for the disposition of property following the First World War.

Congress undertook to provide, first in 1928 and later in 1933, that property might be transferred between Government agencies at the market value. Appropriations were made upon the request of the Bureau of the Budget to enable departments to acquire property. They acquired property. In many cases hundreds of thousands and millions of dollars' worth of properties were transferred to Government agencies following the First World War, and there was no accounting of the acquisition of the property and no charge against or offsetting reduction of appropriations, since the Congress never had, in the first instance, required such action, and consequently many congressional appropriations were tremendously augmented without the knowledge or consent of Congress. The provisions under existing law are utterly inadequate. There is no legislation requiring the agency that buys new equipment to secure a certificate that some other agency does not have the equipment and belonging to the Government. The present law does not make any provision for determining the surpluses not needed by the purchasing agencies.

There are other defects in the law, and with the discontinuance of the Civilian Conservation Corps and the Work Projects Administration, and numerous other changes in our executive establishment, this problem of surplus property has become acute.

The President of the United States, in November of last year, sent a message to the Congress to advise them that he had established by Executive order for the disposition of surplus property as well as it could be done by Executive order, and recommended the enactment of legislation to provide for the handling of surplus property.

I am very grateful to my colleagues of the committee for their kind personal remarks. May I add that the bill as introduced first in December 1942 and then in the present Congress was H. R. 1610, which was considered by the committee for several months. The bill under consideration, H. R. 2795, is a substitute for the bill H. R. 1610.

This is not a partisan question. As a member of that committee I was assisted by the views and recommendations of all the members of the committee, and they were very diligent in attending the hearings, and particularly the members of the minority. I recall that the ranking member, the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD], was insistent that there should be no power vested in the Executive or any other agency that would authorize the disposition of property essential to the prosecution of the war. The committee included that in the pending bill.

I recall again that the distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] made a recommendation that there should not be a disposition of the gold and silver located at Fort Knox and West Point. That provision is contained in this bill.

I recall that other members of the committee made recommendations, particularly members from the minority side, that were utilized in the preparation and formulation of this bill. If there ever was, in my experience as a Member of this body, a bill reported that was a committee bill, it is the bill under consideration, because it undertakes to embrace the helpful suggestions which were submitted by all the members of the committee, including the gentleman named, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN], and numerous other members of the committee.

The Executive orders are set out fully and completely in the report.

There is a very clear analysis of this bill in the report of the committee. There is embraced in the report a copy of the Budget and Accounting Act of 1921, the existing law; and let me say before I yield for questions that I think a rather hasty but I trust a fairly accurate analysis of the provisions of this bill will be of benefit to the Members.

In the first place, as it is stated, it amends by inserting a new title in the Budget and Accounting Act without changing the subject matter of that act. Section 251 contains definitions. Property, in this bill means supplies, materials, equipment, and any tangible property owned by the United States, but does not include land, buildings, or their appurtenant facilities. The bill H. R. 1610, which was introduced and referred to this committee and providing for the disposition of personal property, did include land, buildings, and appurtenances.

I recall very definitely the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and I recall that it was brought to the attention of this committee that the Committee on Buildings and Grounds undertook to handle that problem of the disposition of lands, buildings, and their appurtenant facilities and fixtures, some facilities having been included in the so-called Lanham bill—and I shall have something to say about that bill a bit later. It was passed in this House, but still reposes in the other body. That bill made available essential war materials, as we understood when the bill passed here. The definitions in this bill relate to tangible personal property with the exceptions named. According to the definitions of this bill, "surplus property" means any property which, pursuant to this title, is determined to be surplus to the function, activity, or project in connection with which it was acquired or accrued. I might refer to other definitions, but they are in section 251 of the bill and copies are available.

Section 252 undertakes to implement the purposes of the Budget and Accounting Act. I do not believe I overstate the case when I say that the pending bill is the most progressive advance that has been made in executive administration in the past 20 years; so, section 252, the second numbered section of the bill, provides that the Director of the Budget shall require inventories, estimates, and annual reports as to the transfers, disposition, or disposal of proceeds. The section provides that the Director shall make a periodic survey to ascertain what surpluses exist and to provide for standards of stocking and use, and require the fullest possible utilization of any surplus property by any agency in order to avoid unnecessary commercial purchases. The section requires the Director to submit to Congress at the close of each fiscal year a report.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the next section 253 provides that there shall be no disposition of surplus property except as provided. That means that there has got to be, if it is transferred to any agency, an accounting. That means that if Congress appropriates money for a certain purpose and the purpose can be promoted by the transfer of property already acquired, that course shall be pursued and the receiving appropriation will pay the fair value into the Treasury, and thus the intent of Congress shall be carried out.

Section 254 undertakes to maintain this integrity of our appropriations. I have in mind an instance where Congress appropriated $5,000,000 for hurricane relief in New England following the hurricane and flood of 4 or 5 years ago. Two million dollars' worth of property was acquired by the Federal Government, but there was no statute on the books providing for the disposition of that property. There is such a statute in force in the District of Columbia. Section 254 of this bill attempts to do throughout the country what the District of Columbia statute does within the District in the handling of surplus property.

Section 255 provides for disposition of scrap, unusable property.

Section 256 provides a mandate to the head of every agency to determine and make available all surplus property, and directs the President to take such action in the event of inaction by the possessing agency. It further provides for reconditioning of property as found to be necessary and economical.

Section 257 provides that when property has been ascertained to be not needed by any Government department or governmental agency it shall be disposed of by sale or by lease in the domestic market, by sale or by lease to foreign governments, and if it happens to be in a foreign land, if it cannot be sold first to the Government then it may be offered in the commercial market of that country. For instance in Mexico it would first be offered to the Government and if the Government did not want it then it might be offered to the nationals of Mexico. Or, it may be disposed of to tax-supported institutions, per rules and regulations that are authorized, and may be prescribed by the President.

Section 258 relates to accounting with respect to the property, and, as stated in response to the inquiry of the gentleman from South Dakota, the proceeds are to be covered into the Treasury, except in the case of a reimbursable appropriation or corporate fund, so that the Congress can really get its fingers on the fiscal affairs of the agencies of the Government.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In just a moment.

There is a provision that was recommended by the Quartermaster General in section 258 relating to cost-plus-a-fixed-fee contracts.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In just a moment.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman that he knows his subject thoroughly. Why does he insist on telling all about it before he yields to a question at any particular point? I see men who asked the gentleman to yield leaving the Chamber.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I shall be glad to answer any and all inquiries.

Mr. GIFFORD. Why does not the gentleman yield to these questions?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I shall be delighted to, but I shall probably anticipate many questions.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman talks on the subject while Members leave the floor after he declined to yield. I think the gentleman should yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I shall be delighted to yield. The gentleman has my permission to ask questions, but I will soon have completed my general explanation and feel sure that I am anticipating many of the questions.

With respect to the question asked by the gentleman from South Dakota, there are provisions in the bill that would authorize the rental of property referred to by him. Section 259, on pages 9 and 10, would undertake to extend to the other governmental agencies the privileges now accruing to the forest and road services. That is the matter that the gentleman referred to in his question, as I understand it, appearing on page 10.

Mr. CASE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE. My question was based on the final sentence of that section, which ends on page 10, and provides that the proceeds from rentals shall be made available to the renter agency for the operation, maintenance, repair, or replacement of the equipment, and that in the absence of such an appropriation it will go into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. My question is based on the assumption that in some cases where the Government has a great deal of road-building machinery that will not happen.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes, that is the purpose of the bill, to provide for payment into the general funds of the Treasury.

Mr. CASE. This is the point: In some cases the money received from that rental will conceivably exceed the amount that is ever necessary for repair. There is no provision that that shall go into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts but will pile up; that is, whatever is received from the rental and repair fund.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I may say that the purpose of the section is to cover into the General Treasury all proceeds from such rentals which are not needed for operation, repair, maintenance, depreciation and management of the equipment rented, as I have already observed.

Mr. CASE. The language does not do that. It is only in the absence of a repair fund, but if there is a repair fund the repair fund will pile up end without end.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes, but if it exceeds the needs set forth in lines 7 and 8 and which I have mentioned a moment ago, my thought is that the purpose of the committee was to undertake to require that that money should not remain in the hands of the department but should be covered into the general fund of the Treasury.

Mr. CASE. But the language of the bill does not say that.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. I have tried to assure the gentleman that at least the Bureau of the Budget would know that the money was there when the time came to appropriate more money. I think what the gentleman from South Dakota wants to know is this: Does the gentleman think it advisable to have this bill amended just to add that that money shall be covered in the Treasury when the amount exceeds the amount needed for repair? I think the language here sufficient.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I think that to whatever extent it exceeds the amount required for the purposes stated it should be covered into the Treasury and, as the gentleman from Massachusetts stated, this language was submitted to the Director of the Budget, to the Director of Procurement, and to the General Accounting Office with the specific instruction by members of the committee that generally, unless there was a specific fund where this money is required by law to be deposited, the proceeds should be covered into the general fund of the Treasury.

Mr. DINGELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. I would like to interpose an observation and then ask a pertinent question. I consider this bill one of extreme importance now, during the war and immediately after the war when it will be even more important. Following the last war, is it not true that hundreds of millions of dollars of surplus materials and goods were disposed of recklessly with great loss to this Government, in some instances virtually given away, with scarcely no accounting, to brokers, fly-by-night purchasing corporations, and in some instances to racketeers, who then disposed of it to the public at high prices?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The gentleman is substantially correct. The subject is covered in the report of the committee on the provisions of the bill. I propose to discuss war materials and war surpluses before I conclude my remarks.

Mr. DINGELL. Does the bill specifically provide against some of the violations of good practices of the Government in the disposition of surplus goods? Is that covered in this bill?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It is as far as property is authorized to be disposed of, and I will come to the war materials in a few minutes.

Mr. DINGELL. I want to be definitely sure of that.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LANHAM. The gentleman from Mississippi has stated that this legislation has nothing to do with real property, yet on page 17, subsection (b) of section 4, referring to the committee investigation, states that its investigation shall include both real and personal property. With reference to the act that emanated from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the law itself provides the manner in which that property shall be disposed of. Furthermore, it seems to me with reference to much of this personal property that is in these various military and naval establishments secrecy must be maintained not only with reference to the location of it, but with reference to the purpose of its being there, and that divulging such information by a committee that goes snooping around would likely interfere with our war effort.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I will anticipate the gentleman's question. I think that ample provision has been made to safeguard in both respects and I will cover that when I get to section 2 of the bill. I may say in passing that the land and buildings acquired by the Government were for the prosecution of the war and they cannot be disposed of under the terms of this bill, nor can any property in their possession or control be disposed of without the consent of the War Department, Navy Department, and Maritime Commission as the case may be; moreover, if the report of the special committee makes any recommendations, they will be referred to the proper committees of the House and Senate.

Mr. LANHAM. But the War Department, the Navy Department, and Maritime Commission does not have control of the property under the act to which I refer. I can understand with reference to surplus property such as typewriters, desks, and articles of furniture, things of that kind, that surplus property of that kind could be disposed of through administrative channels.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

Mr. LANHAM. I am afraid of the appointment of a committee to go all over the country digging into these things which are the responsibility of various legislative committees.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. We have your views and we will come to that a little bit later. The special committee would guard all war secrets. It will not travel over the country.

Mr. McGRANERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McGRANERY. On that particular point, as I understood the chairman to explain the bill, he said property as defined on page 2 of the bill means any supplies, materials, or equipment or any tangible property owned by the United States or by any corporation, but not including any land or buildings. Then we go over to page 17, under subsection (b) and you say tangible property, both real and personal, acquired, held, or utilized for military purposes. That is apparently a very glaring contradiction.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The gentleman is in error. The definition on page 2 describes the property that may be disposed of as surplus property. The language "real and personal property" on page 17 describes investigations that are to be made to develop facts that are not now available to the Members of Congress as to the land and buildings owned by the Government, and I will cover that in a moment. There is no provision in the bill for disposing of lands and buildings acquired for war purposes. The special committee will make recommendations to the Senate and House for the disposal of real property.

Mr. McGRANERY. Are not these legislative committees already set up by the Congress with full authority, capacity, and intelligence to do this?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes; when and if they are furnished the facts. They will need all the aid, facts, and recommendations that the special committee could furnish.

Mr. McGRANERY. What is the view of this committee in bringing in a bill asking that a special committee be set up to usurp the very job now being done?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The job is not being done. No committee has recommended the way or manner to do the job of disposing of war materials. I will come to that part of the bill in just a few moments and be glad to cover it then, if I have not answered the gentleman's question already.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I should like to call to the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi, who is making a very interesting and able statement, the fact that he overlooked section 253 in his explanation of the bill by sections, and I call his particular attention to subsection (b) of section 253:

> In the case of any corporation owned or controlled by the United States the provisions of this title shall apply only in respect of materials, supplies, and equipment held or used by such corporation for administrative purposes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I anticipate the gentleman's question. I intend to say before I conclude that this bill does not authorize the disposal as surplus property of any of the substantive properties acquired by the corporations established for the prosecution of the war, or by any corporation owned or controlled by the Government. The only property belonging to those corporations that can be disposed of as surplus is the property known as administrative property, such as desks, typewriters, and things of that sort. That is one of the reasons this committee recommended the appointment of a committee to study that matter, because the disposition of the surplus war materials could wreck the economy of this Nation, I care not whether it be hotels, I care not whether it be minerals or strategic materials. For that reason, I shall undertake to state a few minutes later that the committee has recommended further study before we dispose of any corporation property and war materials, except property used for administrative purposes.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. If the gentleman will let me complete the question, because I want to get the legislative intent of the committee—in view of his explanation, then, the committee does not intend that this bill shall apply to machinery and equipment of the T. V. A. for the construction, maintenance, or operation of the power systems or the fertilizer and chemical operations and similar items of the T. V. A. program authorized by the Congress heretofore?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I would say that those properties were evidently acquired for the functioning of that particular agency of the Government and would not be regarded as surplus property. If, however, the T. V. A. has now or at any time equipment, materials, or supplies which are surplus to its needs—by that I mean not essential for the functioning of the T. V. A.—such surplus other than administrative surplus would not be actionable under this bill, inasmuch as Public No. 17, 73d Congress, approved May 18, 1933, creates the T. V. A. as a body corporate and inasmuch as T. V. A. is thus a corporation.

Mr. ROLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ROLPH. I am one of those who believe we should have less government in business. Does the gentleman's committee anticipate that when this surplus merchandise is dumped on the market it will come in competition with the regular, established business houses throughout the United States, and tend to break down their markets?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I answered the question, I think, a few moments ago, when I said unless additional provision was made for the surplus war property it could wreck the economic structure of the Nation. The purpose is to prevent dumping.

Mr. Chairman, with respect to section 260, the next section, I merely say that this section is intended to cover the disposition of property similar to that embraced in the Lanham bill (H. R. 1294). We passed a bill here and it was said it was necessary for the prosecution of the war, and it went to the Senate and has not passed the Senate as yet.

Section 261 provides that the powers vested in the President may be exercised by a representative named by him.

Section 262 definitely provides that the bill shall not be construed as a modification of the powers of the Comptroller General.

There are about 100 acts now for the disposition of surplus property by various agencies of the Government. The committee was very careful in reporting this bill not to provide that there should be disposed of any property of any kind essential for the prosecution of the war. So, under section 263, there are listed some 16 acts providing for the disposal of property by the War and Navy departments and the other essential war activities of the Government that are exempt from the provisions of this act.

Section 2, page 15, of the bill provides that during the continuance of the present war and for 6 months after the termination of the war, or until such earlier time as the Congress by concurrent resolution may designate, there shall not be disposed of any property acquired by the War Department, the Navy Department, the Maritime Commission, or the War Shipping Administration, without the consent of these agencies, because it is presumed that those properties were acquired for the prosecution of the war.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. As the gentleman knows, there is a lot of equipment, trucks, and road equipment, left over from the C. C. C., stored around in warehouses. This material is needed badly in the farming communities and everywhere. It is just sitting around rusting and rotting down.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. That is one of the pressing necessities for the passage of this bill.

Mr. JENSEN. Under this bill, when it is passed, will someone have the authority to dispose of this material and get it into use?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Absolutely. That is one of the purposes of the bill and a pressing reason for its immediate passage, I repeat.

Mr. HARRIS of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. HARRIS of Arkansas. Under Executive order, at the present time does not the Procurement Division of the Treasury have authority to dispose of this property?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The representative of that Division says that authority is inadequate, that further legislative authority is needed.

Mr. HARRIS of Arkansas. They have been disposing of property at the present time and have been doing it for some time under that order, have they not?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Because of the neglect of Congress to pass legislation for the proper ascertainment and disposition of the property, it is being handled by Executive order, and the purpose of this bill is to replace and supplant that Executive order.

In section 3 it is provided that after the date on which the President proclaims that the hostilities of the present war have ceased, no war materials, as described, may be disposed of except as may be provided by law enacted after the date of enactment of this act.

Mr. HARRIS of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In just a moment. With all due deference, I think if I had made my connected statement, I would have anticipated most of the questions that have been asked. It was the view of this committee, when it rewrote the bill H. R. 1610, after 4 months of study, that the bill should provide for the disposition of surplus properties, and that there should be an inhibition against the disposition of any property, acquired for the prosecution of the war, unless it was done as provided by law, and with the consent of the war agencies, but with the cessation of hostilities there may be $50,000,000,000 in shoes, clothing, airplanes, tanks, trucks, cars, and the disposition of that property should be so handled that it will not wreck the economic structure of the Nation. With the advice that we had, with the lack of information that the committee had as to the amounts and the kinds of war material, with the lack of information our committee had as to the various Government buildings, of various lands that have been acquired, the hotels, and other properties in the prosecution of the war, before the committee was willing to recommend legislation to the Congress for the disposition of war material, of those war properties of every kind and description, involving, as I say, probably billions and tens of billions of dollars, the committee recommended that there should be a further study made of the question of war materials, and that question should cover real and personal property, all of the properties acquired for the prosecution of the war, and that that committee should have substantially the same powers that the so-called Byrd committee has now, to provide an investigator to go into the various departments and agencies of the Government, and ascertain for the committee the surplus properties that might be available after the war. And so, in section 4, the committee recommends that there be appointed a committee of five Members of the House, and five Members of the Senate, to study and accumulate information with respect to the various war properties of this country, and to submit interim reports and a final report to the Congress within 6 months.

It is fair to say that those reports will be referred to the proper committees having jurisdiction—to the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee, I think they should go—as to the disposition of public buildings and lands acquired by the Government for war purposes, that are not essential to the continued existence of the Government. The reports would be handled as other reports, and they would be referred in accordance with the rules of the House. The point is that when the Committee on Expenditures had before it a bill that would have provided for the disposition of real estate, the bill was amended so as to provide for further study before we vested any agency with the disposition of real property. This committee, if appointed by the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate, would probably be the most important committee to be appointed during this session of Congress. We do not limit its membership to any committee, the Expenditures Committee, the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee, or any other. We want the ablest Members, representing a cross section of views of the Congress, to study that question and report to the Congress with respect to the amounts, kinds, and methods of disposition of the property, to prevent just what the gentleman from Michigan, a few moments ago, said occurred after the First World War. The committee, in order to safeguard the contingent fund of the House, is authorized to expend $10,000 in the employment of an investigator, full time, something that would not be available to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds or the Expenditures Committee or the Committee on Military Affairs, one-half to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and one-half out of the contingent fund of the House. The report is to be submitted to Congress, so that, following the cessation of the war, disposition of property described and defined in this bill as war materials may be made by the Congress of the United States, after full investigation by a special committee composed of five of the ablest and best qualified men in the two branches of the Congress, who will formulate and report to the House and the Senate appropriate recommendations for legislation.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes.

Mr. JENSEN. The gentleman knows that much lumber has been piled up and burned, usable lumber and I am sorry the committee did not see fit to put in a provision making it a penitentiary offense for any officer in charge of any camp or Government property to give orders to pile up lumber or any other equipment and burn it.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I am very glad that the gentleman brought that to our attention, and it is probably the fault of the Congress that that very thing has happened, and will happen again unless we pass legislation such as this committee has brought to your consideration, which provides for the disposition of just such lumber and materials that now cannot be disposed of under legislation previously passed. I referred to section 260 previously in my remarks.

Mr. POULSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes.

Mr. POULSON. Is it not true that in the hearings it was shown that that was the reason why there was destruction of property. It was because we did not have a suitable method by which it could be disposed of.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The gentleman is correct. He was in attendance on all of the hearings, and we profited much by his suggestions.

I would like to say in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, that I will be glad to answer, during the further consideration of the bill, any questions which the Members would like to ask. I feel a delicacy in consuming more of the time allotted to our side, although I have only one request for time.

Mr. ROWE. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] has again expired.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 additional minute to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. ROWE. After the committee of five makes the investigation concerning the dumping of materials back on to the market will that be confirmed by act of legislation within the House?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Absolutely. I stated a few moments ago that this committee would make an exhaustive study, as provided in section 4 of this bill, and submit interim reports. There is nothing to prevent the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds for instance bringing in a bill in a week or six weeks from now on an interim report or without any report at all but the final report shall be submitted to the Congress within the next 6 months. For my part I am unwilling to leave to any individual, be he President, be he Director of the Budget, or Director of Procurement, or the Comptroller General, or any agency, without any checks or balances, the disposition of property that may aggregate $50,000,000,000. In my judgment, the most constructive feature of this legislation, in addition to providing for permanent better management of equipment and supplies and the disposition of surpluses that have been created, is the provision for a committee to study the question and report to Congress for additional legislation for the disposition of war materials.

I welcome questions but as I have stated, it was my desire to make a connected analysis of the bill before yielding for questions. At the risk of repetition I extend my remarks to analyze and explain the bill by sections and I adopt the language, in analyzing the bill, contained in the report that I submitted in behalf of the committee.

ANALYSIS OF H. R. 2795 BY SECTIONS

The Budget and Accounting Act, 1921, established the Bureau of the Budget and our Federal budgetary system. Since the permanent management controls which H. R. 2795 aims to provide are essentially of budgetary character, the first section of the bill proposes a new title, II–A, amplifying the original legislative charter of the budgetary system.

Section 251 defines the terms used throughout the bill and confines its coverage to the executive branch of the Federal Government exclusive of the municipal government of the District of Columbia.

Section 252 provides for the first time by affirmative legislation applicable throughout the executive branch the operational basis for effective executive management of equipment, materials, and supplies. It requires adequate inventory records as the first essential, periodic surveys of stocks on hand, the development and application of standards to govern both stocking and utilization, and the use of surpluses in the fullest degree possible to avoid unnecessary new purchases in the commercial markets. It centers these controls in the Bureau of the Budget and provides a congressional check of all operations under the title through an annual report from the Director of the Budget.

Section 253 prohibits the disposal of surplus property, as defined in this bill, except as provided in the new legislation and except as to the nonadministrative property of Government corporations. The intent of this exception is to leave these corporations entirely free of any effect by the bill upon their buying, stock-piling, or selling operations, but to apply executive management controls to materials, supplies, and equipment held or used by such corporations for administrative purposes.

Section 254 allows the departments and agencies, and administrative units within such departments and agencies necessary freedom of action in transferring surplus property within their respective jurisdictions. At the same time, and again for the first time in general legislation, the requirement is clearly set forth that the integrity of congressional appropriations must be maintained by payment of the full value of equipment, materials, and supplies transferred to them from surplus stocks.

Section 255 gives the individual agencies necessary operational freedom of action in disposing of equipment, materials, and supplies not necessarily surplus but damaged or worn beyond repair, scrap, salvage, and the incidental products of various field operations carried on by the agency disposing of such property. On the other hand, all such disposal functions are to be subject to Presidential regulations, with a view to uniformity of practice and conformity with sound policy. Property may be disposed of by donation under this section only in the event that it is shown to be unsalable and may be destroyed or otherwise disposed of only if not disposable by sale or donation.

Section 256 (a) provides a mandate to the heads of the executive agencies to release to the Procurement Division all usable or repairable equipment, materials, and supplies in their possession and surplus to the needs of the agency. That such a mandate alone is not enough, however, has been amply demonstrated. Human nature is acquisitive, and Government executives like other men, tend to acquire and hold such property beyond the point of need. Therefore the bill goes further, and directs the President to act in the event of failure to do so at the other levels of executive organization. All such property will be declared to the Procurement Division as surplus, thus providing a focal point of knowledge as to what is available and where.

Section 256 (b) after providing for repair, rehabilitation, and storage, if and as necessary, prescribes the general plan for the transfer of surpluses within the executive branch. Section 256 (b) thus gives first priority to needs within the Federal Government in the disposal of surplus property.

Section 156 (c) gives second priority in disposal of surpluses, to sale or lease to tax-supported organizations of the States, Territories, and other local political subdivisions of the United States. Both the transfers among the Federal agencies and the sales or leases to non-Federal governmental units would be subject to such regulations as the President may prescribe and would be made at values fixed by the Procurement Division.

Section 57 (a) provides for the disposal by sale or lease in the domestic market, to agencies of foreign governments, or in open foreign markets of surplus property not needed by any Federal agency or other tax-supported organization within the United States. Sales or leases in open foreign markets cannot be made unless the property cannot be practicably disposed of through foreign governments. Donation of surplus property to tax-supported organizations or eleemosynary institutions and finally disposal by destruction or other method is provided for in cases where the property cannot practicably be disposed of by sale or lease through any of the channels previously mentioned.

Section 257 (b) requires that sale, lease, donation, destruction, and any other disposition shall be subject to regulations prescribed by the President. It prescribes further that such regulations as to sale or lease shall include provision for publication of the times, places, quantities, terms, and condition of the proposed dispositions of such property, and require advertising for competitive bids except as the President determines that competitive sales or leases would be contrary to the public interest.

Section 258 provides that all proceeds from the transfer, sale, lease, or other disposition of surplus property acquired by the use of funds appropriated from the general funds of the Treasury, and not by law reimbursable, shall be returned to the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. The lack of clear legislation requiring that agencies receiving transferred surplus property pay for same from their available appropriations, and that such payments be returned to the Treasury, has unquestionably resulted in expenditure of many millions of dollars which need not have been expended, or at least were not authorized by Congress. The requirements of this section will in no way hamper any authorized Government activity, and will yield very large returns to the Treasury. The section as written carefully protects reimbursable funds and the capital funds of corporations against impairment.

Experience has shown that the over-all attainment of maximum production through the most efficient utilization of a minimum of facilities and material requires frequent and repeated intercompany and intracompany transfers of such facilities and materials from the work under cost-plus-a-fixed-fee contracts to do work under fixed-price contract and subcontract, and that prompt disposition be made of scrap, which is created in the course of such work and directed by the contracting officer. In furtherance of such ends and pursuant to advice of the Judge Advocate General, a contract clause is being inserted in cost-plus-a-fixed-fee contracts which authorizes such transfers when directed by the contracting officer, and provides that the proceeds thereof shall be applied in reduction of the cost of the work under the contract. The final sentence of section 258 is inserted to preserve the validity of such clauses insofar as they might be affected by the provisions of this section.

Section 259 is designed to promote more efficient use of Government-owned equipment and in the judgment of the committee would quite certainly produce important economies.

The most economical and efficient use of many items of equipment, particularly heavy machinery, tractors, road graders, and so forth, is secured only through fullest possible use of such items during their normal life period. Every general contractor knows this and fights against the waste of idle equipment against which the factors of depreciation and interest on investment are constantly running. Lack of fluidity of use with respect to Government-owned heavy equipment likewise causes duplication of investments and stocking by neighbor agencies, and excessive depreciation costs per unit of work performed. Limitations in existing legislation plainly discourage best utilization. Such limitations have been removed with respect to certain agencies such as the Forest Service and the Public Roads Administration. Section 259 would place all agencies upon an equal footing in this respect.

Section 260 is designed to be operative only in time of war. This section would extend the authority to sell or lease for war purposes any Government-owned equipment, materials, or supplies. As was pointed out in the committee report to H. R. 1294, much of the equipment (such as air-conditioning units and boilers and pumps of various kinds) is attached to and is a part of the buildings belonging to the Government and authority does not exist to permit its release. On numerous field projects of the Government which have been closed down for the duration of the war there are quantities of Government-owned fabricated steel, lumber, and other construction materials which it should be possible to pick up and put to use in the prosecution of the war.

Section 261 permits necessary freedom in delegation of authority by the President and the heads of executive agencies. It also authorizes the President to utilize the services and facilities of any unit of the executive branch in effectuating the purposes of this legislation.

Title III of the Budget and Accounting Act, 1921, established the office of the Comptroller General and defined his powers, duties, and functions. Nothing in the bill now reported should in any way affect that title, and section 262 removes any question on this point.

Section 263 specifically exempts from any effects of the proposed legislation certain provisions of law which the committee believes should be so exempted. Major exemptions are the authority of the Secretary of the Navy to dispose of vessels stricken from the Navy Register; that of the War and Navy Departments to interchange military stores, supplies, and equipment; the operations of the Maritime Commission and the War Shipping Administration under the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, as amended; the lend-lease programs, and the authorities of all agencies under the First and Second War Powers Acts. Except as specified in this section, the new legislation would modify or supersede all existing laws or parts of laws governing the disposition of surplus equipment, materials, and supplies to the extent of any conflict.

Section 263 concludes the amendment of the Budget and Accounting Act.

Section 2 of the bill defers application to the War and Navy Departments, Maritime Commission, and War Shipping Administration of the program of management and disposal under H. R. 2795 until 6 months after the termination of the war, or such earlier time as the Congress may designate, except to such extent as the heads of those agencies may find desirable.

WAR SURPLUSES

Various estimates have been made of the value of such property likely to be on hand at the termination of hostilities and it appears that such values may aggregate as much as $50,000,000,000.

Recognizing that legislation necessary to deal effectively with these war surpluses should be enacted only after most thorough study and investigation, and recognizing also the urgent necessity of enacting the general program of property management provided by H. R. 2795, the committee has added sections 3 and 4 to permit enactment of the general program and at the same time provide for the necessary study of the war surplus problem, and the development of legislation to deal comprehensively with that problem.

Section 3 would render the general program inoperative with respect to surplus war materials after the date upon which hostilities cease.

Section 4 provides for the creation of a joint congressional committee to make the required investigation of war surpluses and methods of disposition and finally report to the Congress not later than 6 months after the date of enactment of the proposed legislation with recommendations as to necessary additional legislation and administrative action. The committee is directed to include within the scope of its studies, real property acquired or held for war purposes as well as personal property. The committee is also directed to submit interim reports before the final report is made.

Section 5 of the bill is the customary authorization for such appropriations as the Congress may find necessary to effectuate its purposes. New appropriations will be necessary in the Executive Office of the President and the Treasury Department. It has been well demonstrated, however, by the partial controls already applied under Executive Order No. 9235 that such new appropriations will be offset manyfold by savings and direct returns to the Treasury resulting from sound management practices in this field.

Section 6 of the bill provides that this act may be cited as the "Surplus Personal Property Act of 1943."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH] 25 minutes.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to take a few moments to point out to the Members of this body that the work of our Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments is an excellent example of the new vigilance which has been evident in this Congress. Because this body has delegated its powers without realizing the extent of the powers that it was giving up or without realizing what a broad interpretation might be placed upon such delegations of power, our whole system of constitutional government has been threatened.

Our committee has been aware of the far-reaching implications of the bill as originally presented to us and we have made an effort to replace the undefined terminology of the original bill, H. R. 1610, with exact and carefully defined terms.

In a note which accompanied the original draft of the bill submitted to us the President stated its purpose as follows:

> To promote a more effective utilization of Government supplies and equipment both during and after the war.

We agreed with the President that legislation is needed for this purpose, but it would take very little imagination to see how this seemingly innocent legislation could by interpretation have been turned into one of the greatest grabs of power which the administration has ever made.

If the original bill had been enacted into law, it would practically have meant that we would have delegated to the executive branch the constitutional power of Congress to release or otherwise dispose of rights and property of the United States.

To give an example of the extent to which the proposed bill went, I call your attention to the language in section 220 of the original bill. It read:

> When the United States is in a state of war, and upon determination by the President that any land, building, appurtenant facilities, or fixtures, or any supplies, materials, equipment, or instruments owned by the Government and devoted to a particular use are urgently needed in the conduct of the war, are not subject to disposition as surplus property, and cannot otherwise be provided, he may authorize or direct the head of the agency having control thereof, in order to fulfill such need, to sell to nongovernmental agencies such property—

And so forth. Think what this would have meant—the President could have sold to nongovernmental agencies the land and improvements owned by the United States. The latest available report on how much the United States owns in land and improvements is the report of the Public Buildings Administration dated June 30, 1940, and even in this report the latest figures for the cost of improvements for War and Navy Departments are their 1937 figures. According to this report the United States owned 368,816,289 acres or almost one-fifth—19.38 percent—of all the land in the United States. This land and improvements cost us over $5,000,000,000. A few of the items included in this report are as follows:

These figures do not, however, present a true and accurate picture since they represent cost and not present-day values. It must be borne in mind that most of this acreage was acquired without cost.

Moreover, we have added a great deal since July 1, 1940, as a result of our war program. For instance, the War Department has acquired approximately 18,800,000 acres, of which 12,000,000 acres were already Government-owned lands transferred from other departments and the balance was purchased from private owners. Between July 1, 1940, and January 15, 1943, the Navy Department has purchased 813,382.59 acres, making an original deposit on them of $82,062,606.78.

In determining what property is owned by the United States it is also necessary to consider such agencies as the Defense Plant Corporation which has built, equipped, and now owns over 1,479 plants and facilities costing approximately $7,000,000,000, the disposition of which in itself will certainly present a complex problem at the close of the war.

Congress made some provision for surplus real property when it passed the act of August 27, 1935—Public, No. 351, Seventy-fourth Congress—which provides that whenever—

> Any real property located outside the District of Columbia, exclusive of military or naval reservations, is declared to be in excess of its needs by the Federal agency having control thereof, or by the President, on recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Director of Procurement with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is authorized (a) to assign or reassign to any Federal agency or agencies space therein, (b) to lease, or (c) to sell the same.

An example of property that could have been disposed of under the original H. R. 1610 was the Soldiers' Home. In the hearings before our committee—page 159—Mr. W. E. Reynolds, Commissioner of Public Buildings, stated, in answer to a question from me, that the Soldiers' Home could have been disposed of had the words "land and buildings" remained in the bill. The Soldiers' Home property is now valued at about $10,000,000 and its 500 acres includes 140 acres in buildings and lawns, 200 acres of woodland, and 160 acres in farm land.

Some of you may recall that last year there was some talk of this land being used as a housing project and the soldiers presented a petition to Congress protesting. This petition, which appears on page 998 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 3, 1942, as part of the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY], the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, is in part as follows:

> Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, within the last hour 3 aged veterans from the Soldiers' Home in Washington have furnished me a petition containing three and one-half pages of typewritten matter from occupants of the United States Soldiers' Home, now having some 1,400 members. They furnished me a petition signed by more than 900 of the occupants of the home and asked that I present to the Congress this, their petition.
> It is my information that this property was acquired by the United States Government as a soldiers' home about 90 years ago. It is now proposed by some groups of people in Washington that they take over this property for the purpose of converting it into a housing project under the emergency of national defense—another one of the many things that is being cloaked in the robes of national defense interests in order to do something that ought not be done.

It is my information that the title to this property contains a bar against that kind of procedure; that it contains a restrictive clause which provided that this should not be done. I am not asserting this as a fact, but that is my information from these gentlemen. That provision provides that if and when the property is converted to any other use than the use for which it was intended—that is, a home for disabled soldiers—the title shall revert to the heirs or the estate of the donor or grantor, as the case may have been. Of course, that is a complete statutory bar to taking it except with that condition.

This last paragraph of Mr. MAY's statement is in error. Title rests in the United States with no penalty restrictions involved. The Congress can dispose of the property which it now holds as trustee for the soldiers. Mr. MAY continued his statement as follows:

I simply present this petition on behalf of those old soldiers, with the hope that Members of the House will read it, and if and when there is a proposal in the Appropriations Committee or the House Military Affairs Committee, or any other committee of Congress, that due notice will be taken of the right of these dependent defenders of our country.

I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include this petition therewith.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The petition referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES SOLDIERS' HOME,
Washington, D. C., February 2, 1942.

To the Congress of the United States:

We, the undersigned, members of the United States Soldiers' Home, respectfully request your interest and protection in behalf of the thousands of veterans throughout the United States who are now entitled to the benefits of this home.

1. This home was established by an act of Congress approved March 3, 1851. By this act the Congress retained under its own jurisdiction the trusteeship for the old, infirm, and disabled soldiers of the Regular Army. The Regular Army veterans, therefore, have no one to look to for protection save the Congress and, in the 91 years of the existence of this home, they have never petitioned in vain. We know that we shall not be denied your protection now. For now we are under attack. Commercial interests are trying, under the guise of national defense, and civilian requirements, to get our property away from us and have proposed to send us "down the river" to land less desirable.

2. At this same time every effort is being made by the Park Commissioners to provide adequate parks and places of amusement for the residents of the District of Columbia. Now, what is this land but a public park? And it was the first such public park in the District of Columbia, maintained without one cent of cost to the taxpayer of either the District or the National Government. The entire cost of maintaining this home is paid by the enlisted men on the active list of the Regular Army. With the exception of the actual living quarters of the members in barracks and hospital, every bit of this land constitutes a public park of which there are all too few in the District. A glance at the record will show the following facilities of the reservation to be available to the public generally:

(a) Over 11 miles of surfaced roads within our gates open for traffic. We pay all costs of maintenance.

(b) Our gates are open 24 hours a day for public traffic, and over 99 percent of the traffic is by the public.

(c) Our grounds are extensively used as playgrounds for children, adults, their families, and friends.

(d) In winter we provide sledding hills for children and adults with protection against harm by our own local police.

(e) At Easter we provide egg-rolling lawns for crowds even greater than can be accommodated at the White House because we have a greater expanse of lawn.

(f) Throughout the entire summer we have evening band concerts attended by a large number of residents of the District of Columbia and visiting tourists.

(g) Sightseeing busses have the home on their itineraries and, recognizing it as one of the beauty spots of the District of Columbia, bring a large number of tourists here. Those who appreciate the beauty of the grand panoramic view of the entire city of Washington and the magnificent forest of trees have no wish to see these destroyed to make room for concrete buildings or commercial activities.

(h) We have built and maintain baseball fields for the children of the surrounding community, who use it freely, never realizing for a moment that this is not a public park. They think it is.

(i) Howard University is authorized to drill and train its Reserve Officers' Training Corps recruits on designated grounds.

(j) During the school year at least three grades, from kindergarten through high school, visit the home dairy and chicken farm weekly—frequently coming in busses accompanied by their teachers. College and university students and constituents of Members of Congress, particularly from rural districts, in the city on sightseeing tours, visit and inspect the modern dairy and thoroughbred Holstein herd of cattle, both from interest and educational purposes.

We are very proud of the historic honor which has been bestowed upon this home in the past when the soldiers of the Regular Army here were given the privilege of entertaining as a summer White House three Presidents of the United States, namely, Mr. Lincoln, Mr. Buchanan, and Mr. Hayes.

3. We not only live in this community and have our large group of friends here among the residential population, but as a group we contribute freely out of the meager compensation we receive to every charitable activity in Washington; in fact, we are among the first to be approached when the Red Cross, Community Chest, the Mile of Dimes, and others need help.

4. It has been estimated that there are now at least 2,000,000 veterans living all over the United States, who by their personal contributions have established their eligibility for membership in this home and who have a paid-up interest in it, even though they do not find it convenient to come here until they get old or need hospitalization. There may be added to this many more veterans of the present terrible combat. For the boys now in service there is nothing too good, and it is our hope that we may keep this home for them also. It may be stated here that of the number of resident members in this home at the present time, over 500 served in the World War; it is our firm belief that the citizens of the United States did not look upon us as parasites 20 years ago, and our brothers in service at this time should not look forward to being called parasites 20 years hence.

5. This home is our pride, the pride of the soldiers of the Regular Army. It has taken the contributions of several millions of them to build and maintain it, and we speak for each and every one of them when we ask you, as our duly constituted trustees, to protect our interests and insure that this institution shall remain forever intact, to be passed on to future old, infirm, and disabled members of the Regular Army in the same splendid condition, or even better, than when we received it from our predecessors.

6. In conclusion, we wish to go on record and assure you that we have the utmost confidence in the officers of this home, and we ask that before Congress ever even considers any proposition to destroy the effectiveness of this home, or its property, that no action be taken until after the officers of this home, its board of commissioners, and, above all, its governor, Maj. Gen. Frederick W. Coleman, have been heard from. General Coleman will speak well for us and for the millions of other veterans who have established an eligibility for this home; we know that he will leave nothing undone in our behalf.

Very respectfully yours,

BENJAMIN I. MOTLEY,
CHARLES M. ARMSTRONG,
HERMAN VEAN,
Committee, Representing Members,
United States Soldiers' Home,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. Chairman, under the terms of H. R. 1610, Congress would have been helpless in doing anything to prevent the sale, conversion, or other disposition of this property. Our committee wisely decided that Congress should not delegate the power to dispose of such vast amounts of land, buildings, appurtenant facilities, and so forth, and, therefore, the property covered in H. R. 2795 includes only supplies, materials, or equipment—not land, buildings, or their appurtenant facilities, or fixtures, or any gold or silver. I hope that when Congress does consider the question of surplus lands and buildings it will not forget the petition signed by more than 900 occupants of the Soldiers' Home.

The committee then turned its attention to determining how much the bill, H. R. 1610, would cover when limited to supplies, materials, and equipment. As you will note from the committee report, we were amazed to find that no one knows what property the United States Government owns. Although the Government owns billions of dollars worth of property, there are no complete records of such properties. None of the departments have unified inventories.

The only comprehensive list of property that I was able to obtain was the Standard Stock Catalog which lists almost 30,000 different items now handled by the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department, which procures or stores them. This alphabetical list ranges from abaci to zirconium-oxide, and includes almost anything you can think of, for example, aircraft, boats, and ships; animals; boilers, engines, tanks; chemicals; food; fuel; furniture; generators and motors; hardware; leather and leather goods; lumber and timber; machinery; metals; metal products; rubber and rubber goods; textile products; tools; vehicles, motortrucks, and so forth. However, this Standard Stock Catalog does not give amounts, so one has no idea of the value of the property now in the possession of the Government which might possibly become surplus. I cannot imagine a successful business of any kind being operated without any record of the properties owned by the business.

Everywhere our investigations showed poor management of properties. To illustrate how confused the records on property are, one agency's report to Congress on expenditures was $2,457,000,000 less than the figures the agency gave me in a confidential report on their purchases. Because of this lack of records, and also because of the lack of uniformity in the standards for the utilization of property, the committee revised the bill to require inventories and uniform standards in the utilization of equipment, materials, and supplies, and we centered the responsibility for this in the Bureau of the Budget.

We realize, of course, that the real problem of disposing of surpluses will come at the end of this war, when, in all probability, the Federal Government will have surplus stocks of almost unimaginable size. Naturally, the War and Navy Departments cannot—for military reasons—reveal inventories of their present equipment, and if they could it would be impossible to say how much of this equipment will be destroyed or used and how much of it will be surplus at the close of hostilities. This may depend upon how soon and how suddenly the war comes to a conclusion.

We may get some idea of probable surpluses at the end of this war by examining the surpluses at the end of World War No. 1. At that time about 100,000 items became surplus in the War Department alone. New goods which had cost us almost $4,000,000,000 had to be disposed of—to say nothing of old supplies. War Department sales of surpluses included such items as airplanes which had cost almost $70,000,000, wool costing $324,000,000, machinery and engineering equipment costing $29,000,000, and ships, barges, and floating equipment costing $26,000,000. At that time at least 7,000,000 new pairs of shoes were declared surplus. Over 5,500,000 blankets were declared surplus. The War Department offered over 10,000,000 pieces of underwear for sale. Food declared surplus included 25,000,000 cans of beans, 31,000,000 of corn, 24,000,000 cans of peas, 84,000,000 cans of tomatoes, 45,000,000 pounds of bacon, and 38,000,000 pounds of roast beef. Part of our surplus railroad equipment was sold to the French Government for over $77,000,000. On September 30, 1920, the Quartermaster General still had on hand 3,275,584 new woolen service coats, 885,620 new woolen overcoats, 2,028,924 new leather jerkins, 5,802,892 new flannel shirts, 1,671,540 new wool trousers, and so forth, to mention a few items.

The money we spent on materials and equipment in the last war was only a drop in the bucket compared to what we are spending in this war. Consider, for instance, how the number of airplanes in the last war compares with the number in this war. At the end of World War No. 1 we had in commission 16,952 planes of all kinds, including 5,198 produced for us by the Allies. We had manufactured 16,000 Liberty engines. In last Monday's—June 7—papers we read that aircraft production will reach a $20,000,000,000 total this year for transport and combat planes combined and is scheduled to exceed $30,000,000,000 next year. The O. W. I. predicted that we would have 500,000 airplanes in the United States by 1950. Some of these planes are now capable of carrying 60 tons of cargo.

Each day newspaper accounts refer to the equipment now being turned out in huge quantities for our armed forces. We read of jeeps that swim, climb, and fly, of sky trains turned out by a plant in Oklahoma, of a fleet of new destroyer escorts, of aircraft carriers produced on a mass scale by Mr. Kaiser, of a new air-cooled submarine costing over $6,000,000. In March of this year we turned out 146 ships aggregating 1,516,000 dead-weight tons. This would be the equivalent of 18,000,000 tons a year or 5 ships a day. We have shipped almost as many tanks abroad on a single transport as the total number in World War No. 1. Supplying armies overseas has required the shipment from the United States of cargo averaging 82 pounds per day per man. In the first year of this war we shipped overseas 10,474,923 measurement tons of Army freight, not including shipments to the Allies. If you recall some of the items in the Navy budget you will form some idea of the tremendous amount being spent on equipment—for example, over nine billion on shipbuilding.

The Government may have huge quantities of certain commodities on hand at the end of this war. We have already contracted for 1,370,000,000 pounds of aluminum. On April 6, the Office of the Rubber Director stated that the Government owned 720,000 tons of crude and scrap rubber, not including tires. An article in the Washington Post of April 14 says:

> The synthetic rubber program was reported ready for a production of 813,000 tons in 1943, one-third to be produced from alcohol.

We know, also, that the Government has been purchasing huge quantities of foods. The American Institute of Food Distribution reported in March that the canners were holding between 40 and 75 percent of their entire pack of canned fruits and vegetables for the Government. According to the press, the United States has agreed to purchase 2,700,000 tons of sugar from Cuba in 1943.

In short, the War and Navy Departments are buying now enough food, clothing, blankets, tents, cots, mess equipment, medical and dental supplies, and so forth, to equip an army of at least 10,000,000 men. The vast quantities of supplies we will have on hand if the war comes to a sudden conclusion are almost beyond human imagination. It is anticipated that the surpluses will be worth at least $50,000,000,000, as compared to $5,000,000,000 at the end of the last war. In all probability there will be a great deal still in production when hostilities cease.

The problem which will confront this body will be to see that as much of this material as possible is turned into useful material for peacetime purposes. We must get the jeeps, trucks, and tractors onto the farms or use them in road building, and we must get the planes and ships into commerce. We must dispose of these surpluses with the least possible loss as far as the Government is concerned, but in doing so we must not destroy private business. Dumping of such huge amounts of goods on the market might wreck our peacetime economy. In a way the Government will be going into business in competition with private industry and the results may be disastrous for our economic system. There will also be the question of what to do with Government-owned war plants after the war.

The committee realized the complexity of the problems connected with the disposal of war surpluses and felt that further investigation of this whole matter was necessary. For this reason H. R. 2795 does not provide for the sale of surplus war materials after hostilities cease, except that scrap or material worn beyond repair can be sold. War surpluses can be transferred or leased to other agencies.

Section 4 of the bill also provides for a joint congressional committee to make a further study of this whole matter of disposing of surplus war materials after hostilities cease. I want to make it very clear that I am in favor of this entire bill except section 4. I expect to move at the proper time to strike out section 4. That section would mean that the committee of which I am a member and of which the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] is a distinguished member, will, after working for 5 long months on this important subject of surpluses, pass the responsibility to others. I, for one, believe that it is the function of the regular committees of the House, especially in this case, to study this problem. I believe that we should not pass this responsibility on to others, and that we should not authorize the appropriation of $10,000 for a special committee. I agree with the sentiments expressed by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLARK] when he stated a few moments ago that we shall soon reach the point where we will be confronted with the necessity of appointing a committee to investigate the special investigating committees. Our committee has spent several months investigating this matter. The printed hearings have just now come in. The corrected and final hearings are the ones which contain on pages 159 and 160 a reference to the Soldiers' Home petition to this Congress asking it not to allow anything to happen that would let someone sell its land or buildings. I hope the Members will examine these final hearings.

Mr. CASE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHURCH. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE. Is the gentleman advocating that the surplus property of the War and Navy Departments be brought under the terms of the bill?

Mr. CHURCH. I am advocating the bill with the exception of section 4. Section 263 of the bill specifically exempts 16 different statutes, most of which deal with the War and Navy Departments. I have here a list of statutes which are either repealed or repealed in part—16 statutes are exempted in this bill; 19 statutes, I believe, if I am correct in the number, are not affected; 114 statutes modified or not affected.

Mr. CASE. I assume the gentleman has examined those statutes carefully. I would like to ask him what is the character of those statutes which are repealed; the general character of them.

Mr. CHURCH. They relate generally to the War and Navy Departments. I refer the gentleman to this final report of the committee.

Mr. Chairman, I have always contended that the Government should adopt more businesslike methods, particularly in the handling of Government property. Although this supposedly was the aim of the original bill, I could not approve it because it would have meant that Congress would be giving away its power to dispose of properties amounting to staggering figures. Our committee has limited the bill sufficiently to prevent any great loss of congressional control, and I believe the amended bill we reported adequately provides for handling ordinary surpluses so that we may have the most effective use of Government properties possible. Let us make this just the first step in a drive for more efficient, more economical government. It is time for us to apply the common sense rules of good business management for only by so doing can we make our system of government succeed.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I feel that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] should be complimented on the very excellent report he has made on the bill. I, of course, disagree with him as to section 4. The committee and our chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'LEARY], should be commended for a fine piece of work, the result of many, many hours of patient study and investigation. Our committee has taken an innocent looking bill, H. R. 1610, entitled "A bill to amend the Budget and Accounting Act of 1921," which was potentially a threat to congressional power, and has completely rewritten it after four committee reprints into a bill worthy of the name that H. R. 2795 carries, the Surplus Personal Property Act of 1943.

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENNETT].

Mr. BENNETT of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H. R. 2795. This bill is of particular interest to the citizens of my Sixth Missouri Congressional District by reason of the burning of Civilian Conservation Corps equipment, to which I will make further reference in a moment. The bill before us proposes to establish a Surplus War Property Committee of five Senators and five Representatives. This committee would be authorized to make a prompt and complete study of the types, qualities, values, location, and custody of war materials and other tangible property, real and personal, which may reasonably be expected to be in possession or control of any agency at the end of the war. The committee would be ordered to report to Congress the results of this investigation within 6 months, together with recommendations for legislation and administrative action to insure orderly disposition of the property. The committee which submits this bill to us for approval now has wisely said:

> Our problem is to see that these enormous supplies will be wisely disposed of. Otherwise they might be used to destroy private enterprise. Our soldiers, when they come back, will want to work in private industry, not at raking leaves for the Government. Unless these materials are wisely handled, there will be more millionaires made after the war than during it.

The report of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments also says:

> Efficient executive management of the Government's great and growing investment in equipment, materials, and supplies, and the control of the Congress over the use and disposition of such property are seriously handicapped by the lack of comprehensive legislation. The essential foundation of management standards in determining what quantities should be bought, and similar standards to govern utilization, are conspicuous by their absence. Although the accrual of surpluses is an inevitable feature of the active operations of government, the determination and release of such surpluses is entirely within the discretion of thousands of widely scattered executives. Good housekeeping in government obviously requires that surplus equipment, materials, and supplies be disposed of promptly and efficiently. Yet excepting statutes which deal with specific segments of the Government and with specific categories of property, the executive authority for disposal of surpluses is only implied, and the methods of disposal undefined.

I well remember that after the last war certain individuals with influence in the War Department were able to buy at bargain prices vast quantities of war materials which they sold at retail to the public. Every town had its "army store." Great fortunes were made at public expense. On the other hand, much of this material, clothing, airplanes, tools, and so forth, was simply piled up and burned. That got the Government into a bad habit which it has pursued to the present day. I sincerely hope that enactment of the bill before us will go a long way toward putting an end to such a practice.

C. C. C. FIRES IN MISSOURI

In April 1943 the people of Missouri were shocked by disclosures that abandoned equipment from five Civilian Conservation Corps camps in the Mark Twain National Forest, in Missouri, had been collected and burned under supervision of the local Forest Service director. It was burned, according to the director, because there was no legal way these wheelbarrows, saws, picks, shovels, plows, seed sowers, wheels, axes, and so forth, could be given away or sold to the farmers needing them except by untangling red tape over a period of 2 ensuing years.

When this incredible situation was called to my attention, I at once asked the Secretary of War, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Federal Security Administrator for a full report and investigation. After a lot of buck-passing between these officials, I got no information. Then I prevailed upon the Military Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives to conduct an investigation. An able investigator was sent to the scene of the bonfires and there interviewed witnesses and fixed responsibility.

To make a long but interesting story short, it developed that 2,100 items of property, much of it rationed and unobtainable by farmers in the area, had been destroyed. Much of this material was new. The estimated value of the total was between one and two thousand dollars. On May 20, 1943, after the committee had submitted its report, I received a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture admitting that an error had been made in disposition of the property and that action had been taken to prevent any further similar occurrences in his Department. This incident was hard on the morale of the people. They sent their sons to war. They bought Government bonds. They paid increased taxes. And they saw their Government waste their substance.

Today this House is considering legislation which involves not $2,000 worth of Government property but between fifty and one hundred million dollars worth. Certainly there is every reason to believe that the measure before us is an intelligent preliminary approach to a serious problem. Adoption of this measure, I believe, will be good insurance against future fires. We owe it to the people, as Members of Congress, to save their money and by so doing to preserve the soundness of our economic structure. There has been too much of this business of playing fast and loose with the other fellow's pocketbook.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. HALE. Mr. Chairman, I feel impelled to say a few kind words about the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. I had been led to understand that it was a committee which never, by any chance, had any bill referred to it and never had anything to do.

The legislation that has been referred to it is legislation of the utmost importance. The bill which is now being considered deals with only one aspect of a very great situation, namely, the disposition of surplus Government property, whether land or buildings, or personal property, whether during the war or after the war.

This bill is narrow in scope. It deals only with "property" which is defined as supplies and materials, or equipment, or any tangible property owned by the United States or by any Government-controlled corporation and does not include land or buildings or fixtures or appurtenant facilities, or gold or silver. We have in mind, of course, the Government-owned gold in Kentucky or the silver at West Point.

The committee made a very careful study of this whole legislative project and the field with which it attempts to deal. The really amazing thing to me about this bill is that it was not passed at least as early as the year 1812. It certainly ought to have been passed then, and every day of delay in passing a measure of this sort is regrettable, because throughout the history of the United States, even in its most modest beginning, the Government must have had some surplus property. The passage of this bill would eliminate dealing with this property by directives, by Executive orders, and by other pseudo-legislative devices, that were resorted to even in the last war. President Wilson, on December 3, 1918, issued an Executive order, No. 3019. I merely want to call attention to the fact that even in those crude days they could do pretty well piling up Executive orders. That Executive order dealt simply with the disposal of surplus property in the District of Columbia and it was not until 10 years later that Congress passed appropriate legislation dealing with property in the District of Columbia.

Those who have already spoken have emphasized many of the provisions of the bill and I do not desire to cover the same field. I would simply call attention to one or two of the provisions which seem to me important. I think that the inventory provisions, which are found in section 252, are extremely valuable. There was no preexisting legislative requirement for the Government to know anything about what the various bureaus and agencies actually owned.

I would also like to call attention to the provisions of section 263, about which there seems to have been some misunderstanding. In this section you will find enumerated 16 preexisting statutes. Those statutes are not repealed. They are left subsisting, with the exception that "all laws or parts of laws governing the disposition of surplus property or the disposal of proceeds therefrom are modified and superseded to the extent of any conflict with the provisions of this title."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? I dislike to interrupt his interesting presentation.

Mr. HALE. I gladly yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Is it not true that in including these 16 sections the committee and the gentleman chiefly among the members of the committee interrogated the Army and the Navy and the war-service agencies to be very certain that we had exempted any legislation that might otherwise authorize the disposition of any material essential to the prosecution of the war?

Mr. HALE. The gentleman from Mississippi is entirely correct, and we had the statutes searched very carefully for any legislation that might be affected by this bill or that would be undesirably affected by this bill, and the statutes which are being preserved by that exemption contained in section 263, are statutes which were deemed valuable by the War Department, the Navy Department, the Maritime Commission, and so on.

It appeared at the outset that the Secretary of the Navy was a little bit afraid that the Director of the Budget might sell a battleship as surplus material, and we did everything possible to allay any apprehensions that he might have upon that point.

I trust, Mr. Chairman, that this bill will obtain unanimous passage, because I think it deserves it.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. POULSON].

Mr. POULSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] stated that he was surprised to have such an important bill referred to this committee. It is my belief that not only the members of the committee but those who sponsored the bill did not realize how important it was; otherwise the bill never would have been referred to this committee. As it is, however, it turns out to be what I think is one of the most important pieces of legislation which will confront this session of Congress; in fact I think this is just the start of legislation along this line; this is really a preliminary step.

We have all heard the old adage that the time to repair the roof is in the summer—not on a day like this—rather than waiting until winter. The time to consider legislation such as contained in this bill is the present, not waiting until the time when it is necessary to dispose of these billions of dollars of surpluses—and I call attention to the fact that it is spelled with a "B" instead of "M"—it is billions we shall have to deal with in the matter of surpluses to be disposed of after the war.

When we opened these hearings we were like people drilling for a water well but discovering oil; in other words we soon began to realize the wide scope this bill covered; we were beginning to realize that this would affect the economy of the country, that it would offer the greatest opportunity for graft since the First World War; in fact I may say that we have already found many people who deal in second-hand commodities making inquiries as to the prospective disposition of this bill. I found it was an important bill and I consider section 4 very important. I take the same stand as does the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] that this bill is so important that the best men in Congress should be placed on this committee. I feel we have some of those men in our committee, but if the leaders on both the majority and minority sides consider that other Members should serve on it I feel that the job is big enough that they should approach the problem in that fashion. I will say, however, that this committee has spent 4 months of intensive study on the work and there are many Members on the committee who are qualified; so I do not have the same fears some of the Members do.

The thing that appalled me and something I never realized was that the Government set-up is so inadequate that although we have set up proper procedures for appropriation of money and the spending of money we have no machinery set up to dispose of such things as surpluses; in fact this is one of the reasons why they destroy materials, burn them, give them away, or abandon them, because the "red tape" they have to go through otherwise is so great they cannot dispose of it. Because of my profession I was particularly interested in the subject of inventories. I was absolutely surprised and shocked to find out that the Government had no check, did not have any type of inventory, did not know anything about the quantities of any particular commodities they had in any particular department.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POULSON. I yield.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Similar statements have been made before. I was just wondering if the Commodity Credit Corporation does not keep inventory of everything they have. I imagine some of the other departments do also.

Mr. POULSON. That is a separate corporation, I understand. I am speaking now of the general set-up of the principal departments. They have not operated at all on a business basis. I would be surprised if any business would be able to continue very long operating as the Government has in many of its business enterprises.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POULSON. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I did not get the import of the question asked by the gentlewoman from Illinois.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. My remark was that at a recent hearing before the Committee on Banking and Currency it was developed that the Commodity Credit Corporation kept a complete inventory of its assets and liabilities every year, and I wondered if that situation did not exist also in the case of other corporations of the Government.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me to answer the gentlewoman's question?

Mr. POULSON. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. That may be true of corporations; unfortunately it is not true of the Government; and, mind you, this has to do with governmental inventories rather than the inventories of corporations. I believe that answers the gentlewoman's question.

Mr. POULSON. We believe this bill will correct that situation.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a correction of the record?

Mr. POULSON. I yield.

Mr. CHURCH. The gentleman from Mississippi realizes that the effect of this bill is on the administrative properties which is different from the inventories of Government corporations. Is not that right?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Unquestionably, but the gentlewoman from Illinois asked about the inventory of property of the Surplus Commodities Corporation and I specifically stated that insofar as the corporation is concerned they had their inventory, but this provides for an inventory of administrative corporations, and not real-estate corporations.

Mr. POULSON. This bill provides for the handling of surplus Government property. This bill can definitely be stated as being in two parts, one dependent upon the other. The main bill sets up the machinery and procedure by which we may dispose of surpluses, such as we had today in the case of the W. P. A. and the C. C. C., without all the red tape which has heretofore been necessary. This brings a little more efficiency into governmental procedure. This legislation does not purport to establish procedure for post-war disposal of surpluses. We are contemplating future legislation to take care of that problem.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POULSON. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. With respect to the investigation of this committee as to real estate, the gentleman was most attentive and most helpful in the hearings. I would like to ask the gentleman if this is not a correct statement with reference to the inquiries of the committee as to Government real estate: If there was one subject that the committee pursued most diligently without ascertaining full information it was as to the various kinds of real estate, including hotels and other institutions, bought by the war agencies since this war began.

Mr. POULSON. That is correct.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. And if we need an investigation of any one thing, that is the one we need it on.

Mr. POULSON. That is correct.

Mr. Chairman, I consider that section 4 is just as important as the other parts of the bill. I feel that the integrity of the leadership of this House is such that they will appoint the best men and in doing so they will look over the present committee. If they feel that the ability is there, which I know it is, they will be fair in their discretion and I do not feel that we should use our selfish motives in opposing such a wise bill with so much importance attached to it.

Mr. BISHOP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POULSON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BISHOP. Did the gentleman have it called to his attention about the machinery and equipment that is now stored from the C. C. C. camps, also from the N. Y. A., and also from the W. P. A.?

Mr. POULSON. Yes.

Mr. BISHOP. That stuff at the present time is being burned?

Mr. POULSON. That is right. We do not have any machinery set up to dispose of that in any fashion satisfactory to the department heads. They all have a certain responsibility that makes them hesitant to dispose of it.

Mr. BISHOP. In other words, this committee then would look into that phase of the matter?

Mr. POULSON. Yes.

Mr. STEFAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POULSON. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. Did I understand the gentleman to agree with the statement that some property is being burned at this time?

Mr. POULSON. The subject was brought up by the gentleman from Iowa that he knew of lumber being burned, and it was brought out in the committee by our very distinguished ranking Member that in his territory they burned wood and many other materials because they did not have any method of disposing of it. That was the answer given to us by some of the department heads.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER].

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, the question of inventories on the part of governmental departments is extremely important. Very few of the membership are aware of the fact that there is no inventory kept of Government property. It seems amazing that the biggest business in the world should not know exactly how much property it owns, but that is the condition of the United States Government today. This bill is merely an approach to this great problem of surplus commodities. As has been pointed out, some $50,000,000,000 is involved and this committee is endeavoring to approach the problem through the present bill.

I have been asked by any number of Members, "Are you for this bill"? Of course we are for the bill. We believe it is the first genuine effort that has been made to approach this problem in a sensible, businesslike manner. I am sure I voice the opinion of the minority members of the committee when I say that we are definitely for the passage of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MANASCO].

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Chairman, today I find that the House is just about as anxious to know something about how this bill got to the floor as we were with reference to how it got to our committee. When the bill was first introduced, it was a very interesting piece of legislation, and I refer to the original H. R. 1610. I think my friend, Mr. Scott, representing the Budget Bureau, who is probably listening now, will tell you that the Committee on Executive Expenditures is probably one of the hardest committees to convince that the Budget Bureau's position is right that they have been before in the House. When you look over on the Democratic side you find the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON], who can ask about as many questions as anybody and when you get over to the Republican side you find the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] who can ask many questions and makes a few ironic observations from time to time; the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH], do the same.

I do not think that the House need fear this legislation because it certainly has been gone into very capably and very ably by Members on both sides of the House. There has been absolutely no partisanship. At times we were a little bit nasty with the Budget Bureau and sometimes I joined in those bitter attacks.

We were utterly amazed when we started the hearings to find out that there is no agency in the Government that knows how many desks, how many typewriters, how many pencils, how much of any material we have. We were amazed to find that the surpluses that the Government owns are being disposed of under about 134 statutes and the Lord knows how many Executive orders. As a matter of fact the surplus of between $25,000,000 and $40,000,000 of W. P. A. material needs to be disposed of immediately. But it takes legislation to enable the Government through the Procurement Division to dispose of that property.

I have been somewhat interested in the distribution of the war surpluses. Of course, we all recognize the necessity of legislation to place in a central agency the distribution of administrative supplies, but enormous war supplies will be on hand at the end of this war. We hope we may have more than is necessary. Those war supplies will be so enormous that we could absolutely destroy private enterprise if we did not place every safeguard around the distribution of those supplies. It might interest you to know that at the end of the last war we had $7,000,000,000 worth of surplus war material. At the end of this war it is estimated we will have anywhere from fifty to one hundred billion dollars worth of surplus war materials. We will probably have 150,000 airplane engines, we will have anywhere from 90,000 to 160,000 planes, and, of course, if we dump those planes on the market there would be quite a few people who could make millions of dollars out of it. This dumping would retard your aviation industry.

The creation of an organization to dispose of this enormous surplus after the cessation of hostilities will be a stupendous task. We have left room for that to be done, because we think more study should be given. We will have at least 10,000,000 men discharged from the Army. There will be at least 30,000,000 men who will be thrown out of work the day the armistice is declared. Those men will want to go into private industry and make an honest living. They will not want to rake leaves. They will not want to work under W. P. A. or some of these dreamy schemes that some of our planners have now. They want to come back to the American way of life.

I think it is most important that we protect our private enterprise and see that these men are given jobs in private enterprise. Of course, if it is necessary to absorb some of the people on public works, we will be compelled to do it, but the more that can be absorbed by private industry the better it will be for our way of life, for the workers, and for the taxpayers.

After the last war industry was able to speedily convert war-production plants to production for the civilian market, due to the fact that they were able to set aside large capital reserves out of the profits. That is something we should remember. In this war our industry is not going to have much set aside in the way of surplus to reconvert to peacetime production, because we are taking it away from it in taxes. After taxes most corporations will have less than one-tenth of the capital they had to convert to civilian production after the last war. Credits from banks will be hard to obtain due to the heavier investment in Government securities.

On November 11, 1918, war contractors held unfilled contracts in the sum of $7,500,000,000. At the end of this war the unfilled contracts will be between $75,000,000,000 and $100,000,000,000. A much larger proportion of industry is engaged in the production of war materials in this war than during the last war. This will make the problem of reconversion doubly difficult.

In disposing of the enormous surplus of war materials there will be plenty of room for corruption, fraud, and sharp practice. It will be possible, unless we surround the disposition of the surplus war material with every precaution, for the unscrupulous, the unethical, to make enormous profits. We can have more millionaires after the war is over just as easily as we can have them during the war. I am sure that today there are many of these unscrupulous characters in Washington with their eyes on this enormous surplus. We do not want it to fall into those hands, because it will have two bad effects. One of them is, it will be cheating the taxpayers out of a fair return on their investment, and the other is that it will be cheating us all when we destroy the very business that has made America great.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANASCO. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WRIGHT. I have just inquired of the chairman of the committee whether or not this bill as it is drawn will be broad enough to allow the Commodity Credit Corporation to dump surpluses of cotton and other materials.

Mr. MANASCO. I may say to the gentleman that in the committee I brought up that question because I am interested in cotton, and I found that under the original bill, H. R. 1610, the Government could have sold everything from a battleship to a toothpick, including all the supplies in the different corporations; so we specifically exempted all Government-owned corporations from the sale of any surplus except administrative equipment, such as desks, typewriters, pencils, and so forth.

Mr. WRIGHT. Where do you do this?

Mr. MANASCO. It is on page 4, line 19, subsection (b) of section 253:

> In the case of any corporation owned or controlled by the United States the provisions of this title shall apply only in respect of materials, supplies, and equipment held or used by such corporation for administrative purposes.

This excepts all the property owned by the Metals Reserve Company, the Defense Plant Corporation, and the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. WRIGHT. That would include surplus crops also, in the opinion of the gentleman?

Mr. MANASCO. We were afraid they might decide to try to sell some cotton and wheat, contrary to the will of Congress, so to keep them from doing this we put in this provision.

Mr. J. LEROY JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANASCO. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. J. LEROY JOHNSON. I do not see how your bill can prevent a terrific drop in prices. You are going to have all these goods on your hands. How are you going to prevent the purchase of the goods at unconscionable prices?

Mr. MANASCO. That is the reason we want further study. We want the recommendation of everybody.

It may be interesting to know that I introduced a bill, H. R. 2498, that would create a board composed of certain Cabinet officers and members of industry and representatives of the consuming public to protect our economy after this war is over. One of the most important things to keep in mind is that we can destroy the very Government we are fighting today to preserve by dumping these enormous surpluses without proper safeguards.

Mr. J. LEROY JOHNSON. Is it the gentleman's idea that you are creating here the machinery that will control the drop in prices, so that prices will not go clear down?

Mr. MANASCO. It would be humanly impossible to pass any legislation that would safeguard every situation, but we are trying to have a general control that will protect the consuming public as well as the taxpayers and the Government.

Mr. COFFEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. MANASCO. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. COFFEE. Is anything done in this bill to extend the purview of the bill to the Alien Property Custodian?

Mr. MANASCO. The Alien Property Custodian, as I understand, will probably not be covered by the provisions of this bill.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANASCO. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. This bill covers only the property owned by the United States. The property of the Alien Property Custodian is not owned by the United States but is held in trust by him. It is not embraced in the terms of this bill.

Mr. COFFEE. I did not think that was strictly under the supervision of the committee or came within its jurisdiction.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It is not within the terms of this bill.

Mr. COFFEE. I recall that at the end of the last war there was a scandal of about $1,500,000,000 very badly handled by the then Alien Property Custodian. I do not want to see a repetition of it. I am advised there will be seven billions of alien property sequestered by us in this war. We must be vigilant that it be administered with scrupulous honesty and fairness.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANASCO. Yes.

Mr. RABAUT. I commend the gentleman for the very fine statement he has made to the House about the bill.

Mr. MANASCO. I thank the gentleman. It may be advisable for the Government to sell some of the surplus property to the manufacturer. This procedure would enable the manufacturer to stay in business after the war, and not be consumed with the fear of having no property to sell or anything of that kind. And when this manufacturer does not have enough cash to acquire the surplus material, it might be to the best interest of our country to extend long-term credit.

Mr. Chairman, I think this question is one of the most serious questions affecting us at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in behalf of the Members upon my side of the aisle that all but one of the Members were practically present at all of the hearings. The one Member to whom I refer was unavoidably absent, being engaged on another important committee. I presume that the other side of the House might have occasion to state the same reason for any of their absentees. But I may say that the Republicans were at practically all of the committee hearings. I say that in justice to these new Members. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE], who was so attentive, has spoken today. Permit me to talk a little about one of the gentlemen from Pennsylvania [Mr. GILLETTE], a modest member of that committee, who attended to his duties faithfully. I often find myself that I can entertain best by listening. He listened, and I think it is due him to have that statement made, because he has not, as a new Member, taken any part in the discussion today, which, of course, he could do if he wished.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM. Speaking for the Pennsylvania delegation, I assure the gentleman from Massachusetts, that we very much appreciate his expression in respect to our colleague [Mr. GILLETTE]. He is all that the gentleman has described, modest, retiring, but we have found him to be one of the solid, substantial Members of our delegation, who always contributes someting worth while.

Mr. GIFFORD. In politics modesty, of course, is always timely. I have not been very modest myself, but still it is a virtue that I greatly admire.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. The gentleman, in spite of all of his words, is usually modest. In discussing the work of this committee, he has not given to the public the information that I have received in private from his colleagues, and that is respecting the distinguished and painstaking work that the gentleman from Massachusetts, the ranking member of the committee, has contributed to this difficult subject.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, I always give painstaking work, and in fact my work often inflicts pain. The gentleman from California said that I am sometimes sarcastic. As an old high-school teacher I might suggest that there is not a word of sarcasm in all of these hearings. There may be some ironical statements, but they are vastly different. I think you should agree with that. Perhaps I may well continue with this explanation. I will do so but agree to delete it from the RECORD. At least it may be entertaining and I may hope profitable.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes. I did not want to consume too much time in my presentation in chief. For that reason I probably did not answer some of the inquiries as fully as I would like. I take this time now to answer some questions that were propounded during the debate, and some questions that have been asked privately during the progress of the debate on the floor. The question was asked whether the Commodity Credit Corporation would come under the terms of this bill. For two reasons it would not. It would not in the first place, under the definition of surplus property. That corporation would be organized for disposing of surplus property, and that is its function. That would be outside of the definition of surplus property. In the next place in all property of any corporation, including the Commodity Credit or any other corporation organized under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, only administrative property, like desks, typewriters, and so forth is within the terms of the bill.

A question was asked by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] to which I wanted to respond more at length, whether or not in the event the rental exceeded the cost of repairs, the excess would be covered in the general funds of the Treasury. I might have said to him as I now say that the rental would not only cover the repairs, but would cover maintenance, operation, depreciation and management, but the information of the committee generally was that that would be less than the rental, but remembering that members of the committee want to protect that one thing among others, this committee stood for turning the money back into the Treasury, as miscellaneous receipts. We will offer an amendment to make that provision more definite.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I would like to express my appreciation of what he has said.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The gentleman from Iowa has asked about the disposition of lumber not used. Under section 260 of this bill, if there is any property anywhere at any time such as that embraced in the so-called Lanham act, which we passed in the House—it has never passed the other body—any lumber or cement or any material on any project where the construction has been stopped, that can be made available to the Government without purchase or reduplicating. I have already made answer to the inquiry respecting the Alien Property Custodian. That property is in trust and it is not within the terms of this act.

Mr. Chairman, someone rather questioned the wisdom of this committee and the investigation with respect to land. As already has been stated during this debate, the millions and hundreds of millions of dollars invested in lands for war purposes is an important matter.

This special committee which we have recommended the Congress to appoint will not be a roving committee. It will not be a committee to hold hearings or conduct junkets throughout the country. There is only $10,000 available to that proposed committee. That will be a working committee. When we send down to one department after the other in an effort to find out how many acres of land, how many hotels, how many buildings there are and have one department say they do not know and that the other department does, we authorize a subpena here to give the special committee that definite information. In other words, if there is one thing we want to know about and with millions and millions of dollars invested in it, it is real prpperty as well as all other types of property. It is not contemplated that there will be a delay until after the war before legislation is passed for the disposition of surplus war materials or property. That committee may make interim reports. Whenever legislation is needed at any time it should be reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, by the Committee on Expenditures or any other committee having jurisdiction, but the final report of the special committee must be submitted in 6 months. This resolution gives that committee power to subpena and power to appoint an investigator and it protects the Treasury.

May I say in conclusion that I have had some experience with investigating committees. I believe I have a unique record of having been chairman of two successive committees in two Congresses, that did a great deal of work and did not spend a cent of money that was appropriated to them.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. There were two questions I wanted to ask. Does the bill contain anything pertaining to the war minerals and metals deposits which the Government has supplied which may be surplus?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. During the progress of the hearings it developed that any such minerals are owned by corporations. They are not within the terms of this bill. They will have to be disposed of by subsequent legislation or by their charters.

Mr. MURDOCK. Secondly, with regard to land where the Government has used its own public domain for bombing purposes, or war training, and that sort of thing, has there been any arrangement made about the restoration of such land to its original uses and users?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Lands, buildings, or other appurtenant facilities or fixtures are expressly reserved for further legislation and are not included in the terms of this bill. The pressing necessity for this bill is the discontinuance of W. P. A., with about $20,000,000 worth of property; the property of the N. Y. A. now piled up; and the Director of the Budget and the Assistant Secretary of War say they are eliminating 50,000 or 60,000 employees, and that will eliminate administrative property that ought to be disposed of.

Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

The Members will notice that the first section of this bill goes to the middle of page 15. Inasmuch as the bill has been analyzed section by section, I take the liberty, after conferring with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD], of asking unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be printed in the RECORD at this point and that amendments to any section of the bill be in order at this time.

Mr. GIFFORD. As far as that is concerned, I hope there will be no objection to the request.

Mr. LANHAM. Reserving the right to object, and I do not intend to object, I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry, whether or not any amendment is pending at the Clerk's desk?

Mr. GIFFORD. I understand that any amendment can be offered to any portion of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the unanimous-consent request amendments would be in order to any part of the bill.

Is there objection tc the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Budget and Accounting Act, 1921 (42 Stat. 20), is amended by inserting at the end of title II thereof (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 31, secs. 11 to 24, inclusive) the following:

"TITLE II-A—UTILIZATION AND DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY

"SEC. 251. As used in this title the term—

"(a) 'Agency' means any executive department, independent commission, board, bureau, office, agency, or other establishment of the Government, including any independent regulatory commission or board and any corporation owned or controlled by the United States, but does not include the legislative branch of the Government, the Supreme Court of the United States, or the municipal government of the District of Columbia.

"(b) 'Administrative unit' means any bureau, office, or similar administrative unit within any agency.

"(c) 'Property' means any supplies, materials, or equipment or any tangible property owned by the United States or by any corporation owned or controlled by the United States, but does not include any land, buildings, or their appurtenant facilities or fixtures or any gold or silver.

"(d) 'Surplus property' means any property which, pursuant to this title, is determined to be surplus to the function, activity, or project in connection with which it was acquired or accrued.

"(e) 'Director' means the Director of the Bureau of the Budget.

"(f) 'Procurement Division' means the Procurement Division in the Department of the Treasury.

"(g) 'Tax-supported organization' means any unit or instrumentality of government, or any scientific, literary, educational, or public health or welfare organization, which is supported in whole or in part through the use of funds derived from taxation by—

"(1) The United States or the District of Columbia;

"(2) Any Territory or possession of the United States or any subdivision of any such Territory or possession; or

"(3) Any State or any subdivision thereof; but such term does not include any agency (as defined in par. (a)).

"SEC. 252. In order to carry out the purposes of this title—

"(a) The head of each agency shall (1) establish and currently maintain, in such form as the Director may approve, an inventory of such classes or items of property in the possession or under the control of the agency, as the Director may designate; (2) submit to the Director such estimates of property needed, and such reports in relation thereto, as the Director may deem necessary; and (3) at the close of each fiscal year submit to the Director such report as he may require of all transfers and dispositions of property under this title (excluding sec. 263) during such fiscal year and of the disposal of the proceeds.

"(b) The Director shall (1) periodically survey property in the possession or under the control of each agency and the utilization thereof, (2) establish appropriate standards for the stocking and utilization of property, (3) require the fullest practicable utilization of surplus property by agencies in order to avoid unnecessary commercial purchases, and (4) submit to the Congress as soon as practicable after the close of each fiscal year a consolidated report of all operations under this title.

"SEC. 253. (a) No agency or administrative unit shall transfer or sell, donate, destroy, or otherwise dispose of surplus property in the possession or under the control of such agency or administrative unit except as provided in this title or in any provision of law referred to in section 263.

"(b) In the case of any corporation owned or controlled by the United States the provisions of this title shall apply only in respect of materials, supplies, and equipment held or used by such corporation for administrative purposes.

"SEC. 254. (a) Whenever an administrative unit of an agency is responsible for the expenditure of more than one appropriation, allocation, or fund, the head of such agency may transfer any usable or repairable property from the service of one such appropriation, allocation, or fund to the service of another such appropriation, allocation, or fund upon (1) his determination that such property is surplus to the needs of the one and is needed for the purposes of the other, (2) his appraisal of the value of the property to be so transferred, and (3) payment of such appraised value from the receiving appropriation, allocation, or fund and disposal of the proceeds in accordance with the provisions of section 258.

"(b) Whenever an agency has established and is maintaining, at a standard acceptable to the Director, administrative controls over property under an office or employee designated for the purpose, the head of such agency may transfer any usable or repairable property from one administrative unit of the agency to another such unit upon compliance with clauses (1), (2), and (3) of subsection (a) of this section.

"SEC. 255. Any agency may sell (1) any property which is damaged or worn beyond economical repair; (2) any waste, salvage, scrap, or other comparable items; or (3) any products of industrial, research, agricultural, or livestock operations or of any public works construction or maintenance project carried on by such agency. If any such property is of no commercial value or if the cost of sale thereof would exceed the estimated proceeds, it may be donated to tax-supported organizations or eleemosynary institutions. Any such property which is not practicably saleable and cannot be beneficially utilized by donation to any tax-supported organization or any eleemosynary institution shall be destroyed or otherwise disposed of. The sale, donation, destruction, or other disposition of any property under this section shall be subject to such regulations as the President may prescribe.

"SEC. 256. (a) Whenever the President or the head of any agency determines that any usable or repairable property under the control or in the possession of the agency is surplus to the needs of such agency or any administrative unit thereof in the performance of any functions, activities, or projects in connection with which the property was acquired or accrued, the President or the head of the agency, as the case may be, shall, unless such property is transferred under section 254, or is disposed of under section 255, declare such property to the Procurement Division as surplus.

"(b) Any property declared to the Procurement Division as surplus under subsection (a) which is needed by any of the agencies or administrative units in the prosecution of their functions, activities, or projects shall be repaired or rehabilitated as found necessary and economical and be transferred (or be held in storage pending transfer) by or under the direction of the Procurement Division to such agencies or administrative units as may be designated by the Director at values fixed by the Procurement Division.

"(c) Any property declared to the Procurement Division as surplus under subsection (a) which the Director determines is not needed by any of the agencies or administrative units in the prosecution of their functions, activities, or projects shall be repaired or rehabilitated as found necessary and economical and be sold or leased (or be held in storage pending sale or lease) by or under the direction of the Procurement Division to tax-supported organizations at prices or rates fixed by the Procurement Division.

"(d) Transfers, sales, and leases of property under subsections (b) and (c) of this section shall be pursuant to such regulations as the President may prescribe.

"SEC. 257. (a) Any property declared to the Procurement Division as surplus under section 256 (a) which cannot practicably be disposed of under section 256 (b) or (c) shall be repaired or rehabilitated as found necessary and economical and be disposed of (or be held in storage pending disposition) by or under the direction of the Procurement Division as follows:

"(1) By sale or lease in the domestic market.

"(2) By sale or lease to agencies of foreign governments.

"(3) By sale or lease in foreign markets, but only if such property cannot practicably be disposed of under paragraph (2).

"(4) By donation to tax-supported organizations or eleemosynary institutions, by destruction, or by such other method as is determined to be feasible; but property shall be disposed of under this paragraph only if it cannot practicably be disposed of by sale or lease under any of the preceding paragraphs.

"(b) The sale, lease, donation, destruction, or other disposition of property under this section shall be in accordance with regulations prescribed by the President. The regulations prescribed under this subsection which relate to the sale or lease of property shall include provisions requiring publication of the times, places, quantities, and terms and conditions of the proposed dispositions of such property, and requiring advertising for competitive bids except in such cases and with respect to such property as the President determines that sales or leases by competitive bids would be contrary to the public interest.

"SEC. 258. Where property transferred or disposed of under any provisions of this title except section 259 has been acquired by the use of funds appropriated from the general fund of the Treasury and such appropriated funds are not by law reimbursable from assessment, tax, or other revenue, all proceeds derived from the transfer or sale, lease, or other disposition thereof shall be deposited and covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. Where property transferred or disposed of under any provisions of this title except section 259 has been acquired by the use of funds other than those appropriated from the general fund of the Treasury or by the use of funds appropriated from the general fund of the Treasury which are by law reimbursable from assessment, tax, or other revenue, all expenses incurred in respect of such transfer or disposition shall be deducted from the proceeds (if any), the funds bearing such expenses reimbursed in like amount, and the balance of the proceeds (if any) credited to the reimbursable fund or appropriation or paid to the agency releasing the property. This section shall not apply to the sale with the approval of a duly authorized representative of the agency concerned of any property in the custody of a contractor or subcontractor under a cost-plus-a-fixed-fee contract or subcontract which authorizes the crediting of the proceeds of such sale on the cost of the work described in such contract or subcontract.

"SEC. 259. Whenever the Director shall determine it to be efficient or economical, he may designate specific classes of equipment in the possession or control of various agencies and administrative units which may be made available for full use for definite periods of time by other agencies or administrative units or for the prosecution of functions, activities, or projects other than those for which said equipment was acquired within an agency or administrative unit, at a rental rate based on a schedule promulgated by the Director. The rental schedule shall be based on the actual or estimated cost of operation, repair, maintenance, depreciation, and equipment management control. Such use of equipment shall be with the consent of the agency having possession or control thereof and only in connection with a function, activity, or project for which an appropriation, allocation, or fund for the rental, repair, maintenance, and operation of such equipment is available. All proceeds from the rental of equipment under this section shall be credited to the current appropriation, allocation, or fund available to the rentor agency or administrative unit for operation, maintenance, repair, or replacement of the equipment, or in the absence of such an appropriation, allocation, or fund, shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

"SEC. 260. When the United States is in a state of war, and upon determination by the President that any equipment, materials, or supplies devoted to a particular use are urgently needed by some nongovernmental agency in connection with the prosecution of the war, are not subject to disposition as surplus, and cannot otherwise be obtained by such nongovernmental agency, the President may authorize or direct the head of the agency having control thereof, in order to fulfill such need, to sell to nongovernmental agencies such equipment, materials, or supplies for cash at a price not less than the appraised value thereof, or to lease or rent such property at commercial rates or such other rates as will fully compensate the Government.

"SEC. 261. All powers vested in the President or in the head of an agency by this title may be exercised by a representative or representatives designated for the purpose and the President may utilize the services and facilities of any agency in effectuating the purposes of this title.

"SEC. 262. Nothing in this title shall be construed as modifying any of the provisions of title III of this act.

"SEC. 263. (a) The provisions of this title shall not modify or in any way affect the following provisions of law:

"(1) Section 5 of the act approved March 3, 1883 (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 34, sec. 492), authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to sell vessels stricken from the Navy register;

SEC. 2. During the continuance of the present war and for 6 months after the termination of the war, or until such earlier time as the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President may designate, sections 252, 253, 254, 256, or 260 of the Budget and Accounting Act, 1921, as amended by this act, shall not apply, except in the discretion of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Chairman of the United States Maritime Commission, or the Administrator of the War Shipping Administration, as the case may be, to any property in the possession or under the control of the War Department, the Department of the Navy, the United States Maritime Commission, the War Shipping Administration, or any administrative unit (as defined in sec. 251 of such act, as amended) of either such Department, Commission, or Administration which (1) was acquired from funds made available by appropriation or otherwise for military purposes, or (2) is being held or utilized for military purposes.

SEC. 3. (a) After the date on which the President proclaims that the hostilities of the present war have ceased, no war materials shall be disposed of under section 256 (c) or 257 of title II–A of the Budget and Accounting Act, 1921, as amended, except as may be provided by law enacted after the date of enactment of this act.

(b) As used in this section and in section 4 "war materials" means any tangible property owned by the United States or by any corporation owned or controlled by the United States which was acquired or is held or utilized for military purposes, but does not include any land, buildings, or their appurtenant facilities or fixtures or any gold or silver.

SEC. 4. (a) There is hereby established a Surplus War Property Committee (hereinafter referred to as the "committee") to be composed of five Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and five Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker. A vacancy in the committee shall be filled in the same manner as the original selection was made. The committee shall elect a chairman from among its members.

(b) It shall be the duty of the committee to undertake promptly a full and complete study and investigation of the types, quantities, values, location, and custody of war materials and other tangible property, both real and personal, acquired, held, or utilized for military purposes, which may reasonably be expected to be in the possession or under the control of any agency (as defined in sec. 251 of the Budget and Accounting Act, 1921, as amended by this act) at the time of cessation of hostilities in the present war, and no longer needed for such purposes. The committee shall report to the Senate and the House of Representatives at the earliest practicable date, but not later than 6 months after the date of enactment of this act, the results of its study, together with its recommendations as to any necessary additional legislation and administrative action to insure the orderly disposition of such property. If the Senate, the House of Representatives, or both, are in recess or have adjourned the report shall be made to the Secretary of the Senate, the Clerk of the House of Representatives, or both, as the case may be. The committee shall make such interim reports as it deems advisable.

(c) The committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places, to employ such experts and such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The provisions of sections 102 to 104, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 2, secs. 192–194, inclusive), shall apply in case of any failure of any witness to comply with any subpena, or to testify when summoned under the authority of this section

(d) The committee is authorized to utilize the services, information, facilities, and personnel of the departments and agencies of the Government.

(e) All authority conferred in this section shall terminate upon submission of the committee's final report.

(f) The expenses of the committee, not to exceed $10,000, shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, upon vouchers signed by the chairman.

SEC. 5. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this act and the purposes of title II–A of the Budget and Accounting Act, 1921, as amended by this act.

SEC. 6. This act may be cited as the "Surplus Personal Property Act of 1943."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WHITTINGTON: Insert at the end of line 19, page 10, after striking out the period and inserting a colon, the following: "Provided, That all transactions under this section shall be reported at least quarterly to the Director, and whenever the proceeds so reported are found by him to exceed the amounts necessary for the repair, maintenance, and management of the equipment rented, such excess proceeds shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, in support of that amendment I will simply say it is offered after conferring with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] and Members on both sides, in response to the suggestion to make certain that the views of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] are embraced in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows.

Amendment offered by Mr. CHURCH: On page 16, line 21, strike out all of section 4.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, I do not expect to take much of the time of the committee on this amendment. In my main statement awhile ago I called attention to the fact that I was very much in favor of this bill. At the same time I am opposed to section 4 remaining in the bill. Section 4 will take from our Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments its duties, the work it has been doing and should do for the next several months.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHURCH. I gladly yield to the distinguished gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LANHAM. In my judgment the creation of this committee would slow up or at least retard a part of the proper investigation of the various matters to which the section pertains.

The Military Affairs Committee would naturally be more familiar with the situation as it affects the War Department; the Naval Affairs Committee with reference to the Navy Department; the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee with reference to the lands for war housing, and so forth. Such investigations as should be carried on could very well be under the jurisdiction and the supervision of the various legislative committees. This section would require the creation of an entirely new committee to embrace the whole field, and to do the particular work that the various legislative committees are supposed to do.

There has been a tendency, I think through the years and perhaps accentuated somewhat in recent years, to emasculate the legislative committees of this House who should have primary consideration of the things that pertain to their respective jurisdictions.

Mr. CHURCH. I agree with the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, it is very difficult for me to support this amendment or to oppose it. I do not care, particularly. There is really nothing in what I read this morning to the House in reciting the duties of this particular committee that would seem to me, after all, to warrant the expectation that this committee would be selected to deal with surplus property after the war is over. I well understand how the committees feel about encroaching on their powers and duties. I had thought perhaps it would be better to have a joint committee created. Sometimes it results in better feeling between the two bodies, and it is more likely to bring results. I served for a year and a half on the joint committee dealing with the reorganization of the Government. Of course, the other body usually tries to show they are more able than the House Members, but usually we manage to get along. But you remember these differences we have had on the floor of the House and sometimes I have thought it might be the better practice if we had a joint committee to go into these things in the first instance.

If we have this joint committee, my committee might be supposed to be recognized and I being the ranking member naturally might expect to be appointed on that committee; or I might step aside in the hope that my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH], who loves the work, might be selected. But because there might be some possible honor attached to it, or because there might be some work involved, I might not feel at liberty to dodge it even for the purpose of having my friend on it.

Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to talk on both sides of the question. I did that on the Ruml plan, but I think you fully understood my motive and reason. It was the question of taking the lesser of two evils. In this case I do not know about even the lesser of the evils. I frankly say that if the amendment offered in committee by the gentleman from California [Mr. MANASCO] is presented to the House, it seems to me it should receive real attention because it embodies the problem of surplus after the war is over.

What we have done is the usual old method, and I have seen it for the 28 years of my legislative experience, that when a vital matter arises and there is too sudden demand for action a committee is appointed to look into it, largely to delay action.

Mr. Chairman, you have listened to my statement. I absolve every Member on this side, and any member of the committee for voting any way he wishes on the amendment, as I will make no recommendation.

If I find it necessary to vote, I shall vote to create the joint committee.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I have a high regard for the views of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM]. I understand the attitude of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH], but my thought is they have both misconstrued the amendment and the provisions of section 4. Section 4 is not intended to supplant or to supersede any committee of the House. This section has to do with surplus war materials, and as a member of the committee, I conferred with representatives of industry, agriculture, and manufacturing, who approved the special committee, not for the purpose of passing legislation but for the purpose, as stated in section 4, and at this time it is proper for me to read:

SEC. 4. (a) There is hereby established a Surplus War Property Committee (hereinafter referred to as the "committee") to be composed of five Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and five Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker. A vacancy in the committee shall be filled in the same manner as the original selection was made. The committee shall elect a chairman from among its members.

This committee would have the power, and the only funds provided are $10,000 to employ an investigator, to subpena witnesses, to bring in books and documents; it would have the power and the authority to do substantially what the Byrd committee is now doing, furnish information and submit recommendations and facts that can be utilized by the various committees of the House and Senate.

It is my thought that the information furnished by this committee, composed of able men as the Vice President and the Speaker shall appoint from the two Houses of the Congress, can submit information that should be of benefit to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to the Military Affairs Committee, to the Naval Affairs Committee, to the Committee on Expenditures, and other committees having jurisdiction of the subject matter. I assume that that information transmitted to Congress would be referred by the Speaker to the appropriate committees of Congress; so I insist that the purpose of this section is to ascertain facts and make recommendations. Frankly I do not know how the gentleman from Texas has succeeded but I will say to the gentleman that I know he is doing his best with respect to lands and buildings. At least one member of his committee has come to our committee and asked what information we had been able to obtain as to the lands and buildings that the Government has acquired for war purposes. Thus far we have not been able to get full information; neither has the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, as I am advised, but if this committee were appointed it would have the power to appoint an investigator and to do what the chairman of the other committees cannot do, order those in the various departments to furnish us the factual information, by subpena, to compel production of full information. So it is my thought, Mr. Chairman, that the most constructive feature of this bill is section 4. It is to furnish the Congress for the use of its committees facts with respect to the various kinds of property. We made this recommendation after giving this matter consideration from January until May and after we had had the views of business, agricultural, manufacturing, and mercantile spokesmen of the country.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes to answer the gentleman's question.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LANHAM. May I ask the gentleman if it is not true that these various departments and agencies of the Government should know what materials they have and what is surplus? And can they not give that information to committees of the House as well as to another specially appointed committee of the House? And may they not also give that information to the Bureau of the Budget as provided in this measure, and that the Bureau of the Budget knowing the requirements of the various agencies could declare what part of that available material was surplus?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I will answer the gentleman's question by saying that they have the right to do that now, but as the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] said, having that right they have not done it; and the gentleman from Maine said, in response to the question of the gentleman from Texas, that as a new Member of this body he was absolutely astounded that the Congress of the United States had not passed this legislation 100 years ago, or to use his language, in 1815; in other words, we have depended upon these agencies to declare whether or not they had any surplus property and if we continue to depend upon these agencies to declare their surplus property we shall continue to be without that information.

Mr. LANHAM. In my judgment, the remainder of the bill makes proper provision to get that information without employing, at great expense, which in my judgment will far exceed the $10,000, an additional committee.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. We went into that very carefully and we limited it very specifically to $10,000, so the Treasury would be protected. We followed the language of the Byrd committee. I do not know, and neither does the gentleman from Texas nor any other Member of Congress, any better source of suggestions than the business, mercantile, and industrial agencies of the country in dealing with a matter involving $50,000,000,000. Chambers of commerce and other business and industrial institutions of the country say: "Give us an opportunity to be heard before passing legislation to dispose of surplus war materials."

Mr. J. LEROY JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute to answer the gentleman's question.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. J. LEROY JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, directing attention to lines 17 to 19 on page 17 of the bill which provides that this committee shall make its recommendations to insure the orderly disposition of such property, I want to know if this committee has the power to try to work out a way whereby they can get a profitable disposition of this property? This deals only with the mechanics of disposition; I want to know how it will save money for the Government.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Let me say that the purpose of this committee is to make studies and recommendations for legislation to prevent dumping $50,000,000,000 or $5,000,000,000 or $10,000,000,000 of property at any one time. This committee will give us the benefit of its recommendations as to the orderly disposition of that property, because it would be absolutely ruinous to the economy of the country if we were to dump say 150,000 trucks, or 150,000 airplanes, or 5,000,000 pairs of shoes at one time. To prevent that is the very purpose of this bill.

Mr. J. LEROY JOHNSON. Is it the gentleman's opinion that this is broad enough to give them that power? Does this go beyond the mere matter of mechanics?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Not only will they make recommendations, but various committees of Congress will have those recommendations, have the right to consider them, and we will get the benefit not only of the views of this committee but of the constituted committees of this House who may submit legislation to the Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield.

Mr. CHURCH. Will the gentleman refer to subsection (b) on page 17 which the gentleman just interrogated him about? I wish to get his opinion. This committee we are going to appoint has to report promptly, proceed promptly. It is going to consider all of this property and insure the orderly disposition of such property. How can that committee do that with any force or effect without taking from the regularly constituted committees of the House and Senate the same problem of considering this matter of surplus or the expenditures in the executive branch of the Government?

Mr. LANHAM. I agree with the gentleman and I called attention to that earlier in the debate.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to make reference now to another matter. Allusion has been made to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. May I say with respect to that committee that several years ago with reference to the surplus real estate of the United States Government we did pass a law governing its disposition. This measure comes belatedly in the track of the action of the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee with reference to Government-owned real estate. This provides, however, for personal property, though this particular section places the obligation upon the new committee to look also into real estate.

We have some plants of the Army and Navy of this country that are carrying on secret operations. There is a bill pending before the Judiciary Committee with reference to the protection of those secret processes and operations involving personal and real property. I have familiarized myself somewhat with the purpose of that proposed legislation. In order to maintain that secrecy which is necessary for the proper promotion of our war efforts we should not have these over-all committees going around trying to tell the Naval Affairs Committee, the Military Affairs Committee, and the other committees, just how they should conduct their committee operations. I think it ill becomes any of us serving in this House to be criticizing one another in the service that we render through our respective committees. We all take the same obligation; we are all working very diligently in an effort to perform our duties; and I think to have this over-all committee as landlord and overseer for the various legislative committees which know these particular matters, and can best get the information with reference to them, is a mistake.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Am I correct in the assumption, then, that the gentleman thinks the Committee on Expenditures in Executive Departments does have all the necessary authority now?

Mr. LANHAM. Although I have not looked into the question lately, I understand that in Great Britain that is one of the most important committees in their whole parliamentary system, and it has been my understanding that the purpose of this committee is to follow up these expenditures that are made in the executive departments to know what is done with the money and what is done with what the money buys.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I am glad to hear that because I have been on that committee now for 6 or 8 years, along with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD]. We have been wanting to do a little something, but that committee has functioned something like the Labor Committee. We have long recesses, and when we do meet we talk a little bit. If the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] could assure us that some time before we are all dead we will have an opportunity to function and look into these things, it would be encouraging. It would induce a man to try to live longer and to try to serve his country a little.

Mr. LANHAM. Let me propound this inquiry: How can a committee of Members of the House, or of the two bodies, take into their hands the respective labors of all these various legislative committees that have to do with these various questions and do the whole job better than these committees can do their respective parts of it?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, these various agencies of the Government certainly have the information as to the personal property that they have within their respective organizations and I believe that the committees that have the legislative charge of those various agencies are in a better position from their experience and from their knowledge of the operations of those agencies to get this information from them than one big central, overlord, supervising committee could possibly be.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I do not know whether I understood the gentleman correctly, but did I understand him to say that there is now on the statute books legislation authorizing the War Department to dispose of the hotels and land owned by the War Department?

Mr. LANHAM. No. The gentleman is begging the question.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I am not begging the question.

Mr. LANHAM. I said that insofar as the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was concerned, prior to this war we passed legislation which is now on the statute books and which does give authority to dispose of the surplus real estate of the Government.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In certain instances it does, but in all fairness and in order to keep the record straight, is it not necessary for this Congress to pass a bill to authorize them to dispose of land? You have to pass a special act of Congress in that sort of case and this bill here deals with war materials not embraced in any legislation heretofore passed.

Mr. LANHAM. I understood the gentleman to say earlier in the debate that this bill had nothing to do with real estate and fixtures on real estate. Now he begins to talk about land, dams, and buildings. We are going to get confusion worse confounded by having this kind of committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I am thoroughly familiar wtih the purpose of this proposal. It has been suggested that the committee proposed herein would interfere with the rights of legislative committees in a proper disposition of materials and supplies in the hands of the Government agencies.

I can understand why one of the major committees probably would be better qualified and better fitted by reason of experience to dispose of any surplus property, but we forget that we have a number of agencies in the Government created by Executive orders that do not come under the supervision or direction of any legislative committee. Who is going to take charge of the surplus property there?

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield for a correction, that is exactly the purpose of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. That is exactly its jurisdiction.

Mr. HARE. If the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments has absolute authority, absolute right, absolute jurisdiction over all of this property, to see where it is, to make inventory of it, and dispose of it, then I think this duty ought to be discharged by that committee, and the proposed committee would then be unnecessary; otherwise there should be some committee charged with such responsibility, and it is my understanding the proposed committee is to be charged with such responsibility. If I am mistaken, I would like to be fully advised.

Mr. CHURCH. I do not want the gentleman to misunderstand me. I thought the gentleman was trying to point out that there is quite a bit of property that would not come under the jurisdiction of other committees. I want the gentleman to understand that this bill has to do with the control of expenditures in the executive departments, and therefore would take care of that property which I thought the gentleman was trying to say could not be taken care of.

Mr. HARE. No; I was referring to the legislative committees only and not to the powers and functions of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

We had an experience this last year in liquidating the Civilian Conservation Corps. That was not under the supervision of any particular legislative committee, yet this agency, created by Executive order, had acquired several million dollars worth of material, supplies, and equipment. Who will dispose of that? The Committee on Appropriations said it should be offered to the War Department, the Navy Department, the Air Corps, and so forth. I think it was referred under the provisions of another statute to the Bureau of the Budget to dispose of it. The Bureau of the Budget kept title to it for a short time, and then said, "We do not know what to do with it, so we will transfer our right back to the War Department." There you are. No one knows exactly what disposition has been made of this material and equipment, although the Director of the C. C. C. has a full, complete, and detailed inventory of all of the surplus materials and equipment of the C. C. C.

The same is true of the National Youth Administration. We have surplus commodities, supplies, and materials there now, stored, on which rent is being paid, yet nobody seems to have the authority, right, or responsibility to dispose of it. There is not an appropriation bill that comes to the House but that has in it an item, year after year, asking for additional equipment. My thought is that if you had a central storehouse or a central inventory of all of this material you would be able to dispose of such equipment by transferring it to whatever agency could use it to the best advantage.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARE. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Let me say to the gentleman that there is nothing in this bill that would prevent the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the Committee on Naval Affairs, or the Committee on Military Affairs from bringing in a bill tomorrow morning, if the House would consider it, for the disposal of this property. I submit, as the gentleman says, in view of the fact that the gentleman from Texas says the various committees, including the Committee on the Judiciary, are considering this matter, that all of the information they can get, whether it be furnished by a special committee or a general committee, would be of help.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. I notice in section 4 that the committee is to report within 6 months after this bill becomes effective. Then on page 18, in subsection (e), it is provided that all authority conferred in this section shall terminate upon submission of the committee's final report. Is this permanent legislation on a permanent committee, or will it terminate with the filing of the report by that committee?

Mr. HARE. I judge that the language speaks for itself. I think 6 months would not be sufficient time to make a proper inventory, classify the materials, equipment, and so forth, and suggest the best method for their use or disposal.

Mr. DONDERO. May I ask the chairman that question?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It expires in 6 months.

Mr. DONDERO. It is not a permanent committee?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Not at all.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHURCH. Does not that in effect mean that at the next session of Congress we shall have to appoint another committee? The war will not be over then.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH].

The question was taken; and, on a division (demanded by Mr. CHURCH), there were—ayes 27, noes 31.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-nine Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. CHURCH and Mr. WHITTINGTON.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 37, noes 57.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOFFMAN: On page 16, line 8, after "President" insert "or Congress by concurrent resolution."

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is, on page 16, line 8, after the word "President", to insert "or Congress by concurrent resolution."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I have not had an opportunity to confer with other members of the committee, but if it would be agreeable to the gentleman from Massachusetts, and unless some of my colleagues object, I see no objection to the gentleman's amendment. Frankly, I think it is in accord with the remainder of the bill. Personally, I am agreeable to it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I am surprised but happy.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

There was no objection.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WICKERSHAM: On page 5, line 24, after the word "agency", strike out the period and insert a semicolon and add the following: "Provided, however, That any such property which is suitable for agriculture or livestock operations shall be first offered for sale to farmers and livestock operators at the best bid or appraised value."

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment so that when this property is sold, it will not be dumped as a lot and sold possibly to industrial groups, but so that the farmers and the livestock raisers will have an opportunity to bid upon it. At this time we need 129 percent of the 1940 implement purchases. The amount we have available now for the farmers is only 23 percent. By the end of this season we will have a total of 40 percent of available implements purchased in 1940, and as a matter of fact we need 129 percent.

Mr. MANASCO. The gentleman would not want to restrict the bill so that the Procurement Division would have to offer surplus tanks, airplanes, and so forth, to the farmers, before it could sell them to anyone else.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I think the farmer should have an opportunity before the four agencies.

Mr. MANASCO. But I think the gentleman should limit his amendment to farm implements and not force the Procurement Division to submit offers to farmers for airplanes, tanks, guns, and things like that.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Airplanes would not be usable for the farm.

Mr. MANASCO. But under the provisions of the amendment, they would have to offer everything

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No; I said such articles as are suitable for agriculture.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. WHITE. I would like to give some information to my colleague. Speaking of tanks, these tractors are very valuable on the farms. The tractors are needed all over the country, particularly in the West for land clearing and road grading.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I thank the gentleman. Mr. Chairman, I see no reason why this amendment should not be adopted and I trust the Members will vote for it. It is an amendment that will be for the best interest of the country, not just for the farmers.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. Does the gentleman contemplate that in the sale of the particular goods to which he refers, the bids shall be limited to a group or to a class of farmers?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I say that they shall first offer it to the farmers at the highest bid, or at the appraised value. I say that for this reason. The whole world is going to need food after the war.

Mr. MICHENER. I agree with the gentleman as to that, but who is going to determine whether the bidders qualify? If we are going to adopt an amendment like that, we should provide some method of determining the qualifications of the farmers. Who is going to say whether this man or that man is a bona fide bidder?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. The rules and regulations in the bill will do that, because it allows the President to do that through the Procurement Division. I trust this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I know the gentleman is interested in agriculture and in the farmers. All of us are interested in agricultural legislation, providing for the necessities of the farmers, but we just cannot give the farmer special consideration in every bill that comes along. In all kindness I can understand that in a bill 18 pages long it may be difficult. This is an amendment to section 255, and this section deals with waste property, damaged beyond repair, salvage and scrap, and any products that might arise from any of the agencies of the Government. We want to give the farmers help to raise food and we should give them something besides scrap. I can understand that the word "property" would mean plows, tractors, and hoes, but "products" means things that incidentally follow, that are in that category of waste, and this section provides that the President of the United States may establish regulations for the disposal of such waste products, and in order to protect them under section 257, if there is any property that is not waste that was not injured beyond repair and it has been rehabilitated, it must be sold in the domestic market, and the farmers will have an opportunity to acquire all the property that the farmers can use. Such an amendment as the gentleman has offered would not effectuate the gentleman's desire. The bill provides that if there are any surplus materials available to the farmer, he would have an opportunity to purchase them.

Mr. WHITE. What provision is there for disposing of surplus explosives?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. They are war materials generally to be disposed of after the war. We do not undertake to dispose of explosives in this bill unless they are surplus and then only with the consent of the Army and Navy. I ask that the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. WICKERSHAM] be rejected.

Mr. J. LEROY JOHNSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. J. LEROY JOHNSON. Is not the answer to the gentleman's amendment found in section (b), page 8, the first sentence?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes, and, as I have stated, the amendment is wholly unnecessary and may hurt rather than help farmers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am directing my remarks particularly to the gentleman from Mississippi, the gentleman in charge of this bill. I want to say that if there was ever a scandalous condition that existed in this country it was in the disposition of surplus materials after the last war. I point out one instance of the disposal of our surplus explosives. This Congress passed a bill to make those explosives available free to the Bureau of Public Roads and to the farmers for clearing land and building roads. What happened? The du Ponts stepped in and got a $7,000,000 contract at 7 cents a pound, if you please, for cartridging and boxing that material, when they used to sell Red Cross dynamite wholesale for less than 9 cents a pound. When I bought three different consignments of 1,000 pounds each of these surplus Government explosives to clear some stumps off of land in the State of Idaho I had to pay 7 cents a pound to the du Ponts and then pay the freight besides a handling charge of 2 cents before I could get these free explosives. This free powder cost me as much as if I had gone into the open market and bought it. I hope there will not be such a scandal in the disposition of surplus war materials after this war. We are still paying interest on the Liberty bonds sold 20 years ago in the last war to buy that powder, and it was a scandal.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. As was stated in the beginning of the consideration of this bill, that material now, instead of being handled in a scandalous fashion, has to be disposed of to the several governmental agencies. If there is no governmental agency that can use it, then it is to be sold, but they get the first chance at it.

Mr. WHITE. I want to put this House and the country on notice of the scandals in the disposition of surplus materials after the last war. I think this bill is an attempt to prevent such scandals. I want the people to know what was done. Any man who bought surplus war material in these so-called Army stores has good reason to know what was done in the disposition of surplus material after the last war. I hope this Congress will have the good sense to pass legislation which will prevent such scandalous conditions occurring again.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. Help me to understand the amendment. If we have any surplus left over of agricultural or livestock products, corn, oats, or wheat owned by the Government, must we sell it back to the farmer who may have originally sold it, at a good price, at whatever he may be bid, so he can sell it to the consumer again? Or shall we let the consumer of the products have some advantage; let the poultryman have a chance? Shall not the dealer who might want to buy it to sell to the consumer have an equal opportunity? Under this amendment it seems that it must be first offered to the agricultural people before it can be offered to the dealer or the consumer. They may finally get the best bid possible and then say to the consumer, "You cannot purchase it." We could hardly expect bids other than from agricultural interests. I am a little confused about the procedure. How about these matters that are the products of research? Should they not also be offered back to the people who made the research in the first instance? I do not quite approve of this at the moment. You are trying to favor the farmer and, of course, I do not blame you. At the end of the section you have a provision that these products shall be sold according to the rules and regulations made by your President. I think your President would treat agricultural interests very fairly. But I am wondering if you are not trying to show favoritism to the agricultural and livestock people. Must the calves that the Government bought and has on hand be offered back to the farmer at his own price? Should not the consumer through his dealer have a chance to buy those calves?

I am a farmer and I can sympathize with the gentleman. I do not imagine I would profit under this, because I am but a small farmer. However, I have always found there are so-called gentlemen farmers who have the cash to take advantage of such offers. I doubt if a poor farmer would have much of a chance to bid on necessarily large amounts that would have to be offered. I am trying to say that I think we are in a little danger when trying to particularize and help some particular classes of people in the method of disposal of property.

Mr. WHITE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. Is the gentleman familiar with the provision in the agricultural bill, where loans have been made on wheat, that under the present law he is permitted to buy back the wheat or cotton that he has obtained a loan on?

Mr. GIFFORD. Two wrongs do not make another right with me. That precedent may be quoted, but this is a little different. You are trying to give a certain class a right over the consumer's equal demands. That is the point I am trying to make.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. I would like to make this observation: That if the O. P. A. continues its regulations and price ceilings on agricultural products as they are doing at the present time, there will not be any surplus to dispose of in the near future.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, I think there will be a few extra cans of agricultural products on hand. Vast amounts are now in storage, pending possible military needs, and the military will probably not let these reserves dwindle much.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, my fisherman friend from Cape Cod does not seem today to have the same viewpoint as some of us on this proposition.

Many Members of this House from the agricultural States were visited last week by the canners of fruit and vegetables, who were down here in force, and there were very good reasons for their visit. Unless the canners are given relief, some of the citizens, like my good friend from Massachusetts, the majority leader, others in the cities, will be hungry next fall, next winter, and next spring, because, as one of the representatives in this group said, if they cannot get the cost of packing, if they cannot get the workers, the fruit and vegetables will not be put in cans. They are asking that they be permitted to raise wages 15 cents an hour in order to keep some of the men and women who are working in the canneries and who can and who will go into the defense industries in surrounding towns at higher wages.

A further request they are making is for a ceiling price. The O. P. A. induced the canners in California who are putting up asparagus to pay 15 cents an hour additional wage, with the assurance that the canners could add that extra cost to their price, which, added to the finished product, would raise the price to the consumer less than half a cent a can, but when the time came to fix a ceiling they did not get it.

Our canners are not going to be fooled; they are going to know whether or not when they pay that 15 cents an hour they will be allowed to include that additional cost in the finished-product price, and they want to know it before they get their products canned.

Our canners make contracts with the bean growers, the growers of strawberries, raspberries, cherries, in fact, with the growers of practically everything that goes into cans, for their season's crop. The farmers depend upon those contracts being made before they go into production, and the canners must know, before they make contracts with the growers, whether or not this Government intends to permit the charging of a ceiling price which will cover at least the cost of producing and putting the fruit and vegetables into the cans.

Our canners are not asking for a profit, but they do insist that, when they make every sacrifice demanded, they should be permitted to charge a price which will at least insure their continued existence, their continued operation.

Just had a call from Michigan and was advised that the Associated Press and the United Press carried a statement that the Government had given permission to the canners to raise wages 15 cents per hour. Naturally, the employees wanted to know why the canners were not paying the 15 cents additional. The canners want to know why they are not permitted to pay the 15 cents per hour additional wage.

Last Saturday, at a meeting with Mr. Fred Vinson, Director of the Office of Economic Stabilization, we were advised by Mr. Vinson that the question of the increase in wages which the canners wanted to pay and the question of the determination of the ceiling price would be decided without further delay.

It is evident that the regional board in Michigan recommended the increase in wages, but that recommendation, as I was advised at 4 o'clock this afternoon, had not cleared the office of Chairman Vinson.

The canners, if they pay the additional 15 cents per hour, will be subject to prosecution by the Government.

It is conflicting situations like this which create confusion among those upon whose efforts our food supply for the next 2 years depends.

The difficulty now grows out of the fact that wages in war industries, which in the end, are paid by the Government from the Public Treasury, are far greater than the canners are permitted to pay. Public funds are being used to entice workers in essential food-processing industries away from their jobs.

Unless we can get relief—and that without delay—the fruit and the vegetables necessary to feed the armed forces, for the sustenance of the civilian population, will not go into cans this summer and fall.

These growers and these canners are not going to put their products into cans unless the confusion is ended, and this next winter there will be a shortage, and the folks in the city will be hungry. It will not bother those of us who are living in little towns because our wives and daughters and our relatives are growing and will can fruit and vegetables, and next fall we will have enough to eat, but the folks in the city will be hungry unless the administration quits its destructive interference with the canning industry.

The CHAIRMAN. All time for debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. As I understand, Mr. Chairman, the vote now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. WICKERSHAM]?

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

The question was taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WICKERSHAM: On page 8, line 9, strike out the period, insert a semicolon and the following: "Provided, however, That any such property which is suitable for agriculture or livestock operations shall be first offered for sale to farmers and livestock operators at the best bid or the appraised value."

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I understand no further amendments are to be offered to the bill. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and to the entire bill be limited to 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, I am sincere in this amendment. The chairman of this committee pointed to the fact that the previous amendment applied to products raised by industrial research, agriculture, livestock operations, which would mean the milk, cream, eggs, and animals, and so forth, but there is no doubt in your mind or in my mind that this present amendment applies to every type of property, because it relates to section 256 which provides that whenever the President or the head of any agency determines that any usable or referrable property under the control or in the possession of the agency is surplus to the needs of such agency or any administrative unit thereof it may be sold. On page 7, beginning at line 23, are set out four different methods of disposition. It may be disposed of by sale or lease in the domestic market, by sale or lease to agencies of foreign governments, by sale or lease in foreign markets, but only if such property cannot practicably be disposed of under paragraph (2), and by donation to tax-supported organizations.

I merely want to protect the farmer or livestock man, to give him a chance to bid on this at the highest bid or at the appraised value in competition at any sale on the domestic market, in competition at any sale to any foreign country or giving it to anyone. This is good property that is going to be sold. Just the other day in one of our counties a considerable amount of equipment was sold, property of the C. C. C., particularly tractors, on which just a week before $250 each had been spent. These tractors were lumped in a group and sold to an eastern firm for $200 apiece, to my personal knowledge. I just want these farmers to have a chance. They do not have even 40 percent of the 1940 purchases, yet they need 129 percent now. I want them to have a chance to secure these plows, hoes, rakes, tractors, go-devils, or what-not, tires, or anything else.

I am not a farmer and I am not a politician although I have served 18½ years at both. I am not going to tell you that I would rather farm than be in politics; I would not. These farmers are having a hard time. I am asking you to do only what is right. At least give them a chance to get this equipment they so badly need either by competitive bids or at the appraised value.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Does the gentleman's amendment provide for this property to be sold at public or private sale?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. The amendment allows that question to be determined by the President or by the procuring agency. Certainly we ought to give the farmers an opportunity to get this equipment they so badly need.

Mr. DONDERO. Certainly it seems but fair that the farmer should have that opportunity.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I yield.

Mr. JENSEN. And even if some of the equipment is classed as junk, there are many parts of it that could be used for repairs which are very necessary. I certainly hope the gentleman's amendment will be adopted.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the further provisions of the bill which provide for the repair and rehabilitation of this machinery. More of these tractors may be repaired; they may spend $200 on them and then sell them for $200. We should extend this help to the farmer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arizona is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I was going to move to strike out the last word, to get the floor on a pro forma amendment rather than on a real amendment. However, I do have a great deal of interest in the case as presented by my friend from Oklahoma in the amendment of his now pending. I happen to know how farmers and livestock men are in great need of certain iron and steel equipment and I hope any surplus will be made available to them on proper terms. I sought this time, however, for another reason. I am not seeking to amend this bill as it now stands because this, in general, is good legislation; I favor it. We are now trying by it to prevent what occurred following the last World War. We want this vast accumulation of surplus material handled to the best advantage and with the least loss to the Government and to the greatest saving for the taxpayers.

I asked the chairman of the committee a question or two before the bill was read for amendments. There are some other fields of war properties, in my opinion, which should also be safeguarded. Neither of them I find is now covered in the bill, therefore each will have to be the subject of special legislation. In addition to all this machinery and equipment we have produced for war which it is hoped will soon be surplus, we are accumulating large stock piles of war materials in minerals and metals. We must do this. We have not done enough of it to date as a matter of fact and it is vital to the prosecution of the war. But it stands to reason that at the close of the war there will be some surplus on hand. In order that the mining industry may be safeguarded when peace comes, and our country's welfare also; the Congress ought to give thought now to safeguarding the mining industry, large and small, against the dumping of surplus war minerals and metals at the conclusion of hostilities. Prices of such must not be permitted to be unduly depressed.

There is another matter I wish to mention, not quite in the same category but equally important. Of course, as the chairman said, this bill does not say anything about land belonging to Uncle Sam, formerly used by private individuals but now taken over for war purposes. The value of much of that land has been reduced or changed because of its war use. I hope that the Congress will give adequate thought to the restoration of the value of that part of the public domain now used for war purposes so that at the conclusion of hostilities it may be returned to its former peacetime uses.

Mr. WHITE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE. What does the gentleman advocate doing with all of the surplus Government-owned stock piles of copper and lead after the war?

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes, I want a great reservoir established and held of all strategic and critical minerals so we shall never again be caught lacking. I have just introduced a bill which will take care of that. I was anxious to learn from the chairman of the committee whether this legislation before us brought that subject within the purview of the study of the committee which is being set up. In view of the fact that this bill does not touch that subject, I hope that the Members will give due consideration to the bill which I introduced June 7, H. R. 2895, which does go to that proposition.

Mr. WHITE. The gentleman appreciates there is a deluge of copper, lead, and zinc being poured into this country from foreign countries all over the earth at the present time for war uses?

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes, I understand that fact and I regret that the war made it necessary, but for the protection of our home producers, both large and small, we must look into that matter, too, so that that which has been brought in of necessity during the war from foreign lands will not be the cause of breaking the price of our domestic products.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON].

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I hesitate to take time on this bill, and I do not expect to discuss the particular amendment that is now before the House, therefore my statement may be subject to a point of order. But I wanted to get into the discussion on the previous amendment which had to do with food surpluses. Seriously, I think that this Congress had better take some immediate action on certain of the regulations of the O. P. A. or we are going to have a food famine in this Nation. I am amazed at the new regulations being issued by the O. P. A.

I have a wire that came in this morning which amazed me. I did not realize how far this agency is going. I am going to read this wire. It is from Girard, Kans., and is dated June 8, reading as follows:

GIRARD, KANS., June 8, 1943.
Representative FRANK CARLSON,
Washington, D. C.:

Office of Price Administration order MPR 401, effective June 10, limiting feed grinders to 50 cents per ton for grinding corn, is absolutely prohibitive and ridiculous. Poultry, hog, and dairy production is heavy here, and if this order stands we will be compelled to shut down our grinders, which will be disastrous to a large number of farmers who depend on our grinding service to keep up their production. Your cooperation needed immediately to get this order rescinded at once in the interest of the war effort.

S. O. FREY,
Manager, Farmers Union Elevator

This town is not in my congressional district, but, Mr. Chairman, I was amazed to learn that we are controlling out in the farm section the cost per ton for grinding feed. Think of it!

It is about time this Congress does something about the matter or we are going to have a food shortage in this Nation. I am fearful that we will be criticized. We can do something about it and we must do something about it.

I would like to talk about cattle feeding for a moment. If you take a 735-pound steer, put him on feed June 1 for 100 days, selling November 1 to 8, that steer has got to sell for $16.68 to break even, yet the O. P. A. is trying to maintain a selling price of $14.50 It is foolish to talk about taxation and enforced savings to drain off this surplus money in the country if we follow that sort of a program. Let us increase our production, let us get some things to sell in this country, let us get rid of all these regulations that are stymying the production of food in this Nation which in my opinion is going to lead to starvation in this Nation and in our allies.

Mr. MASON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MASON. The gentleman stated that we can do something and we should do something. I do not see what this Congress can do so far as the regulations that are issued by the O. P. A. are concerned. We have no power to reverse those regulations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO].

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, perhaps what I am about to say may be subject to a point of order, but I do not intend to take the full time allotted me. I take the floor in order to complete the record made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

I was one of the Members who met with the Michigan canners last Saturday. That meeting had to do with the processing of food. The amendment now pending before the House is also indirectly connected with the subject of food.

The people who work in the canning industry have been classified as farm labor. The average pay of farm labor is about 45 cents an hour. All the canner is asking is that that price be increased to 60 cents an hour; in other words, that they might be permitted to pay 60 cents an hour, which is about one-half what industry is paying people in defense plants. In the face of that situation a good many of these people as a matter of patriotism are willing to stay in the canning factories and do the work at 60 cents an hour.

Do you know that the canners are faced with the proposition that if they are permitted to increase wages 15 cents an hour, they are asked to absorb that and not add it to the price of the product? The result is going to be that unless the canners are allowed to add the additional cost to the selling price there are going to be a great many empty shelves in the grocery stores next fall and a good many people may go hungry. Let the O. P. A. use a little horse sense in the making of its rules, regulations, and price ceilings, and we will have no difficulty. The canning of fruits and vegetables is of vital importance to this country. It is the storage of food for next year.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Has anyone been able to figure out how the O. P. A. arrives at the rules and the prices they set?

Mr. DONDERO. It is very difficult for me to understand it. It would seem to me that they should acquire in their employment some people who know this subject and know something about it from actual experience rather than those who depend on theory and philosophy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] for the balance of the time.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I hesitate to detain the Committee. Like all members from agricultural districts, I am in sympathy with any legitimate aid that can be rendered the farmers, but I am doubtful about the amendment's giving them the priorities they have under this section without the amendment.

This amendment is to line 9 on page 8. Section 257 states that the property shall, first, be disposed of in the domestic market—the farmers have a right there—and then in the fourth paragraph states that the property may be disposed of by donation to tax-supported institutions, but the property shall be disposed of under this paragraph only if it cannot practicably be disposed of by sale or lease under any of the preceding paragraphs.

My friend from Oklahoma modifies this paragraph. My thought is, with all due deference, that he may really lose more than is gained, because he can acquire property only under this paragraph, whereas he has a prior right to it under paragraph 1.

Mr. Chairman, I trust the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. WICKERSHAM].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WICKERSHAM) there were—ayes 35, noes 49.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BONNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2795) to amend the Budget and Accounting Act, 1921, to provide for the more efficient utilization and disposition of Government property other than land or buildings and facilities or fixtures appurtenant thereto, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 248, reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION OF DISABLED PEOPLE

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 247, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2536) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise and their return to civil employment," approved June 2, 1920, as amended, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Education, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as shall have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

FREEDOM OF SPEECH

Mr. HÉBERT. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that when we entered this war, one of the major rights for which we were fighting was freedom of speech. Can it be that we are winning the war on foreign fronts but losing it right here at home? On May 10, 1942, the United States Supreme Court handed down a decision which seriously threatens the constitutional rights of freedom of speech in the United States. That decision, with the majority opinion written by Justice Frankfurter, gave the Federal Communications Commission absolute authority to tell any radio station in the United States what it may and may not put on the air. From now on, the Federal Communications Commission holds a power over the broadcasting stations of the United States equal to that of any totalitarian government. No bureau in Washington has even been given such unlimited powers as prescribed in this decision. From now on, the licensee of any broadcasting station, whether he operates a 100-watter or a 50,000-watter, had better make sure that the Commission can find nothing about his operation, his personal life, or, possibly, even his wife's hats, that they might criticize.

In 1934 Congress enacted laws which provided for the Federal licensing of radio stations. The purpose of the law, according to those who were instrumental in writing it, was to provide traffic regulations in the field of radio, and nothing else. In order that a standard of regulation might be established, Congress provided that licenses should be issued on the basis of public interest, convenience, and necessity. In 1941 the Federal Communications Commission issued a set of rules generally known as chain broadcasting regulations. These rules went far beyond the regulation of frequencies and very definitely inserted the Government as a third party in the financial and program arrangements between stations and networks. Two of the networks asked for injunctions and the matter was argued in the lower courts and then taken to the Supreme Court. On May 10 the Supreme Court, by a 5-to-2 decision, with Justice Frankfurter writing the majority decision, not only upheld the right of the Commission to put these rules into effect, but went so much further in outlining the Commission's power that the question of the rules themselves has become a very minor matter and instead today the entire right of freedom of speech is threatened on every radio station in this country, whether or not it is affiliated with any network. In the decision Justice Frankfurter said:

> But the act does not restrict the Commission merely to supervision of the traffic. It puts upon the Commission the burden of determining the composition of that traffic.

In other words, the administration, through the Commission, can tell any radio station what its programs shall or shall not be. Further, in his opinion, Justice Frankfurter stated, in discussing the argument that the Commission is empowered to deal only with the technical and engineering impediments of radio:

> We cannot find in the act any such restriction of the Commission's authority.

And he added further:

> In the control of the developing problems to which it was directed, the act gave the Commission not niggardly but expansive powers.

One editorial states that the Supreme Court accepts Webster's Unabridged Dictionary as an authority on the definition of words, and in Webster the word "expansive" is defined as "unrestrained." I leave it to you, gentlemen, if this is not the most startling, shocking definition of the rights of our Government to dictate to private industry and private life that has ever been granted in the history of this Nation. Leading members of the bar who have studied the decision of the Supreme Court declare it one of the most dangerous precedents ever established in this country.

As I said before, the great controversy for the past 2 years has been whether or not the so-called chain broadcasting regulations were wise. But today as broadcasters throughout the country study the decision of the Supreme Court, they are horror stricken. The chain rules are forgotten. Today it is a question as to whether or not the Government shall dictate what kind of program we shall have, who shall speak, and on what subjects he shall speak over the broadcasting stations of the United States.

Chairman Fly, of the F. C. C., in a recent press conference, reacted to the anxiety of the radio broadcasting industry much as any other totalitarian leader would. He says that their fears are groundless, and brings up the customary cry of the monopolies. He says that any suggestion that the Government now controls radio is "hooey." He asserts that he aims to free radio stations to conduct their business in a manner in which he, Mr. Fly, thinks best for them. If the stations accept Mr. Fly's protection—if, in other words, they are good children—he assures them that stations certainly have nothing to be afraid of. Is there not a very broad hint there that if they do not play his game there may be something to fear? It is strange that station owners have never sought this freedom that Mr. Fly insists on their accepting, and that they have in the past thrived and improved on their own simple brand of free enterprise.

Broadcasters' fear of imminent Government ownership, control, or domination is the fear of a reality and not the "hooey" Mr. Fly so lightly calls it. What Hitler did to German radio is a cause for fear in any language, and, according to the Supreme Court, Mr. Fly now has the power to do it even here. Mussolini took the same parental attitude toward his children of the broadcasting industry in Italy. He gave them their instructions just the same as he gave castor oil to some of his less tractable party members. Chairman Fly now has the power to measure out to stations the exact amount of freedom he or the administration wants them to have, either with an eye dropper or a tankard, depending on how he feels at the moment. Perhaps he will choose a carefully measured bottle with a rubber nipple feeding 912 radio stations in the United States the way the Dionne quintuplets were fed, while the stations remain in an infantile relationship to Father Fly.

I hope that every Member of this body will study this decision of the Supreme Court and reflect seriously upon its possibilities. I think that you will agree with me that there is only one way to prevent this serious threat to the freedom of speech and our way of living—that is for Congress to rewrite the Radio Act in such definite terms that it cannot be seized upon by the party in power, no matter what it may be, for the chief purpose of directing its propaganda and maintaining itself in office.

A year ago the Interstate Commerce Committee of this body studied a new radio act known as the Sanders bill. No action was taken but when the new Congress assembled last January, the bill was resubmitted in practically the same form by Representative HOLMES. To date, further hearings have not been held. In the Senate, the White-Wheeler bill, a revision of the 1934 Radio Act, has been introduced by Senator WALLACE WHITE of Maine and Senator BURTON WHEELER of Montana. Hearings on this bill are scheduled to start in the very near future. The bill is of such a nature that it would definitely prescribe the powers of the F. C. C. and free the industry of this life and death threat from the Government which now hangs over it. I feel that this is a matter in which Congress should act at once. We will be derelict in our duty if we continue to let any bureau of the Government assume the powers of Congress—in fact, not only the powers of Congress, but a supreme dictatorship in a matter which so closely affects the lives of every man, woman, and child in this country.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] is recognized for 15 minutes.

BOOMERANG DOLLARS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, every day the war becomes more a struggle not simply of armies and navies but the home front as well.

In enemy countries, where people and resources are strained to the limit, the question is: How long can the home front stand up?

In America, it is a question of how long will it take to make our full strength effective.

This battle of home fronts, which steadily becomes more crucial, is chiefly a struggle to control living cost and prevent inflation.

What is inflation? I have heard quite a number of definitions. Mine is: Inflation is nothing more or less than a sharp rise in prices generated by the pressure of many dollars competing for an inadequate supply of goods. It is a threat today because people have more money at a time when there are less goods for them to buy.

Inflation is not to be taken lightly. Rapidly rising prices could enormously complicate the task of winning the war. They could cause such havoc with our social structure as to cheat us out of the fruits of victory.

It is absolutely necessary, therefore, for the welfare of the people and for the national well-being as a whole, that we hold the line on prices.

We must avoid boomerang dollars.

History shows that large-scale and long-continued military expenditures, financed in ways that give people more, rather than less, money to spend, without a corresponding increase in things to buy, has been the common underlying cause of every serious uncontrolled rise in prices in wartime.

ITALIAN INFLATION NOW

From Italy today come reports indicating history is repeating itself. The Italian people are not only faced with invasion but with a very serious rise in prices. For most things, Italians pay three times as much as before the war. Even rationed foods have gone up 50 percent. Eggs cost 18 cents each. Chicken is around $1 a pound. A worker pays out $150 for a suit of clothes.

Skyrocketing prices are a sure sign that the burden of war is falling unevenly and unfairly. This is causing a considerable drain on morale. And a combination of the two has divided the Italian people.

MOBILIZATION OF HOME FRONT

We may well ask ourselves how long will it take to complete the mobilization of our home front to stop scrambling for goods that we do not need; to stop clinging to what we know must be given up?

On that answer, too, depends how long and costly the war will be. It may decide whether the peace is won or lost. Rising prices and wages add needless billions to the cost of war. When peace comes, the bubble of the inflated prices and wages can burst with terrible dislocation to workers, farmers, businessmen—to everyone.

WHAT TOTAL WAR MEANS

Total war demands such a huge amount of goods and services that a major part of our productive capacity must be converted from the production of peacetime goods to producing the materials of war.

In 1940 we spent only $1 out of $33 of our national income for war purposes; $1 out of $10 in 1941; $1 out of $3 in 1942; and according to present estimates we will spend a little over $1 out of every $2 of our national income for our war against the Axis in 1943.

Obviously such a huge diversion of our productive capacity to the war effort requires the conversion of most of our industry to war production. Such a conversion also reduces the amount of available consumer goods. How this works is indicated by the production of various kinds of goods.

In 1939 consumers' goods were valued at $6,400,000,000. In 1941, based on 1939 prices, they were up two billion over 1939, and during 1942, our first full year of warfare, they tumbled by more than $3,000,000,000 to $5,200,000,000.

But as consumer goods values fell, more people began to punch factory time clocks than ever before. They are now working harder and working longer. Moreover, like the supply of goods, the supply of labor also is scarce, so that there is a pressure for the "upping" of salaries, wages, net income for farmers and business.

RESULTS OF UPWARD PRESSURE

Let me attempt to illustrate the results of this upward pressure:

In 1939 the average hourly earnings in durable manufacturing industries were 69.8 cents. In 1942, 94.7 cents.

In 1939 the average hourly earnings in nondurable manufacturing were 58.2 cents. In 1942, 72.3 cents.

Farm wage rates were 104 percent of the 1935–39 average in 1939. They were 158 percent of that average in 1942.

Net corporate profits (before taxes) amounted to five and five-tenths billion dollars in 1939, nineteen and seven-tenths billion dollars in 1942. But net corporate profits after taxes rose from four and two-tenths billion dollars in 1939 to seven and seven-tenths billion dollars in 1941, and then remained comparatively stationary. Thus in 1939 income payment to individuals in this country amounted to $71,000,000,000; in 1941 to 92 billions; and in 1942 to 116 billions. The estimated income payments in individuals for 1943 is about $140,000,000,000.

HIGHER TAXES ONLY TAKES PART

Part of the additional income is saved and part is paid in higher taxes; but some is directed to the purchase of goods and services. The expenditures of these additional sums in turn causes a further expansion of income and demands and further pressure on the prices of all products. One reason for the pressure on food prices, for example, is that war workers and others are using their expanded income to bring up their diet to a more adequate level. "They are meat hungry," says Secretary of Agriculture Wickard, "and they have the money to buy the meat."

The increased demand for goods, furthermore, makes necessary additional expenditures by business to replace, repair, and augment productive facilities. These expenditures lead to further pressure on the price structure. Thus the original increase in Government expenditures results in a widespread expansion of demand throughout the economy.

In itself the expansion of demand would not be dangerous. Under ordinary conditions it would be met by increased production of goods. But at the same time that war increases demand for goods, it contracts the supply available to civilians. The reason is apparent: America, for all her vast resources, has not a limitless supply of materials, manpower and machinery. At some point in the development of a war economy more guns mean less butter. The same steel plate cannot be used for both an automobile and a tank; the same sheet of rubber cannot make a tire for both pleasure car and a jeep; the same tanker cannot carry gasoline both to New England and to the global battle fronts.

Civilian production is believed to have reached its peak in August 1941. Since then, although total output has continued to rise, the production of civilian goods has declined at a rate of 1 percent a month, as more productive capacity, labor, plants, and material were diverted to war production.

The effect of war in contracting the supply of things available to civilians is perhaps most clearly seen in connection with production. People realize that there is some limit to the amount of steel or aluminum the Nation can produce. Though it is less evident, war also reduced the supply of available consumer services. In this area manpower is the great bottleneck.

DANGER OF EXPLOSIVE RISE IN PRICES

It is the simultaneous expansion of demand and contraction of supply which creates the danger of an explosive rise in prices. A gap arises between the amount of money people have at their disposal to spend and the amount of goods and services available for them to buy. There is natural tendency for people to compete among themselves to satisfy their individual wants. In effect, they bid against one another competitively for the things which are available.

Of course, not all of the money received by individuals as income is available for spending. Deductions must be made for tax payments and for savings. The size of the gap between supply and demand can obviously be narrowed by raising taxes and encouraging people to save more. The magnitude of the existing gap, however, must not be forgotten. Taxes will absorb only $15,000,000,000 of an estimated income of $140,000,000,000. This will leave $125,000,000,000 at the public's disposal. Another $25,000,000,000, it is estimated, will be invested in War bonds in 1943. But the people will still have approximately $100,000,000,000 in their pockets to buy an estimated $80,000,000,000 worth of goods and services. This is the crux of the economic danger confronting the country.

Unless diverted, the force of these dollars may break through the dam of price control and boil over in widespread bootlegging in violation of both price and rationing control. To draw off these excess dollars will require still higher taxes and some form of compulsory savings. These savings would be drawn out of people's current incomes and returned to them after the war over a period of years. Realistically, there is no other choice. If excess spending power is not siphoned off, we will destroy not only this spending power but past savings as well, trying vainly to outbid one another for goods and services.

Clearly, the more far reaching are the financial controls to absorb this excess spending, and the more our civilian economy is contracted in favor of war production, the greater becomes the need for assuring people at least their minimum essentials of foods, clothing, shelter, and transportation.

ALL MUST COOPERATE

Price ceilings, of course, contribute to this aim in that they keep prices from skyrocketing beyond the reach of lower-income families.

In his April 1942 speech, President Roosevelt drew a distinction between equality of sacrifice and what he said he preferred to term equality of privilege. This distinction ought to be fixed firmly in all our minds. Too many persons have distorted equality of sacrifice to mean minimum of sacrifice, the attitude of "let the other fellow give up something first." We know what would happen to an army in which every soldier held back until the other man advanced.

To avert that tragedy all of the people must cooperate—every worker, every housewife, every farmer, every manufacturer, every merchant, every minister, every schoolboy. All must fight.

There simply is no such thing as a noncombatant in the battle against rising prices. What each of us buys—what each of us does not buy—affects prices, affects the supplies left for other civilians, affects how much strength is mobilized for war.

Every day, in dozens of actions, in how we shop and what we waste, we either help or hurt the enemy.

Self-restraint must be practiced to keep prices down.

Self-restraint means we must make what we have last longer.

It means foregoing the temporary advantage of higher prices for the things we have to sell.

It means foregoing high wages.

It means that the burden of sacrifice may fall unevenly and that some of us will have to give up more than others. But this is true on the fighting front as well as the home front. All soldiers and sailors are not asked to make the same sacrifices. Some are more fortunate. But all are ready to make any sacrifice which is asked of them.

RESTRICTIONS ON THE USE OF GASOLINE

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I wish to voice the protest of the people of Indiana and of adjoining States against the enforcement of additional restrictions in that area on the use of gasoline for essential purposes. I am prompted to do this by the great volume of protests which have come to me, and I desire to have inserted in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks the names of some of those who have sent the protests, to indicate the character of the men and the businesses they represent.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, the people of Indiana have made a splendid and impressive contribution to the war effort. They will continue to do so; but they feel that they should be permitted to continue to use gasoline for essential purposes, and for the purposes of their businesses, because there is an abundant supply of gasoline in that area, and it is transported into and within the area only by means of trucks.

Mr. BREWSTER. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. I wonder if the Senator would feel that those for whom he speaks should continue to use their gasoline for nonessential purposes, if the supply on hand in that area could augment the gasoline needed for military requirements, of which there is a shortage.

Mr. WILLIS. I know the people of Indiana do not care to use a single gallon of gasoline which would contribute to the war effort, or which would relieve the shortage on the east coast; but, in view of the inadequacy of other means of transportation, they feel perfectly justified in asking that they may use the gasoline already in the vicinity, and already available. They feel it is not necessary to impose restrictions merely for the sake of regimentation or in order to indicate their sympathy with those suffering for lack of gasoline.

Mr. BREWSTER. I felt sure the Senator would be willing to cooperate.

Mr. WILLIS. I am, indeed.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. I should like to know whether the situation in Indiana is like that in North Dakota, which is about a thousand miles farther west.

Mr. WILLIS. I am not informed as to the situation in North Dakota.

Mr. LANGER. I shall tell the Senator what it is. I had a telephone call this morning from Mr. John R. Fleck, the State representative of the National Automobile Dealers Association, stating they have all the gasoline they need, hauling it from about 190 or 200 miles west of the State. They have the trucks available. There are high-school students who desire to work on the farms. There are men living in small towns who farm out in the country, 2 miles, 4 miles, 6 miles, 8 miles, who need gasoline to go to and fro. Is the situation in Indiana like that in North Dakota?

Mr. WILLIS. It is very similar to it.

DEDICATION OF TWO LOCKS ON ST. MARYS RIVER

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, from the Committee on Commerce I report favorably House bill 1258, and I submit a report (No. 300) thereon.

If I may have the attention of the acting majority leader and the minority leader, the sole purpose of the bill is to officially name the two new locks which have been built at Sault Ste. Marie. There is no controversy about it. It is desired that the matter should be officially concluded at once, because the dedication is to occur on July 4, and I am asking whether there is any objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. HILL. Did the bill have a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. VANDENBERG. It did, of the Committee on Commerce and of the House of Representatives.

Mr. McNARY. I join in the request.

Mr. HILL. Under the circumstances, I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (H R. 1258) to name certain locks in the St. Marys River at the falls, Michigan, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator in charge of the pending bill, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], I should like to state to him that I think he would be justified in giving notice that the Senate will remain in session today until it passes the bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. I should be very happy to have the matter take that direction, if it appeals to the leaders of the majority and the minority.

Mr. McNARY. I think the notice should be given. The bill will have a long and rough road after it passes, and it is as important a bill as any that has been before the Senate. It is as important as the Navy appropriation bill or the Army appropriation bill. We must have food first. We have been considering the bill for several days, and it must go to conference, the conference report must be agreed to, and the bill must be signed by the President by the 30th of June. I think we should remain in session today until we finish the consideration of the bill, and if I were in charge of the bill, I would give notice to that effect, because it is proper to give such notice either the day before or early on the day when such an order is desired.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Georgia that, so far as I am concerned, I will cooperate with him to the fullest. If he wishes to give the notice now, and have the Senate remain in session until the consideration of the bill is completed, I will do everything I can to cooperate with him and uphold his hands in the matter.

Mr. RUSSELL. There is no question that it is of the utmost importance to have the bill pass the Senate at the earliest possible date. We are several weeks later with the bill this year than we have been in times past. Last year the bill was not presented to the President until after the 1st of July, and that situation caused a great deal of confusion. The previous year the bill reached the President, due to the length of time we spent on it in conference between the House and the Senate, on the last day of the fiscal year. There will probably be more difficulties in the conference this year than there ever have been before, and we will require all the time possible in an effort to iron out the differences between the two bodies.

In view of the great importance of taking action on the bill at the earliest possible time I shall accept the suggestion of the two leaders, and I serve notice that I shall insist that the Senate remain in session today until action on the bill can be concluded.

VISIT TO THE SENATE OF HIS EXCELLENCY, GEN. HIGINIO MORÍNIGO M., PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF PARAGUAY

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the President of Paraguay will shortly visit the Senate. I ask that the Chair appoint a committee to escort him to the floor of the Senate, and that then the Senate stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALLGREN in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Chair appoints the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] as the committee to meet the President of Paraguay and escort him into the Chamber.

Pursuant to the unanimous-consent agreement, the Senate will now stand in recess, subject to the call of the Chair.

The Senate being in recess, at 12 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.,

His Excellency, Gen. Higinio Morínigo M., President of Paraguay, escorted by the committee appointed by the Vice President, consisting of Mr. HILL, Mr. MCNARY, Mr. CONNALLY, and Mr. CAPPER, preceded by the Secretary of the Senate, Edwin A. Halsey, and the Sergeant at Arms, Wall Doxey, entered the Chamber and took the place assigned him on the rostrum in front of the Vice President's desk.

The members of the party accompanying the President of Paraguay, including His Excellency Señor Dr. Don Luis Argaña, Minister of Foreign Affairs of Paraguay; His Excellency Señor Dr. Don Rogelio Espinoza, Minister of Finance of Paraguay; Lt. Col. Victoriano Benitez Vera; Lt. Col. Manuel Rodriguez; Maj. Eugenio Reichert, aide-de-camp to the President of Paraguay; the Honorable Dr. Jorge Escobar, Under Secretary of Foreign Affairs of Paraguay; Lt. Comdr. Pedro Meyer, naval aide to the President of Paraguay; the Honorable Wesley Frost, American Ambassador to Paraguay; Brig. Gen. Charles L. Mullins, Jr., United States Army, military aide; Capt. Frank Loftin, United States Navy, naval aide; and R. D. Muir, Division of Protocol, Department of State, entered the Chamber and were escorted to the seats assigned them to the left of the Vice President's desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Members of the Senate, distinguished guests, ladies and gentlemen, I introduce to you the President of Paraguay.

[Applause, Senators and occupants of the galleries rising.]

ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT OF PARAGUAY

His Excellency Gen. Higinio Morínigo M., President of Paraguay, addressed the Senate as follows:

Señor Presidente, Señores Senadores, bien está la suntuosidad del Capitolio para albergar entre sus muros gigantescos las figuras próceres de las ilustres personalidades cuyas estatuas enfilan en la Rotonda como mudos guardianes de la impercedera tradición de esta Casa, de donde ha salido la sabia legislación democrática que tan marcada influencia ha ejercido en el progreso material y espiritual de esta gran Nación.

Elevado es el honor que significa para mí el ocupar esta tribuna, no precisamente como Presidente de una nación hermana de la vuestra, sino, sobre todo, como ciudadano de América, como miembro de la gran familia constituída en torno a una causa común.

Los Estados Unidos de América se incorporaron a la vida independiente sobre la base de un programa bien definido, que aparece en el Acta de la Declaración de Independencia, de 1776, y es completado después por la Constitución Nacional, la Carta de Garantías Individuales y la oración de Gettysburg.

Dicha Declaración de Independencia es, a mi juicio, el documento más trascendental de su género. Empieza con la enunciación del hermoso principio jurídico internacional según el cual "la independencia e igualdad de las naciones de la tierra es un derecho que emana de las leyes de la naturaleza y del Dios de esa naturaleza"; proclama, en el orden público, "que todos los hombres nacen libres; que a todos les confiere su Creador ciertos derechos inalienables entre los cuales están la vida, la libertad y la busca de la felicidad"; y sienta, en materia política, uno de los principios cardinales en los regímenes democráticos: "Que para garantizar estos derechos, los hombres instituyen gobiernos que derivan sus justos poderes del consentimiento de los gobernados."

Desde la fecha memorable de aquella declaración de Jefferson han pasado más de 166 años; y, sin embargo, aquellos principios siguen siendo piedras angulares de la construcción jurídica de los pueblos libres.

Los Estados Unidos de América se han anticipado en trece años a la Revolución Francesa, en la "Declaración de los derechos del hombre y del ciudadano," trasegada después a los demás países del Continente para estructurar las constituciones que modelaron las nuevas nacionalidades que forman la gran familia americana.

Mi patria, al igual que los otros países de América y siguiendo el ejemplo de la hermana mayor del Norte, adoptó la forma democrática de gobierno. Ha sido y es un país democrático desde las más remotas épocas de su historia. Fué paraguaya la revolución llamada de los Comuneros, quienes en 1727, mucho antes de promediar el siglo XVIII, ya habían proclamado, ante la faz del mundo, que la voluntad del común o pueblo debe estar por encima de todas las voluntades, como principio y emanación que es de las autoridades públicas.

Ha venido rigiéndose hasta 1939 por una de las constituciones más liberales del mundo.

Las nuevas cuestiones planteadas en el terreno del derecho puro inspiraron la reforma de 1939, para tratar de poner aquella ley fundamental en consonancia y asegurar un mayor bienestar general. con las modernas conquistas del derecho El problema no fué planteado como un abandono de la ruta seguida hasta entonces para campear por sendas distintas, sino como una rectificación de la marcha para procurar acelerarla convenientemente y alejar obstáculos y espejismos, de acuerdo con las modernas corrientes ideológicas y por el mismo procedimiento que habían puesto en práctica otros países americanos. No na respondido a ninguna tendencia absolutista sino al sano propósito de satisfacer una necesidad, sin desmedrar, como se expresa en la exposición de motivos, los principios cardinales de la democracia americana, consignados en la Constitución de Filadelfia.

Es indudable que el sistema democrático, como organización política y social, es el único que se conforma con la naturaleza del hombre; pero es también indudable que todo sistema o cuerpo de doctrina puede y debe ser modificado a la luz de la verdad, sin remover, claro está, la base de la construcción jurídica para no caer en el absurdo de pretender sostener la fábrica en el aire. "El conocimiento de la verdad," lo dice una inscripción burilada en el frontispicio de la galería central de la Biblioteca de este Congreso, "es el bien soberano de la naturaleza humana."

Con lo dicho, no he querido significar que se trate de una obra acabada. Antes, por el contrario, creo que la reforma no carece de errores y omisiones. Tal es la razón por la cual he propiciado últimamente una revisión de la misma, en consulta hecha al pueblo de mi país con resultado favorable, y siempre en vista de los principios básicos de una verdadera democracia.

La edad contemporánea en la división cronológica de la historia universal, arranca de la Revolución Francesa. Lo justo, en mi sentir, hubiera sido tomar como punto de partida la fecha de la Independencia de los Estados Unidos de América, de la aprobación, por el Segundo Congreso Continental, de las hermosas declaraciones a que he aludido hace un momento, por lo menos en América, donde aquella simiente de libertad ha germinado en instituciones que honran a los pueblos que forman la cumunidad americana, al amparo de idénticas inquietudes cívicas y de comunes aspiraciones.

A la vista de los acontecimientos producidos en los últimos diez años, acaso no sea aventurado afirmar que una nueva era histórica se ha iniciado en el Nuevo Mundo. Recordaré solamente dos de dichos acontecimientos:

Primero.—El advenimiento de la política de la "Buena Vecindad" que nació con la asunción del mando por el Presidente Roosevelt cuando desde los umbrales de este Capitolio dijo que, en el campo de las relaciones internacionales dedicaría esta Nación a la política "de un buen vecino que se respete a sí mismo y que, por hacerlo así, respete los derechos de los otros; de un vecino que en un mundo de vecinos, haga honor a sus obligaciones y a la santidad de sus convenios."

Y segundo. La consolidación del Panamericanismo, desde la Primera Reunión de Ministros de Relaciones Exteriores, en Panamá en 1939, hasta la Tercera de Río de Janeiro, de 1942, y cuyo resultado inmediato ha sido la más grandiosa cooperación de los países americanos que registra la historia, para defenderse del peligro común que golpeó sus puertas con al ataque alevoso de Pearl Harbor, luchar por el mantenimiento de los eternos principios de la libertad y de la justicia, que gobiernan la convivencia social, y propender a la formación de un mundo mejor que el presente, sobre la base del respeto de la moral y el derecho y la observancia de una real confraternidad, como principios esenciales de la democracia.

El Paraguay ha cumplido y cumplirá fiel y honradamente todos sus compromisos internacionales. Ha roto sus relaciones diplomáticas, económicas y financieras con las naciones del Eje, antes que la Tercera Reunión de Cancilleres de Río de Janeiro clausurara sus sesiones.

Respetuoso de su tradición y fervoroso partidario de los principios enunciados, no ha titubeado ni un solo instante para ponerse del lado de los Estados Unidos de América y de las otras naciones hermanas en la más espantosa tragedia que haya concebido la imaginación y recuerda la historia de todos los tiempos.

El pueblo paraguayo reafirma, por mi intermedio, en esta ocasión solemne, su adhesión a la causa de este glorioso país, que es causa de América, y rinde su homenaje al heroismo de sus esforzados combatientes por la libertad y la justicia.

[Prolonged applause, Senators, distinguished visitors, and occupants of the galleries rising.]

The English translation of the address by the President of the Republic of Paraguay is as follows:

Mr. President and Members of the Senate of the United States, the magnificence of the Capitol is fitting to shelter within its gigantic walls the outstanding figures of the illustrious persons whose statues stand in the rotunda as mute guardians of the imperishable traditions of this House from which has emanated the wise democratic legislation that has exercised such marked influence on the material and spiritual progress of this great Nation.

It signifies a high honor for me to occupy this rostrum, not only as President of your sister nation, but above all as a citizen of the Americas, as a member of the great family of nations united around a common cause.

The United States of America entered into an independent life on the basis of a well-defined program that appears in the Declaration of Independence of 1776, completed later by the Constitution and by the Bill of Rights and the Gettysburg Address.

The Declaration of Independence is, in my opinion, the most transcendental document of its kind. It begins with the enunciation of the fine international juridical principle according to which "the separate and equal station of the nations of the world is a right to which the laws of nature and of nature's God entitled them"; it proclaims in the public order "that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," and it establishes in political matters one of the cardinal principles of democratic regimes, "that to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed." Since the memorable date of that Jeffersonian declaration more than 166 years have passed, and still those principles continue to be the foundation stones of the juridical structure of the free people.

Thirteen years before the French Revolution, the United States of America had set forth the principles of the Bill of Rights, which later served as a model to the new nations of the great American family in the framing of their constitutions.

My country, together with the other countries of America, and following the example of the older sister from the north, adopted a democratic form of government. It has been and is a democratic country since the early days of its history. Paraguayan in origin was the revolution of the Comuneros which in 1727, long before the middle of the eighteenth century, proclaimed to the whole world that the will of the common people must be above all other wills, as a principle which belongs to public authority.

Up until 1939 Paraguay had governed itself by one of the most liberal constitutions in the world.

The new questions which arose in the field of pure law inspired the reform of 1939, in order to place that fundamental law in harmony with the modern conquest of law; and assure a greater well-being. The problem was not stated with a view to abandoning the road followed up to then and traveling by a different one, but with a view to modifying the direction and trying to expedite it in a convenient way, leaving out obstacles and illusions, in accordance with the modern ideologies, and in line with the processes that other American countries had established. It has not followed any absolutist tendency, but the sound purpose of satisfying a need without impairing, as stated in the declaration of purposes, the cardinal principles of American democracy contained in the Philadelphia Constitution.

There is no doubt that the democratic system, as a political and social organization, is the only one which conforms with man's nature; but it is also true that any system or body or doctrine can and must be modified in the light of truth without removing, of course, the bases of the juridical structure so that it may not err by trying to operate in a vacuum. "The inquiry, knowledge, and belief of truth," as stated in an inscription in the facade of the central gallery of the Library of this Congress, "is the sovereign good of human nature."

I do not need to state that we are not dealing with a finished work. Rather, I believe in the reform of its flaws and omissions. That is why I have advocated recently its revision, after consulting my people with favorable results, and always considering the basic principles of a true democracy.

In the chronological division of universal history, the contemporary age starts with the French Revolution. The fair thing in my opinion would have been to take as the starting point the date of the independence of the United States of America, of the approval, by the Second Continental Congress, of the outstanding statements to which I have just referred, at least in America, where the seed of liberty has sprouted into institutions which honor the peoples that are a part of the American community and that live under the same civic preoccupation and the same common aspirations.

In the light of events in the United States during the past 10 years, it may not be unreasonable to state that a new era in history has begun in the New World. Let me review but two of these events:

First. The inception of the good-neighbor policy, coincidental with the inauguration of President Roosevelt, who, from the rostrum of this Capitol said that in the field of international relations he dedicated this Nation to the "good neighbor who respects himself and who, therefore, respects the rights of others; the neighbor who, in a world of neighbors, honors his obligations and the sanctity of his word."

And, second, the consolidation of pan-Americanism, from the first meeting of foreign ministers in Panama in 1939, to the third such meeting, in Rio de Janeiro in 1942, the immediate result of which was the most magnificent cooperation of the American countries ever recorded in history, for the purpose of defending themselves against the common danger which struck against them with the treacherous attack on Pearl Harbor, of struggling for the maintenance of the undying principles of liberty and justice which govern their living together, and of aiming at the formation of a world better than the present one on the basis of respect for the principles of ethics and law and of the practice of a true fraternity, as principles essential to a democracy.

Paraguay has kept and will continue to keep faithfully and honorably all her international pledges. Even before the third meeting of foreign ministers in Rio had come to a close, she had broken all diplomatic, economic, and financial ties with the Axis.

Respectful of her tradition and an active advocate of the principles expressed, she has not hesitated a single moment to put herself on the side of the United States and the other United Nations in the greatest tragedy which the imagination has conceived and which history has recorded in all time.

The Paraguayan people reaffirm, through me, in this solemn occasion, their adherence to the cause of this glorious country, which is also the cause of all America, and pay homage to the heroism of its brave fighting men in the fight for liberty and justice.

Following his address, the President of Paraguay and the distinguished visitors accompanying him were escorted from the Chamber.

At 12 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m., the Senate reassembled, when it was called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. WALLGREN in the chair).

LIDICE

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, 1 year ago this afternoon a group of individuals from the Nazi Army entered the little town of Lidice, in Czechoslovakia, and exterminated hundreds of innocent people living in that simple village. When those human beasts had finished their dastardly deed they proclaimed that Lidice had been wiped off the face of the earth. But, Mr. President, the effect of those cruel acts has been just the opposite of what the leader of that murderous gang said it would be. Lidice lives in the hearts of all the civilized world. In Illinois, for instance, my home State, a little village has been named Lidice out of sympathy for the people who died at the hands of those vicious monsters.

Today there appears in the New York Times an editorial entitled "Not Extinguished." The editorial is highly illuminating and interesting, and I ask unanimous consent to have it printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NOT EXTINGUISHED

A year ago this afternoon German troops began to gather along the roads leading into a little Bohemian village not far from Prague. Few persons outside of Bohemia had ever heard the name of this village, but it was dear to those who lived in it. On the previous day Reinhard Heydrich, who had earned the love and admiration of many Germans by killing a great multitude of helpless and innocent people, had been buried in the Invaliden Cemetery in Berlin. He had lingered a week in agony after two men, who were never captured and whose names were never known, had jumped on the running board of his car on the road from Berlin to Prague and fired two bullets into his spine—or perhaps threw a grenade which had the same effect. By the afternoon of June 10 the Nazis, by their own story, had killed 261 Czechs in revenge for Heydrich. They killed women. They killed authors and professors. But they were not satisfied. Shortly before 8 o'clock, a year ago tonight, armed men—it would be an insult to a stern but honorable profession to call them soldiers—began to move into the little Bohemian village.

That same evening (the exact sequence of events is not quite clear, but apparently the troops were at their work in the village at that time) the Berlin radio announced that arms, an illegal radio station, subversive printed material, and hoards of rationed commodities had been discovered. It then stated:

"After these facts had been ascertained all male adults of the town were shot, while the women were placed in a concentration camp, and the children were entrusted to appropriate educational institutions. The township was leveled to the ground and the name of the community extinguished. The inhabitants of Lidice near Kladno, No. 483."

A year has gone by. There is no spot on earth where a free press exists that the name of this obscure little village is not known. It has become a part of every language. The poor, humble folk who died there are immortal. They are in every town in occupied Europe. They march with every army. They will gather on every road and behind every hedge, rock, and tree when the great Nazi retreat begins. If there is any wavering on any front, any faint cry of appeasement, it is they who will go silently forward with their bayonets, making sure of no compromise, no mercy for butchers. The armed men who were at Lidice, in Bohemia, on the evening of June 10, 1942, those who sent them there, those who committed similar crimes in other places, and those who ordered such crimes, will then know that the Berlin broadcast erred in one particular. The community of Lidice was not extinguished.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, let me say in conclusion just one further word: Out of the ashes of the holocaust we are now fighting throughout the world it is my prayer and my hope that villages like Lidice that have been overrun, whose people have been murdered and property completely destroyed, may be reconstructed and firmly and impregnably established in the future, for all time to come. It is my hope that valiant nations such as Czechoslovakia and other small nations that have been conquered by ruthless, totalitarian despots may once again take their rightful place in a civilized world where peace, amity, and good will shall reign forever.

THE CRITICAL CANNED-FOOD SITUATION

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, at the beginning of the session today we heard the statement that the passage of the pending bill was the most important matter before the Senate, and that the Senate should promptly complete the consideration of the bill. I hesitate to trespass on the time of the Senate, but I desire to bring again to its attention the same subject on which I spoke yesterday. That is the importance of getting food into cans for our own people and for our armed forces. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a statement which came to my desk, and in which a gentleman from my State sums up his experience during the past week, after visiting various agencies and divisions in Washington. He says:

I give you a digest of the conversation. It is as follows:

"Question. Can you supply male help for our canning plant to preserve food?

"Answer. No, no help for canning plants, only for the farmers.

"Question. Then, will you allow me to pay enough wages to get the help?

"Answer. No, not for the canning plants. You can increase wages on the farms and in defense plants, but not in the canning plants."

Mr. President, I repeat what I said yesterday, that this Government must take action within the next few weeks, or else a great portion of the pea crop of the country will not be canned, and then will come the other crops—corn, cabbage, and so forth.

Let me read into the RECORD a letter which very graphically depicts a critical situation. It comes from Martin Meeter, of Union Grove, Wis.

JUNE 7, 1943.

Hon. ALEXANDER WILEY,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Our canning plant is located at Union Grove, Wis., a village of less than 1,000 inhabitants.

We receive between six and seven thousand tons of vegetables for canning.

Since last winter we have tried desperately to obtain relief on the matter of wages and manpower as we realize that this rural district will not furnish enough help to preserve the crops in the canning plant this year.

Now it appears that the situation is so serious we will have to close up the plant.

The War Labor Board has refused our repeated requests for wage increases to meet current wage levels in that area. Defense plants in Racine are paying 90 cents per hour for common labor. This canning plant must pick up 40 or 50 men and 150 to 200 women during the canning season beginning the first of August on tomatoes.

We have been packing several hundred thousands cases of canned vegetables for the military and lend-lease and have commitments for this year.

A recent Government ruling permits an increase of 10 cents per hour above the wage being paid in the canning plant at the close of last year's packing season. This for common labor would equal 60 cents per hour in our plant. We know, of course, that no one in that area would work for 60 cents an hour in a canning plant, a temporary job, when he can obtain 90 cents per hour in a defense plant nearby.

Now on top of all this, Government is building a $250,000 hemp plant in the same village. The construction company is about to begin this work and must complete this construction before October 1. They will use all the available common labor in the country and are offering to pay $1.10 per hour.

Mr. Senator, this is about the last straw. We have tried to organize and are organizing a food army in this village, including some businessmen and many valiant patriotic women who will do all they can. But you can't run a canning plant such as this with all inexperienced help.

We have lost quite a few men who have gone into the service, others to farms as farmers have been permitted to pay higher wages, and to defense plants. Even at this time we have not enough help left to finish packing some canned sauerkraut on last year's Government orders. Then what will the situation be when perishable tomatoes arrive in August? I have contracted for a good many thousand tons of tomatoes and cabbage for kraut which is now being planted. What am I going to do with it?

We have worked on this matter for several months, hopefully thinking that the proper agencies in Washington would permit us to pay comparative wages or assist in some manner to get the necessary manpower. We have worked diligently with the United States Employment Service at Racine, who admitted to me a few days ago that they were all through—they can't do anything for us at such wage levels.

Through our canners' associations and in person we have appealed again and again for relief—the matter of adequate wages and manpower—but now all doors seem to be closed.

It seems we have to choose between two things: Either we pack the food and violate the law, or we obey the law and lose the food.

This is no idle threat. I cannot ask even those few men I have left to work for us at such inadequate wages when they can walk right out of the plant and get 30 to 40 cents per hour more. Everyone of them has a family to support.

If it was an ordinary business venture we would close up the plant, but this means food for our boys out there and for the Nation, and this must not be. But I see no alternative. What am I to do?

Yours very truly,

MARTIN MEETER,
MEETER'S, INC.,
Union Grove, Wis.

One man says:

I called my men together in the factory a few days ago. They are men with families, who have worked in the factory from 5 to 12 years, just like a family group. We call each other by our first names. Can you imagine what a pleasant task it was for me to explain I could do nothing more for them, that I knew every man in the group could walk out and get 30 cents per hour more across the street in a war plant, and 40 to 50 to 60 cents more by going into the hemp plant that the Government is putting up, putting $250,000 of its own money into it.

The Government is stealing men away from food production, and is granting no relief. We must get help to the canners. Let me repeat what one man says:

If it were an ordinary business venture, we would close up the plant, but this means food for our boys out there and for the Nation.

Recently former President Hoover spoke on the subject of food. An editorial entitled "Program for Food," was published in last evening's Washington Star. The editorial comments on former President Hoover's statement. I ask that the editorial be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PROGRAM FOR FOOD

Herbert Hoover, addressing the American Farm Bureau Federation in New York, issued a solemn warning that our food supply is decreasing while the demand for food, at the same time, is rising rapidly. The former President, who was Food Administrator for the United States during the last war and today is a keen student of the food problem, made a series of recommendations which deserve serious consideration.

The program suggested by Mr. Hoover is designed to give this country its maximum production of food. This must be assured, not only to maintain the American people and to win the war, but to make it possible to provide food for millions of persons in the United Nations and other millions in countries that have been overrun by the Axis Powers. There can be no lasting peace without food.

Chief among the recommendations is that forty or fifty million more acres be planted in 1944 than in this year. Only by greatly increased planting will it be possible to produce more and more foodstuffs. During the period from 1932 to 1939 the administration, by its restrictive policies toward agriculture, reduced the acreage of 17 leading crops planted in this country by 47,000,000 acres. Farmers were paid not to produce. It is idle now to comment on the folly of the economy of scarcity. The thing to do is to get away from it—and never to return. These 17 crops constitute about 95 percent of the whole harvested area.

It seems incredible but it is nevertheless true, as Mr. Hoover pointed out, that after the passage of the Lease-Lend Act the Government undertook to increase food production but at the same time continued payments to farmers to restrict production. These restrictive payments were not removed until this spring. In some cases they still persist.

Mr. Hoover also includes in his recommendations a proposal that one agency, headed by one man, take over the whole administration of the food problem. At present nine agencies of the Government are telling the farmers, the food distributors, and wholesalers and retailers what to do about production, distribution, and prices. The result, in Mr. Hoover's opinion, is chaos.

In order to increase the farm-planting acreage, it will be necessary to have increased farm labor and more farm machinery. Declaring that the present price system is stifling farm production, Mr. Hoover proposed that the retail and wholesale price ceilings be done away with. Price fixing must begin as near the source of production as possible, and from there on regulations against profiteering must be placed upon the trades. Prices to the farmers must include floors as well as ceilings, and the prices must take into account labor and other costs. Such a plan would be calculated really to stimulate production.

In 1942 we had bumper crops. This year the harvest is likely to be normal—which means that the actual production of food will be considerably below the crop we have just about eaten up. There is nothing that can be done to meet this situation immediately. The plantings for the following crop, however, will be of vast importance.

If the statistics for the crops of the last year are correct, then in the opinion of Mr. Hoover, some bureaucracy has strangled the flow of food from the farm to the housewife. This is the only explanation of reports that have come from all sections of the country showing scarcity of foods. And if this be true, the sooner the hand of bureaucracy is lifted the better.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I ask that the Senate, and the majority and minority leaders give consideration to the matter of getting labor into the canning plants. I ask it not for the canners, but for my country. I ask it because if we do not, as was stated yesterday, the most valuable munition of the country, namely, food, will not be there when the armed forces need it and when the country needs it. The situation is so critical that I trust some action will be taken by the appropriate arm of Government to the end that these factories may get the necessary labor.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

CLARENCE CANNON,

R. B. WIGGLESWORTH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its action on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2714) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943, and for prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
June 8, 1943.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 8, 37, and 41 to the bill (H. R. 2714) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943, and for prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, and concur therein;

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

In the last line of the matter inserted by said Senate engrossed amendment, after "Department" insert "or the Department of State or the Office of Strategic Services"; and

That the House insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 60 and 61 to said bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, it will be noted that the House amended Senate amendment No. 5 by adding to the exceptions the State Department and the Office of Strategic Services. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment with an amendment, as follows:

At the end of the matter inserted by the House amendment, and before the period, insert "or the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Undoubtedly that Bureau should be included as an exception.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I move that the Senate further insist on Senate amendment No. 5, as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. I move that the Senate further insist on its amendment No. 60, which is the only amendment of substance now in disagreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wish to explain to the Senate that Senate amendment No. 60, as to which there is disagreement, relates to the action of the House in providing that no part of the appropriation should be used to pay the salaries of Mr. Watson, Mr. Dodd, and Dr. Lovett. The Senate is familiar with this matter. The Senate struck out this provision in the House bill after the House had adopted it by an enormous majority, as I recall by a vote of 3 to 1, or 2 to 1, and since that time the House, by voice vote, has practically unanimously insisted upon retaining the provision. It is necessary for the Senate conferees to have a yea-and-nay vote so as to know what the will of the Senate is before we go into the conference. Therefore, in order to bring the question before the Senate, I ask for the yeas and nays on my motion. So far as I am concerned, I am not taking any position one way or the other, but I wish to have the judgment of the Senate. I move that the Senate further insist on its amendment No. 60, and I ask for the years and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I am not certain that I thoroughly understand the explanation with respect to the last amendment to which the Senator from Tennessee referred. Will the Senator be so kind as to repeat his explanation of the amendment?

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be very glad to do so.

The House adopted an amendment which became a part of the House bill providing that no part of the appropriation carried in this bill shall be used to pay the salaries of Goodwin B. Watson, William E. Dodd, Jr., and Robert Morss Lovett. That amendment was agreed to in the House by an overwhelming majority—about three to one. It came over to the Senate and the Senate committee struck it out. Following the recommendation of its committee, the Senate struck out the House provision, and the amendment went to conference. Since then the House has voted to insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment. As I recall, the vote was almost unanimous. Therefore I wish to get the sense of the Senate by a yea-and-nay vote so that the Senate conferees may know exactly how the Senate feels about it.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. Did the Senate committee before striking out the House provision, investigate the facts as did the House?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; it investigated the facts. The conferees had additional facts which were not before the Senate committee. They were brought before the conference so that both sides were fully advised, and I believe every Senator is fully advised about the question. I wish to have the sense of the Senate on the question before the amendment again goes to conference.

Mr. LUCAS and Mr. OVERTON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield, and if so to whom?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield first to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. It is my understanding that when the Senate Appropriations Committee reported the bill there were no facts on this matter before the Appropriations Committee, but they were to ascertain what the facts really were when they got into conference.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no. We had a great deal of testimony brought before the committee when the matter was before it. We had all the facts except some on which the House acted, which were regarded as being secret. But afterward, in the conference, those secret facts were brought before the conference committee.

Mr. LUCAS. Were those secret facts, which apparently no one can find out about, developed by the Kerr committee?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. Why is it that the Senate, as a whole, may not know what those facts are?

Mr. McKELLAR. The evidence is very voluminous, and it would take quite a while to state it. I see no reason in the world why it should be secret.

Mr. LUCAS. I appreciate that, and I am not blaming the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand.

Mr. LUCAS. It is a very peculiar and unusual case. Evidence was taken by the Kerr committee of the House of Representatives, against three individuals, and no one, with the exception of those who were members of the Kerr committee, and those who were members of the conference committee, can find out what the facts are with respect to these three men. To me, this is most significant.

Mr. McKELLAR. The evidence was very voluminous. It was undertaken to show before the committee that these three men were members of the Communist Party, and that one man was a member of several score organizations which were more or less subversive—I believe that is the word that is used—and there was much ado about it. Much of the testimony was from the three witnesses themselves. They were brought before that committee. We read their explanations. I think the Senator can easily understand what the nature of the testimony was. There was plenty of testimony adduced on all sides in order that the committee could make up its mind.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I wish to make a brief statement in conclusion. No Member of the Senate is more opposed to the subversive elements in this country than is the Senator from Illinois. However, I will not vote blindly to discharge three individuals from Government employment upon secret testimony which was developed by the Kerr committee of the House of Representatives, and about which the Senate knows nothing.

Apparently these men are being discharged from appointive positions because of what was developed before the Kerr committee, the Senate being denied the opportunity to peruse that evidence. To discharge the men under such circumstances is tantamount to convicting them as being Communists without a hearing or trial.

Mr. President, I say that this is a dangerous precedent for the Senate to establish, or even consider, and I shall not be a party to it. It does violence to fundamental principles of free government. If I had all the facts which were disclosed to the Kerr committee, and had an opportunity to analyze them, I might reach a different conclusion; but I do not intend blindly to vote to condemn individuals who are on the public pay roll at the present time, brand and classify them among those who seek by subversive measures to overthrow the Government, without clear and convincing evidence. That is what it means. I simply cannot do that.

Mr. McKELLAR. If I understand the Senator from Illinois, he will vote for the motion which I am now making to insist further on amendment No. 60?

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. Such action will be in accord with the desire of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, before the vote is taken, I wish to make a statement as to my understanding of the case involving these three men. I am a member of the Appropriations Committee, and was a member of the subcommittee which considered this bill. When the bill came to the Senate from the House of Representatives it contained this provision barring the further employment of these three men. There was not a scintilla of evidence in the House hearings taken by the subcommittee in charge of this bill with reference to any one of the three men.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is entirely correct.

Mr. OVERTON. I took the position in the committee hearing, and I still take the position that we ought not to condemn any citizen of the United States without charges being preferred against him, giving him opportunity to appear and to be heard, and certainly without any evidence in support of the condemnation pronounced against him by the bill passed by the other House. My recollection is that not one of these three men appeared before our subcommittee, but there were those who appeared in their defense.

Mr. McKELLAR. Notably, Secretary Ickes and a number of other gentlemen.

Mr. OVERTON. The only evidence we had was in exculpation of these individuals, and no one appeared before the subcommittee of the Senate making any charges of subversive influences against these men or charges of any character. Therefore the record is bare of any charges and bare of any evidence against any of them.

If they are, as has been suggested, Communists, if they belong to an organization that advocates the overthrow of the Government, we have in every legislation appropriation bill a provision under which each one of them can be brought to the bar of justice. I shall quote from the provision which appears in every appropriation act as the Senator from Tennessee well knows:

> No part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used to pay the salary or wages of any person who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided, That for the purposes hereof an affidavit shall be considered prima facie evidence that the person making the affidavit does not advocate, and is not a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence—

That, let me say by way of inference, is merely prima facie evidence, and is put in there in order to protect the disbursing officer who pays those who are employed by the Government out of the appropriations contained in the appropriation acts.

> Provided further, That such administrative or supervisory employees of the Department as may be designated for the purpose by the Secretary are hereby authorized to administer the oaths to persons making affidavits required by this section, and they shall charge no fee for so doing: Provided further, That any person who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence and accepts employment the salary or wages for which are paid from any appropriation contained in this act shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both: Provided further, That the above penalty clause shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, any other provisions of existing law.

Those are the pertinent parts of the provision which I wish to read to the Senate.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. OVERTON. I am very glad to yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. One of these men, Mr. Dodd, comes from Virginia. He is the son of a former Ambassador to Germany. Am I to understand that these three men were called before the committee to make statements?

Mr. OVERTON. None of them appeared before the House committee considering the appropriation bill in which they have been condemned, and none appeared before the Senate committee.

Mr. BYRD. Is there any evidence before the committee that they are members of communistic organizations?

Mr. OVERTON. There was none before the Senate committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, just a moment. I think Secretary Ickes testified that, so far as one of them was concerned—Dr. Lovett—that Dr. Lovett's principal difficulty in his mind was that he belonged to too many organizations, or something of that kind. That was the extent to which he admitted that he belonged to a number of these organizations.

Mr. BYRD. He said he belonged to communistic organizations?

Mr. McKELLAR. Organizations which were communistically inclined. It depends upon who has the say-so as to whether an organization is communistic.

Mr. BYRD. Did he say that Mr. Lovett belonged to organizations which were inclined to overthrow democracy in this country?

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I listened to the testimony of Secretary Ickes, and he did make the statement that the trouble with the man was that he was a joiner; he would join anything that came along; but I do not think he pointed out any communistic organization with which he had been affiliated.

Mr. BYRD. If the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Tennessee, in whom I have the most supreme confidence, can say that any of these men are actual members of a Communist organization, I intend to support the movement to dismiss them from the Government service, if that is the only way to bring about their dismissal. Of course, I think the Department should dismiss them, but if the Department refuses to dismiss them, knowing them to be members of communistic organizations, while I disapprove of this method, I must say that I should vote to let the Congress dismiss them by means of the cancelation of the appropriation. What I want to know is, Is there any evidence which has been brought to the attention of the committee which is conclusive to the Senator from Louisiana that any of these men are members of communistic organizations?

Mr. OVERTON. It is my recollection that the testimony failed to show that any one of them was affiliated with any communistic organization. I may be in error.

Mr. BYRD. That was the charge made in the House of Representatives, was it not, when the matter was considered there?

Mr. OVERTON. It was not made before the Appropriations Committee handling this bill. I understand that there was an investigation made by the Kerr committee, and the Kerr committee made a report, but the evidence in support of the report has never been laid before either the House or the Senate. What are the facts according to the report, I do not know, and I doubt if any other Senator knows. I have never read it. According to my recollection, there was no evidence at all presented against any one of these three men that they were affiliated with any communistic organization.

Mr. BYRD. Is it the opinion of the Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Louisiana that none of these men are affiliated with or are members of any communistic organization?

Mr. OVERTON. If I may answer, I will say that it is my opinion that there is no evidence whatsoever to show that any of them was connected with any communistic organization. That is my recollection; I may be in error.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield so that I may ask a question of the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator from Louisiana has already partly answered the question which I desired to ask him. It is a fact, is it not, that these men have been condemned so far as the action of one body is concerned, without any hearing whatever, except in star-chamber proceedings, the records of which are not available to the membership even of the Committee on Appropriations of the House or the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, or to the ordinary mine-run Members of the Senate or House? In other words, we do not know on what basis the so-called Kerr committee arrived at its conclusion that these men were disqualified to hold office.

Mr. OVERTON. The Senator is correct, according to all the information I have.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not hold a brief for any of these men. It may be that they are not fit to hold office, but, so far as I am concerned, I would not convict at all in the absence of evidence which was conclusive to my mind that the men concerned were guilty. This is essentially a penal proceeding, a most extraordinary penal proceeding, whereby it is asked that the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States, composing the Congress of the United States, pass judgment upon men, as I have said, in an essentially penal proceeding, certainly imposing moral obloquy upon them, without knowing what we are doing.

I do not know any of these men. I may say that some of the public activities of some of them are activities of which I have not approved, some of their expressed opinions are opinions of which I do not approve, but as to Dr. Lovett, I do know that his son was a gallant soldier in the Second Division in the World War, and was killed at the Battle of Belleau Wood. It is going to be very hard to make me believe that a man whose son gave his life for his country in the last war in a very gallant fighting division, is guilty of undertaking to tear down the Government of the United States. I certainly am not willing to reach any such opinion in the absence of specific evidence conclusive to my own mind.

It seems to me that it is a most extraordinary and reprehensible practice to condemn men who have never had a hearing in the open, on evidence about which we know nothing, or undertake to shift the burden of proof to the shoulders of the Senator from Louisiana, the Senator from Tennessee, or any other respected Senator, trying to make them give a guaranty that these men have not been guilty. It seems to me the burden of proof is on someone to prove that they are not qualified, and if they are connected with any organization interested in tearing down the Government of the United States, that is adequately already taken care of in the law to which the Senator from Louisiana has referred.

Mr. OVERTON. I thoroughly agree with the observations made by the Senator from Missouri. As I understand the situation, these men are being condemned without any hearing, and without any evidence whatsoever, insofar as the committee is concerned.

There is no one who abhors communism more than I do.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to associate myself with the Senator from Louisiana in that expression.

Mr. OVERTON. I abhor any organization which advocates the overthrow of the United States Government by force of arms, so much so, as the Senator from Missouri may recall, that I busied myself in preparing the very clause which I read, and, without much difficulty, got the committee of the Senate to adopt it in the first act in which it was adopted, and agreed to in conference, and it has been incorporated in every similar act since. If these men are Communists, under this clause they cannot be employed, they cannot be paid, and they are subject to trial and sentence before the courts of justice of the land.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But they are entitled to a day in court, which they are not being accorded under this procedure.

Mr. OVERTON. Certainly they are entitled to a day in court.

I thank the Senator from Tennessee for yielding.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Washington asked me to yield, and I am glad to yield.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, it seems to me that this sort of procedure should be challenging to every lawyer in this body, and there are some very able lawyers in the Senate, and men who have served on the bench. I think every one of them must shrink at the contemplation of a proceeding which amounts to a bill of attainder, in the absence of any formal hearing, or the production of any proof which would be convincing and persuasive.

Like my colleague the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], I have not heard any of the testimony or evidence, and in the light of what the able Senator from Louisiana has said, it puts us in a peculiar light to sit here as a jury and approve what has been done. Gentlemen of the Senate, we constitute ourselves a jury, and in the absence of any facts at all being presented to us, we lawyers in this body would be placing ourselves in the position of doing a thing we would indict vigorously if a court in our own community should attempt to do it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Under those circumstances, Mr. President, the Senator should certainly vote for the motion I have made, which is to insist upon the Senate amendment striking out the House action.

Mr. BONE. In the light of what has been said within the past 10 minutes, I should be constrained to follow that course.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. I wish to make a brief observation as a member of the subcommittee.

Mr. McNARY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McNARY. However important the consideration of this matter, the appropriation bill is more important. The matter now being considered relates to a bill which is in conference, and we are delaying consideration of a most important bill before the Senate, and if it is to take long, I shall ask that the Senate resume the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope we can have a vote. I wish to answer a question asked by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD]. Secretary Ickes testified before the committee and said it was claimed there were a number of subversive organizations to which one of these men belonged, but that he did not think they were subversive. That was the testimony about the matter.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. We heard one of these witnesses a year ago—Dr. Watson, I believe. He testified that he was thoroughly American; that he belonged to no communistic organization; that some of the liberal groups he joined may have afterward been influenced by certain communistic members, but that he and his father were lifelong workers in the church, that they both were ministers of religion, that his mother was engaged in religious work throughout her life, that he was an ex-service man himself; and furthermore that he was recommended very highly by the chief of the governmental agency with which he is connected. I do not believe any of these three men has been given the opportunity he deserves, and I do not believe the Senate should take action in a high-handed affair such as this presents itself to be.

Mr. President, I am against anyone working for the Government who is in favor of overthrowing the Government, but I think the integrity of the Senate is such that we should do as the Senator from Missouri has said—give these men a chance before we take summary action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Oregon thinks we should not take any more time on this matter. I know the Senator from Massachusetts is in favor of the motion, which is to insist on the Senate amendment and thereby instruct the conferees. So may we not have a vote now?

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Tennessee does not want to be the only Senator to talk; does he?

Mr. McKELLAR. I want the bill to go back to conference after the vote is taken, if the Senator understands what I mean.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this is one of the most unusual requests I have heard since I have been a Member of the Senate. I have been in the Senate only 7 years, but I have never heard made a request quite like that of the Senator from Tennessee. So far as I recall, no one on the minority side has expressed himself on this matter, though a number of very able speeches, to be sure, have been made by Senators on the majority side. I do not believe the Senator from Tennessee wants to deprive the members of the minority of the opportunity to make their views plain on this question. In State legislatures there is the right to move the previous question, thereby shutting off all debate. That privilege does not exist in the Senate, and if it should ever be put into effect, I think it should apply to both sides.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to say to the Senator that there is no objection to a continuance of the debate. If I made such a suggestion, I withdraw it.

Mr. LODGE. As a conferee, and as a member of the subcommittee, I thought it was incumbent upon me to say one or two words about this matter. I try not to burden the Senate with long speeches. In fact, I do not think I have ever made a lengthy speech in the Senate.

In my study and scrutiny of this matter I did not find justification for the procedure followed by the House. No evidence was submitted to us that these men were particularly dangerous. I may add that no evidence was submitted to show that these men were particularly well qualified for the positions which they hold, and I certainly cannot share in some of the crocodile tears which are being shed in support of these men. But obviously it is an unsound procedure for Congress to attempt to discipline officials in the executive department of the Government who have been legally and properly appointed. That the Congress has the right, under the Constitution, to refuse to vote anyone's salary of course is not open to question, but I think it is unsound policy for Congress to follow such a procedure as that proposed by the other body. For that reason I shall vote "yea," to insist on the Senate's position.

Mr. BONE. Will the Chair state the motion so we may understand the effect of our votes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McFARLAND in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] that the Senate further insist on its amendment No. 60.

The yeas and nays having been ordered, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll, and Mr. AIKEN voted in the affirmative when his name was called.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I was detained from the Senate floor when the question before the Senate was explained. I should like to ask what evidence was presented to the House with respect to the individuals who are concerned?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, it would take a long time to make an explanation of that matter.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Was there evidence presented to the House Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know whether or not evidence was presented before the House committee. We had the so-called Kerr evidence before the conferees. This motion is merely to uphold the position the Senate has taken, and to send the matter back to conference, and that the Senate insist on its amendment No. 60 striking out the provision in question. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk has begun calling the roll, and I believe one Senator has voted. I hope we can continue with the vote, and that the bill be not retarded.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have no desire to retard the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know the Senator has not.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. But I did want to know the issue upon which I am asked to vote. I understand the Senator from Tennessee, as the acting chairman of the Appropriations Committee, has moved that the Senate stand by the action it has previously taken, and that the bill be sent back to conference.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is exactly correct.

The legislative clerk resumed and concluded the call of the roll.

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] are absent from the Senate because of illness. I am advised that if present and voting, these Senators would vote "yea."

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is absent on official business for the Committee on Military Affairs. I am advised that if present and voting, he would vote "yea."

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] is absent on official business for the Special Committee to Investigate the National Defense Program. I am advised that if present and voting, he would vote "yea."

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are detained in committee meetings. I am advised that if present and voting, the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Massachusetts would vote "yea."

The Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] is detained on business in one of the Government departments. I am advised that if present and voting, he would vote "yea."

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], and the Senators from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE and Mr. TYDINGS] are detained on important public business. I am advised that if present and voting, the Senator from Idaho, the Senator from South Carolina, and the Senators from Maryland would vote "yea."

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] is necessarily absent. I am advised that if present and voting he would vote "yea."

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. O'DANIEL] are detained on public business.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] are members of the congressional committee attending the funeral of the late Representative Guyer, and are therefore necessarily absent from the city.

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. THOMAS] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] is detained on official business at one of the executive departments.

The result was announced—yeas 69, nays 0, as follows:

So Mr. McKELLAR's motion that the Senate further insist on its amendment No. 60 was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I move that the Senate further insist on its amendment No. 61, which simply refers to the numbering.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Now, Mr. President, I move that the Senate request a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments still in disagreement, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. McKELLAR, Mr. GLASS, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. NYE, and Mr. LODGE conferees on the part of the Senate.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BYRD. Is the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

EXTENSION OF COMMODITY CORPORATION—PROPOSED RECOMMITTAL OF BILL

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, out of order, I move that the Senate recommit Senate bill 1108, a bill to continue the Commodity Credit Corporation and to increase its borrowing power, to the Committee on Banking and Currency. I make the motion as the result of an agreement reached this morning in the committee, among the members of the committee, that I should move to have the bill recommitted for further consideration.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am inclined to favor the motion, if the Senator will specify why he desires to have the bill recommitted.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I made the motion, as I stated, at the request of the members of the committee. No hearings were held by the committee on the principal controversial feature of the bill. After the committee held hearings on the question of continuance of the corporation, the committee went into executive session to act on the bill. An amendment then was proposed on the subject of subsidies and roll-back payments; and, without dealing with the question of holding any further hearings, the committee proceeded by the very small vote of three to two to adopt an amendment to the bill.

After that action was taken, considerable desire was expressed to know more about the bill and to have some hearings held for the information of the members of the committee, at least about the controversial item in the bill. So we have held hearings for 2 days for that purpose; and this morning the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] thought—and other members of the committee including myself agreed with him, all the members of the committee being present—that probably the most helpful procedure would be to have the bill recommitted to the committee for further consideration and further hearings.

That is the reason why the motion is made. That is the only explanation I can make to the Senator.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. As a matter of fact, the purport of the bill, as reported from the committee, is to legalize certain practices as to subsidies which now are being put into effect without any authority of law whatever; are they not?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should not say that; no. I do not think that statement is correct.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is the correct statement?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think there is authority of law.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the Senator think there is any authority of law for the subsidies now being paid by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I rather think there is.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I disagree with the Senator.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is one of the subjects which has been discussed in the committee.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me say to the Senator that, either on this bill or on any other bill, when it is reported again, if there is any effort to legalize the practices now being put into effect by Mr. Jones and the R. F. C., there will be a very prolonged and bitter fight on this floor before the bill is ever passed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not think that is the purpose of the program at all. No one suggested it. The only question which really stands under serious criticism is that of whether the amendment limiting the appropriation goes far enough or whether it should be enlarged. That is the point.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me one further interruption, and then I shall not bother him any further——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me say that it seems to me there is no question whatever that the matter of subsidies is being proceeded with now in a way entirely unauthorized by law, certainly not contemplated by the act authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and, in my opinion, in plain violation of law. Any proposition to legalize what is now being done, even by way of limitation, might be construed as a legalization of it. I simply desire to say that I am in favor of the motion of the Senator from Alabama to recommit, but that any renewal of the proposition to legalize the practice now being followed by the R. F. C. will be met with bitter and prolonged opposition on this floor.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Of course, we need not deal with that subject until we reach it. I do not even know that it will be necessary for the Senate to take such action.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the request is made somewhat untimely. I share the view of the Senator from Missouri. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not in order at this time.

Mr. McNARY. Of course, the motion is not in order until unanimous consent is obtained, and I object.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very well.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia is a substitute for the committee amendment beginning on page 89, line 15, and going down to page 93, line 4. It does not apply to the Jones-Bankhead farm tenancy program.

Mr. President, I am in hearty accord withe the opinions expressed by the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from Georgia, that the consideration of the bill should be concluded today. I intend to make my remarks in support of the amendment I have offered as brief and concise as possible, and I shall ask that if there are any questions which any Senator desires to ask me, they be deferred until the conclusion of my initial statement.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to inquire simply about the scope of his substitute?

Mr. BYRD. Very well.

Mr. BONE. Does it cover everything from page 89 to the end of the committee amendment? I simply inquire in order to obtain the correct information.

Mr. BYRD. Down to line 4 on page 93.

Mr. BONE. It does not touch the text of the bill on page 93, under the term "farm tenancy"; does it?

Mr. BYRD. No; it does not. As the Senator will recall, the committee amendment, upon motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], was divided yesterday.

Mr. President, the Farm Security Administration, with which the pending amendment deals, has never been authorized by Congress. It may be called a $1,000,000,000 bureau of the Government because this is approximately the amount of its expenditures, loans, and grants since its creation.

This is exclusive of the farm tenant program.

Mr. President, I would not deny a single dollar to the small-income farmers, provided that the loans are based upon proper and sound considerations. The amendment proposed by me would utilize other agencies of the Government that are already organized and that are operating successfully to aid the farmers of small incomes at a great saving of administrative cost.

This amendment I will discuss in detail later.

My attention was first attracted to the Farm Security Administration in the investigation of nonessential Federal expenditures by the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures, of which I have the honor to be chairman. This committee was directed by legislative enactment to make a full and complete study and investigation of all the expenditures of the Federal Government, with a view to recommending the elimination or reduction of all such expenditures deemed by the committee to be nonessential, and to report at the earliest practicable date to the President and to the Congress the results of its study, together with its recommendations. Last year an exhaustive investigation was made by the joint committee of the exact activities of the Farm Security Administration. I believe the hearings lasted for more than 10 days.

That report was signed without reservation by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Virginia; the vice chairman, Mr. ROBERT L. DOUGHTON, who is chairman of the House Committee on Ways and Means; the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations; the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], chairman of the Committee on Finance; the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], the ranking Democratic member of the Senate Appropriations Committee; Representative WOODRUM of Virginia, ranking Democratic member of the House Appropriations Committee; THOMAS H. CULLEN, ranking Democratic member of the House Ways and Means Committee; ALLEN T. TREADWAY, ranking Republican member of the House Ways and Means Committee; and JOHN TABER, ranking Republican member of the House Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. President, I wish to emphasize the fact that the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures approves of any sound and proper plan to improve the condition of the low-income farmers; but for reasons which are given, this committee believed—and made a report accordingly—that such activities could be much better administered by the other established bureaus of the Department of Agriculture.

During the period from April 8, 1935, to December 31, 1941, the administrative cost of the Farm Security Administration was $275,861,889, in order to spend or give away $714,092,031. In other words, it cost $1 to loan or give away $3.

I wish to read to the Senate the breakdown of that administrative cost.

The Farm Security Administration personnel in that period cost the Government, in round figures, $198,000,000; supplies and materials cost $30,000,000; rental for equipment, buildings, and land cost $9,000,000; communications cost $2,356,000; traveling expenses, including subsistence during that period, cost $28,769,000; printing and binding cost $1,844,000; advertising, $30,000; heat, light, power, water, and electricity, $759,000; miscellaneous costs were $2,447,000, making a total of $275,000,000 in round figures. During that period loans and grants were made to the extent of $714,000,000.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. The figure $28,000,000 for traveling expenses, which was cited by the Senator from Virginia, amazes the hearer. Has the Senator any breakdown of that figure?

Mr. BYRD. There is no break-down, except that it was for traveling expenses.

Mr. TOBEY. Was it for travel by motorcar or train, or both? How could it be possible for the agency to spend $28,000,000 for traveling expenses in one fiscal year?

Mr. BYRD. It is not for one fiscal year. It is for the period April 8, 1935, to December 31, 1941. The traveling expenses for a single year, last year, were $5,079,804.

Mr. TOBEY. Even that figure hits us in the face. It seems incongruous and an abnormality.

Mr. BYRD. The committee thought it was extremely excessive.

Of course, that includes what is called subsistence, which is part of the traveling expenses—in other words, hotel expenses and meals during the time the employees were traveling.

As of December 31, the Farm Security Administration had 15,960 employees, with an annual pay roll of about $30,000,000. The traveling expenses for this fiscal year will be $5,079,804. In addition, $230,650 was spent for communications—telephone services and telegrams.

This organization maintains 47 State offices, 275 district offices, and 2,315 county offices, making a total of 2,637 offices. It operates these separate and distinct offices side by side with other agencies who are doing more or less similar work.

I now wish to discuss the resettlement projects. I know that they were begun under Mr. Tugwell. They were the Tugwellian experiments, the most costly experiments that have ever been conducted in this country, based upon the Russian form of communism. They were started by Mr. Tugwell, and the same theories which were then advocated by Mr. Tugwell have to a large extent permeated the Farm Security Administration in its other activities.

Those resettlement projects cost originally $137,502,000. In addition, large sums were spent for development. Of course, I understand that those projects have proved to be so impracticable and so impossible of operation that the Resettlement Administration has abandoned them, but on the other hand, the Administration is attempting to operate a system of cooperative farms which is a program somewhat along the same line.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCFARLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. EASTLAND. Can the Senator tell me whether or not a single one of those communal farms has ever been liquidated?

Mr. BYRD. I could not say that definitely, Mr. President. I think that practically none of the resettlement projects has been completely liquidated, except to the extent of being transferred, as I shall explain in a few moments, to some other agency of the Government. So far as I know, the cooperative farms have not been liquidated.

Mr. President, I wish to make some reference to the so-called liquidation of these projects. Take the Arthurdale homesteads, a pet project of the wife of the President of the United States. Let us see what has happened in that case. The Arthurdale homesteads cost exactly $2,744,724. They have been partially liquidated, to the extent of $175,000, but my information is that the Government has secured nearly all the cash it will get out of them. So far as the records which I have been able to obtain are concerned, they show that only $175,000 has been collected by the Government from this costly experiment which was proposed and sponsored by the wife of the President of the United States.

Let us take some of the other projects to show the method of liquidation which we are told is now going forward. As of June 30, 1942—and that is the latest figure I have been able to obtain—projects with a total capital investment, in round figures—and I shall use round figures to save time—of $42,000,000 have been sold for $11,000,000. Some of them have not been wholly sold. Practically none of these projects has been completely liquidated.

Sixty projects of a value of $65,860,000 have been transferred to the Federal Public Housing Authority. What they call liquidation is actually the transferring of these projects to some other agency of the Government where they will be administered at great cost, and will still add to the deficit which has occurred with respect to these projects.

Let us consider a few of the projects listed here:

In Alabama there are the Gees Bend farms. They cost $408,264. So far they have been practically liquidated. They have been sold with receipts of about $128,000.

Take the Skyline farms, in Alabama, on which an investment was made of $1,260,000——

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. To what year is the Senator referring?

Mr. BYRD. This is a report up to——

Mr. LUCAS. When was the Skyline farms project initiated?

Mr. BYRD. I do not have that date. I imagine that most of these projects were initiated in 1934, 1935, and 1936—at about that period.

Mr. LUCAS. This is the thing we have been hearing about for the last 4 or 5 or 6 years.

Mr. BYRD. The same thing.

Mr. LUCAS. In connection with the early experiments which the Government conducted along that line.

Mr. BYRD. Yes, and they are continuing somewhat the same experiments under a different name, called cooperative farms, which are practically the same as the original resettlement projects. I wish to point out how costly and impractical the experiments have been, and what little value there is left in these projects by reason of the inefficient management which was given to the projects by the Resettlement Administration which was the predecessor of the Farm Security Administration.

In Arkansas—to read just a few of these—consider the Plum Bayou project in which $1,625,000 was invested. That project has been partially liquidated, only partially, it is true, but the F. S. A. has received $72,000 for that liquidation.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURDOCK in the chair). Does the Senator from Virginia yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Can the Senator from Virginia tell us what percent of that project has been liquidated?

Mr. BYRD. As to that particular one in Arkansas, only a small percentage of it has been liquidated. They have 180 units, and 17 were liquidated.

I will take another one in the Senator's State, the Lake Dick project. That project cost $667,599. There has been practically no liquidation as yet. We have the report from the Farm Security Administration that only 26 families are now being housed on that project which cost approximately $667,000. The Senator is no doubt familiar with that project.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes, I am. In that connection I wish to say that I want to see these projects to which the Senator is directing his remarks absolutely liquidated, and abolished. I think they have been costly and impracticable in my State, and I do not want to support any measure that will continue them.

Mr. BYRD. I imagine the Senator prefers cash liquidation rather than the transfer of these projects to some other agency of the Government, as is being done by the Farm Security Administration.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I will say to the Senator that I do. I think they ought to be completely abolished.

Mr. BYRD. Up to June 30, 1942, $65,000,000 out of $135,000,000 of the original cost of these projects was transferred to the Federal Public Housing Authority where the cost will of course continue as far as the Government is concerned. The operating costs of maintenance of these projects as of the date of these figures which I am reading is $1,877,000 a year, in addition to their original cost.

Take the Roanoke farms. I can furnish any Senator who wants it information concerning the projects of any State. I have an itemized statement which I will ask to have printed in the RECORD. The Roanoke farms, in North Carolina, regarding which there was a publication yesterday in the Washington Post, cost $2,225,000. Mr. James I. Hicks, investigator for the House committee studying the Farm Security Administration, testified before the committee that the Government could give each of these occupants $3,500, or give these projects to the occupants, and save to the Treasury one and a quarter million dollars.

That same thing exists, Mr. President, all through these projects.

Here is Oregon, in which $1,313,000 was expended on a project, which was liquidated to the extent of $163,000.

Indiana: The Wabash farms represent an investment of $1,241,000, with no liquidation as of the date of this report.

South Carolina: The Ashwood plantation, an investment of $1,919,000, with no liquidation.

Mr. President, I do not want to consume the time of the Senate in reading these figures, but I should like to ask that these data, which have been prepared by the Farm Security Administration, be inserted in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit I.)

Mr. BYRD. Now, Mr. President, as far as I can see, there is no provision in this bill providing for a mandatory or immediate liquidation and sale of these projects. It is true that the committee expresses the hope that they will be liquidated, but I think before we pass the pending measure, Mr. President, we should direct the Farm Security Administration not to transfer these projects to other agencies of the Government, but to sell them for what they are worth and take the loss. There is no better time than now and probably there will not be a better time to sell property for many years. Let us get rid of every one of the overhead expenses and administration costs which are constantly piling up the loss which the Government has already suffered in these very costly experiments that were advocated by Mr. Tugwell.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Can the Senator tell us anything about the farms recently bought as a matter of relocating farmers who have been ousted by defense works? It seems to me that in that case we also have farms which are apparently not being sold or liquidated in any way.

Mr. BYRD. I do not have the exact figures, but the Senator is aware that there is such a program.

Mr. TAFT. In 1941 two assistant regional directors of the F. S. A. from Indianapolis, and the State director of the Farm Security Administration at Columbus, Ohio, formed an Ohio corporation called the Ohio Defense Relocation Corporation. They have gone out in Ohio and spent $1,550,000 to purchase 15,650 acres of land. This is no old proposition. This has been done within 2 years. On that land they have relocated about 156 families, and apparently not one acre of the land has been sold, and no contracts of sale have been made. I may be misinformed, but that is the information that was given me in Columbus. It seems to me an extraordinary project for the Farm Security Administration, in the first place, to form a corporation. I do not know that they have any right to form corporations, although they have done so in all these States, whether to escape audit, or for what purpose, I do not know. Then that corporation goes out and buys 15,000 acres of land, and spends a million dollars and just holds on to it and rents it to people who are relocated from defense areas. Those are all the facts I know about the situation, but it seems to me it is something which requires an explanation.

Mr. BYRD. Undoubtedly, that is going on in many sections of the country; but the Comptroller General not long ago refused to approve some of the appropriations.

Mr. TAFT. I am told that the purchase of this land was finally stopped because the Comptroller General ruled that the use in that way, at least through the Corporation, was not justified under any law of Congress, and, consequently, the further purchase has been stopped; but, so far as I can see, there is no immediate intention to liquidate at a time when presumably liquidation would be fairly easy.

Mr. BYRD. Not only is there no attempt to liquidate, but, as I understand, the program is continuing.

The Comptroller General found the Farm Security Administration guilty in 1942 of using these funds illegally to buy large tracts of land throughout the United States for the purpose of subdividing them into family units and then reselling them to Farm Security Administration clients, to be resettled in a Farm Security Administration colony.

There is another vast resettlement program to which I desire to refer.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I regret that I have not heard the entire discussion of the Senator from Virginia, but I should like to inquire if the Senator has referred to the number of agencies that are now engaged in the loaning of money to the farmers.

Mr. BYRD. I will say that there are 20 agencies engaged directly or indirectly in making loans to farmers.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Twenty such agencies?

Mr. BYRD. Yes; 20 such agencies.

Mr. REVERCOMB. The amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia would consolidate, at least to the extent of the particular agency under consideration, two of those agencies for that purpose, would it not?

Mr. BYRD. In answer to the Senator from West Virginia, it would consolidate two agencies that are already doing such work, the Farm Credit Administration and the Emergency Feed and Crop Loan Administration, which are already making practically the same type of loans that the Farm Security Administration is making.

Mr. REVERCOMB. The result would be that overhead expense in operating those agencies would be curtailed, the farmer would get the same benefit or even greater benefit, and certainly there would be greater efficiency of administration by a consolidation of these agencies.

Mr. BYRD. There is no question about that, for the Farm Security Administration has 15,000 employees, and, as I have stated to the Senate, has 2,300 different offices located throughout the country.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Furthermore, it would mean the dismissal or release from the pay roll of numerous employees of the Government, as a natural result, would it not?

Mr. BYRD. It certainly should and unquestionably would.

In regard to cooperative farming which has been undertaken by the Farm Security Administration in practically every instance that the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Expenditures of which I am chairman has been able to investigate, it has been a colossal failure. It is based on the Russian principle that a group of cooperative farmers should farm a tract of land, each having proportionate ownership. I desire to read to the Senate a statement made by the Appropriations Committee of the House in its report last year:

> The Farm Security Administration is also carrying on experiments in collective farming under a plan which appears to resemble the plan of collective farming in communistic Russia.

This was the official report made by the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives—

> The committee believes that this is wholly contrary to the spirit and genius of the American way of life, and ought to be stopped.

Mr. President, at a regional conference of the F. S. A. officials in Columbus, Ohio, in 1941, and again at another conference in 1942, a circular explaining the F. S. A. program was placed before the conference. The circular was printed at the expense of the Farm Security Administration. Before the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures, Mr. Baldwin admitted it was furnished by the F. S. A. officials, and, while he expressed general approval of the objectives, he said he disclaimed any responsibility for the document.

I wish to read to the Senate some of the testimony in respect to that. This document, which has been under consideration by the Farm Security Administration and the ideas of which they have been attempting to sell to the country and to sell to their clients, provides among other things:

> For transferring surplus families from overpopulated areas so that the remaining families may be self-supporting.
> Creating economic farm units by combining units that are now too small to maintain a family on an acceptable level of living.
> Subdividing large holdings which are capable of supporting a large number of farmers on a satisfactory level of living.
> Minimum rural housing standards.
> Minimum wages for agricultural workers.
> Homestead exemption laws drawn in such a manner as to protect the family type farm.

In other words, make the family type farm the unit to be exempted. That, of course, would necessitate a change in the State laws and, in many instances, a change in State constitutions, because, in Virginia, for example, and in other States, the revenue of the State or locality comes directly from the taxation of land and tangible personal property.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, in that part of the document just quoted by the Senator referring to dividing up large holdings of lands, whose holdings are referred to?

Mr. BYRD. I am coming to that later. They propose to acquire the holdings by the use of eminent domain and then distribute them, as I understand.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Do they propose to use eminent domain to acquire anybody's property they may select or desire, and then cause it to be divided?

Mr. BYRD. That was the suggestion made in the circular which has been under consideration. I shall come to that in a moment.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to ask whether the Farm Security Administration or any other similar agency of the Government could exercise the right of eminent domain without the consent of the State?

Mr. BYRD. I do not think it could, but I am merely stating what the Farm Security Administration has in mind in this gigantic resettlement project for which it is attempting to create sentiment throughout the country.

Mr. AIKEN. To that extent the States do have control over the situation?

Mr. BYRD. Assuming that the Constitution is as we think it is, and that the Supreme Court will so construe it to be. As I have said, there is to be an exemption from taxation of family-type farms.

The document further proposes—

> To exercise the rights of public (eminent) domain as a means of securing the subdivision of large landholdings into family-type farms. To compensate owners of such large holdings on the basis of earning-capacity values.
> To expand cooperating farm leasing and purchasing associations as rapidly as experience justifies.
> To acquire Government title to such land as is possible.
> To retain land now being held by the Government.

That was presented, Mr. President, to the Joint Committee on the Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures. Mr. Baldwin was examined with respect to it. There was no denial of the fact that this document had been printed at Government expense; on the face of it, the document came from the Farm Security Administration, and, while Mr. Baldwin, as I have said—and his testimony is on page 869 and the following pages of the committee report—disclaimed responsibility for it, he did not disclaim his general approval of the objectives of this socialistic and communistic scheme which the Farm Administration has undertaken to sell to the people of this country by reason of meetings and conferences.

I will not take the time of the Senate to discuss it further, but if any Member of the Senate is interested in it, a full examination of Mr. Baldwin appears in the hearings of the Joint Committee on the Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures.

A little later a Land Policy Review was issued by the United States Department of Agriculture over the signature of Mr. Paul V. Maris, Director of the Tenant Purchasing Division of the Farm Security Administration. This is practically along the same line, and was discussed at another meeting held at the Hamilton Hotel in Washington, D. C., in January 1942.

This is an amazing document. It provides an agricultural blueprint of what is evidently intended to carry out the aims of Dr. Tugwell, "to make America over," to socialize American agriculture and industry, to regulate all industry and agriculture by one central authority.

To achieve these farm-tenure objectives, the F. S. A. committee report proposed to develop 10,500,000 acres of irrigable land at a total construction cost, including materials and labor, of approximately $3,000,000,000; 20,000,000 acres of additional drainable land at a total cost, including materials and labor, of approximately $1,000,000,000; an additional 20,000,000 acres of crop land to be cleared at a total cost, including materials and labor, of $900,000,000; the construction of over 500,000 new farm-building units on reclaimed land, at a total cost of $1,500,000; the construction of 1,000,000 new farm-building units in subdivisions and enlarged units at an average cost of $3,000 a unit, or a total cost of $3,000,000,000.

Mr. President, that was the program. The United States Government today owns 20 percent of all the land in this country. When we include the public domain and the land which has been acquired or is pending acquisition by the Federal Government alone, including the recent additions which have been acquired by the War Department, the Government at Washington owns 20 percent of all the land in the United States, and day by day the War Department and the Navy Department are increasing tremendously their holdings, during the emergency, without attempting to utilize to the extent they should, in my opinion, the existing land already owned by the United States Government.

The War Department alone, according to a report which the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures will shortly submit to the Congress, has acquired or has pending acquisition in recent months, since the emergency began, nearly 20,000,000 acres of land, I think it is a very dangerous thing to continue to add to the ownership of land under the management and direction of the Federal Government.

I have discussed the resettlement program, and to some extent cooperative farming, and the objectives of this organization; let us not forget that every day the 15,000 agents and employees of the Farm Security Administration are going throughout this country attempting to sell these ideas to the people of America, doing so by public meetings, and in many other ways.

I wish to call attention to something which occurred last year, when the document which I hold in my hand was printed by the Farm Security Administration and was circulated under frank by this Administration. That was proven beyond any question. The matter circulated was from the New Republic, and is entitled "Who Speaks for the Farmers?"

I mention this because I want the Senate to know that this organization of the Government is using the Government frank and Government money to denounce Senators because they have had the temerity to question anything the Farm Security Administration has done. These are just a few words I wish to quote:

When Senator BYRD called his fellow Virginian, C. B. Baldwin, Federal Security Administrator, before the committee, Mr. Baldwin testified that the Federal Security Administration was approving loans to clients who needed money to pay present or back poll taxes.

Mr. Baldwin is my constituent; he comes from the State of Virginia. I have no quarrel whatever with him, except I think he is the most inefficient and the most irresponsible head of any division of this Government. I have said that to him, and I will repeat it anywhere in the State of Virginia, although he is my constituent and I have had no quarrel whatever with him of a political character. His family has always supported me in my political career, beginning with the time when I was a candidate for Governor. This is what the document says:

The Byrd committee's all-star cast of Senators from poll-tax States were horrified by such brazen belief in constitutional guaranties, and CARTER GLASS was quick to assert that if the Department of Agriculture Solicitor agreed that such procedure was legal, Mr. Baldwin had better get himself a new solicitor.

As a matter of fact, it is against the constitutions of these Southern States to advance money to anyone to pay his poll tax; it is specifically and definitely prohibited by the constitutions of these States. Then it is said:

Senators MCKELLAR, of Tennessee, and GEORGE, of Georgia, made equally determined noises to indicate that tenants and croppers are not going to be forced to own their own farms, paint their houses, or feed their children balanced diets so long as they are in the Senate to ward off such a fate.

There are two pages of like denunciations of Senators, distributed under the franking privilege of the United States Government, and at the cost of the Government.

Mr. President, that is the type of organization the Farm Security Administration is.

I do not wish to take more of the time of the Senate than necessary. I now come to the rehabilitation program of the Farm Security Administration. Mr. Baldwin testified before the Senate Agricultural Committee that his agency had loaned in rehabilitation loans approximately $560,000,000. No one can foresee or estimate the ultimate loss to the Government by reason of these loans because of the methods by which this organization conducts its affairs.

Mr. Baldwin testified before the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures about a year ago that he estimated a loss of 20 percent, which would be $110,000,000 on the total loans of $550,000,000. Yet the assertion has been made that the clients of the Farm Security Administration are current and that they have paid their loans as they become due, in the main.

The fact is, and Mr. Baldwin has admitted it, that he makes additional loans to these clients. He makes loans when the clients are unable, as they are in many instances, to pay the installments which are due. He makes additional loans, and he furthermore has the right to make grants, to which I have not yet referred.

I wish to call attention to pages 1659 and 1660 of the House hearings on the 1944 bill. In response to an inquiry from Mr. DIRKSEN, Mr. Baldwin said:

The rule we follow on that is this: If the borrower is going to continue on the program but has not met all of his installments—most of them have met most of their installments throughout the country—we take a new note.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The new note makes him current; does it not?

Mr. BALDWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. DIRKSEN, at this meeting of the committee, said:

Every time there is a maturity that has not been paid for a given annual installment, you make a new note?

Mr. BALDWIN. Not in each instance * * *. The rule we follow on that is this: If the borrower is going to continue on the program * * * we take a new note.

Then Mr. DIRKSEN said:

The new note makes him current?

And Mr. Baldwin replied:

Yes, sir; it does.

In addition to taking a new note in order to make them current when they have obligations which have not been paid, he continues to make additional loans, time and time again, to his clients.

I have some data here from Alabama. A man named Sandy Garrett who lives at Childersburg, Ala., received $202.65 in grants. That is one of the ways many of these loans are made current. Mr. Baldwin makes grants, as well as loans. Mr. Garrett repaid only $27.79 of his indebtedness, and was then given a new loan of $274.

Mr. Ed Lewis of Hale County, Alabama, borrowed $2,406 but repaid only $163, and during this period he received grants totaling $380—more than twice the amount of his total payments.

Britt Wages received 18 loans totaling $2,224.

J. M. White received 18 loans totaling $2,628, and then paid back only $511.

I will not read more of these cases, because any amount of such data is available.

Mr. President, one of the objections, as I see it, to the Farm Security Administration, is that it puts farmers into debt to the extent that they cannot pay the debt. I wish to read from the record of the hearings the basis on which many of these loans are made. They are made, Mr. President, for the purpose, and it was so admitted by Mr. Baldwin, of attending moving pictures. The Farm Security Administration regards that as a standard of living. Loans could be made for the purpose of joining the Knights of Pythias or the Masons. What I now say is based on evidence in response to questions which were asked Mr. Baldwin by the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. I shall have that part of the record looked up, and shall read it to the Senate later.

Mr. President, the amendment proposed by me provides that these activities shall be transferred to the Farm Credit Administration and the Emergency Crop and Feed Loan Section.

The Emergency Crop and Feed Loan Section is now making loans to more than 1,000,000 low-income farmers. It has done a magnificent work. I think all Senators present will agree with that statement. In fact it has made 1,491,655 loans, including 167,405 drought loans. This organization has personnel in every part of the United States, in every county. My amendment provides that the Extension Service shall be utilized; that the farm agents shall be utilized. We have a farm agent in every county, as Senators know, and if this proposal were adopted it would greatly simplify and coordinate the work which is now being performed by the Farm Security Administration.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. Has the Senator from Virginia figures to show what percentage of feed loans have been paid back?

Mr. BYRD. The feed loans have been operated extremely efficiently, I will say to the Senator from South Carolina. The cost of servicing each loan of the Emergency Crop and Feed Loan Section is $2.54, whereas the cost to the Farm Security Administration for servicing each loan is $46.07.

Mr. SMITH. The reason I asked the question is that there has been a difference between the collections made in certain regions. In the South and the Southwest I am informed about 97 percent of the loans have been repaid.

Mr. BYRD. That is correct.

Mr. SMITH. Under certain weather conditions in the West, by reason of which the farmers do not have the wherewithal to repay the loans, they have not repaid them.

Mr. BYRD. My information is that the average of repayment has been very high. Of course, drought loans are likewise made by the Emergency Crop and Feed Loan Section.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. EASTLAND. Has the Senator from Virginia figures showing what percentage of subsistence loans have been repaid by farmers?

Mr. BYRD. Does the Senator mean rehabilitation loans?

Mr. EASTLAND. Yes.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I do not think the repayment statistics amount to anything at all because, as I have just explained, Mr. Baldwin testified that when the loans become in arrears they simply gave new notes.

Mr. EASTLAND. I understood from Mr. Baldwin's testimony that only 25 percent of the rehabilitation loans had been repaid in full.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. Baldwin admitted to the committee that there was a loss of 20 percent on the original loans.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. Baldwin was before a subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry a short time ago. The Senator from Virginia stated, I believe, that 80 percent of the Farm Security loans have been repaid. I presume that is 80 percent of the amount due.

Mr. BYRD. No; what I said was that Mr. Baldwin testified that his loss would be 20 percent. I think his loss is going to be very much greater.

Mr. AIKEN. Those figures are over a year old, are they not?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. AIKEN. It is a fact that these small farmers are a little better off during the past year, because they have gotten better prices, and that many of them have gone to work in machine shops and received more money.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. Baldwin testified that there would be a loss of 20 percent on the original loan.

Mr. AIKEN. At the present time, between 82 and 85 percent of the loans which have become due have been paid back, and it is estimated that the amount paid back will be nearly 90 percent. So that the loss will not be nearly so great as was anticipated a year ago.

Mr. BYRD. Yes; but I do not agree with the Senator from Vermont with respect to the fact that the loans are current, because Mr. Baldwin testified that when the loans become in default he frequently accepted new notes, and then regarded those loans as being current. That is shown in his testimony.

Mr. AIKEN. Yes; but do not some of our big businessmen and big corporations do the same thing? Why should we criticize the little fellow with the $200 loan?

Mr. BYRD. I am not criticizing that. My criticism is based on the fact that Mr. Baldwin said that his loans are current; when a loan becomes in arrears, and a new note is taken for it, it does not thereby become current. That is not the proper way to do it.

Mr. AIKEN. If it is proper for the big businessman or corporation to follow such a practice, is it not proper for the F. S. A. to do so?

Mr. BYRD. What I am speaking of is whether such a loan is current or not. Mr. Baldwin testified that he simply gives a new note when a loan becomes in arrears, and then calls that loan current.

Mr. AIKEN. Does not the Reconstruction Finance Corporation do that in connection with its operations?

Mr. BYRD. The Senator from Vermont perhaps knows more about that than I do. I spoke of what Mr. Baldwin said. Let me read to the Senate the testimony of Mr. Baldwin with respect to the basis upon which he makes these loans. It has already been called to the Senate's attention that he makes loans with which to pay poll taxes, but it is further testified that he has made no loans to Negroes to pay poll taxes in the South. Why that was, I do not know. He made them to the white people only.

I now read from the hearings before the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures:

Senator MCKELLAR. Do you include movie tickets, tickets to the movies, for proper recreation?

Mr BALDWIN. No, sir. This is a miscellaneous column there hat might include such an item. I think these people are privileged to go to the movies; yes.

Senator MCKELLAR. So you would include the movies. Would you include the travel expenses to town, for a chance of recreation in the city nearby?

Mr. BALDWIN. Well, I think, sir, the rule of reason would be followed. These families are poor families. They have the same likes and dislikes, I guess, as most of us have.

Senator MCKELLAR. Would you include the Knights of Pythias dues, and Masonic dues, and chamber of commerce dues, and things like that?

Mr. BALDWIN. These items are the normal cost that go toward living in a democracy.

Senator MCKELLAR. That would be normally included under the new democracy?

That is the basis for my statement, Mr. President, that many of these loans have been made on that ground. I am not going to take up more of the time of the Senate. I think we must face fairly and squarely the situation, Senators, that there should be a reduction of these bureaus of the Government which are duplicating work of other bureaus of the Government. We have 20 different agencies making agricultural loans of one kind or another. I know of no better place to start to coordinate and consolidate the activities of the Government than in these agencies which are making loans to the farmers, and I know of no better place to start than to adopt the amendment which has been offered by me, which is the same amendment as was proposed by the House Appropriations Committee, the same amendment which was proposed in the House after very careful consideration and stricken out there on a point of order. I know of no better way to start than for the Senate to adopt the amendment and consolidate the activities of the Farm Security Administration with the Farm Credit Administration and the facilities which are already established in the Emergency Crop and Feed Loan Section.

Mr. President, I shall conclude with one further statement. In the course of the debate we have heard a great deal of criticism of the American Farm Bureau Federation. I am not one who has by any means blindly agreed with opinions and followed the recommendations of the American Farm Bureau Federation. On the contrary, I think I have voted against their recommendations perhaps more frequently than I have voted for them. However, let me here and now pay my tribute to that great organization of farmers for having performed and for performing now one of the best jobs which has been done or is being done for the farmers of America. When it is said that the American Farm Bureau Federation does not represent the small-income farmers of the country I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the magazine Fortune conducted a survey not long ago, and as a result found that 60 percent of all organized farmers are members of the American Farm Bureau Federation. It is the largest farm organization in America today. The survey showed that 60 percent of the high-income farmers are members of the American Farm Bureau Federation, that 61 percent of the medium-income farmers are members of the Federation, and that 48 percent of the low-income farmers who are organized are members of it. The federation advocates the amendment which was proposed by the House Appropriations Committee and which has been offered by the Senator from Virginia. I offer no apologies whatever for offering to the Senate this amendment, which comes from the greatest farm organization in this country, an organization which represents in its membership more low-income agricultural producers than does any other farm organization in existence. I believe that Mr. O'Neal and the other men who have charge of that great farm organization are now looking at the question from the standpoint of what is best for the farmers and what will be best for them after the conclusion of the war, when, in my judgment, the farmers will be faced with the most serious conditions, after Europe has caught up with its food supplies, ever to be confronted by them. The American Farm Bureau Federation is now attempting to simplify all the various agencies dealing with farmers, so that the farmer will not become a servant of the bureaus in Washington, and so that the farmer's every action will not be controlled by the various Washington bureaus. The American Farm Bureau Federation is rendering the farmers a valuable service, in endeavoring to bring about a coordination and consolidation of the various governmental bureaus in the interests of the farmers of America.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. Let me ask the Senator if he proposes to change the manner in which the feed loan is to be operated?

Mr. BYRD. I think the bill which has been offered by the Senator from South Carolina, to increase the maximum from $400 to $800, as I understand, should by all means be passed, especially if this amendment is agreed to; and, if necessary, the amount should be increased above $800. I am thoroughly in accord with the Senator's bill, which I understand is now pending in the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and I hope the Senate will pass it.

Mr. SMITH. I simply want to know if the amendment proposes a change in the method of handling the feed loans.

Mr. BYRD. It was not intended to change it.

Mr. SMITH. The language is:

To enable the Secretary, through the Farm Credit Administration and through existing agencies under its supervision.

The feed loan activities come under the supervision of the Farm Credit Administration.

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. So there will be no change; is that correct?

Mr. BYRD. No change. There was no intention to make any change, and I am certain the amendment does not do so.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. As I understood the Senator's remarks with reference to the liquidation of the projects which have been discussed, he stated that in the committee amendment to the bill he felt there was not sufficient or adequate direction to compel their liquidation.

Mr. BYRD. That is correct.

Mr. McCLELLAN. As I read the committee amendment and also the last paragraph of the amendment which the Senator is now offering, it seems to me they are practically the same. Practically the same language is used.

Mr. BYRD. I am glad the Senator reminded me. I have an amendment as follows:

On page 95, line 11, insert the following: "Provided further, That no part of the appropriation authorized under this item shall be used except for the complete liquidation of the Resettlement projects which shall be accomplished by December 31, 1943."

That amendment would go in on page 95, where appropriation of $421,039 is made to carry out the liquidation and management of resettlement projects. I offer that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. McCLELLAN. The Senator is offering an amendment which will place a limit on the time during which the projects must be liquidated; is that correct?

Mr. BYRD. I think the Senator is correct in his statement. Certainly, the pending amendment of the Senator from Virginia does not cover that matter, and I do not think the committee amendment adequately covers it.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Am I to understand that the amendment of the Senator from Virginia is a substitute for the committee amendment which was agreed to yesterday?

Mr. BYRD. The committee amendment was not agreed to yesterday, let me say to the Senator. My amendment is a substitute for that part of the committee amendment beginning on page 89, line 15, and extending down to and including line 4 on page 93.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Will the Senator advise me whether the sum total of appropriations included in his substitute amendment is less or more than the total included in the amendment for which his is proposed as a substitute?

Mr. BYRD. I will say it is substantially less. The amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia provides for administrative expenses of $12,000,000, of which $8,000,000 shall be available to the extension services of the land-grant colleges, and so forth. Let me explain to the Senator the reason why the amount is reduced so substantially. Because the committee amendment provides for the same expenses of $29,607,573; the Senator from Virginia feels that if the other organizations are utilized there can be a saving in administrative expenses to that extent; and then the loans are reduced from $97,500,000 to $40,000,000.

Mr. O'DANIEL. The amount which might be available for the farmers has also been reduced by the Senator's amendment; is that correct?

Mr. BYRD. It has been reduced. Let me say to the Senator that there are a number of new agencies making loans to the farmers. One of them is the R. A. C. C., which recently was organized. It makes nonrecourse loans of approximately $300,000,000 or $400,000,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, next week a bill to abolish that agency will be pending.

Mr. BYRD. It is not abolished in the pending bill.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Then, Mr. President, if the amendment of the Senator from Virginia is agreed to, it will mean that, while the functions are transferred to another division of the Government, yet the amount available to the farmers for the purposes enumerated will be reduced by more than $40,000,000; is that correct?

Mr. BYRD. The amount for loans is proposed to be reduced from $97,500,000 to $40,000,000. The latter is the amount which the House Appropriations Committee, after long hearings and careful consideration, regarded as adequate. I think everyone will recognize that the administrative expenses can and should be reduced, if the proposed consolidation with existing agencies is made.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, let me inquire of the Senator if, in his opinion, the other agencies of government to which his amendment would transfer the present functions of the Farm Security Administration are now sufficiently staffed, organized, and prepared so as to be able to carry on those functions. In other words, I should not want to have the functions of the Farm Security Administration and that part of the program having to do with the making of loans to small-income farmers abolished. I want to have it retained; and at this time I should not want to have made a transfer which might jeopardize that program.

Mr. BYRD. I will say to the Senator that the $12,000,000 appropriation for which provision is made, plus the funds those agencies already have, in my judgment will be adequate; because, as the Senator knows, the extension services and the emergency crop-and-feed loan agency now have organizations existing all over the country, and it is proposed to use them.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Are they prepared and equipped to give comparatively the same quality of service in the way of guidance and instruction to small farmers?

Mr. BYRD. I think they are. In 1942 the Emergency Crop and Feed Loan organization made loans to more than 1,400,000 farmers which is nearly twice the amount of loans made by the Farm Security Administration. The Senator is familiar with the farm agents' organization. It is being utilized.

Mr. McCLELLAN. In this connection, I do not feel that we ought completely to liquidate this program at this time, when food is so vital. I refer to the program for aiding and servicing the small income farmer. With respect to these projects, I think every one ought to be abolished. That is the way I wish to vote on the question, if it is presented in that form.

Mr. BYRD. In response to the Senator's question, let me say that the Emergency Crop and Feed Loan organization is servicing many more loans for the smaller farmer than is this organization. The total number of loans in 1942 was 1,491,000.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Are those the seed and feed loans?

Mr. BYRD. It is the Emergency Crop and Feed Loan Section. It has an organization which can be expanded by the additional appropriation of $12,000,000, which would be adequate, in my judgment, to take care of the program.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Under the Senator's amendment would the other agency have the same authority as the F. S. A. has under existing law to carry on the work of the F. S. A. with regard to the servicing of the low-income farmers?

Mr. BYRD. It would have authority to make loans in the rural rehabilitation program.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Referring to grants, if the functions of this agency were transferred, as the Senator's amendment provides, would the new agency with which it would be consolidated have authority to make grants to farmers, we will say, in areas which have suffered tremendous damage from the disastrous floods which have recently occurred?

Mr. BYRD. I do not think it would have authority to make grants. It would have authority to make loans. It now makes drought loans, which are in the same class.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Would the Senator's amendment provide for making grants as well as loans?

Mr. BYRD. The language of the amendment is:

Making and servicing loans: To enable the Secretary, through the Farm Credit Administration and through existing agencies under its supervision, including the Crop and Feed Loan Division and Production Credit Associations, to administer all activities, projects, facilities, and functions heretofore carried on under the caption "Loans, grants, and rural rehabilitation," the continuance of which is authorized under the terms of this appropriation, and to provide assistance to needy farmers in the United States, its Territories and possessions, unable to obtain credit elsewhere.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Then, according to the Senator's interpretation of the amendment, it would authorize grants to farmers in flooded areas.

Mr. BYRD. I do not think it would. The limitation is as follows:

None of the moneys appropriated or otherwise authorized under this caption ("Loans and rural rehabilitation") shall be used for (1) the purchase of land or for the carrying on of any land-purchase program; (2) for carrying on any experiment in collective farming, except for the liquidation of any such projects heretofore initiated; or (3) for making loans to any individual farmer in excess of $2,500.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I wished to determine whether or not the other agency could make grants in flooded areas to rehabilitate farmers, as well as making loans to them.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I tried to refrain from interrupting the Senator. He asked not to be interrupted; but I must say that when this amendment was proposed in the House, it was not contended that there was any authority for making grants. As a matter of fact, it was insisted that that authority be abolished. If the Senator will read the language, he will find that it refers only to rural rehabilitation loans. There is no authority for making grants, no matter how grave the emergency may be.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Is the Senator referring to the committee amendment?

Mr. RUSSELL. No. The committee amendment permits grants.

Mr. McCLELLAN. What I am trying to determine is the difference between the authority under the committee amendment and the authority under the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. RUSSELL. There can be no question about it. On page 9, in the committee amendment, there is specific authority, which has always been carried, for making grants in case of disaster. That is found under subdivision (3).

Mr. McCLELLAN. That is the way I interpreted the committee amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL. Those grants are made from the $29,000,000 to which the Senator from Virginia refers as administrative expenses; but under the Senator's amendment there would be available only $4,000,000 for handling the $450,000,000 in loans which are outstanding, as well as for making new loans of $40,000,000. The other $8,000,000 would go to the Extension Service. There is no fund in the amendment of the Senator from Virginia which could possibly be used for grants.

Mr. BYRD. What I tried to make clear to the Senator is that the amendment does not provide for making grants, but it does provide for rural rehabilitation loans to needy farmers. That provision is found on page 2 of my amendment, beginning in line 13.

My amendment would enable the Secretary—to administer all activities, projects, facilities, and functions heretofore carried on under the caption, "Loans, grants, and rural rehabilitation," the continuance of which is authorized under the terms of this appropriation.

With respect to what the Senator from Georgia has just said as to the administrative cost, it is intended to utilize existing machinery of other agencies, which would not necessitate anything like the administrative cost of the 15,000 employees now carried by the Farm Security Administration.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I merely wished to get the matter clear in my own mind. Ordinarily I would not favor the grant provision in the law as it has existed in the past; but in my State and in many others an emergency exists, which has been brought about by the recent floods. I think it is necessary that some provision be made for grants to farmers in order to rehabilitate them and put them back on a self-sustaining basis.

Mr. BYRD. That could be easily done by emergency legislation. The amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia is permanent legislation.

FOOD PRODUCTION—THE CANNING INDUSTRY

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief statement on the subject of the canning industry.

The production of food is one of the most important programs with which this Nation is now concerned. Great projects lie before us, and in all these projects the role which food will play will be of the utmost importance. We must feed and sustain our own armed forces; we must fulfill our lease-lend commitments to our allies; we must provide full and ample food for our civilian population; and, moreover, we must supply needed foodstuffs—when they are liberated—to all those people who now suffer at the brutal hands of their German and Japanese conquerors. These are worthy and prodigious tasks, Mr. President; such tasks as will require the most capable management, the most exhaustive development, and the most effective coordination of all our food-production resources, if the goals which we have set for ourselves are to be attained.

It is an incontrovertible fact that the results which have marked our efforts thus far leave much to be desired. There is scarcely one segment of the food-production industry which is making its most complete and effective contribution to our food-production program. For this condition neither the industries nor the managers and workers in those industries are at fault. The farmer, the producer, the processor, the wholesaler, and the retailer are all doing everything within their power to see to it that each and every one of these food-production goals is met.

But the fact remains that the agencies created by the Government to coordinate, support, and assist in this great food-production program have failed in many ways to perform the tasks which have been entrusted to them. The result has brought confusion, doubt, and delay into every field of food production; and it has, moreover, brought decreased production in many important food lines, decreases which, if continued for any length of time, will certainly pose grave problems for America and her allies.

Mr. President, I have talked with many of those who are directly concerned with our food-production program, and they are one in denouncing the overlapping authority of the various agencies concerned, the multiple jurisdiction of agencies which now seek to operate this program, the lack of cooperation between these various agencies, the impossibility of getting a clear-cut decision on any point of issue, and the wealth of confusion, inefficiency, and red tape which surrounds the efforts of those governmental agencies which are concerned with the food-production program. This is such a condition as will lead inevitably to the collapse of our entire war economy, as well as our traditional system of free enterprise, if it is allowed to persist unremedied.

Mr. President, only this week I had occasion to meet with the Pennsylvania representatives of the American canning industry. For more than 9 months, these representatives and this industry have been contacting the various Federal agencies concerned with the food-production program, hoping to achieve something in the way of a clear statement of the Government's policy, the regulations that would be in force, and other similar statements which every businessman must have if he is to run his organization effectively during wartime. Now I will not recount here all the frustration, confusion, doubt, disagreement, and mismanagement which the operators of this industry found among, and received from, these various agencies here in Washington. Suffice it to say that after the passing of 9 long months, and with the harvesting season right at hand, the canners in America still do not know where they stand, nor do they know what they are to be permitted or expected to do by these various Government agencies.

Mr. President, Mr. Summers and Mr. Warehime, two of the representatives of the canning industry in Pennsylvania, have written me in some detail describing a seven-point program which they and their associates in the canning industry feel should be adopted, if the food-production program is to go forward uninhibited, and if the food-production goals which we have set for ourselves are to be attained. Because I feel that the recommendations outlined in their letter are sound and workable, because I believe that their recommendations might well be applied to every aspect of our food-production effort, and because I feel that they might well be called to the attention of those who are in any way concerned with the all-important food-production program, I ask unanimous consent that the letter may be printed in the RECORD at this point as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW FREEDOM, PA., June 7, 1943.

Senator JAMES J. DAVIS,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR DAVIS: The food industry and the canning industry, in particular, are in what we might describe as a rather desperate position due to the confusion, lack of direction, lack of authority, and the impractical methods applied by various war agencies to the industry. While authority is not particularly lacking, yet it overlaps in many agencies so that one agency cannot decide a relatively simple question until they have the assent of possibly two or more other agencies. If only one of the latter happens to disagree, then the entire question is unanswered. Frankly, we are at our wits' end as to how to proceed. We have been contacting, among others, the Office of Price Administration, the War Labor Board, and the Food Distribution Administration (formerly Department of Agriculture) since early last November. We have been annoyed and plagued with innumerable vague promises and cannot brook further delay, as the harvests are now ready. We intend to start harvesting peas this week.

Food processors individually and collectively have attempted to bring some order out of the chaotic conditions in Washington by applying to and recommending to the various agencies in question. Please emember that this is over a 9-month period, and we still have no answers to the major portion of our problems. The National Canners' Association, through its legislative committee, has presented a great bulk of testimony, some of which was solicited by these agencies and some which was volunteered by the association. The legislative committee has appeared before the House Agriculture Committee, the Smith committee of the Senate, as well as numerous agencies, all without results. The industry has, therefore, made out a program of seven points which we believe would be a great help in solving some of these vexing questions.

Point No. 1. Employment of personnel who are practical and not inexperienced theorists.

There are definitely men available in the canning and allied industries and also other walks of life who can definitely do a good job for various Government agencies, mainly for Office of Price Administration, who are willing to come to Washington to do a job for the Government for the canning industry, but at the present time under the set-up would not come due to interference and also other powers who would block their recommendations. This has been the case in the past years as the Office of Price Administration had two experienced and very practical men, namely, Mr. Daniel Gerber and Mr. Norman Sorensen. Conditions were so bad in Office of Price Administration that they were forced to resign as their recommendations were never taken and their policy makers would not take their advice in conferences or in any other phase of the policies of Office of Price Administration.

Point No. 2. Nineteen hundred and forty-two formula prices were enacted for all canned foods, and in most cases did not work a hardship on the canners, and the formula was flexible enough for this type of canner to work without losing money or to change his style of pack; also, it did not interfere with production. Again we wish to refer you to the testimony of Mr. Sorensen before the Smith agricultural committee that not more than 300 hardship cases came before Office of Price Administration, and also if these experienced men's recommendations would have been followed these hardship cases could have been disposed of in very short order.

The Office of Price Administration decided early last fall to compel dollars-and-cents regional ceilings on the canners. Various delegations from the canning industry pleaded with Office of Price Administration not to enforce these regulations, and testified before them the unworkable conditions on their dollars-and-cents ceilings. As an example, with a low-grade packer with no personnel and very little overhead, it would be necessary under the dollars-and-cents ceilings for the packers who are producing the most cases per plant and who have the organization and equipment to do the job which the Government needs, to pack at a loss under the dollars-and-cents ceilings which have been announced for peas, beans, tomatoes, and corn.

The formula prices have worked last year and Dr. Galbraith admitted at a Senate hearing (Dr. Galbraith recently resigned from Office of Price Administration) that to the best of his knowledge no canner profiteered on this basis of the formula system of Office of Price Administration last year.

The fact that dollars and cents ceilings are unworkable for all canners in the area, also that formula price has worked in 1942 and also the fact that other commodities such as lima beans, asparagus, tomato products, and numerous others will have a formula price for 1943, why not have all canned foods under the formula price? It would be well to point out that everything Office of Price Administration has done since last fall has been against production and quoting from Representative CHARLES A. WOLVERTON, Republican from New Jersey, at a hearing last Thursday, he stated "From a business point of view the canners would have been justified in doing little or nothing to pack this year's crops of vegetables. It is only their patriotism which assures our armed forces and the country of adequate canned foods this year."

Point No. 3. Although grade labeling, that is, the grade being put on the label, has been discarded by Office of Price Administration, the regulation still works such a hardship on the industry that it is still almost impossible to speed production by the mandatory method of putting grades on invoices.

The canning industry has built up goodwill reputation on their use of brands or commercial grades. The most popular items on the grocers' shelves are being bought by consumers by the brand or commercial-grade method. It has proved to be the most practical for consumers' good will, quality, and production. If this is recognized as true in peacetime, then with all the extra work and the problems of distribution which confront us during wartime, it is not necessary to change and establish policies at this time for the most production. In case of any disputes, the industry has always settled arguments by the arbitrary system which included a panel of three men, one representing the buyer, one the seller, and a disinterested party.

Point No. 4. Meetings were held with the Office of Price Administration officials in regard to increased costs for 1943 and the price ceilings as announced for 1943 were in some cases lower than those the canners had for 1942. The canners proved by cost sheets their increased costs for 1943. The Office of Price Administration up to the present writing has not recognized any increased costs which the canners proved to them that they would have; also the Office of Price Administration would not divulge where they got thei costs for 1942. The main increased costs are labor and overhead, as plants which used to pack on a 12-month basis are now cut back to 4 months, due to the shortage of tin. Canners are not objecting to 50 percent of their production being cut, as they realize tin is not available, but organizations have to be kept together and paid which puts a higher overhead cost on the summer months pack of fresh fruits and vegetables. As stated in a preceding paragraph, Dr. Galbraith submitted in testifying to the Senate hearing that in 1942 there were no canners who profiteered through the Office of Price Administration set-up, and since price ceilings in 1943 are less than or not more than 1942, and with the increased costs which canners will have, there will definitely be a loss for some packers on some products and some packing operations for this coming season. In addition, canners in each State were forced to certify and pay growers minimum prices. The Commodity Credit Corporation paid back to each canner so he in turn could distribute to his growers this increased cost and in the case of Pennsylvania, this was not done for beans and tomatoes. The canner will have to lose this increased cost because the Office of Price Administration has not recognized the increase to growers in their price ceilings.

Point No. 4 is that the increased cost of the 1943 packs shall be reflected in the ceiling prices. Early this year after meetings with our local War Board of the Department of Agriculture, we and other canners, following their recommendations contracted fruits and vegetables with our farmer-growers at the prices recommended. We received assurance by the Department of Agriculture that the ceilings as issued by Office of Price Administration would include subsidies by the Commodity Credit Corporation to equal the advances paid to farmers. In this manner inflation would be checked and the ceiling prices would be set at relatively the same levels as March 1942. However, in setting the ceiling prices the Office of Price Administration has used higher produce costs than last year which does not return the processor the recommended advances to the farmer. As an example, in southern Pennsylvania we paid $19 per ton for tomatoes last year. The War Board recommended $27 a ton. Subsequently we contracted at this figure. However, in computing the ceiling price the Office of Price Administration figured the cost at $23 a ton—$4 above the price of last year. The Commodity Credit Corporation took the position that since Office of Price Administration had figured on this basis that the subsidy would only amount to $4 per ton rather than the $8 differential between 1942 and 1943. The Office of Price Administration attempted to justify this with the statement to the effect that regardless of the raw produce price used by them, the difference would be reflected between our cost and their ceiling price. This statement is undoubtedly true provided their ceiling price reflected this difference in cost. However it does not. Our 1942 cost based on $19 gives us a cost which is almost identical with the Office of Price Administration's ceiling price which was figured at $23. In other words, the processor is penalized $4 a ton. This is not an individual case but is the average case. The processor is in no position to absorb this difference. Recent meetings with Office of Price Administration and Food and Drug Administration and Commodity Credit Corporation have resulted in these agencies all admitting that the above is correct. They also advise that they expect to issue an amendment to MPR 306 correcting this situation. However, this amendment will again only include part of this $4 in question. In other words, as a compromise they expect to give us $3 instead of $4. In this particular situation Pennsylvania is harder hit than any other of the 25 or more States packing tomatoes, although the condition is equally true to a great extent on other products in other States.

The above refers only to raw produce. No provision has been made for the increased costs in overhead, labor, or supplies. Due to the restriction on tin, our 1943 production will be cut approximately 40 percent. We have no complaint with this limitation order on tin plate. Due to the shortage of this commodity, it is only right and just that it should be limited. However, a 40-percent cut in production results in a higher overhead cost per unit. The Office of Price Administration will not even consider this question. In regard to wages, the canning industry wants its wages raised. The freeze order of September 1942 froze our wages at a low level and those of war industries at a high level. Subsequently, agricultural labor has been permitted sufficient increases, but this has not been extended to processing labor. As it stands now, we cannot secure the labor at the wages permitted, which leaves us two alternatives: One to proceed with our pack and openly violate the wage freeze; the other is to let the crops rot in the fields. Certainly, very few processors intend to follow the latter course. However, if we take the former course we will be in very serious legal difficulties. Numerous applications for relief by both individuals and communities have been made through the War Labor Board. Only a very few of these have been acted upon. Originally, the Office of Price Administration made public promises that if the War Labor Board authorized wage increases then the Office of Price Administration would permit these wage increases to be added to the ceiling costs. During the last 6 weeks the Office of Price Administration has reversed themselves on this policy. Apparently all of the petitions to the War Labor Board are now tabled due to the so-called policy makers in Office of Price Administration, the "hold the line" order, or the coal strike. In one case it has come to our attention: A Utah canner was authorized to increase wages by the War Labor Board but at the same time was not permitted to include these increases in his ceiling price. He has instructed his growers that he cannot handle the pea crop, and therefore has notified them to harvest the pea crop as hay for cattle. In another case a pay increase was authorized by the War Labor Board and Mr. Byrnes for asparagus cutters in California. Here again the Office of Price Administration has not provided for this increase to be added to the ceiling costs, with the result that the asparagus packers on the west coast have now been packing for 60 days, paying the wages authorized, and yet they cannot sell their pack until the Office of Price Administration provides them with a ceiling price. There is none at present. Valuable time is being lost, and warehouses are being congested, and the food is not available to consumers until the Office of Price Administration makes this decision.

Point No. 5: The industry is opposed to subsidies on principle, but if they are employed with price control, the said subsidies, together with a ceiling price, should cover the cost of processing plus a reasonable profit. In every case it should be made clear that the processor acts only as an agent for the ultimate beneficiary and is never the recipient of any subsidy.

We, as processors, do not approve of subsidies in principle and we wish there was some other method to be found. However, it appears that this is about the only method available. As noted above, these subsidies do not return the differential requested by the war boards of the Department of Agriculture. In the case of these subsidies we are simply the agents of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Department of Agriculture and we would like the public to thoroughly understand that the subsidies referred to are turned over in full to the grower. This has not been made clear and in many cases employees have understood that the entire industry was subsidized.

Point No. 6: The transfer of complete control over manpower and wages of processing employees to the War Food Administration where the responsibility for production now rests.

While Mr. Chester Davis has control over production, yet many of his decisions are hindered and delayed due to the fact that he has to refer his decisions to the War Labor Board on labor and Office of Price Administration on price ceilings. More frequently than not, no decision is forthcoming because one of the three agencies disagree on principle. It would be a great deal more satisfactory if one agency could handle all problems in relation to food production. At the same time Mr. Davis would probably be just as helpless as Mr. Prentiss Brown if he were hamstrung and obstructed like Mr. Brown, with orders coming down from above. As we see it, it is not absolutely necessary to transfer all of these functions to one agency provided there could be some relief from the impractical personalities involved and the impractical theories under which Mr. Brown is now forced to work.

Point No. 7: In all cases the experience of the industry should be consulted in advance of promulgation of every regulation as required by law.

The law provides that industries shall be consulted. This has not been the practice in the past. In a number of instances the industry has been called together supposedly for consultation only to be advised that the regulation had already been made and the industry was, at the time, presented with the results of the agency policy makers. The vast experience which the industry could offer was entirely ignored and the industry is required to work under complex regulations evolved by lawyers and professional economists. In a number of instances, practical men who were in the employment of Office of Price Administration or other agencies made certain specific recommendations. In all cases these recommendations were entirely ignored, with the result that these capable members of the industry resigned, since they felt that agencies had given proof that their experience and counsel were unwelcome. In this particular instance, we direct your attention to the testimony given by Mr. Norman Sorensen before the Smith committee. A copy of this testimony is attached.

We think it is fairly well agreed that the problem of food is probably second only to munitions so far as the war effort is concerned. It is frequently stated that food will win the war and write the peace. Due to floods, adverse weather conditions, and the conditions outlined above, it is undoubtedly true that the food production of the country during 1943 will be some 5 to 10 percent less than in 1942. The large crop in 1942 was primarily due to unusually good and favorable weather throughout the United States. The food industry has had a cycle of about 6 favorable years so far as weather is concerned, and from weather conditions to date it would appear as though the average were about to catch up with the industry. There is nothing much we can do now about 1943's food production as the crops are in the ground, except to alleviate immediately the squeezes created by the above-outlined conditions. Our best efforts should be directed at this time to food production in 1944 and it is none too early to begin this program.

We leave to you the methods of bringing about compliance and cooperation of the various agencies involved. Possibly this can be brought about through parliamentary procedure or possibly through a tightening of the purse strings. Certainly one of these methods is the only method which promises prompt relief. We do not feel that Congress should necessarily concern itself with the thousands of details. We believe the best method will be to put a competent man in charge, but at the same time see that he has complete and full authority. Any attempt at legislation either for 1943 or 1944 would, we are sure, result in months of unprofitable discussion. No fully comprehensive bill could ever be written on such a complex industry. We trust that you will do anything in your power to alleviate this extremely serious situation which threatens not only the domestic economy but to a large extent our military efforts and that of our allies, who have been made grandiose promises through lend-lease.

Very truly yours,

CHARLES G. SUMMERS, JR., INC.,

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, the conditions outlined and the recommendations made in this letter speak for themselves. The recommendations are worthy of every study and consideration—and something very closely resembling such recommendations must immediately be made effective, if the food production program in America is to go forward successfully. The experience encountered by the canning industry is not unique, it has been repeated many times over—by the meat packing industry, by the farming industry, by the dairy industry, and by almost every other major food-producing industry in the Nation.

Mr. President, we must bring order out of this chaos. The divided, overlapping, and incomplete authority now designed to regulate this particular program is vested in no less than seven distinct Federal agencies. And among these agencies, cooperation and harmony has not been the order of the day. Indeed, a quite converse situation is in existence. In the meantime the food-production capacity and the food-producing industries of America are made to suffer because of this unbearable and inefficient administrative set-up.

Mr. President, I submit that immediate action must be taken to effectively remedy these conditions, unless we are prepared to see America lose the battle of food production, and possibly the battle for self-preservation as well.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes.

Mr. LANGER obtained the floor.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LANGER. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I do not intend to take up the time of the Senate with a prolonged discussion of the subject which has been under debate during today, but I do not wish to permit this opportunity to pass without expressing my unqualified approval of the Farm Security Administration program in the State of Montana.

I believe all Senators are aware of the conditions which prevailed throughout the West as a result of the depression and the drought which passed over the country during the thirties. As a result of those conditions in my State and other similarly affected areas it was absolutely necessary for some rehabilitation program to be established and carried through to aid the hard-pressed farmers. The program of the Farm Security Administration as carried out in my State has been most effective, and it has accomplished results there which will have a lasting benefit.

I have in my hand a letter written by a former administrator of the Farm Security Administration in Montana, but not now connected with the Administration in any manner, in which he discusses the program in my State and points out the broad benefits which it accomplished. I ask that the letter be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, in my State the draft has revealed the fact that sons of farmers of Montana were able to meet qualifications for service in a very high percentage. This, in my judgment, was a result of the aid which was given to our farmers during the distressing period of the depression and the drought. It salvaged many a Montana farm family. I myself have passed over those sections of the State which were severely hit during that period when widespread bankruptcy and ruin faced our citizens. I can say here now that the Farm Security Administration in Montana has accomplished results of enduring benefit, and it would be a great misfortune to my State and to the Nation if the Farm Security program were not continued.

BOZEMAN, MONT.,

MR. JAMES G. PATTON,
National President, Farmers' Union,
Denver, Colo.

DEAR MR. PATTON: Since I have severed my relationship with the Farm Security Administration, I feel at liberty to state my views concerning the work of this organization.

In the first place the philosophy back of the organization is sound and should have the support of all people who are interested in maintaining democracy in this country. Due to the various programs inaugurated by the Farm Security Administration this country was better prepared to meet the situation relative to food production than it would have been otherwise. The fact that farm people have been taught to produce and preserve foods for home use, the work of this organization means much during the crisis through which we are passing.

There has existed for many years a "no-man's land" between the work done by the land-grant colleges and a large segment of our agricultural population. It is true that the Extension Service was founded with the idea of carrying the work of the land-grant colleges and experiment stations into the rural areas but it is also self-evident that the Extension Service has failed miserably in its assignment in that it has only touched a small percent of the people who actually need the assistance it was in a position to render.

The Farm Security Administration, on the other hand, has reached down to this lower level and given help in a financial, social, and technical way. There is proof on every side that these people to whom the Farm Security Administration has extended aid will react as favorably as any other group if they are given an opportunity to do so.

Many of our boys now serving in the armed forces were enabled to do so by reason of the fact that the Farm Security Administration, through its county supervisors and home supervisors, has encouraged and helped people to secure a satisfactory living insofar as necessary foods are concerned.

If you will pardon me I would like to call to your attention a case which I have in mind at this time. There was a large family in the Billings area who, through adverse conditions, came to the Farm Security Administration for aid. It was necessary to give these people assistance for a few years in the way of grants to supplement their loan. The children of this family were undernourished at the time the Farm Security Administration stepped into the picture, but with the assistance the Farm Security Administration gave them they were furnished the means to secure the food necessary to maintain health. As a result of this, one of the boys was enabled to pass a successful physical examination and entered the Air Corps. He was with General Doolittle over Tokyo and lived to come back and do his bit to stimulate the bond drive in Montana.

I recall another situation in Montana in which there were 19 boys called up for induction. Eighteen out of the nineteen passed their physical examination. Eighteen families out of the nineteen had also been assisted by the Farm Security Administration through grants and loans.

While to me as State Director of the program, the loaning part of the program was only one tool with which we had been provided to do a job, people need something besides money. This has been thoroughly demonstrated by the fact that many of them had had credit before and still had not made a success. With the personnel trained in the philosophy of extending aid in the way of counsel and advice, the majority of these people who are considered poor risks by other lending agencies are demonstrating the fact that loans made on a character basis are just as sound, and oftimes more so, than loans made on ample chattel security.

More important than the repayment of the loans is the fact that these people form a large segment of our social structure and unless given an opportunity to produce and have security they would become a greater threat to our country and its institutions than foes from the outside.

From my experience I doubt if there is any strong justification for any other governmental loaning agency for agriculture.

The Farm Security Administration's program is the most vital factor in the production and preservation of the essential food needed during the wartime. Its organization has long been geared to do the job in agriculture which was created by the attack upon Pearl Harbor. It is the only agricultural set-up that is geared to do the job in the war period provided sufficient funds and authorities were granted to it. Funds and authorities should be provided that would enable it to assist farmers in securing homes of their own or in enlarging uneconomic units, also to purchase, develop, and distribute to tenant farmers large tracts of land now owned by absentee landlords. Funds and authorities should be provided to extend and aid in the development of farmer cooperatives for buying, selling, and processing.

Since the Extension Service has failed in carrying necessary educational work to those who most need it, the Farm Security Administration should be encouraged to enlarge its activities in this field.

It is true that the Farm Security Administration has made what some might be inclined to call mistakes. Whether they were mistakes or not time will tell. Since the Farm Security Administration has been a pioneer in new fields of human endeavor regarding the helping of those in a disadvantaged status economically, socially, and educationally, it might be a better term to call the various attempts at human rehabilitation as experiments. There have been many things that the Farm Security Administration has had to learn by trial and error, having no precedent to follow. Any financial loss that society may have or will incur through the funds spent by the Farm Security Administration is compensated a hundredfold by what has been done in the rebuilding of the morale of a large group of our agricultural population. Further than that, through the encouragement given by the Farm Security Administration many people have been stimulated to endeavor to raise their standard of living and to take an interest in giving to their children, who are the future citizens of this country, an opportunity in life.

We cannot estimate in dollars and cents what this means to society. It means that we have removed many boys and girls from the list of potential criminals or wards upon society.

In closing may I urge you, as representatives of the common man, to use your utmost influence to secure for the Farm Security Administration sufficient funds and authorities to enable it to carry on its proper work and also to enlarge its scope of activities.

With kindest personal regards,

Sincerely yours,

THOMAS HORSFORD.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I would have spoken upon the subject of Farm Security Administration anyway, but I have upon my desk thousands of letters from farmers, merchants, and businessmen from North Dakota asking me to do so.

I have before me an advertisement in the Columbus Reporter entitled "We the Merchants and Businessmen of Lignite and Columbus Respectfully Urge Congress To Provide for:"

And it mentions the F. S. A. among other things.

I have another advertisement from the Watford Association of Farmers, made up of merchants and businessmen in the city of Watford City, N. Dak.

I have another advertisement which was inserted in the Flaxton Times by the merchants of Flaxton, N. Dak.

I have here a front-page article in the Powers Lake Herald of May 21, 1943.

I have here a petition which appeared as an advertisement in the Bowbells Tribune by the merchants of Bowbells, N. Dak.

I also have a half-page advertisement which appeared in the County Record on May 20, 1943, which was paid for, the advertisement said, by the Hettinger Civic Association, made up of hundreds of businessmen.

I have here a full-page advertisement which appears in the Mott Pioneer Press, stating that the advertisement is sponsored and paid for by the following businessmen of Mott, N. Dak. They are the same 50 businessmen, the names of whom I wish to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the names were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I have another one which was published in the Bowbells Tribune on May 27, 1943, and signed by the Burke County Farmers' Union, Glendon Bryan, president, and Milford L. Sernsen, secretary-treasurer.

I also have here numerous other advertisements with which I will not clutter the RECORD, inserted by businessmen, professional men, and farmers of the State of North Dakota. So today I speak at their behest.

Mr. President, although I am a North Dakota Republican, ever since I have come to the Senate I have voted with the President of the United States, a Democrat, whenever I felt that the President was right. Whenever I felt he was wrong, I voted against him.

I hold in my hand a letter written by the President of the United States on May 29, 1943, addressed to Mr. James G. Patton, president of the National Farmers' Union. The letter reads as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, May 29, 1943.

JAMES G. PATTON, Esq.,
President, National Farmers' Union,
Denver, Colo.

MY DEAR MR. PATTON: I have your letter of April 8 urging my continued support of the Farm Security Administration. My position on this matter has not changed since my letter of July 2, 1942, written in response to the joint appeal sent me by yourself and leaders of other prominent organizations interested in this agency's continuance.

The necessity for achieving maximum effort from all our farm producers is even more evident today than it was then. The small farmers of the Nation aided by the Farm Security Administration have given an excellent account of their ability and their patriotic determination during the past year. I am sure that with continued assistance they will equal or surpass that record this year.

I am opposed to any step that might impair the work that the Farm Security Administration has been doing among these small farm families.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Mr. President, it seems to me very odd—and I am not impugning the motives of any Senator in this body—that when big business industrial enterprise is concerned we do not hear any criticism, no matter how much money is squandered, but when the small farmers are concerned, a few defenseless, small farmers, then upon this floor for months past we have heard about the greedy farmers. Only a few months ago we heard how they were impeding the war effort, and upon this floor we heard criticism of Mr. O'Neal, Mr. Goss, Mr. Patton, and of John Brandt, and all the other great farm leaders of this country; indeed, there were advertisements in some of the newspapers of the East saying that the farmers of the country were so greedy or were so anxious to get rich that they were deliberately impeding the war effort. Upon that occasion I myself rose on the floor to defend the farm leaders.

But, Mr. President, what do we find during the last 2 days? We find the distinguished Senator from the State of North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] delivering a speech impugning the motives of labor. I have that speech before me. The Senator from North Carolina says that he is anxious to assist the President of the United States in holding the line against inflation even though the farmer's price may go up a little bit. He says the workers are going to demand more and there will be a spiral of inflation.

Mr. President, I invite the attention of Senators upon this floor away for a few moments from the farmers and from John L. Lewis and the miners, and I call their attention to what I consider to be one of the dirtiest and most contemptible steals that have ever taken place in the United States of America. I refer to the major oil companies and to the large oil interests. We have not heard one word of criticism of them, although in a speech delivered months ago by Representative COFFEE, of the State of Washington, a record was made that showed that the Attorney General of the United States entered into a consent decree by which the large oil interests took from the people of this country anywhere between $1,500,000,000 and $3,000,000,000. I hold in my hand that speech, and I have verified the letters which appear in it.

I find, for example, a letter to Mr. Thurman Arnold calling his attention to the fact that suits have been brought against three of the major oil companies and asking that it be not settled until Congress could be consulted. Here I have the answer of Mr. Arnold. There is a second letter dated the 22d day of October 1941, signed by the Attorney General, Francis Biddle, from which I will read a few lines:

> It is the intention of Assistant Attorney General Arnold to submit any plan which may be suggested for the settlement of this litigation to the proper congressional committee for its consideration before the Department officially accepts the plan.

Mr. President, what happened? At that time only three major oil companies had been sued, but on the 23d day of December 1941, some 15 or 16 months ago, the Attorney General's office at 10 o'clock in the morning sued 18 more oil companies, and, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, they signed a consent decree. The Government sued on the same day the consent decree was signed; indeed, even the judge—Judge Pine, of the Federal district court—was so shocked that when the consent decree was taken he was heard to remark, "Ah, the Christmas spirit, I perceive."

Mr. President, up to the present time, aside from a speech delivered by the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], not one voice upon the Senate floor has been raised in protest against this taking of $1,500,000,000 out of the pockets of the taxpayers of this country; but when a small appropriation reaches the Senate, which is designed for the benefit of the small farmers in 47 of the 48 States of the Union, we have long, extended debate.

Mr. President, I wish to go further in connection with the oil situation. I desire to show something that happened last November and was covered up.

Mr. President, back in the Taft administration, those who guided the destinies of our Navy were sufficiently farsighted to realize that the secret of victory on the high seas was oil. I come right back, Mr. President, to oil, and I again remind the Senate that on the 23d day of December 1941, there was signed a consent decree which deprived the people of this country of $1,500,000,000, although the question as to whether the Government had an air-tight case was ably answered by an article in the Cornell Law Quarterly, printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD under date of October 8, 1940, and entitled "Oil—Pipeline Divorcement by Litigation and Legislation" written by Dr. Forrest R. Black, professor of law, attached to the Department of Justice, who spent well over a year in studying the law applicable to the case. He revealed in the article that the Department of Justice believed it had a copper-riveted case. Although the Department believed it had a copper-riveted case, it sued 18 major oil companies on the 23d of December at 10 o'clock in the morning and settled all the lawsuits by 2 o'clock in the afternoon. So we come back to oil to find out who is in charge of this Government, whether the Government is being operated in behalf of the poor people, in behalf of the taxpayer, or in behalf of a bunch of scoundrels and crooks who are robbing the people of this country. If so, we come back to oil once more.

I repeat that back in the Taft administration those who guided the destinies of our Navy were sufficiently farsighted to realize that the secret of victory on the high seas was oil. So, Mr. President, they set aside for the United States Navy some of the finest oil reserves in the entire United States. It was provided that those reserves were to be kept in the ground where bombs could not destroy them, where the oil tanks could not be set afire, and the reserves were to be used at a time when the oil of the rest of the world was running low.

The history of those oil reserves since is well known to us. They have been the object of the covetous hands of the big oil companies. There has been wire pulling; there has been lobbying; there have been little black satchels; there has been a total of $330,000 paid in bribes by Harry Sinclair and Edward Doheny to get those priceless oil preserves of Teapot Dome, Wyo., and Elk Hills, Calif., into the hands of private interests. So far, however, our Government has resisted private greed; that is, it resisted it until a few months ago; but now I regret to read that this administration has practically given away to the Standard Oil Co. of California the second richest oil preserve in the world, namely, Elk Hills, known as Naval Oil Reserve No. 1. This reserve has been given to a company which, it is true, has owned a small part of the Elk Hills oil field, a shallow area largely overrun with salt water and containing a very doubtful amount of oil; but because the Standard Oil Co. of California has owned a small corner of the Elk Hills oil field, the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Knox, for reasons best known to himself, has permitted 43,000 acres of the richest oil lands in the United States, second in richness only to one field in Arabia, to be taken over in toto and developed during the next 5 years by the Standard Oil Co. of California.

Furthermore, it may be significant that this oil lease—or a better term might be "oil give-away"—has been given to the company which has placed its high officials in key spots inside the Roosevelt administration. They are Ralph Davies, former vice president of Standard Oil of California, who is now Deputy Petroleum Administrator and has charge of most of the Nation's petroleum activities for war under Secretary Ickes. It seems to me significant that Mr. Davies has been drawing a salary of $56,000 from Standard of California and at the same time drawing $8,000 from the Government. He is not a dollar-a-year man; he accepts a Government salary. But also, during all of last year, he continued to draw a salary from the company which has now received this bonanza oil lease from the Roosevelt administration.

Then, working with Mr. Davies, is another important member of Standard Oil of California, Mr. Howard Marshall, its attorney. Mr. Marshall was formerly an attorney for the Office of the Petroleum Administration, in the old N. R. A. days, and prepared an important legal case against Standard Oil of California. Just before that case was to go to trial, he left the Government to join the legal staff of Standard. And now he is back in the Government again, weaving in and out of private industry and Government offices like a shuttlecock, and working with Mr. Davies for the Petroleum Administrator for War.

Another Standard of California official in Washington is Mr. Mark Thornburg, oil adviser to the State Department. Still another interesting figure, who left Washington last week, is Mr. Ed Pauley, who has just resigned as secretary of the Democratic National Committee, but remains its treasurer. Mr. Pauley has been very close to Standard Oil of California in the past. He himself is an oil operator, and some time ago sold out his interest to a subsidiary of Standard of California. He is on intimate terms with Mr. Ralph Davies, and also, of course, he is on intimate terms with the President of the United States.

Now let us examine more carefully what this deal between the Navy and Standard Oil of California involves, by which our priceless oil reserves are given away for a song. This contract between Standard and the Navy was signed on November 18, 1942, by the Secretary of the Navy, Frank Knox. It was a very hush-hush deal. These oil lands had created more comment, more debate, more discussion, than any others in the world. They were responsible for the resignation of two members of the Harding Cabinet, Albert B. Fall and Edwin Denby. Yet the Navy Department, very quietly, without letting anyone know about it, without even discussing the matter with other members of the Roosevelt Cabinet, signed this contract, rushed it to the White House, and somehow or other got it approved by the President in a single day. Why the President acted in 1 day, only he knows. Other officials have known memoranda and contracts to remain on his desk for weeks. But here was a deal in which the entire Nation was interested, and the subject of which had been the source of great controversy in the past, and which many of our distinguished colleagues had spent weeks and months in protecting.

Yet, after the President signed on November 18, and without waiting for any congressional approval or any congressional appropriation, Standard Oil of California rushed its drills and derricks on to Elk Hills and began drilling for oil. They began on November 20, and already have drilled eight excellent wells.

Meanwhile, the Secretary of the Interior, in charge of Public Lands, who is also the Petroleum Administrator, was not informed regarding this vital contract. Nor was the Justice Department, whose Lands Division is supposed to negotiate contracts regarding public lands, informed of this give-away of the Navy's vital oil resources. The only indication which leaked out at the time was a threadbare and very deceptive statement issued by the Navy on December 11, which stated that—

> The Secretary of the Navy has entered into an agreement for acquisition of lands owned by Standard Oil of California in Naval Oil Reserve No. 1 and for operation of the field by Standard.

It will be noted that this Navy announcement states that the Navy has acquired lands owned by Standard Oil of California. Remember that word, in view of the real terms of the contract. The Navy's meager statement goes on to say:

> This oil reserve has been enlarged to include all of Elk Hills. By the terms of the agreement the Standard Oil Co. will convey to the Government its 8,330 acres of land. The Navy will compensate Standard for its interest, for the wells and property on the reservation, in the ratio of their respective interests.

The whole tenor of this brief naval announcement gives the impression that the Navy has acquired something, rather than has given it away. However, the press was given no opportunity to review the terms of the contract, nor was the Congress, nor was the Cabinet. Particularly, it is significant that the man who has fought for conservation of oil in the past, Secretary of the Interior Ickes, was not permitted to know anything about the deal.

But, by accident, the Interior Department and the Justice Department heard about the deal, and secured a copy of the contract. And when they did so they were horrified. For they found, instead of the United States Government acquiring lands, actually the Navy had given away for a period of 5 years all of its carefully preserved oil lands in Elk Hills. And, after the 5 years, two-thirds of the oil goes to Standard Oil of California, while only one-third is returned to the Navy Department. And yet, out of the 43,000 acres, Standard owns only 8,000 acres, or less than one-fourth. In other words, Standard contributes one-fourth of the oil lands—most of them overrun with salt water—and in return for that one-fourth it receives two-thirds of the oil—after the first 5 years. But during that first 5 years, Standard receives all the oil and the Navy receives none.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McCLELLAN in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. LANGER. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Who pays the cost of development?

Mr. LANGER. There was supposed to be a $2,000,000 appropriation for that purpose, but the Standard Oil Co. did not wait for that money. The Standard Oil Co. rushed in and drilled wells within 2 days after the contract was signed.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Does the Standard Oil Co. of California participate in the cost of that development program?

Mr. LANGER. The Standard Oil Co. pays for it in its entirety, but that land is all proven land. It is not a wildcat proposition at all; it is all proven territory. It is the outstanding oil field in the world, next to one in Arabia.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I should like to bring to the Senator's attention the fact that that field was laid up to serve the Navy in time of war, and, without knowing any of the facts, it may be that the Navy thought this was the time to release the oil for the war effort.

Mr. LANGER. Then why the secrecy?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I do not know. There may have been a military reason for it.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy during the last war, wrote a letter to Senator La Follette, Sr., some years ago, in which he said:

> I remember one night toward the end of a session that Mr. Roosevelt [then Assistant Secretary of the Navy] and I remained at the Capitol all night long, watching the legislation of closing hours fearing that some act might be passed that would turn over these invaluable oil reserves to parties who laid claim to them without even decent shadow of title.

Secretary Daniels was referring to the last war.

But now the shoe is on the other foot and it is the Congress of the United States, not the Navy, which is attempting to preserve the oil reserves of the fleet.

We all remember the day when the Teapot Dome and Elk Hills oil scandals first were brought to light. There was no accusation of graft against the then Secretary of the Navy, Edwin Denby. It was only a charge that he was weak-kneed. He had bowed to Albert B. Fall. He had permitted the transfer of these oil lands to the Interior Department. And, because of that, Denby resigned.

Since then the oil reserves were transferred from the Interior Department back to the Navy for safekeeping. And now the Nation is faced with another weak-kneed Secretary of the Navy, a Secretary who, without informing the public, signed away this coveted wealth of oil.

Let me review briefly some of the actions of this same Secretary of the Navy and some of the men he has placed in positions of trust around him. I think we all agree that a man is known by the company he keeps and that a high official of the Government is known by the men he chooses for positions of trust near him.

One of the most important speeches ever made by the President of the United States, Mr. Roosevelt, was on March 4, 1933, when, with the banks of the Nation closed, he promised to "drive the money changers out of the temple." That speech thrilled the Nation, and Mr. Roosevelt in the immediate months that followed proceeded to carry out his pledge and did drive the money changers out of the temple.

But now I call your attention to the manner in which the money changers have come back into the temple. Furthermore, they have come back into the temple of our fighting forces, the first line of our national defense, the Navy. Examine the men whom Frank Knox has placed in the key positions in the Navy Department. First, there is the Under Secretary of the Navy, Mr. James Forrestal, former president of Dillon, Read, a banker. Next there is Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Artemus L. Gates, of the New York Trust Co., another banker. Next there is Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Ralph Bard, president of the Chicago Investors Corporation, another banker.

Now I would like to ask what a banker knows about fighting. What does he know about running the Navy? A man who directs the Navy must know what it means to take chances. He must have courage, nerve, daring, intestinal fortitude of the highest quality. But what does a banker know about taking chances? What does a banker know about initiative, technical development, farsightedness, planning?

A banker is trained not to take chances. He is trained to hold back, never to push forward. He is trained to avoid taking risks. His job is to protect his investors, protect his stockholders. The last thing in his line is to cruise out and meet the enemy. He hides behind barred windows, shelters; he is trained to squeeze, to scale down interest, to shave every penny.

What, I ask, is there about the banking business which can contribute to the operation of a great Navy? What is there in the record of Mr. Artemus Gates, as a member of the Greenwich Savings Bank, or the American Surety Co., or the Mercantile Insurance Co., or the North British and Mercantile Insurance Co. which would help him to operate the greatest Navy in the world?

And what is there in the record and experience of Mr. James Forrestal, the Under Secretary of the Navy, as a banker which would qualify him to direct our admirals in the greatest war in history? Is it because he negotiated a loan to Bolivia which precipitated the famous Chaco War between Bolivia and Paraguay? Is that what makes him the good executive to direct a naval war and to give away our oil reserves?

Four weeks ago, when President Penaranda of Bolivia was visiting Washington, the President of the United States, Mr. Roosevelt, actually had to apologize for the loans which the Under Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Forrestal, had forced upon Bolivia. Mr. Roosevelt in press conference stated publicly:

I told the President of Bolivia that I wanted to apologize for the loans we had forced his country to take. Those bonds were sold at such high prices, at a time when nobody in Bolivia wanted the loan anyway, that Bolivia was forced to default. If I have anything to do with it—there will be no more bond selling of that kind in Latin America.

The only company which had sold bonds to Bolivia was Dillon Read, of which James Forrestal, Under Secretary of the Navy, was president. Furthermore, the circumstances under which those bonds were sold were extremely unfortunate. The famous Vickers Arms Co., of England, had sold Bolivia a quantity of arms and ammunition with which Bolivia was building up its army to make war against its neighbor Paraguay. Vickers was unable to collect from Bolivia, so what did Dillon Read under Mr. James Forrestal do? It stepped in and put up the money of American widows, American school teachers, and American orphans, and loaned not merely $5,000,000 but $28,000,000 to Bolivia. There were even rumors at the time that the Bolivian Minister of Finance got a cut out of the deal.

Yet, this man, for whom the President of the United States apologized, who forced these war loans on Bolivia, is now sitting at the right hand of Secretary of the Navy Knox, helping to give away our oil lands.

But here is the prize gentleman who directs the destinies of our great Navy, at the right hand of Secretary Knox. He is Joseph W. Powell, who has a very interesting record. In the last war, Mr. Powell was vice president of the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Co., and, as such, built ships for the United States Government under circumstances which have been the subject of very important litigation by the Justice Department. The Justice Department has sued the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Co., and the case went up to the Supreme Court of the United States, which handed down a scathing opinion. Although in that opinion the Court found for the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Co., it did so only because the United States Government had delayed 20 years before bringing suit. However, the most interesting part of the opinion is the Supreme Court's remarks about the special assistant to the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Joseph Powell.

According to Associate Justice Frankfurter and the district court's findings, Mr. Powell was guilty of daylight robbery. The district court, according to Associate Justice Frankfurter, found that Powell "adopted the famous Rob Roy distinction—he admitted he was a robber, but proudly proclaimed that he was no thief."

Associate Justice Frankfurter pointed out that Charles Piez, vice president and general manager of the United States Fleet Corporation, had had no previous shipbuilding experience, and that—

Relations between Powell and Piez were very close. Piez, as Powell knew, had had no shipbuilding experience whatsoever, had implicit confidence in Powell's integrity and shipbuilding ability and experience, and was accustomed to look to him for information and assistance with respect to matters of shipbuilding.

United States shipping authorities attempted to "persuade Powell to undertake the construction upon a lump-sum basis," according to Justice Frankfurter. Powell was adamant, however, and insisted on a contract which cost the Government excess profits of $26,759,479. Or, as Justice Frankfurter summarizes it—

The estimated costs were almost 29 percent greater than the actual costs. Nowhere in the long record, as the master found, is there any explanation or justification for the tremendous disparity between the estimated costs submitted by Bethlehem, those specified in the contracts, and the actual cost. Bethlehem's profits under these contracts amount to approximately $24,000,000. * * * Bethlehem took absolutely no risk of loss. In addition, the Government agreed to advance all sums necessary to finance the construction of the vessels. Even in usurious transactions the lender takes the risk of the borrower's insolvency. Here Bethlehem took no risk at all.

That is the kind of a deal which Joseph Powell, the right-hand man of Secretary Knox, put across on the Government in the last war. Yet, despite that fact, he was given a place of confidence, a place of trust, as the personal adviser to the Secretary of the Navy in this war.

Furthermore, Secretary Knox had had occasion to know something about Joseph Powell much more recently. During a recent congressional investigation it was revealed that Mr. Powell had rented an apartment at the Shoreham Hotel and had paid for the expenses of Mr. Anning Prall, Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission. At the time, that news caused considerable publicity and much unfavorable criticism. Mr. Powell then was a lobbyist in Washington; and he was charged with using his friend, Mr. Anning Prall, Chairman of the F. C. C., to aid his private business connections.

Yet, despite all those known facts about Mr. Powell, the Secretary of the Navy gave him a position of vital confidence. It is no wonder, when a man has been instrumental in taking $24,000,000 out of the pockets of the Government in 1917 and 1918, and is trusted by the Secretary of the Navy, that the Secretary of the Navy looks with indifference or even approval on the robbing of our national oil reserves by the Standard Oil Co. of California at this time.

Mr. President, I call the attention of Senators who are opposed to the Farm Security Administration to another kind of deal. Only a few days ago the Senate voted in favor of the extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. Under the reciprocal trade agreement in effect with Mexico at the present time we have made an agreement to import from Mexico 700,000 head of cattle at 3 cents a pound. Not satisfied with the millions we have given her under lend-lease, Mexico put an export duty of 1½ cents a pound on those cattle. By that subterfuge we are financing the Mexican Government to the extent of 1½ cents on each pound of cattle so imported. The Mexican peon gets the other 1½ cents a pound for raising the cattle. Our American farmers are asked to raise cattle in competition with cattle selling for 3 cents a pound.

Again, Mr. President, I listened with interest to what the distinguished junior Senator from Virginia had to say about socialism and communism. It happened that on about the same day when President Roosevelt took office, I took office as Governor of the State of North Dakota. The distinguished junior Senator from Virginia says that what transpired in the establishment of the Farm Security Administration and kindred organizations was socialism or communism; to quote him exactly, he said it was following Russian communism.

Mr. President, I believe that when the history of this war is written, and when the historians come to detail to the people of the future the tragic conditions of the farmers of this country in 1933, 1934, 1935, and 1936, the verdict will be that President Roosevelt avoided a revolution in this country. I remember well when, in October 1933, former Senator Herring called a conference of Governors of 11 farm States. At that time we went to Des Moines, Iowa. Outside the territory of North Dakota, into Minnesota, into Nebraska, into Kansas, and into Iowa, wherever one went, the farmers were on strike. They were tipping over automobiles containing cream cans. In the State of the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], we found that the first night we were in Lincoln, a man was killed a few miles south of the town. Governor Bryan, who had a brother-in-law down there, sent for him because, he said, revolution was breaking out in the State of Nebraska.

In the great State of Iowa—I note that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] is present, and he will bear me out—in October 1933 the farmers burned or dynamited every bridge leading into Sioux Falls, Iowa. At the Governors' conference, five Governors, of whom I was one, were selected to come to Washington.

I well remember that when we walked into the Office of the President of the United States, there was Leo Crowley. He had in his hand six telegrams from six different cities in the State of Wisconsin. Three of the telegrams told how creameries had been blown up or burned down. In three other cases the farmers had put coal oil into the churns and vats to wreck the creameries. That was all brought to the attention of the President. It was then, and only then, when the President saw the desperate situation which was facing the farmers of the country, with rye selling at 7 cents a bushel, wheat at 24 cents a bushel, corn at 13 to 15 cents a bushel, and eggs at 3 to 4 cents a dozen, that the President took the action which I shall describe in a few moments.

What was the situation in my own State? I have in my hand a report, not made to me when I was Governor, but made to my successor in office, Governor Moses, after I left the Governor's office, after we had had one good crop.

In Rolette County there were 997 farmers. Fifty-seven were self-supporting; 138 were partly self-supporting; 241 were dependent; 246 were renters; and 315 farmers had no roof over their heads. They were squatting, going from one place to another, trying to find somewhere to live.

It was at that time that the Farm Security Administration came along and gave those poor people $346,000. The administration gave it to them because they needed it.

Take the Indian reservations. It has been stated on this floor that other agencies will lend money to those poor people. I was the Governor of North Dakota. We have Indian reservations in my State. Many of those Indians have farmed for years. They are men of good reputation and character. Does anyone suppose that those Indians could get a single bank to make them a loan? The banks would not make loans at the Standing Rock Reservation near the home of my distinguished friend, the Senator from South Dakota. They would not lend a dollar. They would not lend a dollar to the Indians on the Elbow Woods Reservation. So I telephoned to John Collier and told him the desperate situation, and John Collier sent $12,000 by telegraph. A few days later we needed more money, and again he sent it by telegraph. Time and time again John Collier sent money there to keep those Indians from starving to death.

Finally, after much persuasion, we induced the Farm Security Administration to make 12 loans, 6 to the Indians of the Standing Rock Reservation, and 6 to the Indians at Elbow Woods.

What does the record show? It shows that those Indians paid back their loans better than the average white man did; and yet today if we take away the Farm Security Administration, I do not know of a single place where those thousands of Indians will be able to go to obtain a loan. The same thing is true of the renters in various parts of the State of North Dakota.

I was interested in what the distinguished Senator from North Carolina had to say 2 or 3 days ago. That brings me to the subject of prostitution. I now quote from Federal Probation, a quarterly journal of correctional philosophy and practice, published by the Administrative Office of the United States Courts in cooperation with the Bureau of Prisons of the Department of Justice, Washington, D. C. I ask the distinguished Senator from Virginia and the distinguished Senator from North Carolina where the prostitutes around camps are coming from. I have before me an article by Helen Hironimus, warden of the Federal Reformatory for Women, at Alderson, W. Va. What does she say? Let me read:

SURVEY OF 100 MAY ACT VIOLATORS COMMITTED TO THE FEDERAL REFORMATORY FOR WOMEN

(By Helen Hironimus, warden, Federal Reformatory for Women, Alderson, W. Va.)

The word "prostitute" brings to mind the picture of a person somewhat different from anyone included in this survey. The popular conception is that of a flashily dressed, gay, and reckless young woman with a certain amount of sophistication.

Recent articles lead one to believe that a prostitute from a camp area might be a homesick, bewildered young girl who left her home in a distant State expecting to marry her soldier sweetheart but found him departed from camp and herself stranded.

We expected to receive both these types of young women as violators of the May Act,[1] but instead there are very few who answer either description. When the United States marshals began depositing the undernourished, dejected, and bedraggled young girls and women on our doorstep we realized that we were in error. With only six exceptions, they have come from submarginal, industrial, and agricultural areas. Under ordinary circumstances most of them would have spent their lives in poverty and obscurity, but the world upheaval has changed their destinies. They were ill-equipped for the rapid whirl of soldiers, easy money, beer taverns, and freedom from drudgery, drabness, and monotony. The six exceptions are young girls who followed sweethearts or husbands to camp and resorted to prostitution when their funds were exhausted.

ANALYSIS OF THE FIRST 100 CASES

The cases included in this survey are those of the first 100 women committed to the Alderson institution for violation of the May Act. To date the statute has been invoked in two military areas surrounding Fort Bragg, N. C., and Camp Forrest, Tenn., and the cases were received from the Federal district courts in the eastern district of Tennessee and the eastern and middle districts of North Carolina.

Race: Included in the group are 68 white offenders, 20 Negroes, and 12 Croatan Indians. The latter are all residents of an Indian settlement in North Carolina.

Period of commitment: Seventy-three of the women were committed for periods of from 10 to 12 months; 21, to 6 months; and 6, to periods of 3 to 4 months.

Age: The women ranged in age from 15 to 65, but, as might be anticipated, younger women constituted the largest portion of the group. Only 10 were above the age of 35.

Normal (I. Q. 90–110)	8
All cases [1]	100

[1] Average I. Q. for all cases is 67.7 (moron).

Educational achievement and intelligence level: The educational attainment of the 100 May Act violators, as indicated in table II, is quite low. The low level of achievement is explained in part by the restricted educational facilities and the limited opportunities for academic instruction in the areas in which most of the women have lived. Also significant in this connection are the results of standardized intelligence tests administered to the group (see table III). The school achievement claimed was belied by the fact that many of the women who had indicated completion of the fifth grade were found to be completely illiterate. A variety of explanations was given by the women for their limited school achievement; lack of suitable clothing or funds for books, inability to progress, irregularity of attendance, need for assistance in the home were among the most frequent.

Family and environmental background: A review of the family and environmental backgrounds of the group provides conclusive evidence that few of the women are of the sophisticated urban type. Nearly all were reared in rural areas or in small towns, and only nine in cities. Although half of the group came from farm homes, all but six were those of sharecroppers or tenant farmers. The parents of but eight were skilled workers and only one parent had professional status.

While it is difficult to establish with certainty the economic level of the homes, the facts available indicate that 67 came from submarginal homes, 27 from marginal, 2 from fair, and 4 from good homes.

The social histories are replete with recitals of domestic difficulties in the parental background. Forty-three came from broken homes, and in many of these, as well as in the other cases, delinquency, alcoholism, neglect, and cruelty were common. Other homes, while not vicious, were inadequate because of physical disability of the parents, or the absence of constructive discipline. In many instances the mother is reported to have been sexually promiscuous, cohabiting with various men and rearing illegitimate children in the home.

Marital status: The unsettled character of the environment, the limited educational background, and the restricted mental capacities of the group have their reflection in the adjustments made by the women in their various communities.

Of the 53 women who had married, 31 were reported to have been separated or divorced. That several of the group were sexually promiscuous is evidenced by the fact that a total of 31 illegitimate children are listed in the case histories, while 2 other offenders are presently pregnant with paternity unknown.

Employment history: Work histories are extremely limited and of slight consequence. Six women had histories of employment in textile mills or in laundries, 3 had worked on farms, 18 as domestics. An additional 15 claimed experience as waitresses, but for the most part this represented employment in taverns, tourist camps, dance halls, and the like.

Arrest record: That some members of the group already were known to the police and the courts is not altogether surprising. The fingerprint reports of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and other official records revealed that 64 of the offenders had been arrested previously. The majority of the prior arrests were not for serious law violations, arrests for misdemeanors were predominant. Charges of assault, disorderly conduct, drunkenness, solicitation, prostitution, and vagrancy account for more than two-thirds of the total number of arrests reported for the group. The justifiable inference from these records is that the delinquent activities of the group have been restricted to relatively minor law violations and that the number of habitual or professional offenders was very small.

History of prostitution: While it was clear from the arrest records that several of the women were involved in delinquencies when quite young, it was found quite difficult to establish with any degree of accuracy the length of time that any individual had been involved in prostitution or the age at which prostitution had begun. Sexual promiscuity, in many instances, dated to adolescence apparently as a consequence of the low moral standards of the homes and limited parental discipline. In few cases there is evidence of a history of professional prostitution for a considerable period, but for the most part, participation in sex activities on a commercial basis had its beginnings with the construction of military camps in the areas of residence. From the case histories and from interviews one is convinced, moreover, that there are a large number of the women who cannot be classified as prostitutes, but who are occasionally sexually promiscuous and whose activities would have escaped the attention of law-enforcement agents had their companions not been soldiers.

Use of alcohol and drugs: Almost without exception, the women who became sexually promiscuous when over 30 condone their actions on the grounds that they drank excessively. This reason also is given by a number of younger women. Only 9 of the women claimed abstinence from the use of alcohol, 35 reported themselves moderate or occasional drinkers, and 56 indicated excessive drinking. Of the latter group, 23 reported extended histories of alcoholism. None of the May Act violators committed to date has been found to be addicted to the use of narcotics. The excessive use of alcohol may well be symptomatic of fundamental problems of a psychological nature.

Other factors undoubtedly contributed to these delinquencies. Again the inadequacies of the community environment cannot be overlooked, but the precipitating condition was undoubtedly the introduction to the areas of large numbers of men having limited resources for amusement and relatively large amounts of money to spend. As one young girl expressed it, "There was more money and more men than we had ever seen, and we lost our heads."

Methods of operation: Further evidence of the fact that the activities of the violators were more or less spontaneous results of the impact of the war situation upon their individual lives is gained from the investigation of the character of the relationships. There is little indication that the activities were organized. The usual well-developed pattern of procurers, "madams," and brothels is nowhere in evidence. Only 24 of the women operated in houses. As a rule these women were members of small groups which lived together but solicited independently of each other. Five operated in hotels, two in tourist cabins, and one in a trailer. The remainder resorted to chance acquaintances and pickups and utilized cars, taxis, empty buildings, rented rooms, barns, and fields.

Earnings from prostitution: The earnings of the women varied and fluctuated from time to time. The Indian women denied the acceptance of money in any instance, explaining that this would be a sin. Ordinarily, when the soldiers had considerable money they were generous and a fee as high as $5 might be obtained. Sixty-eight of the women reported accepting whatever could be secured, never more than $5, occasionally nothing; seven reported fees from $3 to $5; four from $1 to $3; four, $1 or less; and five, lodging, food, and drink only.

THE TREATMENT PROGRAM

Further elaboration upon the statistical material would not appear to be indicated. The "typical" picture presented by the violators thus far received is that of a young woman in her early twenties, undernourished, with scanty, cheap, untidy clothing, the product of an insecure and unstable rural existence. Ordinarily, she is rather inarticulate and bewildered at finding herself in unfamiliar surroundings far from home, confined for doing something which she considered her own personal affair. What the picture might be if the provisions of the May Act were extended to other camp areas is, of course, problematical. Undoubtedly, if its provisions were put into effect in urban areas, a more heterogeneous group presenting wider individual differences would be committed. Our present sample, from this point of view, is probably quite typical but its homogeneity unquestionably reduces the number of treatment problems presented.

The relatively short periods of commitment and the fact that the offense constitutes a misdemeanor are the limiting factors in the development of treatment programs at the institution. It is difficult for the staff to formulate plans which will meet all of the needs of the various individuals in view of the short time available for treatment. Moreover, since the women are not legally eligible for parole or conditional release, they are denied the opportunity of receiving constructive supervision upon return to the community.

This is not to say, however, that nothing can be done for this group of offenders during their stay at Alderson. On the contrary, they receive many benefits. When these women were admitted to the institution, medical examinations revealed a wide variety of physical needs. Forty were in need of antiluetic treatment, and 4 required attention for gonorrhea. The relatively low rate of venereal disease may be further indication of the limited sex experience of some of the girls. Generally speaking, all were undernourished, and in only 24 cases had any of the offenders previously received dental attention. Of the remaining group, 37 were urgently in need of extensive dental treatment. Three serious eye conditions were noted, 7 tonsillectomies recommended, and 47 refractions for glasses. Four women suffered from pelvic defects and surgical treatment was indicated.

That other, though somewhat less tangible, benefits were derived, was apparent from the initial period of quarantine to the final process of release. It was a new world of sanitation, clinics, activities, and opportunity for them, and it was interesting to see their development. Marked changes in attitude were evidenced; and the personal appearances of the inmates were greatly improved with the increased knowledge of personal hygiene. So extensive were the changes that in many instances it became difficult to recognize the women. They appeared more youthful and self-assured.

Despite the difficulties in release planning, every effort has been made to prepare the offenders for their return to the community. For the women who will return to textile industrial centers, instruction in the use of power machines in the garment shop has been provided. Others have received training in the institution dining rooms and kitchens so that they will be able to accept positions as domestics, waitresses, and cooks in areas where critical shortages exist. Still others have received instruction in farming.

CONCLUSIONS

After release from the institution some will have other conflicts with the law, but it must be remembered that in addition to their own personal deficiencies some of the women must face almost insurmountable difficulties. There has been an inadequate period of treatment and training and there is no supervision after return to the community. If some fail, others will succeed, and all of them have benefited to some extent by the opportunities offered to them. Although the sentences are of short duration it is better that they were committed here than retained in jails. Sanitation and personal hygiene have been substituted for disease, filth, and vermin; and constructive training has taken the place of idleness.

We know exactly where the prostitutes are coming from. I have before me testimony given before a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, of which subcommittee the distinguished junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] was chairman. This is the statement of Donald E. Montgomery, consumers' counsel of the United Automobile, Aircraft, and Agricultural Implement Workers. This is his sworn testimony. He says:

Here they are in a few dashes of brutal statistics just off the Government press:

A. Forty-six million Americans living on cash incomes in 1942 below the $1,500 level.

B. Twenty-seven million of these living below the $1,000 level, and spending, as a whole, more than they took in as cash income during 1942.

C. Over 11,000,000 families whose annual cash expenditure for food was, at best, about $530 a year, or about 50 cents for each family meal, and was on the average only $350 a year, or about 35 cents a meal for the family. Many of these 11,000,000 fared even worse.

The conscience coordinator would program the steps necessary to see that the elemental needs of these people are met. He would recommend, undoubtedly, that the food stamp plan or its equivalent be put back to work, not on a surplus basis but on a need basis. It need not subsidize voluntary idleness, but neither need it tolerate involuntary hunger. In addition to the unemployed and unemployable, it would have to help buy food for many families who are described as fully employed, including some whose breadwinner is on a Federal, State, or local pay roll, especially janitors, charwomen, clerks, and school teachers.

He should develop also plans for preferential rationing of the cheaper types of foods for these low income families. Under a shortage of food, people of means turn to the use of foods which usually are left to the meager tables of low-income families. Rationing gives the well-to-do a claim on their share of cheap foods, but of course takes no steps to bring expensive foods within the reach of low-income families. Preferential rations of the economy types of food for these families would give them some protection.

Mr. President, I shall not make any invidicus comparisons. I have before me the record showing the profits made by the corporations of this country during 1941 and 1942. Take, for example, agricultural machinery, the very machinery which these men and women must buy. The distinguished Senator from Virginia says that this program is collective farming, communism, and socialism. I have read the record, showing that some of those people have only 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, or 10 acres. Would the Senator have a man farming 10 or 20 acres, or even 80 or 160 acres, buy a great quantity of expensive farm machinery?

Is it not good sense on the part of the Government to organize a cooperative of 8, 10, or 15 farmers to enable them to get together and seed and harvest their crops? What do we find? We find that in 1941, and 1942, the profits of agricultural machinery manufacturers rose 211 percent.

Mr. President, at this point I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD a table entitled "Appendix C," showing the percentage change in profits after taxes, 1939–41, arranged by industrial groups, for 1,716 large industrial corporations, and ask that that part of the article appearing on page 5 of the United Dairy Farmer for April 15, 1943, dealing with the Office of Price Administration studies of manufacturers and merchants, showing the profits for the first 3 months of 1942, also be inserted.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Every group of manufacturers or merchants whose earnings are reported by the Office of Price Administration studies as increased at all above earnings for 1939, is a group taking undue profit out of the pocket of the middle- and lower-income groups of wage earners. To claim that the corporations' increased profits come from larger volume of business is no justification; because, if true, then logically, so long as the average worker's earnings have not been increased to a living wage, the profiting corporations should reduce their prices on account of their increased volume of business, so that their earnings would remain on the same level as those of the worker; i. e., to the 1939 level, when the war started.

Instead of this, what do we have? We have, by the quotation above and by further reference to volume No. 1, table 1, the news that 156 corporations engaged in trade (wholesale, retail, etc.) increased their earnings from 1939 to 1941 by 72.9 percent. In dollars these 156 corporations took in the sum of $493,730,000 in the single year 1941.

And we have 131 food corporations increasing their earnings in that same period by 62.4 percent, taking in $361,908,000 in 1941. The increase in net profits alone of these two groups who deal with the very essentials of life for American workers was $347,000,000 for 1941 above 1939 net profits.

Added to this are the further increases in rate of profit that these corporations have obtained since 1941. Quoting the Office of Price Administration again.

Volume No. 4, page 1: "Profits before income taxes in 1942 are continuing to rise substantially above the high levels of 1941. * * * It is estimated, therefore, that 1942 profits of all manufacturing industries will show about a 40-percent rise over the 1941 level."

WAGES MUST RISE

Even if excess-profits taxes at last should catch up with this increased rate of earnings, it will be the ultimate consuming public who will be paying the corporation taxes. The corporations are not being asked to reduce their assets in any way to help pay for the war. So again the public, the man who works for a wage, must get a raise in his pay, and quickly.

NOTE.—Coal-mining group omitted because of a deficit in 1939. In 1941, profits of this group increases 92.5 percent over 1940.

Compare these percentage changes in profits of corporations after taxes of up to 338 percent with the Little Steel wage formula of 15 percent for labor.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, this exhibit shows that no matter in what business people have been engaged, whether the manufacture of food, farm machinery, or textile goods, the profits have gone up. However, we still find 11,000,000 families trying to serve themselves a meal at a cost of 35 cents for the entire family.

Reverting again to the speech delivered by the distinguished junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] I invite attention to the enormous profits which were made by the shipbuilders. It will be remembered that by a vote of every Member of the Senate except five, the Senate said that was all right. Only five of us voted against it. Referring to the figures put in the RECORD by the distinguished junior Senator from Vermont, I read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 21, 1943, at page 285. In the House of Representatives Representative CULKIN said:

My attention has also been called to the fact that this same company, operating a number of ships through the Red Sea on voyages between October 1941 and June 1942, made profits amounting to some $3,342,000. These were single trips, and the net book value of these boats whose earnings on single trips was in excess of $3,000,000 was $800,000. This procedure, to my mind, smells to heaven, and every phase of it should be ruthlessly investigated and exposed.

Then the distinguished Representative inserted in the RECORD a statement showing the names of the ships and the trips which were taken.

We also have a report from Mr. Lindsay C. Warren, Comptroller General, showing how another corporation organized with a capital of $500 ran it into a profit of nearly $3,000,000.

Mr. President, there has not been any criticism of that on the floor of the Senate. There was not any criticism the other day. When the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] said that we were giving back nearly eight or nine billion dollars under the so-called Ruml plan, there was no objection whatever. Some said it was not forgiveness. I shall not now argue that question. My vote showed what I thought about the entire transaction; but the fact nevertheless remains that this morning's newspaper carried an interview with the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] in which he was quoted as saying that he did not know where the $35,000,000,000 which we must raise in taxes by January 1 is to come from.

Mr. President, to return to the Farm Security Administration, to sum up, I said a few moments ago that the merchants in North Dakota in overwhelming numbers, the chambers of commerce in practically every large city in the State, and thousands of the very best farmers in North Dakota say the F. S. A. has been the salvation of the State of North Dakota. I have the petition and the letters with me, and will be glad to have any Senator examine them.

In 1932 in North Dakota we had no crop. In 1933 we had no crop; in 1934 we had no crop; in 1935 we had no crop; in 1936 we had no crop; we had a small crop in 1937, and a poor crop again in 1938. We had fine, honest-to-God farmers out there who seeded 640 acres and never threshed 1 bushel. They depended on the F. S. A. and other Government agencies to help them. They did not leave the farms. They stayed there. As the President said in his letter to Mr. Patton, which I have already placed in the RECORD, they increased the food yield tremendously. They are out there now depending on the Senate to maintain the F. S. A. and other kindred organizations in force.

I wish only that Senators who want to abolish the F. S. A. could see farms such as we have in the great Northwest, where year after year there was no crop, where grasshoppers, rust, drought, and hail took the crop away in its entirety, and yet the farmers with their wives and children stayed there and tried to eke out a living.

They had no one to depend upon but the President of the United States and the Congress to see that they did not starve. I wish Senators had been there at that time. If they had been there they would not now be asking that the F. S. A. be eliminated.

Mr. DANAHER obtained the floor.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, notice has been served that a final vote upon the pending bill must be reached before we adjourn. With the progress we have made, the Senate is likely to be in session until quite late this evening. Would the Senator from Connecticut object to having a quorum call so that I may submit a request for a limitation upon debate in connection with the pending bill?

Mr. DANAHER. I will not object to such a request, Mr. President. I hope that I may obtain recognition for about 5 minutes. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that my purpose in rising is to explain briefly for the RECORD my reasons for being unwilling to sign the conference report on Senate bill 796.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have no desire to object to the Senator presenting his statement.

Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Is it necessary to have a quorum call before a request may be made for limitation upon debate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The only time a quorum is required under the rules is when a request is made to fix the time for a final vote.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that in the further consideration of this bill no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 15 minutes on any amendment, and on the bill. I may say that I have discussed the proposal with both the acting majority leader and the minority leader. The agreement, if entered into, will, of course, allow a 30-minute continuous speech to any Senator on any amendment and the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request submitted by the Senator from Georgia? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. RUSSELL. I thank the Senator from Connecticut.

PREVENTION OF STRIKES IN DEFENSE INDUSTRIES

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, as one of the Senate conferees on Senate bill 796, commonly known as the Connally bill, I found myself after several days of deadlocked discussion at odds with my colleagues on what seemed to me to be fundamental changes in the bill as it had left the Senate and which at that time had my complete support.

I might modify the word "complete" in the sense that I was by no means in accord with what seemed to me to be the extremity of the criminal penalties which were provided in the section known as section 4 of the bill, and yet I recognized that, in order to achieve the main objective upon which the Senate was in substantial agreement, it was necessary that one yield his own individual views as to a particular section, in this case, section 4. We cannot have everything the way we want it.

However, Mr. President, when the bill reached the House of Representatives marked changes were made, and when the House amendments came before the conferees for consideration, it became perfectly obvious that the philosophy of the Senate bill would be completely thwarted if the House language were to prevail. Although every one of the conferees sought to reconcile his respective differences, and much helpful progress was made over a period of several days, I found myself unable to agree on the bill as finally agreed upon in conference, in that the character of the bill has been fundamentally altered from the form in which it passed the Senate. Under the Senate version the lack of a definition of the term "labor disturbance," for example, which might give rise to authority for the President to seize a plant producing any article which may be useful for the war effort, placed the first section on tenuous ground, at best, but protections were afforded to all parties under the language of section 6.

I might point out that section 6 of the Senate bill provided that the United States Conciliation Service might certify a labor dispute to the War Labor Board, and, moreover, that the War Labor Board, for its own part, might take jurisdiction of a labor dispute whenever the Board found that the labor dispute had become so serious that it might lead to substantial interference with the war effort. Moreover, Mr. President, we had implemented the functions of the Board by permitting it to issue subpenas in order to bring the parties before it and to command the production of documents, and, although we limited the Board somewhat by requiring that its decisions must conform to the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 and the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, the decisions, though final, were subject to review by the courts as to questions of law.

Mr. President, a review of such decisions is an inherent right, it has seemed to many of us; it is one which the Senate had interpolated into the bill by way of amendment on the floor. We felt that if the National War Labor Board, which up to this time had been functioning under Executive order, were to be given statutory status, if its decisions were to be final, in the absence of review, we would, indeed, be ascribing to it a most serious grant of authority. So, Mr. President, the Senate was in overwhelming accord, let me say, that the decision of the Board was to be final, except insofar as it was subject to review on questions of law. The conferees have eliminated that provision from the bill. In my judgment, it is a serious error, and since it goes right to the heart of the matter, it is sufficient, indeed, to cause all other points of dispute to take on unusual emphasis.

In the event of a labor dispute and before a strike and before plant seizure, at least, the jurisdiction which we conferred on the Board by section 6 could be invoked, and its decision was "subject to review by the court on questions of law." The action of the conferees in eliminating provision for review not only revives but gives fresh impetus to the natural fears of possible abuse of the authorization. For example, in a plant employing many thousands, a dozen men, in combination, might provoke such a "labor disturbance," a term which as yet lacks definition, as to purport to justify a seizure, and men of design might easily so act in key plants or in key positions in a war industry. When the President seized the North American Aviation plant in June 1941, Attorney General Jackson, now Mr. Justice Jackson of the Supreme Court, handed down an opinion authorizing the President's action. He wrote:

> The distinction between loyal labor leaders and those who are following the Communist Party line is easy to observe. Loyal labor leaders fight for a settlement of labor grievances. Disloyal men who have wormed their way into the labor movement do not want settlements—they want strikes. That is the Communist Party line which those who have defied both the Government and their own leaders to prevent a settlement of the strike have followed.

What Mr. Jackson then said is entirely true now, with this difference, that he was writing of a labor movement in terms of organized labor, whereas there is no such reference in this bill, and the labor disturbance may emanate from groups who hold no membership whatever in organized labor.

Again, Mr. President, under section 4 (a) of the Senate version of the bill, after the Government had taken possession of a plant it became unlawful for any person to coerce, instigate, or induce another to strike. The conferees have amended that language to cause it to reach, in addition, persons who conspire with or encourage any person to strike, under serious criminal penalties. Obviously for citizens generally or third parties, to coerce, instigate, or induce a strike against a Government agency operating a seized plant is one thing; an agreement among men who are actual employees of such a plant is a very different thing, and places this section, it seems to me, on an untenable basis in the light of the general provisions of law contained in the National Labor Relations Act, which recognizes the right of labor to organize and, also, to strike.

Again, Mr. President, it should be emphasized that the conferees, by encompassing the War Labor Board with requirements for conformity to the Nation Labor Relations Act may produce endless confusion, particularly since by depriving parties of an opportunity to seek a review on questions of law, the War Labor Board is given statutory status in making binding official decisions. Hitherto the Board, acting under Executive order, has itself considered its decisions merely advisory. They will now be final, with the result that the War Labor Board is given an over-riding power actually to write every contract of employment from one end of the country to the other in all instances covered by this particular legislation.

Turning to the conference report, I might point out that the first section gives the act a new title. The second section deals with definitions.

The third deals with the basis upon which the President may seize a plant, and it provides that—

Whenever there be an interruption in the production of an article which may be useful in the war effort if the President finds and proclaims that that interruption is due to a strike or other labor disturbance and that the war effort will be unduly impeded or delayed by such interruption and that the exercise of such power and authority is necessary to insure the operation of the plant in the interest of the war effort—

He may seize it.

Mr. President, assume a state of facts in which terms and conditions of employment have become so obnoxious that men have calculated their situation and have decided to strike. Instead of finding remedy for the grievances which have led to the strike, section 4 of the conference version would freeze those conditions and preserve the status quo. No remedy whatever is provided once the Government seizes the plant other than under section 5 of the proposed act, and under section 5 a majority of the employees will be required to join in application to the National War Labor Board for a change of such conditions.

Curiously any order the Board enters up pursuant to that application shall upon approval by the President be complied with by the Government agency operating the plant, mine, or facility. There is not one word, in terms, about its binding either the employer or the employees; it binds merely the agency of the Government which is operating it.

I particularly stated that there was no obligation "in terms" binding upon the employees; but there are sanctions imposed by operation of the other sections of the act proposed. Under section 6, once the Government has seized a plant, anyone who conspires with one of his fellows to strike, or one who instigates or induces or encourages another to strike, becomes subject to a penalty of not more than $5,000 fine or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both.

Under section 8 of the proposed act there is a provision which has been imported into the measure from the House language of such nature that while under the first subsection of section 8 notice is required to be given to the Secretary of Labor, the War Labor Board, and the National Labor Relations Board that a labor dispute has arisen, under subsection 2 the employees and the employer must continue production for a period of 30 days; and if at the end of that 30 days an election be taken, as the act requires, by the National Labor Relations Board, which results in a strike vote, then there will obviously be an interruption of production in the plant, whereupon the remedy of the Government is to seize the plant.

Therefore, Mr. President, all those employees who felt themselves aggrieved, gave notice of the labor dispute, took their 30 days' waiting period, continued in the plant uninterruptedly, and thereafter voted to strike, find that they have voted themselves into that state and condition whereby the Government seizes the plant and the men become liable to criminal prosecution if thereafter they strike. It is an unusual situation, to say the least.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TUNNELL in the chair). Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I merely desire to be sure I understood the Senator correctly. He did not mean to say that the men would become liable to criminal prosecution except in a case where the plant was actually under the operation and possession of the Government?

Mr. DANAHER. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. HATCH. That is the only case in which the criminal penalties apply.

Mr. DANAHER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HATCH. I misunderstood the Senator, and was afraid others would.

Mr. DANAHER. It is possible the Senator from New Mexico did misunderstand, it is possible I misstated the fact, as I am speaking extemporaneously.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Connecticut to the fact that he has exhausted his 15 minutes on the amendment.

Mr. DANAHER. I have 15 minutes on the bill, have I not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 15 minutes on the bill.

Mr. DANAHER. I will take my 15 minutes on the bill.

Let me clarify the point the Senator from New Mexico makes, because I am under no misapprehension about the effect of the provision, and I am sure we are both in accord on the point.

Mr. HATCH. I was sure the Senator was not under a misapprehension, but I was afraid his words would be misunderstood. I hope he will clarify them.

Mr. DANAHER. I will clarify them beyond peradventure, I hope. What I hope I will be understood as saying is that if the men decide and vote that they wish to strike, and actually go out on strike, there is nothing in the proposed act which will compel them to go back to work. But if the Government seizes the plant on the ground that there has been an interruption due to the strike, and under a Government agency, operations are resumed in the plant, then such employees will become liable to the criminal provisions should they later strike. Is not that a completely correct statement?

Mr. HATCH. I wanted to be sure it was understood the criminal provisions did not apply until the Government actually had taken possession of the plant.

Mr. DANAHER. That is correct, the Senator from New Mexico and I are in accord.

One other section impels present comment. Section 9, also brought over from the House, is a provision amending the Federal Corrupt Practices Act, to say that no labor organization shall make a contribution in connection with any election in which a Presidential or Vice Presidential elector or a Senator or Representative in Congress, and so on, is involved.

Curiously, no provision is made to operate against management groups; there is no provision which would forbid manufacturers' associations, if you please, from making political contributions. The amendment applies only against a labor organization.

Mr. President, having mentioned some of the collateral points, I wish to revert for a moment to section 7, which after all is one of the most important features of the bill.

I hope I have made it apparent to everyone that the emphasis, as the proposed act stands now, is in the direction of enforcing seizure of these plants by the United States. Every single proposed remedy, every single penalty, is in the direction of driving the Government to seizure of the plants. What we had hoped to accomplish under section 7 of the Senate language was to make available to the employees a mechanism through which they might procure conciliation or adjudication of their dispute, whatever it might be, and rectification of the terms and conditions of employment, if they required modification or amendment. It operated in favor, not of forcing seizure but of amelioration of conditions in a plant, and the Board was given power to act sua sponte, or on the application of the Conciliation Service.

Mr. President, the conference has stricken out those highly remedial, highly effective means of achieving a modification and correction of the difficulties which lead to a strike, and completely eliminated them with reference to any plant where the Government has actually made a seizure. In other words, if the plant is in operation producing war materials and there be a dispute of such nature that the Conciliation Service certifies it to the War Labor Board, jurisdiction may be had under section 7. Also, as an alternative, if the War Labor Board believes that the labor dispute is so serious that it would lead to interruption, the War Labor Board may take jurisdiction. But neither of those sections will apply if the Government actually has seized a plant, under the conference language. The result is that in any case where a Government seizure has been effectuated, the employees who were disgruntled in the first place, who were on strike because, let us assume, of obnoxious terms and conditions, now find themselves frozen in status quo, the cause of the dispute continues with no remedy whatever, unless a majority of the employees in the plant petition the War Labor Board for a rectification of conditions. Even then, whatever the decision of the War Labor Board shall be, it becomes final, because the men cannot strike without leaving themselves possibly answerable to the criminal penalties of section 6.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I am glad to yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is it not true that under the bill even in the case of plants taken over by the Government whenever a majority of the employees desire to ask for different wages or different working conditions they have the right to apply to the War Labor Board?

Mr. DANAHER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. Would the Senator advocate that that should be done by a minority? The Senator seemed to make a great point of the fact that it took a majority to do it. I thought this was a majority country, and unless a majority of the employees asked for it, I do not see any reason why they should be given it. The Senator also must remember that under the criminal penalties for striking, under the Government operation, there is a specific clause which provides that no man shall be guilty of any offense under that section for quitting work, and doing no more. He is not guilty of anything then. But if he goes around and encourages or incites or conspires with other men, then he is guilty; is that right?

Mr. DANAHER. That is what it says. I do not say that it is right, but that is what it says.

Mr. CONNALLY. I beg the literary Senator's pardon. I should have said "correct", not "right."

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I will simply observe by way of reply to the Senator from Texas that in a war industry there may be 2,000 men employed, and only 24 machine-tool makers. The 24 machine-tool makers may be the very heart of that industry. Their grievance may be a very just one, a very complete one. They may even belong to a craft union which is in no way affiliated with a union which has the bargaining powers in a particular plant. It may in other words result, Mr. President, that a group of employees in a given plant will not be in position to secure redress from their Government of the conditions which were so obnoxious in the first place as to have forced the strike which led to the plant seizure.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the situation is so anomalous and so completely at variance with the genus of the Senate bill, that it is unfortunate, as I see it, that the matter has taken the turn to which I have adverted. I have simply stated my reasons for disagreeing action with reference to the conference report, to the end that my colleagues who are not here, and those others who may be interested may know how and why I feel as I do about the bill.

I may later speak in my own time when the conference report comes up.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. There is a time limitation now in effect.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me claim my own time.

Mr. RUSSELL. If it can be done in the Senator's own time, very well. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator may be permitted to proceed but that the time not be charged to me.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thought I had the floor.

Mr. RUSSELL. I may say that if I surrendered the floor it might have been considered that I had spoken once.

Mr. CONNALLY. No, no; I will make an affidavit on that.

Mr. President, I shall not undertake at this time to reply to the Senator from Connecticut. I wish to say that the Senator from Connecticut was a very useful member of the conference committee and aided the committee very vitally in perfecting the bill. It was with the deepest of gloom that the other conferees, both of the House and the Senate, viewed his failure to sign his name to the report. All five of the House conferees signed, and four of the Senate conferees, including the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], and myself. However, all the views which the Senator from Connecticut has expressed here were expressed quite eloquently and quite cogently and quite forcibly to all the conferees. Notwithstanding that, the conferees agreed to the report. When the report formally comes before the Senate I shall then seek the opportunity to make adequate reply to the points which the Senator from Connecticut has urged at this time.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the very distinguished Senator from Texas yield for an inquiry?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will if I have the floor.

Mr. McNARY. When, in the opinion of the able Senator from Texas, will the conference report come before the Senate?

Mr. CONNALLY. I hope it will come before the Senate tomorrow, because under the House rules the House cannot take it up except by unanimous consent until tomorrow. But I have consulted the parliamentary authority of the Senate, and he advises that if the House should act early in the day at least the Senate may then take the bill up because our rules do not require that the bill lie over.

Mr. McNARY. Of course, consideration of a conference report is always in order in the Senate even when there is a bill of any kind pending.

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. But I had hoped that we probably would have until the first of the week further to study the report in the light of the comment made by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut. We will see how that works out tomorrow.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say a further word. There are printed copies of the report, with the change of only one or two words, which do not change the meaning but simply change the text, which set forth the provisions of the bill, and I hope all Senators will consult copies of the report and read them before the report comes before the Senate.

Mr. DANAHER. Will the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am always glad to yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DANAHER. I first wish to thank the Senator for his kind personal observations, and to assure him that I was not arguing this matter at this time, but simply out of candor and out of fairness and equity to my colleagues, I felt impelled to make a statement of the reasons why I found myself in disagreement with the Senator from Texas.

Let me add, Mr. President, that whenever I find myself in disagreement with the Senator from Texas I want to make absolutely certain that I have good reason for my position.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator. I wish to say that the Senator from Connecticut, with rare zeal and industry, both when he is right and when he is wrong, pursues very forcefully his objective, and I want to thank him for the many contributions he made to the effort to put the bill in proper shape. I only regret that he, like Brutus when he stood near the statue of Pompey, stabbed the report just as we were getting ready to start.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I shall endeavor to be as brief as possible in the discussion of this subject. First, I shall undertake to compare briefly the provisions of the substitute offered by the Senator from Virginia with the committee proposal. I must say in all deference that in listening to the remarks of the very able and distinguished junior Senator from Virginia, I was reminded of a current song hit, I've Heard That Song Before. The Senator made a very able argument, but it was almost identical with the same argument he made on this proposition last year. I have before me the RECORD of May 18, 1942. I find that at that time the Senator inserted the statement which was made by one Paul Morris, as well as an editorial from the New Republic magazine. His recent discussion has been almost identical with the discussion had last year. I even understood the Senator to revert to some person named Sandy Garrett, of Childersburg, Ala. The RECORD of May 18, 1942, covers six pages of matter taken from photostats showing the horrible delinquency of Sandy Garrett, of route 1, Childersburg, Ala. The Senator from Virginia has again embalmed that individual in the records of the Congress and has shown his horrible dereliction. It turns out that it has been established beyond peradventure of doubt that Sandy borrowed $1,107.55 and repaid only $27.79. I did not hear the statement of the figures today. I do not know whether Sandy has done better or worse with his loan this year than he did with his loan last year; but I assume he is still delinquent. Of course, Mr. President, when farm loans are made to the poorest risks this Nation knows—people absolutely without any resources, without any means of establishing credit—we shall find that some individuals will not be able to repay their loans; and I doubt not that poor Sandy Garrett, of route 1, Childersburg, Ala., has a number of companions who have not paid the loans which have been made to them over the period of time during which the program has been in operation.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I was simply going to ask the Senator if there was not some evidence that in the flourishing twenties loans were made by the United States Government to a good many foreign nations, and I was going to ask whether in their repayments they did very much better than Sandy has done.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, Sandy is in goodly company, the difference being that most of them did not have an opportunity to go down in history by having their cases charted in the Senate 2 years in succession.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. My time is limited, but I shall yield to the Senator.

Mr. BONE. No; under the circumstances I shall not ask the Senator to yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. The argument that loans were made for the payment of poll taxes was made last year. I am opposed to the bill for abolition of the poll tax; the Senator from Virginia also is opposed to it. Consequently, I do not see why he objects to the payment of poll taxes. Both of us have objected to the bill the purpose of which is to abolish by action of the Federal Government the payment of poll taxes. We have objected to the bill, not because we are opposed to having poll taxes abolished in our respective States, but because we believe that the action to abolish them should be taken by the States themselves.

Reference was made to the fact that some of the persons who had borrowed money used some of the money to go to the motion pictures somewhere: and the witness, when grilled by the committee, broke down and confessed that it was wholly possible that, among the persons to whom millions of dollars had been loaned during the time the program was in operation, some of the borrowers had escaped the supervision of the Farm Security Administration supervisor, and had gone to motion-picture shows. Of course, the witness undertook to point out that any person who had borrowed funds from any other source was likely to have used some of the borrowed money in order to go to a motion-picture show.

So, Mr. President, it seems that the effort is being made to put these borrowers in a class unto themselves, when the entire objective of the whole Farm Security program is to bring them up into the class of all other American citizens, and to remove them from the segregation which they have endured by virtue of their poverty during all the years before this program sprang into being.

I shall not go into the merits of this question, other than to say to Senators from States which are largely populated by urban residents that they had better stop, look, and listen before voting to strike down the Farm Security Administration. That is what this amendment would do. Having failed to kill it outright, this is a proposal to kill it by slow strangulation over a period of 12 months.

Of all the sources of increased food production in the United States, the Farm Security Administration is paramount. The big farmers cannot greatly increase their production. The little farmer has labor available in himself, his wife, and his children. The only hope of increased food production is with the little farmer. I could fill the RECORD with statements from the hearings showing the extent to which this activity has been carried on throughout the Nation. The increase in food production among the 450,000 people dealing with the Farm Security Administration was 3 times greater than the national average. There is a simple reason for that. A man who has 20 acres in a farm-security loan can take care of a thousand chickens, 10 hogs, or 5 milk cows, and carry on all the work he has been doing, and still produce the food which is essential to the war effort, and for which there will be a greater demand as the months go by. The investment in this appropriation is but a small matter to consider when we reflect on the potentialities of the program.

The proposal of the Senator from Virginia, as he says, is made in an effort to consolidate. I would not be unkind enough to mention the fact that some Senators who have been most vociferous in their condemnation of the Appropriations Committee for legislating are now seizing upon this amendment as an opportunity to change the order from what it has been for the past 6 or 8 years, and to set up an entirely new system, dealing with this question legislatively. We have a proposal to create an entirely new system. The amendment provides that the loans shall be made through the Farm Credit Administration, which is a quasi-Federal agency, including the Crop and Feed Loan Division, which is limited by statute as to the amount of loans. I will ask the Senator from South Carolina what the present limitation is. I have forgotten. What is the limitation on the individual borrower?

Mr. SMITH. Four hundred dollars.

Mr. RUSSELL. The loans are to be made through the Farm Credit Administration and the Production Credit Association, which are wholly farmer-owned-and-controlled loaning agencies, and which require collateral of their borrowers. That is where this program is proposed to be placed. The supervision of it is to go to the Extension Service. No one has a higher respect than I have for the Extension Service, and no Senator has supported it more earnestly in the committee down through the years, when we were increasing its appropriations under the increment provided in the fundamental Bankhead-Jones Act. However, the Extension Service cannot and will not ever give the type of supervision which is required if we are to make a genuine effort to rehabilitate farmers.

Speaking of extravagance, it would be the height of extravagance to make an allowance of only $4,000,000 for collecting and servicing nearly 500,000 loans outstanding, as well as lending $40,000,000 additional. The loss to the Government would be far greater than a reasonable appropriation to supervise the rehabilitation of farmers and collect loans. The work is really in the nature of vocational education.

There is another very great difference between the proposal of the Senator from Virginia and the committee proposal. I refer to the question of grants. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia absolutely eliminates any grants to those in distress on the farms. It matters not how great a catastrophe may visit them. If through act of God a crop were absolutely destroyed in any way, under the proposal of the Senator from Virginia, there would be absolutely no agency of Government which could go into the afflicted area and afford any relief by way of grants to farmers who have seen their barns go down the river, or who have seen their crops parched from day to day beneath the blistering sun, or who have seen their fields ravaged by grasshoppers or insects.

The question of rural rehabilitation projects has been brought into this discussion. The Senator from Virginia this year, as last, discussed the horrible failure of the Arthurdale project and some other subsistence homestead projects. I am willing to concede that those projects were failures; but I say that whatever its faults may be, the failure cannot properly be charged to the Farm Security Administration. Every one of the subsistence homestead projects was in being when the Farm Security Administration was established in September 1937. Not one of them is under the jurisdiction of the Farm Security Administration today. Every one is in the National Housing Agency; and yet when we come to discuss the Farm Security Administration, these failure projects are brought up. I grant that they were failures. The failures are brought in and charged up to the Farm Security Administration, when they were all built by some other agency, and are now under the jurisdiction of a totally different agency.

The committee bill provides for the liquidation as expeditiously as possible, of the Rural Resettlement projects. The amendment of the Senator from Virginia is silent on that question. It makes no provision for them. However, I understand he has an amendment which he said he intended to offer to another provision of the bill at a later date. The one which I understood him to read provided for the elimination within a fixed period. I say, Mr. President, that with the gigantic investment which the Government of the United States has in these projects, whether they are good or bad, it would be the poorest kind of business for us to require their liquidation within a period of from 12 to 18 months. We want them liquidated as rapidly as possible; but when they are forced on the market in a lump, who will buy them? It will be some man who has enough money to buy the whole thing at once, and who will make an inordinate profit out of the disposition of the lands he buys. It is much better to proceed with the liquidation in an orderly way, selling a bit here and a bit there, getting as much as we can, rather than legislating so as to increase the loss of the Government and prove that these projects were a complete failure.

Mr. President, I reiterate what I said last year, in view of the precedent before me. Only 8 out of 195 of these projects throughout the Nation were instituted by the Farm Security Administration. All the others were begun by other agencies of Government, under the subsistence homestead program, under the program of the Resettlement Administration, which was directed by Mr. Tugwell, or under the supervision of the Department of the Interior; and they were all dumped on the Farm Security Administration by Executive order. Only 8 out of 195 were really commenced by the Farm Security Administration; yet all the the sins of all the departments which have had to do with these projects during their long and tenuous lives are being charged up to the Farm Security Administration every time this appropriation item comes to the floor of the Senate.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Is it not a fact that when Senators criticize the Farm Security Administration for the omissions or sins of some other agency, they forget the many projects and the many rehabilitations which the Farm Security Administration has successfully conducted throughout its history?

Mr. RUSSELL. They forget them, or they do not care to discuss them.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Is it not a fact that 92 percent of the indebtedness in connection with loans in the rehabilitation effort has been paid back?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator is referring to the rehabilitation loans, is he not?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is true. I say, Mr. President, without fear of successful contradiction, that in view of the credit risk which is assumed in making such loans, the collection record is nothing short of phenomenal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator to the fact that he has exhausted 15 minutes of his time.

Mr. RUSSELL. I will take time on the bill, Mr. President. In the matter of farm tenant loans to farm tenants to enable them to buy farms, the payments last year, including advance payments, represent about 150 percent of the maturities. Bear that in mind. The borrowers in many instances have anticipated the maturities on those loans. Approximately 99 percent of all the borrowers are current, and have met their maturities as they fell due. Where can we find a similar record in any other lending activity of the Government, when we consider the fact that the farmer, above all other people in this country, is subject to distress from the elements and from insects, and is most likely of all to suffer failure of his income in any given year?

We now come down to the rural rehabilitation loans. I should be the last to say that there have not been made many loans which were too large. Undoubtedly, in dealing with this problem involving about a million different farm families in approximately 2,300 counties of the United States, excessive loans have been made in many instances. Let me say, Mr. President, that, in my judgment, if the facts could be thoroughly sifted it would be found that as many loans had failed because they were not quite large enough as had failed because they were too large. Where a man has no energy or ambition, as—I do not wish to be personal—our friend, Sandy Garrett evidently has not, of course, he will not repay his loan. But, Mr. President, I say that we are dealing with people in this loan program who have never had a chance to live, and if 75 percent of them were put on their feet as independent, self-sustaining, valuable members of society, the money lost on the other 25 percent would be the best investment the United States has ever made since the beginning of its history.

The record as to rehabilitation loans shows that for the current year, including prepayments, the collections will amount to 93 percent. I wish to point out that when these farmers have as good a year as they had last year they are just about as good a credit risk as anyone else in this Nation. Last year, there was loaned them ninety-seven and one-half million dollars, and $131,000,000 was collected. Of course, a great deal of it was past due, but it showed that the persons to whom the loans were made appreciated them, and that when they had the money at least a great majority of them would pay it back as willingly, Mr. President, as would you or I.

Mr. President, I believe in this program. It has had faults, weaknesses, and maladministration, but its objectives are too important to the perpetuity of our institutions of government for us to strike this program down by adopting such an amendment as that which is now pending. I ask Senators to go out, if they will, into the areas where the sharecroppers and tenants are found. I have lived amongst them all of my life. I have seen them, Mr. President, move their little chattels and one-horse wagons in the fall to another farm and start making a new crop with a landlord who was not able to finance them and without any means of credit for themselves. I have seen children who could not go to school until the period of what is called the lay-by time in the summer, which is between the time of cultivating the crops and harvesting them. The next year history repeats itself, and when the children have reached 17 or 18 years of age they leave home, marry, and start a new crop of sharecroppers and tenant farmers who live almost without hope in a country which is supposed to be the hope of the world. We cannot afford to strike those people down. They are entitled at least to one chance in life. If there is one Sandy Garrett, there are thousands of others who offset him, who are standing on their feet today, owing no man, or the Government of the United States, making an honest contribution to the war effort through the production of food, and holding their heads high as independent American citizens.

Mr. President, this amendment should be rejected and the Senate should adopt the committee proposal which provides perhaps for an appropriation smaller than it should be.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I should like to propound an inquiry to the Senator from Georgia. As I understand, the amendment provides for liquidation of the cooperatives, or whatever they may be termed, whether poorly or well managed.

Mr. RUSSELL. Whether poorly or well managed, it provides for the liquidation of them all.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, if I may, I should like to comment on what the distinguished Senator has said in connection with grants.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will then be speaking on his own time.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Would time be available to me at any later time on the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No, under the agreement the Senator is entitled to only one speech on the bill, of not exceeding 15 minutes.

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, in 1940, when a hurricane struck, and great tracts of agricultural land in South Carolina and along the coast were destroyed, as Governor of the State of South Carolina, I made every effort through various agencies in Washington, to obtain funds. Through the Disaster Loan Corporation I obtained some funds, and also through the F. S. A. Had it not been for the grants and loans made by the F. S. A. many hundreds of farmers, who today are producing for the war effort in South Carolina, would not be there.

The distinguished Senator from Georgia well remembers, as do other Senators, that in the summer of 1941 there was no agency of Government connected with agriculture or otherwise that was willing to lend money or to assist the farmers of South Carolina. During that summer and fall more than 30,000 farmers, as shown by the records in the department, received aid and were able to carry on. Today many of them are producing for the war effort. Many of them were more than rehabilitated. Their sons, as well as the sons of others, are in the Army today.

Mr. President, I hope that if the cooperatives shall be liquidated, the Senate will appropriate sufficient money for the only organization of Government I know of, so far as the farmer is concerned, which has always been ready and willing to help the fellow at the bottom of the ladder so that some day he may reach the top.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I helped in the preparation of the appropriation bill in the Committee on Appropriations, and I believe I understand the purposes of the appropriation for Farm Security.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK] stated the truth. It is the one agency of the Federal Government which really helps him who needs help. How many millions of dollars have been advanced or loaned to industrialists or to men who actually had credit in the normal places of credit?

The Farm Security Administration has been denounced as communistic. I deny that. I believe that the rehabilitation feature of Farm Security is one which keeps the farmer from being communistic.

Mr. President, there is nothing which the American loves and adores more than a home. Give the average American citizen a piece of land and a roof over the heads of his children, and he will not be a Communist. Unless we continue such an agency as Farm Security and the policy it tries to carry out, communism may rear its head.

I have no fear as to the winning of the war, because we are going to win it; I am not at all concerned with the Nazis or the Japs, because we are going to whip them; but I am concerned with millions of American farmers, and millions of other Americans throughout the entire country, who have not had homes. Do Senators realize that of the 7,000,000 farmers in this country only 50 percent of them can say, "This is my home; this is my property"? And here is the Government, with a sound policy, trying to rehabilitate American citizens, advancing them a little credit which they cannot get elsewhere.

Ask a farmer in Tennessee, or Arkansas, or New Mexico with 2 acres of land and an old mule, to go to a local banker and see how much he can get. He will not get a dime. Is there an obligation on the Government to aid such a citizen? That citizen furnishes soldiers, he furnishes the ones who make the supreme sacrifice. He certainly is entitled to a little help, which is all he wants. He wants a little help in order to enable him to carry on so that he may eventually, through his efforts, be able to say, "This is my place. I am a free citizen of the country. I pay taxes, I send my children to school, I produce for the war effort, I am a member of society." What is the matter with the Farm Security Administration when we consider a situation such as that?

Transfer the functions of the Farm Security to other agencies of the Government, as is contemplated by some of the amendments proposed, and what would happen? I know about the agencies of the Government. Many of them would not look at a farmer, especially if he were poor, and perhaps did not own a piece of land. The Farm Security Administration has a heart, a heart which Americans revere, and the organization is doing a fine job.

I hope the amendment of the Senator from Virginia may be rejected.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I listened to an address the other evening over the radio by the Honorable Herbert Hoover, former President of the United States, and with many things in his address I agreed. One thing brought out in this radio talk was the fact that the former President, the Food Administrator during the last war, predicted in a most serious tone that there would be a food shortage in this country this year. That opinion is shared by many prominent persons, because of a number of factors which exist at the present time.

I hope these persons are wrong, but I am not going to do anything in the way of legislation which in my opinion will curtail the production of food one iota in connection with the war effort. Whatever prejudice I may have against the Farm Security Administration, whatever prejudice I may have against Mr. Baldwin, a gentleman who I think should be out of office, and I hope that at sometime soon he will be removed from his office; whatever prejudice I may have with respect to the resettlement propositions which have been discussed on the floor of the Senate—and I have heard the same type and kind of argument for the last 3 or 4 years—I shall not permit such feelings to affect my vote in this particular case.

Mr. President, I know that the Farm Bureau Federation in my section of the country is against this proposition. The Farm Bureau Federation has been my friend, and I am a member of the organization at the present time in my own county in Illinois. But here again I must differ with them, because of what I see in connection with the production of food not only for soldiers, but for civilians as well.

It has been repeatedly stated on the floor of the Senate that between 400,000 and 500,000 families are affected through this type of legislation. I undertake to say that if the House provision should become law it would seriously cripple the production of food, which is being carried on by the group of farmers whom the pending legislation seeks to aid.

I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Georgia, to see whether or not the article I am about to read is correct, because to me it says a great deal, and it has helped me make up my mind in connection with my vote on the pending bill. The article says:

> We are making a big thing of importing 5,000 farm workers from the Bahamas. Here are 500,000 farm families, our citizen brothers, who have been helped by farm security loans to a point where they produced last year 36 percent of the national increase in milk, 23 percent of the national increase in dried beans, and 10 percent in eggs and chickens, though they number but 7.6 percent of the Nation's farmers.

I should like to know whether or not there is any Senator who cares to challenge those figures, or agree with them, because they are extremely important. They are taken from an item written by Mr. Samuel Grafton for the Washington Evening Star of April 27, 1943. Does the Senator from Georgia know anything about those figures?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, those figures are in accord with the figures submitted by the witnesses appearing before the committee, and I had adverted to them briefly by saying it was a fine thing having that much of a percentage of increase come from 450,000 farmers out of a total of 6,000,000, and particularly those who were supposed to be less privileged.

I do not think there can be any doubt that the chief field of increased production of commodities of the nature alluded to is among farm security borrowers, because there is no available labor for the farmers elsewhere. There are farmers who do not have the facilities with which to proceed, but who can produce if we give them supervision and credit with which to purchase the chickens and the cows and hogs in order to produce the pork and the milk and the eggs and the poultry which are needed.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator, and I wish to say one word in conclusion.

I know nothing about how the program is administered in other States, but insofar as the State of Illinois is concerned, in my opinion the program has been administered in a very efficient and economical manner, although I have heard many stories to the contrary as affecting other sections of the country.

There is one thing the Committee on Appropriations has done in connection with this matter; it has taken into consideration the very thing I have been discussing, and has dealt with the question accordingly, in my humble opinion.

Mr. President, I heard the Senator from Wisconsin today speak of the lack of help, assistance, and when the farmers are crying for help we find the Bankhead law assisting individuals on the farms in order to increase the production of food.

We hear the suggestion constantly being made by Members of Congress that the Army be allowed to help produce the food for the coming year. So far as I am concerned, when I see this dilemma in front of me with respect to the food situation I cannot reach the conclusion, merely because of some prejudice, because of some feeling in the past, because of some individual in a bureau who is not administering the law perhaps in the way it should be administered, that I should deny between 400,000 and 500,000 farmers of America the right to continue to obtain rehabilitation loans in order to help them produce the food which this Nation needs, both for the military and for the civilian population next year.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I wish to make a statement in behalf of the situation which obtains in my State. The picture is a very sad one. According to the 1940 Census, Mississippi has 335,939 farm families. Of that number, only 97,226 are owners of their farms. Of the total number of farm families in Mississippi, 192,815 are farm tenants. There are 45,594 farm laborers. They are not tenants. They work by the day. In other words, there are 238,413 homeless farm families in Mississippi out of a total of 335,939 farm families. There are over 240,000 farm families who, according to my distinguished friend, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] cannot sing Home Sweet Home.

The Farm Security Administration has come to the relief of over 25,000 of these homeless farm families in my State, and of that number, 2,600 are applicants for farm ownership. The only reason there are not more applicants for the ownership of farms is that not sufficient money has been made available by the Congress to make the loans to the 240,000 homeless farm families in Mississippi.

I am glad to report that the 2,600 clients of the Farm Security Administration under the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act program have paid 96½ percent of their indebtedness, and during the last year their payments have exceeded their obligations.

Mr. President, while the picture in my State possibly is gloomier than that in any other State in the Union, I wish to plead with my colleagues to reject the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], and to stand by the committee provision so as to make available this gracious service to the 240,000 homeless farm families in my State.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I have heard all the moving and pathetic pleas which have been made in defense of the committee amendment. They range all the way from Home Sweet Home to Nearer My God to Thee. All those who make the pleas, however, omit one important fact. It costs our Government $1 to loan or give away $3 through the F. S. A. Any agency which spends that much money in overhead is careless and extravagant, and reflects upon the Government and the activity which it represents, and upon the Congress, and it ought to be abolished.

I shall vote for the Byrd amendment.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Virginia a question. Do I correctly understand that under his amendment there will still be available $50,000,000 for the purposes which have been referred to, only that the money will be distributed by the Farm Credit Administration instead of the Farm Security Administration? I do not understand that the Senator, by his amendment, is doing away with rural rehabilitation loans.

Mr. BYRD. The amount is $40,000,000.

Mr. TAFT. Forty million dollars, plus twelve million dollars; is that not true?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. TAFT. A total of $52,000,000 would still be available for the meritorious purposes which have been referred to?

Mr. BYRD. The Senator is exactly correct.

Mr. TAFT. Is that not more than sufficient to carry any family which is already receiving help, and also aid a large number of new families which are not now receiving help?

Mr. BYRD. I certainly think so.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I feel a measure of guilt, after having served for days on end with the very able Senator from Georgia on the committee which had been giving consideration to this annual agricultural supply bill, because I have not felt equal to pitching in and helping him carry at least a small share of his burden. Perhaps it is as well that I have not been taking any part in it, because, after all is said and done, the Senator from Georgia, it must be admitted, has done an amazing job. No one can better appreciate that than those who serve on a committee dealing with such a bill as this. After the House had virtually rewritten the legislation, and destroyed so many features that we have fought year after year to win, it was not a simple matter to sit down and deal with the hundreds upon hundreds of items in the bill that had to be dealt with separately. The Senator from Georgia has won my utmost appreciation not only by the manner in which he has represented the committee on the floor of the Senate, but by the manner in which he conducted the very difficult hearings and the writing of the bill.

Mr. President, since the life of the so-called Byrd committee, I have served as a member of the committee with the distinguished Senator from Virginia. I know how utter is his sincerity of purpose in the objective of his amendment. I should like to go along with him in support of the larger purpose he and his committee have been serving, but I must depart from him completely as respects his recommendations concerning the future of F. S. A.

A year or so ago, when that committee submitted its recommendations to the Senate, including a recommendation involving the abandonment of the F. S. A., I concurred in the report, except that feature of it dealing with F. S. A., because I had come as closely as anyone could come to intimate acquaintance with the work the F. S. A. was doing.

I cannot now go along with the Senator on his amendment. I cannot do other than insist in my own small way that the Senate stand by the Senate Appropriations Committee in its recommendations with respect to the future of the Farm Security Administration. With all its failures and in spite of all the criticism for which it has given cause, I hope that the purpose served by the Farm Security Administration is here to stay, not only this year, but through the years to come, for it has served in a field which had too long been ignored.

The Farm Security Administration has brought returns which are altogether good for our Nation. So broad a claim as this, of course, is bound to invite a flood of challenges built around faults and failures, most of which I would readily acknowledge. F. S. A. has been guilty of playing favorites. F. S. A. has extended help to some who have been undeserving. F. S. A. has engaged in some foolish experimentation, and has given cause for charges of contributing to collectivism and regimentation. F. S. A. has caused some persons to abandon initiative and resign themselves to a dependence upon government. All this I will admit. But these faults and failures have been so largely remedied and eliminated and have been so insignificant by comparison with the great services rendered deserving individuals that I entertain firm belief that the agency of F. S. A. can be made to win returns which will afford and hold vast advantages to our whole country.

Without the help which F. S. A. made available in my own and other States during recent trying years I know that we should be facing terrible need and failure on every hand. Instead of that, and largely because of F. S. A., I can point to hundreds of successful farm operations today, hundreds of farm families who have been helped to their feet, making tremendous contributions to the food needs of their country in this emergency, and paying not only their real estate and personal taxes but paying income taxes to the Federal Government as well.

In the hearings of the Senate Appropriations Committee will be found merely a very few of the evidences which have come to me of the part which F. S. A. has played in rehabilitating able, deserving farm people who had been all but destroyed by drought and adverse economic conditions. Endless are the personal cases I could recite for the Senate's information demonstrating how people who were hopelessly down and out were saved by F. S. A., given the help in dollars they needed, who have paid back every penny they borrowed and are now most productive parts of our national economy.

There is much room for administrative improvement in the conduct of F. S. A. It is the duty of Congress to force those improvements and hasten elimination of the faults and weaknesses of the administration. But it certainly does not follow that we must abandon an agency which today is playing so vital a part in our economy as F. S. A. has done and is doing. Some persons will insist that there is no such need for F. S. A. today as there once was. Of course, that is the case, but there still is room for it, and who knows when there might exist as vital a need for it again as there was before.

I hope the Senate will stand with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] and the committee. In the committee we have gone into the subject with thoroughness. We find such vast advantages growing out of what F. S. A. has done and such large repayment of the loans which are being made that we feel secure in the belief that this agency can carry itself with little or no loss to the Government ultimately.

Let me, while on my feet, give expression of my appreciation to the approval by the Senate of the committee's action on the issue of crop insurance, the removal of the prohibition on sales of wheat below parity, the issue of increased appropriation for soil conservation, the proposal to make R. A. C. C. incentive loans, and other most important matters, including the authorizing of parity payment on crops of next year. Only by these policies are we going to build an agricultural industry sufficiently strong to withstand the tests which are upon the industry now and which are certain to follow this war.

I should be unfair to myself if I did not, here and now, pay my compliments to the chairman of the subcommitee, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL]. Never have I known a Senator so thoroughly to acquaint himself with the hundreds of problems presented by an agricultural appropriation bill. The Senate has had occasion to observe during recent days the splendid knowledge and efficiency of the Senator from Georgia. To have worked with him, hour after hour, upon this bill, and to have had a hand in accomplishing the gains won in the bill has been both a great pleasure and an honor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I shall not long detain the Senate. I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the distinguished and able junior Senator from Virginia, and in support of the amendment recommended by the full Appropriations Committee. It should be borne in mind that the service rendered by the Farm Security Administration has been rendered to those at the bottom of the rural economic ladder. They are the group in this country who, prior to the time when the Farm Security Administration's assistance and credit were made available to them, had no hope of improving their economic status insofar as their own existence or the future of their children were concerned. They are the group, Mr. President, who as the Senator from Georgia so well said, probably would have been considered the poorest credit risks to be found in the United States. Yet, while this program has been in operation, more than 1,500,000 families have received help of some type from the Farm Security Administration. Credit has been furnished to approximately 935,000 families so as to enable them to obtain livestock, equipment, and other essentials they need in order to operate their farms. Trained county supervisors have advised them on their farm and home plans. Those plans call for the production of two or more war-essential foods for market, food and feed needed at home, and for cash income needed to furnish their necessities and to pay their debts.

Mr. President, it is a misnomer to call this fund an administrative fund in the sense that an administrative fund is ordinarily considered as an administrative expense. As the junior Senator from Georgia has said, the plan has been as much a farm vocational-educational program as it has been a credit program; and only as adequate supervision and assistance of a technical nature are given to those families who previously have had no opportunity, has it been possible for them to be rehabilitated and to repay their interest and principal. Therefore, to condemn the program on the basis of a statement that it costs $1 in supervision for every $2 loaned, which I do not concede to be true, is to indicate an utter lack of understanding of the entire program.

My fear is that the Committee on Appropriations has cut this fund too deeply, and that as a result the proper supervision and technical assistance may not be sufficiently available. To the extent that such assistance fails, to that extent will the loans fail, and to that extent will the program fail.

The plan of providing credit with personal guidance has worked well. Many farm families were in desperate circumstances, unable to obtain credit from any source, until the Farm Security Administration gave them assistance. With such help and by their own hard work they had repaid, by December 31, 1942, nearly $338,000,000 of the approximately $712,000,000 of loans which have been made.

Mr. President, in the face of that record, I say that the evidence presented to the House committee, the evidence presented to the Byrd committee, and the evidence presented to the Appropriations Committee shrink into insignificance. It consists of a few flyspecks which have been gathered up out of the mistakes which must have been made in a program of such great magnitude, dealing with persons without sufficient farm management experience and, in many cases, without sufficient education.

I say that in relation to the constructive achievements which have been realized in making better American citizens, the evidence presented against the F. S. A. to the House committee, to the Senate committee, and to the Byrd committee should not be dignified by giving it attention. Ninety percent of it would not have been admitted in a police court anywhere in the United States. Ninety percent of it is of the most hearsay character of any alleged evidence I have ever heard or read.

The total repayments, including advance payments, amount to 91 percent of the maturities. Repayments, excluding advance payments, were 85.5 percent of maturities. Approximately 200,000 families have repaid their loans in full. Let that fact soak into the minds of Senators. Two hundred thousand families who, before the Farm Security Administration gave them assistance, were at the bottom of the rural agricultural ladder have repaid in full the loans which have been extended to them by that organization.

Mr. President, I say that such a record compares favorably with the loan record of any private insurance or other agency operating over a similar period of time with similar clients.

These borrowers are not only repaying well, but they are also recovering their position as self-reliant farmers. I say to my conservative friends in this body, on both sides of the aisle, that it is shocking to me to see them band together to tear down an agency which, upon the admitted facts, has been restoring the hope of equality of economic opportunity which made this country great, and which makes men believe in and willing to die for democracy.

If we wish to create in this country such a condition that radicalism will find fertile soil, just allow the tendency adverse to individual ownership of the land by the people, which has been progressing since the turn of the century, to proceed to its logical conclusion. Permit the industrialization and mechanization of agriculture to continue to its logical conclusion, and we shall pave the way for communism or fascism in this Nation. If we want to maintain the moral fiber of democracy while we are fighting abroad on the military fronts and on the seven seas of the world, do not strike down an agency which is enabling so many people to restore their belief that there is a measure of opportunity in this country for men and their families to rise above the level of squalor and poverty.

The Farm Security Administration has not only been doing the job of rehabilitating farmers in America, but it has been doing an amazing and outstanding job in increasing food production. A survey of the 1942 food-production records of 463,941 farmers shows that this group, which made up only 7.6 percent of all the farmers in the United States, supplied 36 percent of all the increased milk production; 27 percent of all the increased production of dried beans; 10 percent of all the additional chickens, eggs, and peanuts produced; 9 percent of the increased pork production; 7 percent of the increase in the production of beef and sugar beets; and 3 percent of the increased production of soybeans.

Shall we strike down an agency which has been enabling a relatively few farmers in the United States to contribute so greatly to the need for increased food for our armed forces, for the lend-lease requirements, and for the civilian population? I say that this great record is indisputable. The survey was made under the supervision of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics; and no Senator in his right mind will question the professional statistical character and standing of that Bureau of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. President, at this point I ask to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a table showing the total increases for a number of food products.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Increases in production of essential crop and livestock products between 1941 and 1942, by all farmers and by Farm Security Administration borrowers [1]

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the value of the Farm Security Administration has not been limited to the direct contribution which farm families are now making to the war effort. The F. S. A. borrowers not only are growing large quantities of scarce foods for America; they are not only repaying their loans well, but also are recovering their position as self-reliant farmers. They will bulwark the Nation for the years to come. By the end of 1941 the net worth of the average farm security rehabilitation borrower, the value of what he owned over what he owed, had risen 43 percent since the time they came under this program. The actual net worth of the families, which averaged $871 before they received F. S. A. help, had increased by 1941 to $1,242. Does anyone think that families which have gone through that experience are on the road to communism? No, they are on the road to Americanism.

I say that it is a blind and destructive conservatism which would strike down the achievements of an agency which is making a record of this kind—a record which cannot be successfully disputed. All that can be found against the F. S. A., after the expenditure of considerable sums of money, is the kind of tripe appearing in the record of the House committee, the Senate committee, and the Byrd committee. I stated before, and I repeat, that such evidence would not be admitted in a police court in a trial for stealing a chicken.

The net family income had increased an average of 80 percent, or from $480 to $865. The families had learned to grow and conserve more food for the family table. The $327 worth of home-used food produced in 1941 was almost exactly double the $163 worth which the family had been accustomed to using. Does anyone think that children brought up in such an improved dietary situation will make less desirable American citizens? Does anyone think that they will be less willing to die for American democracy on some far-flung battlefield?

I say that this is an activity of the Government of which every true American may well be proud. In my judgment, it is the kind of activity which must be encouraged and developed in this country. We must restore the measure of equality of economic opportunity which existed when we had a great public domain, which could be thrown open to exploitation and use, where individuals and their families could go and take up new land and acquire an economic stake in America. It is the closing of the door of economic opportunity by the exhaustion of the physical frontier and by the development of modern industry that threatens democracy in America. It is not foreign propaganda. Developments of an inexorable economic nature are taking place right here at home.

Of course there have been mistakes in this program. There is not a Senator who, if he had been appointed to administer it, would not have made mistakes. How are we going to help the people at the bottom of the rural economic ladder without sometimes making mistakes? The opponents of the Farm Security Administration ought to develop more than one case to embalm in the records of the Senate for 2 years in succession—the case of some poor fellow in Alabama who missed the boat.

Farm planning and sound credit have been accompanied by other types of aid. More than 117,000 farm families, or 615,000 persons in 1,071 counties of 39 States, through medical plans worked out with physicians, are receiving medical care at a cost which they can afford to pay. Does it make them Communists to give them some medical care, to stop some of the ravages of disease which has taken such a horrible toll in infant and maternal mortality in this group at the bottom of the rural economic ladder in America? I say no. A thousand times no.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator on the amendment has expired.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will take time on the bill.

I say that we are helping to build better American citizens, who will have greater love for their country than they would have had if they had grown up suffering from rickets, or with teeth missing, or afflicted with some other disease caused by rural poverty.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am glad to yield briefly.

Mr. BONE. I wonder what would happen to some of our institutions in America if by congressional action we should blot them out if they should make financial mistakes. I have been watching the newspapers lately, and they are all singing hymns of praise now for the holding companies in the utility field. Their admitted business operations would give a polecat convulsions. They have cost the people of the country billions of dollars. The whole crowd ought to have been in the penitentiary for their maladroit operations.

According to the theory advanced here, because the F. S. A. has made some mistakes, we should incontinently blot it out. On that theory we ought to destroy all the holding companies in the utility field, without a single exception. If we are to enthrone in America the philosophy that an institution which makes some financial blunders is to be blotted out, a novel theory will be established in American political practice. I am glad to see that we are tending in that direction. It will make everyone very careful from now on.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will say to the Senator from Washington that I think the amazement we should express in viewing this great constructive record should be that there have been so little loss and so few mistakes in comparison with the size of the program and the disadvantages of the people involved.

Complaint has been made that some rehabilitation borrowers have been given grants. Grants have been given only on the same basis as grants were given to other farmers. Should an individual who had borrowed a little money and who had a crop failure or sickness be denied relief because of that situation?

Criticism has also been made where borrowers have had hard luck, and were not able to make the grade in a particular year, but there was still hope for their being rehabilitated, and the F. S. A. issued additional notes to take up their delinquency and the interest due. This is a common practice of every commercial loan institution in the United States, and yet because it is done for a poor indigent farmer in America it has been denounced here as an uneconomic practice.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator referred to losses which had been sustained. The amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia places the administration under the seed loan and production loan officials.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Well, I was wishing I had those figures, and I hope the Senator will put them in the RECORD, because I myself thought it would be fine to put them in now.

Mr. RUSSELL. This organization has done a good work.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I agree.

Mr. RUSSELL. But these are unsupervised loans. From 1918, when they were made, down to 1940, the repayments amounted to 64 percent as compared with an average of more than 86 percent by the Farm Security Administration.

In the years of 1938, 1939, and 1940, which were reasonably good crop years, the average for those years was 78.92 percent as compared with an average of more than 86 percent over a longer period by the Farm Security Administration, and 93 percent for last year, which shows that not a great deal would be gained by placing this in the seed-loan class. We must also bear in mind that those who borrow from the seed-loan fund have to give a chattel-mortgage on their personal property before they can obtain the money, whereas the other borrowers start from scratch.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly, and it has been suggested that the limit of $800 should be raised for these seed loans. I shall vote for it, but every Senator knows that no small farmer needs to borrow $800 for seed for 1 single year. Let us be frank about it, Mr. President. To adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia would be to kill the service which has been rendered to the farmers at the bottom of the rural economic ladder in America. It would deny them credit; and that is said without any criticism whatsoever of the Farm Credit Administration or the farm-production associations, or any other of the organizations mentioned in the Senator's amendment. They are not equipped, they are not in a position, to render the kind of service which has been rendered by the Farm Security Administration.

Mr. President, voluntary debt adjustments have been made with the creditors of more than 107,000 farmers to enable them to carry on. That means that approximately 107,000 farm families have been saved from losing their farms as a result of the voluntary credit work done by this organization.

About 201,000 families are sharing the cost of farm machinery, sires, and other farm-improvement services. More than 17,000 of these services have been successfully undertaken with Farm Security Administration loans.

Mr. President, with all the criticism which can be made of F. S. A., with all the evidence, hearsay or otherwise, which has been dragged in against this organization, this magnificent record of constructive rehabilitation of great numbers of American farm families, and their restoration to self-respecting positions in our society, stand out like a mountain peak against a molehill.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have already discussed the amendment offered by me, and I shall take only a few more minutes of the time of the Senate.

I wish to take sharp issue with the Senator from Wisconsin in his statement that the amendment offered by me would deny any aid to the low-income group of farmers. That, Mr. President, is simply not correct, because the emergency Crop and Feed Loan Division of the Farm Credit Administration has now made 1,491,655 loans to low-income-group farmers in this country, limited in this instance to $400. To say that the proposal made by the Senator from Virginia to transfer the Farm Security Administration to the Farm Credit Administration under the administration of the Crop and Feed Loan Division will deny all loans to the low-income group of farmers is simply not correct.

Mr. President, I wish only to refer to another statement which has been made, and that is with respect to the cost of the Farm Security Administration.

The Treasury records show that from April 8, 1935, to December 31, 1941, there had been loaned $576,000,000, in round figures, and grants amounting to $137,000,000 had been made, or a total of $714,000,000.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I should like to state to the Senator that my information, which I am sure is correct, is that the Farm Security Administration did not come into being until September 1937; but the Senator is using the figures of 1935.

Mr. BYRD. I am using the figures of the rural rehabilitation program of the F. S. A. and its predecessor agency.

Mr. RUSSELL. Then that is a correct statement.

Mr. BYRD. The cost of their personnel, such as salaries, was $198,000,000, and so forth—an aggregate of $275,000,000.

Now, Mr. President, some reference has been made to the percentage of loans which are current. I merely wish again to invite the attention of the Senate to what I referred to this morning, namely, that Mr. Baldwin testified that when in many instances these borrowers became delinquent in their installments new notes were taken, and the loans would then be declared current. So I submit that the figures which have been given in percentages cannot have any real validity.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia proposes—as has been fully discussed—to transfer the Farm Security Administration to the Farm Credit Administration, and to operate it through the existing Crop and Feed Loan Division and the production credit associations.

It provides for an appropriation of $12,000,000, of which $8,000,000 shall be available to the Extension Service to provide such farm and home management assistance as it may be necessary to borrow. That $8,000,000 compares with $16,000,000 which I understand is available under the Farm Security appropriation proposed.

It is then proposed to make available $40,000,000 of loans. Let us recall that now perhaps there is not as great need for these new loans as there has been in the past and, while this is a reduction in the loans made available, yet under the conditions which now exist, if these loans are soundly administered, $40,000,000 will be sufficient, in my opinion.

I do not desire to take further time, as I know the Senator from Georgia is anxious to dispose of the pending proposal.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I desire to claim the floor for a brief time, largely for the purpose of asking a question or two of the Senator from Georgia which I shall be glad to have him answer in my time, as to the general purport of the committee amendment. It may be that it will be retracing some ground which the Senator from Georgia has covered during my necessary temporary absence from the floor.

I have discussed this matter many times privately with the Senator from Georgia, and I say frankly, in asking the questions, that it has been my observation that the consensus of opinion in my own State, on the part of those who have had opportunity of observing the operations of the Farm Security Administration, is that nearly everyone is in favor of continuing and perpetuating the functions of that Administration, but that nearly everyone complains about the extravagance and waste in the Administration, and certain communistic tendencies in some sections of my State and in other sections of the United States, doubtless inherited from the Tugwellian administration of the predecessor agency.

I can best express the consensus of opinion I have had by reading a letter, very briefly, from the editor of the Missouri Farmer, the organ of the Missouri Farmers Association, the greatest farm agency in the State of Missouri, one of the greatest in the United States, and one of the greatest farm cooperatives in the United States, Mr. H. E. Kleinfelter, who is also the head of the legislative committee of the Missouri Farmers Association. He says:

> We knew that Farm Security Administration was involved in the bill, although we did not understand all the angles at this distance from Washington, nor was there time for us to investigate. We realized Farm Security Administration needed drastic pruning—it, too, is an overgrown bureaucracy—but we were in possession of no facts to pass judgment on it. Common sense tells one that less relief is needed during current times.
> Farm Security Administration, with all its faults, has helped many a poor devil who had been turned away by everybody else, and we are wondering if some means has been provided in the bill to continue this aid—aid to those who are now struggling up the economic ladder, and aid to those who will need it badly after the war ends?

Mr. President, in view of the fact that nearly everyone in the country is in favor of continuing the functions, the professed objectives, of the Farm Security Administration, continuing the good work they have done, as Mr. Kleinfelter says, of helping many a poor devil up the hill when he could not get relief anywhere else; also in view of the fact that nearly everyone in the whole United States is opposed to the waste and extravagance which have undoubtedly been existent in the administration of this office, I should like to have the Senator from Georgia, even if he has already done so, in my time to explain what provisions of the Senate amendment make correction of the existing conditions in this agency, particularly what suggestion there may be for correcting the extravagant tendencies of Mr. Baldwin. The Senator knows I discussed this matter with him several times, and I think the Senator knows my position on it.

Mr. RUSSELL. I think I understand the Senator's position, and we are not far apart. We are in practical agreement as to our objective.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will say to the Senator that in our private discussions I thought we were in entire agreement, but when I read the amendment the Senator brought in from his committee, unless the Senator can make some further explanation of it, I am not at all certain we agree.

Mr. RUSSELL. I wish to say that there is no stronger friend of the Farm Security Administration than I have been, but I think there have been some people in the Farm Security Administration who have seized the rehabilitation program as an occasion for presenting their own views as to the organization of farmers and the manner in which farm labor should be handled.

As to migratory labor and the camps, last year the provision for the Farm Security Administration specifically authorized them to administer such camps in certain sections of the country. That is eliminated from the Senate committee amendment this year. There is nothing in the bill, no appropriation, authorizing the Farm Security to deal with the migratory labor problem. It is now being handled by an officer of the Army and Mr. Chester Davis, under the provisions of the special labor act, with which the Senator is familiar. That relates to one question at issue which was raised by the Senator's correspondent. It did not make any difference how earnest many of the Farm Security officials might have been to promulgate ideas out of harmony with those of the Senator or with my ideas, it is another matter when it comes to dealing with the ordinary farmer.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am not trying to insist on my views being followed by any governmental agency, but I do not wish to appropriate money for a governmental agency with which to propagandize its own views or to compel its own views in violation of the general practice and of existing law.

Mr. RUSSELL. That refers to one question raised by the Senator. The farm migratory labor and the camps and the handling of the labor have been entirely divorced from the Farm Security Administration by the pending bill and the preceding act.

The Senator referred to extravagance. The total funds carried for the current year, 1943, direct appropriations and reappropriations for administration and for grants, was $41,986,743. The Senate committee bill carries $29,607,573. This is a reduction of more than $12,000,000. I say that that is a very drastic reduction in the administrative expenses.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I agree that is a very substantial and very meritorious reduction. The only question in my mind is that the Senate committee apparently has made no restriction on the use of the money.

Mr. RUSSELL. Oh, Mr. President——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. We have had many bills presented for this agency in the past, showing they have spent exorbitant sums in telephone charges and telegraph charges, in addition to the enormous use of the franking privilege. It seems to me all those matters are things which are fairly subject to congressional review and reduction.

Mr. RUSSELL. They are.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator's committee has made a very excellent and a very drastic reduction in over-all administrative expenses, but, as I understand, it is still left to the discretion of the administrative agency, which at the time is Mr. Baldwin, as to how the money shall be expended.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not know of any item in the bill which is broken down into dollars and cents for communications and travel. Such appropriations are always in lump sums.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I understand that, but it seems to me that in the case of this agency the appropriation could be broken down, and some restrictions should be put on the amount which can be squandered for telephone and telegraph bills, which I use only as an example.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator knows that when we cut an appropriation over 25 percent, there must be some reductions in expenses all along the line.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think that is true.

Mr. RUSSELL. It might be that in making the adjustment within the total appropriation allowed by Congress there was too much allocated for travel.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think that has certainly been true in the past.

Mr. RUSSELL. I wish to point out that the committee amendment, so far as the activities of the Farm Security Administration are concerned, is much more restrictive than the amendment of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the Senator from Georgia thinks he can convince me of that I shall be glad to have him attempt to do so in my time, and if he convinces me I shall vote for the committee amendment rather than for the substitute amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. RUSSELL. It is not more restrictive as to amount. Of course, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia reduces the amount very drastically. What I am talking about is the operations.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me interrupt the Senator from Georgia to state my position, which is, that so far as I am concerned, I am willing to appropriate every penny that is needed to carry out the proper functions of this agency, but I wish the money to be expended on the performance of the functions, rather than being squandered in administrative expenses. I have been informed that over the period since the creation of this agency, that is the present agency and its predecessor agencies, nearly $1 has been spent for administrative expenses for every $2 either loaned or granted by the agency. Does the Senator know whether that is true?

Mr. RUSSELL. I know it is incorrect as to the F. S. A.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The figures which are furnished me—and I have them from several different sources—show that from April 8, 1935, to December 31, 1941, the Farm Security Administration and its predecessors have cost the Government by way of administrative expenses a total of $275,861,889.27, in order to make loans and grants totaling $714,092,031.52. That is not exactly in proportion of 1 to 2, but it is almost in that proportion. Does the Senator think there is any justification for such a proportion of administrative expense?

Mr. RUSSELL. No; I do not think so at all. The one thing that I have thought to be unfair all the way through in connection with consideration of the Farm Security Administration—and heaven knows the Farm Security Administration has done enough that is subject to criticism, without bringing it in—is the fact that the doings of the predecessor to the Farm Security Administration, under Tugwell and others, have all been bundled up and tied in with the figures of the F. S. A. I do not think that is fair.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I take issue with the Senator from Georgia on that point, because it is the Tugwellian influence, if I may use that expression, in the Farm Security Administration, which is really a subject for debate here. As to many of the activities of the Farm Security Administration no one takes issue. It is the chimerical projects, and excessive use of the telephone and telegraph and other extravagances and waste of money, that are subject to criticism. That is the question which is at issue.

Mr. RUSSELL. There was a substantial reduction in travel expense and in communications expense last year. A very drastic reduction in those expenses for the next year will inevitably ensue because of the reduction of administrative expense of over 25 percent. The administrative expense of the Farm Security Administration will amount to 4.32 percent for the coming year, according to the Budget estimate. When we consider that these loans are made on a 3- to 5-year basis, and that supervision of them is in effect on the farms during the periods for which they are outstanding, I think that the percentage of expense is about as low as it can be, if there is to be assurance of collecting the money. What is lost sight of is that if $40,000,000 is made available this year for loans, and the administrative expenses are $15,000,000, or $12,000,000, as proposed in the Byrd amendment, then the administrative expenses will amount to over 25 percent of the loans.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Missouri on the amendment has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will take time on the bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. Since the loans are made over a 3- or 5-year period, certainly the administrative expense should not all be charged up to any one year.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me ask the Senator from Georgia if it is not a fact that under the contemplated breakdown—I understand it is not in the bill for this year—that the travel expenses are estimated at $5,000,000, or approximately $5,000,000.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not have the figures before me.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the Senator from Georgia were to go by train to Atlanta—it may be very difficult to get a reservation on the train if he be merely a United States Senator—but if he were to get into a Pullman car, or even break into a dining car, he would find at least five or six Farm Security Agency employees sitting at the tables of the dining car comparing their notes.

It seems to me there has been an entirely exaggerated amount of administrative expense. I am not trying to be cheese-paring or nickel-pinching, or meticulous about the thing, but I still cannot see wherein the Senator from Georgia, with all respect to him and to the Appropriations Committee, has made any particular change in the administrative provisions of this measure, with the single exception of reducing the appropriation for administrative expenses, which I grant he has done.

Mr. RUSSELL. Of course, that is done. That is manifest. There is no other way that economy can be effected than by reducing the appropriation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What I had hoped was that when the Senator was bringing in the legislative amendment, which this admittedly is, he might have included legislation to restrict some of these obnoxious administrative practices.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have not had the experience the Senator from Missouri has had. I do not travel on trains a great deal, but I do not recall meeting Farm Security personnel on trains. They may have been on them, but they were not known as such to me. I do know that approximately 90 percent of the total travel expense allowed this year in the bill will be spent within the counties by the representatives who are servicing and supervising these loans. I do think, Mr. President, when we have an investment of so large an amount in loans we should not be too penurious with travel expenses of the men who are supervising the loans.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not desire to be too penurious, but the Senator from Georgia will be forced to admit that there has been outrageous extravagance in the administration of this agency. What I am troubled about is that there is nothing in the bill to curb the extravagance and the waste except a horizontal reduction in the appropriations.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not know of any other way to bring about a reduction, and the Senator from Missouri does not know of any other way. If the Senator from Missouri does not regard a 25-per-cent reduction in the total over-all expense a curbing of extravagance, I do not know what it is.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If I were a member of the committee and believed as the Senator from Georgia, that the Appropriations Committee has now become a legislative committee, and had a right to legislate, I think I could frame legislation which would be effective with respect to the use of the appropriation which is now being made.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator can express an opinion as to his belief, but he should not express the opinion that I believe the Senate Appropriations Committee is a legislative committee.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I was simply basing my judgment on the Senator's conduct in debating the bill yesterday. I have no desire to delay action on the bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. It so happens that a substantial majority of the committee agreed with me.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. They are apparently in favor of the Appropriations Committee being a legislative committee.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, Americans to whom farm problems were never very vital—factory workers, salesgirls, streetcar conductors, truck drivers, and housewives—today have an enormous stake in matters affecting agriculture. Citizens from every walk of life now realize that the future of our common cause—prosecution of the war to victory and an abundant peace—depends largely upon how much food we have for our soldiers, our fighting allies, and our people here at home. Food policy is a part of United Nations strategy; it must, therefore, be patterned to meet the needs of democratic people everywhere.

The farmer, although his living depends on production of food and fiber, cannot today be the special beneficiary of our agricultural policy. He makes no such claim, I am sure; like patriotic citizens everywhere, he has pledged his land, his labor, and, if necessary, his life to victory. He is an American, first; a farmer, second. He knows that his welfare and that of our whole people are identical.

The paid professionals who in the name of the American Farm Bureau Federation claim to speak in Washington for the farmer, too often put the farmer's profits before his patriotism. In doing so they do him insult and injustice, they sabotage his unselfish service, they weaken his country's fighting strength.

In the current attack on the Farm Security Administration—an attack directed chiefly from the offices of the American Farm Bureau Federation—we have an example of the professional Farm Bureau lobby doing business as usual. It is zealous in the interests of the big farm and big plantation operators it represents, the operators who see in the war an opportunity to push the small-scale farmer off the land—to make him a tenant or a day laborer, to absorb his land into their vast holdings. It is reckless of our need for all the food the people of this land can grow.

The Farm Bureau has not demanded dismemberment of the Farm Security Administration as a means of increasing the war food supply. That would be an absurd claim to make; I doubt that even the bitterest critic of the Farm Security Administration has ever suggested that abolition of F. S. A. would give us more to eat. No one, not even the Farm Bureau contends that our war effort would be in the slightest degree furthered by the withdrawal of this assistance to small farmers.

Some do contend, however, that whatever food increase could be secured from the small farmer through F. S. A. assistance would be small and too costly. That, of course, is very different from arguing that there would be greater food production without F. S. A.

The American Farm Bureau Federation, then, has placed itself in a very strange position for a farm lobby. It is telling the public, in effect, "You cannot afford to buy more food through the F. S. A. plan."

This question is exactly the kind, I think, which should be answered by the public at large, rather than by farm interests—particularly by vested farm interests, such as the Farm Bureau in most States represents.

I think the factory worker, the streetcar conductor, the truck driver, and the housewife should be heard on this question of how badly we want more food and how much we are willing to pay for it. They have, perhaps, a greater right to speak on this matter than do farmers themselves. Certainly their interest is more legitimate than that of a paid lobbyist whose job, as he interprets it, is to keep prices up—if necessary by keeping production down.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics has reported that in the year ending March 15, the general cost of living rose 7.4 percent, and that in that same period food prices rose 15.9 percent. Those figures have been underlined for our attention by labor unrest. Within the last month there has been one major strike and a rash of lesser ones, all of them largely attributable to rising food costs and increasing food scarcities.

In my own State, potatoes, chickens, and meat have been largely unobtainable for long periods. Due mostly to scarcities of foods, prices have risen alarmingly in the past year in large urban areas like Pittsburgh. In that metropolitan area, for instance, the retail prices of all foods advanced 18.4 percent from April 1942 to April 1943. The average price per pound of butter rose from 43.1 cents to 55.6 cents during that period. In April of last year a Pittsburgh housewife could buy a leg of lamb at 31.2 cents a pound. In April of this year she had to pay an average price of 39.3 cents. Similarly, potatoes went from 42.7 cents for 15 pounds to 77.3 cents; oranges jumped an average of 12.9 cents a dozen; and the price of apples increased by one-half. Those figures are all from the Bureau of Labor Statistics—the most reliable source.

The current O. P. A. plans to reduce the cost of living will probably actually reduce average food costs by only about 3 percent. That will leave the cost of living still far higher than a year ago; and we are told that, even with higher prices, there still will not be enough to go around, that the shortages are only beginning.

Assuming normal weather conditions—and in view of recent weather, such an assumption is too optimistic—total food production this year will be only about 4 or 5 percent more than last, according to the Department of Agriculture. Under normal conditions crop production will be about 9 percent less than last year, while livestock production will be about 10 percent higher.

From about the same total production as last year, we shall have to send to our Army and, by lend-lease, to our allies twice as much food as we did last year—25 percent of the total food supply, rather than 12 percent. There can be no thought of short measuring those who fight by our side so valiantly.

It is in this background that we must study the questions raised by the Farm Bureau: How much can we afford to pay for more food? How much can we afford to pay for the food increases that will keep our industrial workers hard at their jobs without interruptions? How much can we afford to pay for the food increases we must give our soldiers and fighting allies?

I do not know what the Farm Bureau's answers to those questions might be. I do know that our people in the cities want utmost abundance. I know, too, that the rank and file of farmers want to grow every pound of food they possibly can grow.

The recent figures from the Bureau of Agricultural Economics show that of the country's 6,000,000 farmers, about 2,000,000 are already operating at or near capacity. Their farms, which at present are contributing about 80 percent of our total marketed agricultural production, can make almost no increases in food output unless a shift from nonfood items such as cotton and tobacco to more nutritive crops is encouraged.

At the other end of the scale, about a million and a half of the 6,000,000 farmers can make little or no increases because they farm only seasonally or are handicapped by inadequate land and other resources.

That leaves a middle group of about two and a half million farmers, of whom the Bureau of Agricultural Economics estimates that one and a half million can make substantial increases. They have enough labor and land to handle expanded operations, but they lack credit and, to some degree, skill. Apparently, higher farm prices will not solve their problem; at least they have not yet. From 1939 to 1942, prices which farmers received rose 70 percent, but total production rose only 18 percent.

We can easily see, by examining into the distribution of income among farm families, why it is that high prices do not enable the small farmer to expand his production.

Figures provided me by the Department of Agriculture show that if we divide the 6,000,000 farms into three income groupings, each of about 2,000,000 families, the average gross income of the upper group was $7,370 last year—an increase of 94 percent over 1939. This upper income group—about one-third of all farmers—had money left over at the end of the year to invest in expanded capacity. The lower-income third had an average income last year of $800—48 percent more than in 1939, but still far too little to do more than pay family living expenses and current operating costs.

It is the middle-income third with which the Farm Security Administration is largely working and it is in that group that most of the 1,500,000 small farmers whom the Bureau of Agricultural Economics says might greatly expand their output are to be found. The average gross income of those farmers last year was $1,640—53 percent higher than in 1939. If we want to know why that group is unable to buy the livestock, fertilizer, machinery, and other supplies necessary to be had in order to expand production, we must see where that gross income of $1,640 goes. The Department of Agriculture gives this break-down:

Three hundred and seventy-five dollars is not cash income at all; it is the value of products grown on the farm, but used at home.

Six hundred and forty-five dollars is required for current operating expenses. They include largely the cost of the things the farmer buys for business purposes.

Three hundred and ninety dollars goes for family living expenses—a very modest amount, I should say.

One hundred and sixty dollars is needed for payment on outstanding debts.

That leaves only $70 of the family's gross income—only $70 which can be devoted to increasing production next year. Seventy dollars is a good deal less than half enough to buy one first-class cow.

The Bureau of Agricultural Economics, through its Chief, has said that nearly 1,500,000 of those small farmers are in about the same situation as were F. S. A. supervised borrowers before obtaining their loans, and that they could be expected to make about the same production increases as have the F. S. A. borrowers.

If that is the case, we might expect a very great benefit to our food situation from mobilizing those small farmers into the food production army. The Farm Security borrowers made increases last year at a much greater rate than did farmers in general. Here is a partial record of their increases, as shown in a recent F. S. A. program report:

> During 1942, Farm Security Administration borrowers, although comprising only 7.6 percent of all the farmers in the United States, accounted for 38 percent of the increase in milk, 17 percent of the increase in dry beans, 9 percent of the increase in eggs and chickens.
> In terms of the yearly food requirements of robust American men, the 1942 increased output by Farm Security Administration borrowers would supply eggs to feed nearly 3,000,000 men, milk to feed more than 2,500,000 men, pork to feed more than 1,500,000 men.

It is evident, then, that the one and one-half million under-employed small farmers can be assisted through the Farm Security Administration program to make very important contributions to our war food supply.

How much will it cost to secure those increases? F. S. A. experience with its 450,000 current borrowers provides the answer.

Although none of them were able to get credit from any other source, the F. S. A. borrowers have so far repaid on schedule 91 cents for every dollar loaned them. The F. S. A. has borrowed $326,950,000 from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation since June 1940, and it has repaid to the R. F. C. all but $77,000,000; and that sum is secured by notes in the ratio of 5 to 1.

We must recognize, of course, that credit alone is not sufficient to secure full production from the smaller farms. The F. S. A. has been successful because it has afforded the farmer supervision and training along with loans. Probably the Agency's educational services have been as important as its credit. At any rate, the cost of giving the small farmers guidance and new skills has been somewhat less than $35,000,000 during the year.

I think, therefore, that we should be able to decide for ourselves—without any help from the Farm Bureau—whether the Nation can afford to buy food from small farmers. Indeed, we might ask ourselves this question: Now, in wartime, when our people at home are not getting all the food they want and when a hungry world is watching us, can we afford not to tap the enormous reserve capacity of our smaller farms?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the pending amendment.

So the first branch of the committee amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the next committee amendment passed over.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 93, after line 4, to insert:

FARM TENANCY

To enable the Secretary to carry into effect the provisions of title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, approved July 22, 1937 (7 U. S. C. 1000–1006), as follows:

Salaries and expenses: For necessary expenses in connection with the making of loans under title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, approved July 22, 1937 (7 U. S. C. 1000–1006), and the collection of moneys due the United States on account of loans heretofore made under the provisions of said act, including the employment of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, exclusive of printing and binding as authorized by said act, $1,326,070.

Loans: For loans to individual farmers in accordance with title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, approved July 22, 1937 (7 U. S. C. 1000–1006), $30,000,000, which sum shall be borrowed from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation at an interest rate of 3 percent per annum: Provided, That the amount which is available to any State or Territory for making loans under such title I shall be distributed by the Secretary, in accordance with rules prescribed by him, among the several counties or parishes in such State or Territory, except that he shall not distribute to any such county or parish in excess of three times the amount which would be distributed to such county or parish were the entire amount available to the State or Territory distributed among the several counties or parishes in such State or Territory on the basis of farm population and the prevalence of tenancy; and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized and directed to lend such sum to the Secretary upon the security of any obligations of borrowers from the Secretary under the provisions of title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, approved July 22, 1937 (7 U. S. C. 1000–1006): Provided, That the amount loaned by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall not exceed 85 percent of the principal amount outstanding of the obligations constituting the security therefor: Provided further, That the Secretary may utilize proceeds from payments of principal and interest on any loans made under such title I to repay the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the amount borrowed therefrom under the authority of this paragraph: Provided further, That the amount of notes, bonds, debentures, and other such obligations which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to issue and to have outstanding at any one time under existing law is hereby increased by an amount sufficient to carry out the provisions hereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 95, after line 11, to strike out:

SEC. 2. No part of any appropriation contained in this act or authorized hereby to be expended shall be used to pay the compensation or expenses of any officer or employee of the Department of Agriculture, or any bureau, office, agency, or service of the Department or any corporation, institution or association supervised thereby, who engages in, or directs or authorizes any other officer or employee of the Department or any such bureau, office, agency, service, corporation, institution, or association to engage in, the making of loans under the provisions of section 201 (e) of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932 (12 U. S. C. 1148), as amended, or the making of loans or advances in accordance with the terms and conditions set forth in Food Production Financing Bulletins F–1 or F–2 of the Farm Credit Administration operating under the Food Production Administration, Production Loan Branch.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, may I ask the distinguished Senator from Georgia to give an explanation as to why this section was stricken?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the pending amendment is found on page 95 of the bill. The section proposed to be stricken was a limitation imposed by the House, which would have the effect of eliminating and prohibiting any loans made by the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation.

This agency was established by an act of Congress which was passed in 1932. A great many loans were made by the agency in 1933 and 1934, particularly to farmers engaged in the production of cattle. The Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation then remained more or less dormant for a number of years. Some loans were made, notably in the Wenatchee Valley of Washington, the great apple-producing section, and those loans all turned out very successfully, so far as the evidence submitted to the committee showed. A number of other loans of types F–1 and F–2 were made to encourage the production of farm products.

There was a great deal of testimony before the committee as to the propriety of this organization using F–2 loans as an incentive for food production. They are in the nature of nonrecourse loans. They are made to persons who increase their acreage of certain war crops to a very marked degree, and the sole collateral for the loan is the crop which is produced.

Representations were made in behalf of those who were interested in having the work of the Regional Agricultural Corporation stopped altogether. Other farmers were most anxious that it be continued. Today I received a telegram from a group of farmers in the State of Florida, reading as follows:

Please use your influence to get the Senate to strike out section 2 of H. R. 2481 (agricultural appropriation bill) now before agricultural subcommittee of Senate Committee on Appropriations.

They were in error as to where the bill was, of course.

I continue reading from the telegram:

Said section abolishes the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation. The credit available under this program is the only means the undersigned have of producing crops on 3,000 acres this year and 10,000 acres next year. Private capital, Federal Land Bank, Production Credit Association, cannot provide the necessary production funds. Greatly prefer this type of assistance to subsidies. We are all members of the Farm Bureau Federation and disagree with its program in this respect.

That telegram is signed by 20 or 25 men whom I do not have the pleasure of knowing personally, but it shows the type of representations made to the committee in regard to this matter.

Mr. President, the committee was not unanimous in its approval of the type of loans being made under the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation Act. Despite the insinuations, however, that have been made against the committee, and the charges which have openly been made that we were undertaking to legislate all over the face of the earth, we did not feel this was a matter which should be determined on an appropriation bill. It was new matter in the bill, not like the other legislative provisions we have offered, which have been in the act from year to year. It was new matter, and had the effect of repealing, by a limitation on appropriations, the favorable action of the standing Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate and the Committee on Agriculture of the House.

So without regard to the views of the committee on this policy, the feeling in the committee was this is a question which should be handled by the standing committee. I believe reference was made to the fact that the Senator from Nebraska had introduced a bill which was pending before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and on which hearings were about to be had.

The Appropriations Committee clearly showed, in its discussion of this question, that it was almost the unanimous opinion of the committee that all the many ramifications of the various lending agencies of the Federal Government dealing with the farmers should be coordinated and reorganized. We are not a standing committee, and we did not undertake to violate the rules of the Senate by bringing in a legislative proposal which would have reorganized all the credit agencies. To protect the rights of the standing committees of the Senate we struck out the House provision, which we looked upon as an infringement upon the prerogatives of the standing committee which had the bill under consideration.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Georgia for his explanation.

I should like to see section 2 reinstated in the bill as it came from the House. I think it is a wise provision. All it would do would be to provide a limitation on the use of the funds appropriated in the bill we are now asked to pass.

In effect, it would say to the Department of Agriculture, "You may use these funds only for the specific purposes provided in the bill." Section 2, as it came from the House, provides that the Department may not use those funds through the back door for any other agency for which there is no appropriation in the bill.

There are other limitations in the pending bill with respect to which no question has been raised. Turn to the bottom of page 3. In the provision for salaries and expenses for the Department of Agriculture there is a limitation on the appropriation.

Turn to page 66 of the bill, on which we took so much time day before yesterday. Beginning with line 16 and continuing through to the heading on page 67, "Conservation and use of agricultural land resources," a limitation will be found which I think is more far-reaching than the limitation in the particular section now under discussion.

Turn to pages 70, 92, and 93. Further limitations will there be found in this bill by which we are asked to make appropriations of funds which shall be used for the purposes designated in the bill.

When we come to page 95, section 2, we are asked to delete that section because it is desired that the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation shall continue to function with the personnel of some of the other organizations for which we are appropriating in this bill.

Mr. President, I say that this is a wise provision. If the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation desires funds to administer the act, it should come to Congress and ask for an appropriation. That is its right and privilege. If it does not have the funds to administer the act, it should not take funds from any other agency. We should protect the Department of Agriculture.

We have been told by the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee that we are holding this budget down where it belongs. We have argued about expenses. He said the cut was made from $54,000,000 to $32,500,000 in one of the administrative provisions, I believe in connection with soil conservation. Then there was an argument on the floor, and a motion was made by the able Senator from Michigan, and we had a sort of auction, and agreed on $30,000,000, cutting two and a half million from the appropriation for the administration of the act. Yet, we turn around and let the Department of Agriculture finance the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation by taking funds out of that Department and by subterfuge setting up personnel without coming to Congress and asking for an appropriation.

Mr. President, I say that this is a wise provision. It has been said that some point was raised in the House of Representatives as to whether or not it was new legislation. It is not new legislation. There is not an appropriation asked for here.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I did not say it was new legislation.

Mr. WHERRY. I understood the distinguished Senator from Georgia to say in the latter part of his remarks that he felt that we should leave this to the legislative committees, that his was an appropriation committee, and that if the legislative committee wanted to take any legislative action, all right.

Mr. RUSSELL. I did make that statement, not on the ground that this is legislation, but that it had the effect of repealing legislation by a limitation on the appropriation.

Mr. WHERRY. That is the same thing indirectly.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have not made the point of order against it. I know that a point of order would not lie. Of course, it is a limitation on an appropriation.

Mr. WHERRY. A point of order was raised in the House on the ground that this was new legislation.

Representative HOPE, of Kansas, wanted this section taken out of the bill, and on April 19, 1943, in a discussion of the matter on the floor of the House, he raised the point of order and made the following statement in support thereof. I want the Members of this body to note the ruling made by the Chair on this very point:

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the section just read on the ground it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like the gentleman to elaborate on his point of order and point out what part of the section is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. HOPE. This section has for its apparent purpose a prohibition of further loans by the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation. There is no provision in this bill making an appropriation for this Corporation. So the limitation on its face is against officials of the Department of Agriculture who might exercise supervisory functions over it and its activities.

The regional agricultural credit corporations were created in 1932 under the Hoover administration. There were originally 12 corporations, 1 in each Federal land bank district. Later legislation was passed which authorized the consolidation of the regional agricultural credit corporations and the return of capital not needed to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to be held as a revolving fund subject to the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration.

In the meantime, and on March 27, 1933, an Executive order was issued which transferred the jurisdiction and control of the regional agricultural credit corporations from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, under whose jurisdiction they had originally been set up, to the Farm Credit Administration, and in that order the functions which were transferred were defined as follows:

"The functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and its board of directors relating to the appointment of officers and agents to manage regional agricultural credit corporations formed under section 201 (e) of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932; relating to the establishment of rules and regulations for such management and relating to the approval of loans and advances made by such corporations and of the terms and conditions thereof."

Under that Executive order and under the law it is the duty and the function of the Farm Credit Administration to make rules and regulations to supervise the operations of the regional agricultural credit corporations and to approve loans made by them. I think it is generally recognized under the rules of the House that any language purporting to be a limitation which either imposes new duties upon a Government agency or prohibits it from performing the duties which have been assigned to it is not a limitation but is legislation.

In this particular case the Farm Credit Administration is prohibited, or rather its officers are prohibited, under the legislation from directing or authorizing the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation to make loans and perform the other functions that are imposed upon it by law. That being the case, it is apparent that the officials of the Farm Credit Administration will be unable to carry out their duties in supervising the operations of the Corporation, in approving loans, and other duties which have been assigned to them.

It can very readily be determined that this is legislation, I think, by considering the interpretation which officials of the Farm Credit Administration will place upon our action if the section remains in the bill. Certainly they would understand it to mean that Congress no longer expected them to carry on the functions which under the law they are to exercise over the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation. In other words, they will conclude that Congress had changed its policy and has forbidden them to do what heretofore under the law they have been authorized and directed to do. That, Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, very clearly constitutes legislation.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be pleased to hear the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I merely want to submit to the Chair the very purpose of the limitation is to prevent the expression of a certain task, function, or duty. It may never achieve that result, as a matter of fact, in substance, but that is its primary purpose. So I submit this is a very good limitation and quite within the rules and does not constitute legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The gentleman from Kansas makes the point of order against section 2 which begins "No part of any appropriation contained in this act or authorized to be expended shall be used," and so forth.

It is the view of the Chair this section is clearly a limitation, and if there are no funds provided in this section the limitation will be ineffective. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. President, this is not new legislation, it does not directly legislate the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation out of the functions for which it was created. This is merely a limitation on the appropriation set up in the act, and if we are the guardians and custodians of public funds, we should see that no money is taken out of an appropriation for any of these departments and then by back-door methods meted out to some organization which does not come in and ask for the appropriation for its functions.

I say it is a wise provision, I say the provision in section 2 should be reinstated. It is the only proper way to legislate. Back-door methods are not in order, and they should not be employed here in the Senate. If the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation want funds, they know how to get them, they know how to administer the act, but for them to come in and take it away from the other departments on the theory we are giving those departments all the money they should have, simply means that they are allowed to borrow funds and personnel from the other departments and paying for the personnel out of these other appropriated funds.

We had Governor Black before the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures. He said the only reason why he wanted to put this in was the fact that he could go ahead and lend this money through the triple A chairmen and there would be no additional personnel, that it would not cost any money, that they would merely borrow. He was asked, "Then, if that be true, can they do without the personnel in the other departments?" He said they had plenty of time, they could use them in both departments.

What was his testimony as to that? I have here a transcript of the evidence taken before the joint committee, of which the distinguished junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is the chairman, and the hearing was held on the resolution in which I asked that the R. A. C. C. be liquidated, that there no longer was an emergency, and that there was no need for it to function now. What was the testimony? I read now from the testimony of Governor Black:

Mr. BLACK. I do not know that one could name the most important. Manpower is of prime importance.

Senator WHERRY. Right on that question of manpower, let me ask you this: How could you make a greater saving on manpower than to combine all of your lending agencies into one and loan through that one lending agency, or to continue the production credit associations and the Farm Security Administration that are getting all the credit to the farmers which they need, rather than set up a new agency that will have a personnel that I imagine will be as great as either one of them?

Mr. BLACK. We are not using additional personnel, we are using existing personnel.

Senator WHERRY. What personnel are you using?

Mr. BLACK. We are using the personnel in the production credit associations, the national farm loan associations, certain numbers of Farm Security supervisors, in some cases Agricultural Adjustment Agency men.

* * * * *

Senator WHERRY. You mean that then the Agricultural Adjustment Agency will handle these loans?

Mr. BLACK. In some cases the Agricultural Adjustment Agency men. Ordinarily the man who has been handling the Commodity Credit loans would be the local representative.

Senator WHERRY. You would have to increase the personnel to make these loans, would you not, even in their own organization?

Mr. BLACK. No, sir .

Senator WHERRY. Will it not work out that way?

Mr. BLACK. I should not think so.

Senator WHERRY. If you want to loan $225,000,000, you can still do it on the set-up they have in my county?

Mr. BLACK. It is my understanding the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation is not planning to put on any personnel. They will reimburse the agencies for the service on a time-and-cost basis.

The CHAIRMAN. Reimburse other agencies on what kind of a basis?

Mr. BLACK. A time study and cost basis.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean you will borrow personnel from other agencies?

Mr. BLACK. Yes. They would be reimbursed by Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation for the time spent.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, will not the other agencies have to get new employees to take the place of the ones you borrow?

Mr. BLACK. It is not contemplated that they will.

The CHAIRMAN. They have too many now, then, haven't they?

Mr. BLACK. I do not know that, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. If they came to your agency, the number of employees you would require, either they have had too many or they have got to get other employees to replace those that they loan to you.

Mr. BLACK. There is always a certain amount of additional work that can be taken on in any agency.

The CHAIRMAN. How many do you expect to borrow from other agencies?

Mr. BLACK Well, the services necessary for servicing these loans would require the services of one man in each county. * * *

The CHAIRMAN. There are 3,000 counties.

Mr. BLACK. Approximately.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you consider then that there would be 3,000 employees that you would need?

Mr. BLACK. Well, the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation will not have any direct employees.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not my question.

You said you are borrowing these men and you are paying the other agencies for them.

Mr. BLACK. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. As far as the Government is concerned, they are just as much employees as if you paid them as your employees directly.

Mr. BLACK. That is correct. * * *

Yes; and there are 3,000 chairmen in the different counties and in addition to the 3,000 chairmen there would be the stenographic help that would necessarily have to be set up under the R. A. C. C.

So there are not only the 3,000 chairmen being paid for out of the funds which are appropriated in this bill, but, in addition, there will be the clerical help they will have to borrow and pay for, getting it from some other department, if they are to maintain and service the loans which they expect to make under the R. A. C. C.

This is a protective measure. If they have more personnel in the department than they need, we should not appropriate for unnecessary employees. If they have too many in the department, this is a good place to begin to cut the appropriations, rather than raise them at every turn of the road.

It is contended that the R. A. C. C. cannot function unless they get the personnel from the Department of Agriculture. I do not think that is true. That is the opinion of Governor Black, but Governor Black contradicted himself so many times when he was put on the stand that it is hard to tell exactly what Governor Black did think back in March, before he had time, apparently, to come before the committee and review and revise his testimony.

If Senators read the original act, in the back of the Byrd report—and it can be secured right here in the Senate Chamber—they will find in the original act provision that the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation be set up under the R. F. C., it is responsible to the R. F. C. and the R. F. C. has granted it, under this act, the authority to appoint its supervisors, and those supervisors can do anything provided in the act. Then the act provides:

All expenses incurred in connection with the operation of the Corporation shall be supervised and paid by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under such rules and regulations as its Board of Directors may prescribe.

In other words, under the original act the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation can continue to function, under its own provisions, without borrowing personnel from different departments. That takes care of the situation in Washington where the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation, which was an emergency organization set-up, can continue to make loans out of the funds it already has, supervised by the Farm Credit under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It does not have to make any accounting to the Secretary of Agriculture. That is provided in the act itself. That was the holding when they said this was not new legislation, that this was simply a limitation on the appropriations in this act.

What is the R. A. C. C.? The original set-up made it a relief organization, the old barnyard-loan organization. I was one who helped to put it over out in Nebraska. Incidentally, I was one of the first directors of the F. S. A. in my county, and I helped to organize the first production-credit corporation in the district. I have had practical experience with these organizations. I did not learn about them from a book. I know what their purposes are. I know what they were created for, and I know what they have been doing in the different communities in my own State.

The R. A. C. C. did a wonderful piece of work. It was organized to help in drought conditions. It was organized to help men get money in an emergency, when they could not get it from private sources, when there were no private banks to which to go; and it did a good job. During all that time it succeeded well. It was managed by credit men of experience, men who knew how to make a loan, and they made the loans, and did a good job.

I should be perfectly willing to keep that organization intact, as it is intact, and make these emergency loans as they are being made in Washington. Whenever there was an emergency, I would be perfectly willing to let them do it. But the R. A. C. C. became dormant in 1934. There came many other credit agencies after 1934, after the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation had served its purpose. Then came the Credit Production Corporation, then came the Federal Farm Security Act, and there are organizations that served their States and took over the functions of the R. A. C. C. The R. A. C. C. is unnecessary except as an emergency organization, and the department should only use it in that way.

What were the conclusions of the Byrd committee as to the R. A. C. C. being revamped to serve the purpose for which Governor Black said it would be used?

What is the first conclusion the Byrd committee reached?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time on the amendment has expired.

Mr. WHERRY. I shall take 15 minutes on the bill.

1. The Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation loan program was created during the emergency of 1932 and 1933 in order to extend credit to farmers in the midst of a national drought. This particular credit emergency no longer exists.

That is the first conclusion the committee reached after all the testimony which had been taken, and the transcript of that testimony will fill a volume of tremendous size. The committee heard from farmers all over the United States. It heard from bankers over the United States. It heard from the departmental heads in Washington. Some of the testimony given before the committee I expect to place in the RECORD.

The committee said there is no emergency existing; therefore it is unnecessary to set up another bureau here in Washington. It is unnecessary at this time to bring in another agency and man it with 6,000 persons.

From the testimony let us see how badly we need this organization for food. I am not acquainted with a man named Mr. O'Neal. He did not testify before the Byrd committee, but he did testify before the Senate Appropriations Committee. On page 735, at the top of the page, will be found what Mr. O'Neal said with respect to the R. A. C. C.:

Mr. O'NEAL. In the early days, we thought there might be an occasion, as Senator BANK-

HEAD brought out, where you use that type of loan. But now we feel this way about it: We don't want to reestablish or revive an agency that will jeopardize the sound financing of agriculture. We don't want that. In other words, if that is used rightly, on a sound basis, it can do a lot of good, as it has done in emergencies.

Those are the words of Mr. O'Neal.

What does Mr. Patton say about the matter? On page 888 will be found testimony by Mr. Talbott. He was being examined by members of this committee. Mr. Talbott quoted what Mr. Patton said. I am not acquainted with Mr. Patton, but this is what Mr. Patton said:

As Mr. Patton stated, we urge expansion of the Farm Security Administration, and we should like to have complete war crop insurance. I believe there is already a bill up here on the Hill, before some other committee, to get a type of war crop insurance where the Government takes all of the natural risks. If we could get those two aids, we would not be particularly concerned about nonrecourse loans or Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation.

The provision with respect to the Farm Security Administration has been kept in the bill, and appropriation has been made for it. Since that has been done, we do not need R. A. C. C., according to Mr. Patton.

What does Mr. Goss, of the Grange, say? I read from page 899 of the same hearings:

Generally speaking, the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation should be continued in liquidation because cooperative credit and private credit are now available to supply most of the needs for which they were originally created. We would favor continuing a regional credit corporation fund for meeting emergencies, but we wish to point out that under the existing acts, the corporations are given the broadest possible powers of lending, the sole restriction being that the loans be made for agricultural purposes. Even the expenses of operation are paid by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

That, Mr. President, ought to dispel any fear in the mind of the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] that the R. A. C. C. could be maintained regardless of whether section 2 is put back in the act or not. The testimony of Mr. Goss is that the expenses of that Corporation are being paid, when making these emergency loans, by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Mr. Goss continues:

They were set up simply as emergency agencies, and the emergency for which they were created has passed.

Here we have the testimony of the heads of three farm organizations, and they go on record as saying that the emergency has passed, and that we do not need R. A. C. C.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I have only 15 minutes. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator when I am through. I hope the Senator will not consider me to be discourteous, but I wish to finish my statement if I may.

I now read conclusion No. 2 of the Byrd committee:

The revival of the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation loan program duplicates wholly, or partially, the lending activities of 19 other Federal agricultural lending agencies performing identically similar or related functions.

I wish Senators would bear this in mind. When passing appropriation measures for any one of these organizations please bear in mind that many others are duplicating the work of the particular agency for which appropriation is made. I wish to read the list of agricultural lending agencies which are performing identically similar or related functions. How many Senators know how many there are? There are 20 of them. They are as follows: The Central Bank for Cooperatives, Commodity Credit Corporation, Disaster Loan Corporation, District Banks for Cooperatives, Electric Home and Farm Authority, Emergency Crop and Feed Loan Section, Farm Credit Administration, Farm Security Administration, Federal credit unions, Federal Crop Insurance Corporation, Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation, Federal intermediate credit banks, Federal land banks, Land Bank Commissioner loans; national farm-loan associations, production credit associations, production credit corporations, Puerto Rico Reconstruction Administration, regional agricultural credit corporations, and Rural Electrification Administration.

So, Mr. President, we have 20 organizations lending money to farmers on short- and long-time credit loans. I say that if nothing more comes out of today's discussion than this, that we enact legislation whereby we can streamline all these agencies into one and cut out the administrative costs of 19 of them and have one Government agency under one administration, with one set of personnel, take care of these loans, then the afternoon will have been well spent. But with the thousands of personnel these 20 organizations already have, to attempt to set up another organization and provide 6,000 persons for it is a waste of money. It is time to consider the matter of waste of money rather than the spending of money like drunken sailors, as has been done in connection with some of the appropriations which have been made.

Mr. President, what does the head of the Federal Reserve System say about this matter? I wish to read a letter from Mr. Eccles. I wish to thank the gracious Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] for sending me a copy of this letter. It is as follows:

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Chairman, Committee on Banking and Currency, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR WAGNER: This is in reply to your letter of March 31 in which you ask for an opinion as to the merits of S. 914, which provides for the dissolution of the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation.

That is a bill I introduced to terminate the R. A. C. C. Hearings were held on it before the Byrd committee, as I said, in February of this year. The bill provides for the dissolution of the Rural Agricultural Credit Corporation.

I continue to read from the letter:

I favor this bill because I believe that such agricultural production for war as is not now adequately financed through regular banking channels or through the production credit associations can best be provided for by insurance of war crops.

Remember, Senators, this is Mr. Eccles writing to the Senator from New York.

I favor enactment of H. R. 2029, which has the endorsement of the Secretary of Agriculture, or of some similar measure, authorizing the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation to insure such war crops as the Secretary may designate. This will enable—

And, Members of the Senate, notice this particularly please—

This will enable private credit to flow directly from the banks to the insured borrowers and will avoid the difficulties, particularly the competition, which result from direct Government lending when there is, as now, an abundance of credit available to the private banking system.

I wish to say to the Senate that this very day there is in the banks of the United States of America $88,000,000,000, nearly four times as much money as was in the banks in 1932, when the R. A. C. C. set-up was initiated.

Private lending agencies are looking for loans. They will take loans wherever they can find them. Mr. Eccles says in his letter that if we can provide for a credit-risk insurance arrangement extending down through the private direct-lending agencies—an arrangement such as those we have provided for under the Home Owners' Loan Corporation or under the insurance risk arrangements, we shall be able to utilize the private lending agencies of the country to do the very thing for which 6,000 persons, I think, will be required in order to finance and administer the R. A. C. C.; and that will eliminate the competition with the private lending agencies.

I read further from Mr. Eccles' letter:

As a matter of general principle, I am for Government measures which have the effect of facilitating the flow of private credit into production, whether in the field of agriculture or other necessary private business activity, and against measures that tend to supplant or compete unnecessarily with private enterprise. To the extent that the need may exist for Government aid to stimulate additional agricultural production, I am satisfied that this general principle and the war effort itself will be best served by reliance either upon insurance of war crops or upon some similar form of guaranteeing the producer against loss rather than upon establishment of competitive Government lending agencies in a field already well served by the numerous banks in the agricultural regions throughout the Nation, as well as by the production credit associations.

The foregoing expresses the opinion of the Board of Governors as well as my own.

Sincerely yours,
M. S. ECCLES, Chairman.

What more authority does the Senate want than that word coming directly from the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System? The heads of the Federal Reserve System desire to do the very thing I advocate. Yet, under the provisions of the bill, if we strike out section 2, we let the Secretary of Agriculture bring out a new agency to expand the loans to $250,000,000, and they will be able to pyramid that amount to $500,000,000. Then the agency will be established, and will come back to Congress and request a larger appropriation; and we shall have a new bureau to finance. In my experience in the 5½ months I have served as a Member of the Senate I have found that it is very difficult to eliminate a bureau once it is established. The time to eliminate the bureau is before it commences operations and we now have a wonderful opportunity to perform that major operation.

Let me tell the Senate that I have received letter after letter from Production Credit Administration members and from F. S. A. members stating that they can lend the money just as profitably or even more profitably than can the R. A. C. C. Yet Mr. Black says they do not have the authority. In 5 minutes he could get all the authority he wanted. I think he has just as much authority to loan through these agencies as he has to take money from the Department of Agriculture and use it for the R. A. C. C. Where does he get his authority to do that? What right does he have to take the money? He has no more right to do that than he has to loan the money through any other agency. If he has a right to loan it through one agency he has an equal right to loan it through another agency.

What was the further finding of the committee? I read conclusion 3 of the Byrd committee's findings:

3. The Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation's loan program, by soliciting credit where the field is drastically limited, is depriving private lending institutions and country banks of their normal loan business.

That is their finding after considering all the evidence.

Their next finding is as follows:

4. The Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation's loan program may weaken the structure of over 11,000 country banks, which are carrying a great burden of the food-for-freedom program, and the direction of and collections from War bond sales in their respective communities throughout the United States.

That is the impartial opinion of the committee. On the committee sat the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], and the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] was the only one who sat through those hearings and who did not join in the report. That is their opinion, that is their finding, that is their judgment. I say such report should be seriously considered and followed by the Senate of the United States.

Oh, yes; I will probably be accused of carrying a portfolio for the private banks of the country; but let me say my word. This country was built upon private enterprise—the corner grocery store, the farmer and the merchant who went out and pioneered this country. They are the ones who built this great Nation. All of them obtained their finances from the country bankers. They are the people who developed this great Republic of ours; they are the people who developed our great enterprises and institutions—the great American way of life for which we are fighting, and which we must continue. However, if we continue to socialize the credit of this country we shall have communism and we shall lose the very things our boys are fighting for. That will certainly come to pass, just as the senior Senator from Wisconsin said a few minutes ago.

I will fight to the last ditch for private enterprise. I will do all I can to eliminate governmental subsidized competition with private enterprise. I will oppose the establishment of unnecessary bureaus every time I get an opportunity to do so. I will do my part to see that the R. A. C. C. is not established. We do not need it. It is just another unnecessary agency with an added 6,000 personnel which could better be used in the war effort.

Some Senators are smiling. They may not smile 2 years from now. I say to the Senate that I have been out in the country, and I know what conditions are and what the people are thinking. I come from the sticks. I come from the country, and I know what the people there are thinking. Some one of these days Senators are going to wake up and find that we are spending $200,000,000 a day. Some of these days they are going to find that they have mortgaged more than the assessed value of the country. Some one of these days they are going to find that they cannot even start to pay the principal of the indebtedness and that they will not be able to pay even the interest on the great debt that has been created. I am fighting to preserve the financial stability of the United States of America.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I am not speaking on the bill now. I should like to inquire whether it is the purpose to continue longer today. It is already 7 o'clock.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, when the Senate first convened this morning the distinguished minority leader expressed the hope that the Senate might pass the bill today; and the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of the bill, the junior Senator from Georgia, stated that he would do everything he could to have the bill passed today, and gave notice to the Senate that he would hope to have the Senate continue in session until consideration of the bill had been concluded.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand that. I also understand that there is a limitation on debate; and there is no reason to keep the Senate in session very long tonight. I desire to be heard on this amendment. If the committee insists on keeping the amendment in the bill—an amendment which has absolutely no excuse whatsoever for being in the bill—I am going to be heard as long as I can be; and there will be other motions coming on tonight—for instance, a motion to suspend the rule; and I do not understand that there is any limitation of debate on such a motion.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. There is not.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand that two motions to suspend the rule are in prospect. We shall not be able to finish at any early hour tonight. I am at a loss to know why the Committee on Appropriations struck out the amendment if only the R. A. C. C. is involved. I desire to be heard on that matter; because it is one action on the part of the committee for which there cannot possibly be any justification.

I now make an appeal that the Senate recess until tomorrow morning. It will be perfectly agreeable to me to have the Senate recess until 10 o'clock or 11 o'clock tomorrow. Certainly, we can finish consideration of the bill tomorrow if we recess now until the morning.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I join in the request of the Senator from Georgia. Frankly, I would have objected to the unanimous-consent request if I had been in the Chamber at the time when it was submitted. I desire to be heard for at least half an hour on the question of the school-lunch program, and my remarks would naturally require some debate by other Members of the Senate. It seems to me there is no such rush that we should be required to remain in session until midnight tonight.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I agree entirely with what the Senator from Georgia has said. The Senate has worked very diligently on the bill. If it had been possible to conclude its consideration tonight, it would be perfectly satisfactory to have the Senate do so; but the Senator from Alabama has given notice of a very important motion to suspend the rule. To his motion the agreement for limitation of debate does not apply, in my opinion; and I listened to the agreement very carefully when it was proposed.

I desire to give notice now that if the Senate is to remain in session tonight until the bill is passed, if that motion is made, the bill will be passed, very, very late tonight.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I wish to have expression made on the matter by the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, let me say that I am not at all impressed by the threats that we shall have debate; because I should not want to limit the opportunity of any Member of the Senate to debate the provisions of the bill. I have no disposition whatever to keep the Senate in session until an unduly late hour. However, the suggestion that the bill be passed today came from the distinguished leader of the minority, and was heartily concurred in by the acting majority leader, and I wholly approved of it.

The pending bill comes to us very late this year, as I have stated a number of times. We shall have to work day and night in conference in order to canvass all the items with the House. I do not know that at the very best we shall be able to place the bill in the hands of the President by the end of the present fiscal year. I do not want to be put in the position of making any threats or of attempting to prevent the making of speeches. I enjoy hearing my colleagues speak. However, if the minority leader and the acting majority leader wish to have the Senate recess until tomorrow I have no objection.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, what would the Senator think about a suggestion that the Senate take a recess now until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Mr. RUSSELL. If we are to recess now I think we should meet in the morning. I should like to know the views of the minority leader.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I must defer, out of practice and courtesy, to the attitude of the Senator in charge of the bill. This morning I expressed the very strong hope that we could stay here and finish consideration of the bill tonight. There are 118 amendments involved. The bill must be approved by the 30th of June. I am anxious, as I think we all are, to get through with the appropriation bills, because we may be able to work out a summer recess. I think most of the Members of the Senate are willing to stay in session longer today; I think we should do so. At least I think we should dispose of this amendment. That is my view. However, I shall yield to the view of the Senator in charge of the bill. I have briefly expressed my view. I think the Senator in charge of the bill should decide for himself what he wishes to do.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, of course I will subordinate my judgment in the matter to the views of the Senator in charge of the bill. I think this ought to be said, however: Frankly, from conversations which I have had with certain Members, and an expression of views, I doubt whether we could make any progress tonight, in view of the feeling of a great many Members. It being very doubtful whether we could make any progress tonight, I am inclined to think—although, as I say, I subordinate my views to those of the Senator in charge of the bill—that we might as well take a recess now until 11 o'clock tomorrow. I shall be guided by the views of the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Who has the floor? Has the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] yielded the floor?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Nebraska expired.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I claim the floor in my own right for the purpose of suggesting the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. MAYBANK, Mr. HILL, and Mr. CLARK of Missouri addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina is recognized.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. HILL. It is my frank opinion that the mood of the Senate at this time is such that it is not best to try to legislate. I think the wisest thing to do would be to recess until tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock. I am confident that we may finish the pending bill if we now recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President——

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me for the purpose of making a motion?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I move that the Senate recess until 11 o'clock a. m. tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. BONE addressed the Chair.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Washington for a question.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I do not know who has the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. MAYBANK. I have yielded to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, allow me to assure the Senator from South Carolina that I want the floor in my own right, and that I wish to say something about the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina has yielded. The Senator may proceed.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I have yielded to the Senator from Washington for a question.

Mr. BONE. I do not desire to quiz my brother.

Mr. MAYBANK. Will the Senator from Washington advise me why he wishes me to yield?

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I wish to obtain the floor in my own right.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I yield the floor to the Senator from Washington. [Laughter.]

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I am happy to observe that all has suddenly become sweetness and light, and I hope I shall pierce the gloom surrounding my colleagues like a gleam of celestial sunshine in what I am about to say.

Mr. President, I was mightily moved by the observations of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY]. I tried in my own way to follow him, because I am an earnest seeker after the truth, and I would not have missed any of the gems of wisdom from the Senator from Nebraska.

I was more than interested in the statement of the Senator about rugged individualism, and I recall—and if I am in error I hope some Senator will correct me—that the R. A. C. C. provision was enacted in 1932, in the era of rugged individualism. It had become so rugged that it was kicking the tail feathers off the very businessmen for whom the Senator from Nebraska now speaks, and they were going broke in my section of the country at a rate which was astounding, to say the least. It was the end of the era of rugged individualism which the Senator so stanchly defends here this afternoon, and if any of the rugged individualism had continued very much longer, there would not have been even a capitalist system left in the United States.

The law was put on the statute books, not by new dealers, but by the Hoover administration, which makes it very interesting to find a good, stanch Republican assailing it today as something which might lead to something very bad, perhaps to communism.

It so happens that the R. A. C. C. today, and for some years past, has only been operating in a couple of sections of the country, around Minneapolis, and in my own State in what is known as the Wenatchee section, which is one of the great apple-growing sections of the United States.

Mr. TOBEY. It is only second to the southern section of New Hampshire, if I am correct.

Mr. BONE. I should be heartbroken if New Hampshire got into the picture as an apple-producing State. I know it has produced many fine things, but I did not know it was much of an apple-producing State.

Mr. President, in the gloomy days of the depression the bankers the Senator from Nebraska talks about let the apple producers in my State down with a dull thud, and in 1938, in one of the greatest crises that has ever stricken any section of the country, those apple growers were going to hell in a hand basket financially, and losing their homes, and when the bankers would not come to their help, I, with my colleague in the Senate and my friends in the House, utilized every agency of this Government to keep them alive, and today they are barely prosperous, but they still need the assistance which the R. A. C. C. has given them.

The Senator from Nebraska has conjured up a Frankenstein monster, some great gargantuan thing to affright us, but he has made a mountain out of a mole hill. Last year R. A. C. C. loaned the apple growers of Washington—and they are the salt of the earth—$8,000,000, and it has all been paid back. What is wrong with that program? In God's name, what is wrong with it?

The Senator says there is no crisis. In the name of all that is reasonable, what are we facing today? No nation in all the endless cycles of time ever faced anything half so grave as this crisis, and all Senators know it.

What do you call this kind of a war, which shakes the very foundations of western civilization? Do you not call it a crisis? Yet the Senator wants to bury or cremate this law, drive it off the statute books, put it out of business, although as I understand from his statement, he implies that it will not put the R. A. C. C. out of business. The provision is:

> That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay the compensation of anybody engaged in making loans.

What would be the effect of that provision? I do not think there is a lawyer in this body with nerve enough to rise and say that it would not effect the death of the thing. If the advice of my friend from Nebraska is followed, we decree the death of R. A. C. C., and make no mistake about it. Let us be frank about it. It would simply blot it out. He quoted my friend Bert Goss, of the Grange. I understand the Senator from Nebraska is not a lawyer.

Mr. WHERRY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I am a lawyer, and I say that the adoption of section 2 would have nothing to do with whether or not R. A. C. C. would continue to function.

Mr. BONE. I listened to the Senator very intently, and tried to follow him, and I do not find myself in agreement with him.

He quoted Mr. Albert Goss, of the Grange. I suggest that he did what lawyers frequently do—that is, quote a part of the testimony. Mr. Goss was asked whether it would not be better to abolish R. A. C. C., and to that question he answered:

> We doubt if this is the most constructive solution.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator from Washington, because I know his time is limited, but let me state the situation. The R. A. C. C. matter came before the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures. I looked into it, and I shall take occasion later to say why I looked into it with care. This provision does not abolish the R. A. C. C., it is still in existence, and it can be revived whenever there is any necessity for it.

Mr. BONE. I understand that the provision does not abolish it, just by blotting it out, but it says that no part of the appropriation in this bill can be used to pay anybody connected with making loans under it.

Mr. GEORGE. Why should it be?

Mr. BONE. Somebody has to process these loans.

Mr. GEORGE. Has not the R. A. C. C. money?

Mr. BONE. Yes; but it has to hire someone to do the work in making the loans.

Mr. GEORGE. That is just the point, they have not the gall to hire 3,000 or 5,000 men at a time when there is no emergency and no occasion to use the R. A. C. C. That is all there is to it. They want to borrow the personnel from other agencies of the Government. I am assuring the Senator of that now, because there is no one trying to abolish it. It will not be abolished. It can still be revived whenever there is an occasion for it to make any loans. In my opinion an appropriation of money to pay people to do something cannot be justified where those who have the funds in hand are not willing to face the criticism of the country and pay the money out of their own funds.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, much as I admire my able colleague from Georgia, I cannot bring myself to agree with his conclusion that there is no great emergency, no crisis. I perhaps go as far as any Member of the Senate in believing that this country faces a supreme crisis in the production of food, and anything we can do today to stimulate the production of food—and certainly the R. A. C. C. has achieved it in my State—is something well worth doing.

I wish to go back for an instant, because I mentioned the matter only in passing. In the year 1938 the banking groups in my State were not making loans to the apple farmers—and the apple business is a vitally important business in my State—but were very bitter and very critical of the Federal Government for stepping into the picture and extending credit to the farmers in the apple business. So a warm friend of mine who was present at a certain meeting said, "The bankers do not like this program of Federal credit." Then he said, "I will have my friend HOMER BONE wire the Government in Washington and ask the Federal Government to step out of this credit picture and turn over the whole function of lending to these farmers to private banking interests, and I will send that telegram tonight, put it right on the wires and send it to Washington." When he put that up, cold turkey, what do you think the bankers out there did? They did precisely as my colleagues suspect; they said, "Oh, no; let the Government continue this loaning activity."

Mr. President, the apple growers are getting into better shape. They are creating a credit of their own which will soon amount to one-half million dollars.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BONE. I do not have very much time.

Mr. EASTLAND. I shall take but a moment.

Mr. BONE. Very well.

Mr. EASTLAND. I wish the RECORD to show that there was no yea-and-nay vote had on the committee amendment providing for the purchase of land for farm tenants, which appears on page 93 of the bill, beginning in line 6. I wish the RECORD to show that I voted for the appropriation for the purchase of farm lands by worthy individual tenants to make them home owners, as provided in the bill, with the safeguards against collectivism as provided therein.

Mr. BONE. Let me say this, Mr. President, and I say it because I am attempting on this floor to defend some very decent people, because I do not want to see them crucified even to satisfy the tempestuous feelings of my friend the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] that a group of farmers who will borrow $8,000,000 and pay it back al ost within a year are a darned good credit risk. That certainly does not represent communism.

When my friend the Senator from Nebraska read off the list of Government agencies I did not know whether he was starting to read a list of the members of the New York Stock Exchange or not. We have 10,000 private enterprises all levying tribute upon agriculture. But the farmers in the Wenatchee Valley are not parasitical fungus growths on the body social. They are raising a fund by taking 2 cents a box on each box of apples sold. They have nearly one-half million dollars in that fund. The businessmen there are putting approximately $35,000 into the fund. In a little while they will have nearly $1,000,000 in cold cash to sweeten the pot, and then the Federal Government can step out of the picture. But is the Senate going to decree the death of this program in the Wenatchee Valley simply because my friend the Senator from Nebraska does not like it?

I will say to the Senate that there is some degree of responsibility here, and I repeat what the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] said earlier today, that if Senators wish to create bitterness in the country let them go right ahead with the program of cutting off the little fellows. We might as well be perfectly frank and not kid ourselves, Senators, as we go toddling down this pathway of legislation, for we are headed into some tempests—make no mistake about it.

There is a great deal of misunderstanding about what is going on. There is a great emotional and intellectual ferment in this country, but God help us if we ever pull the props out from under the average little fellow. If he has any guts, he will never take it again. If he is a real American, he will not go through what he went through under the Hoover administration. If he is true to the traditions of his grandsires, he will not go hungry or allow his family to go hungry in a nation whose potentialities for production are what ours happen to be at this time. We must protect the home front here while the war is going on.

Mr. President, this Chamber has resounded day after day with messages about the grim necessity of producing more food for America. We must feed our people here at home or else have a panic. Anything that will stimulate, that will help the producers of food, is much to be desired. We are not giving these people charity.

What do Senators think this is? Does my friend the Senator from Nebraska think this is charity, that he would fling charity to these people like he would fling a bone to a hungry dog? It is a strongly Republican district that my friend the Senator from Nebraska is talking about, and I am glad he raised the issue on this floor. I hate to mention any aspect of partisanship, but the cold record now stands, and if the agency under consideration is destroyed, it will have been destroyed at the insistence of a good conservative Republican, and let that be a matter of record.

I do not like to emphasize these things, Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCFARLAND in the chair). The time of the Senator from Washington on the amendment has expired.

Mr. BONE. I will take a little more time on the bill.

Mr. President, there is too much of the record to go through to justify me in attempting to review the whole history of the R. A. C. C. What is there about it that invites all this wrath? The agency existed for only a couple of years, and then in 1934 it subsided. Why was it revived, and how, in the last 2 or 3 years? It was revived when we got into the war. It was revived because there was a fear in the hearts of the men who were motivating this program that we would need to give more assistance to the producers.

When objection is made to the number of lending agencies which exists it reminds me of a person who objects to the number of banks which exist in a town. He might say, "Why in the dickens can we not have simply 1 bank instead of having 4 or 5 in this town?" If any one were to suggest such a thing he would immediately hear a defense of sturdy individualism, rugged individualism, and rugged business in America. Those who would make the defense would say that anyone has a right to go into the lending business, and that we can have 1 bank or 50 banks in a town if we wish. But, Mr. President, if we happen to have more than 1 organization in our governmental set-up which happen to render assistance to agriculture, and the organizations are divided into regional divisions, we find men crying against them and inveighing against them.

Mr. President, I do not like the idea of so many agencies. I should like to see many of them brought together. But this is not the time to destroy an agency which is functioning in only two sections of the country. The record does not show, and my friend, the Senator from Nebraska, did not point out, that the Government was losing any money by reason of these loans.

The banks of the Wenatchee Valley section of my State have telegraphed me and urged me, HOMER BONE, to stand on the floor of the Senate and defend the R. A. C. C. program in my State, and in order that I might accomplish that purpose I have prepared an amendment, in case the Senate, by what I would call improvident action, should reject the amendment prepared by the Appropriations Committee, and refuse to accept its dictum.

Mr. President, that is all I want to say on the subject. Other Senators wish to speak on it. But I say to the Senate that Senators cannot predicate their vote or their attitude of mind on a theory that we do not confront a crisis in food production. Senators on both sides of the aisle have stood up in this Chamber and said we will confront a crisis in food. Men are saying the same thing on the radio all the time. Senators will take upon their souls a considerable responsibility if they vote now to cripple or destroy any agency whose expenditures, contrasted with war expenditures—

Are as moonlight unto sunlight, and as water unto wine.

They amount to nothing then. Literally they are the cube root of nothing.

Mr. President, I looked at one report today with respect to the number of persons employed in the Government. I think it was put out in connection with the McKellar bill. Of the 1,300,000 employees, 703,000 are in the Army and the Navy. That reduces tremendously the total number of employees. Probably 55 percent of all the employees engaged in the service of war and the making of war have nothing to do with normal governmental operations. They have nothing to do with any of our fiscal operations. Fifty-five percent of them are engaged in the grim business of war, which means the shedding of blood for the protection of the country. We have this food job confronting us at home, and if we let the food production of the country break down, if we permit ourselves the luxury of assailing some food-producing instrumentality by weakening its power to preserve itself, we shall have to answer, not only to the country, but to ur own consciences.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I shall renew my request, since it is manifest that consideration of the bill cannot be concluded at any reasonable hour tonight, that the Senate recess until tomorrow at 11 o'clock. I state very frankly that I wish to discuss the pending amendment. It is especially important to the Democratic Party; because if the Democratic Party is going to commit itself to legislation of this kind at a time when the banks of the country are literally bursting with money, the Democratic Party will have a very poor record with which to go before the country in 1944; and I do not want to see that done.

Therefore, Mr. President, I am asking that the further consideration of the bill go over until tomorrow morning—a request I never would have suggested, and would not urge now, if it were not apparent that we cannot reach an end to the consideration of the bill at an early hour.

I conferred with the Senator from Alabama, and he assured me that he was going to offer his amendment which would involve a motion to suspend the rule. In that event, we would get into the field of unlimited debate again, and I know we would not be able to reach a final vote on the bill until very, very late tonight.

Therefore, desiring to discuss the amendment briefly, I asked that the matter go over until tomorrow morning.

I now renew my request that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning. I should be perfectly agreeable to having a recess taken until 10 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, let me state again that I should yield to the wishes of the able Senator from Georgia, the Senator in charge of the bill. If I felt that by meeting at 10 o'clock in the morning we could have some reasonable assurance that we would conclude consideration of the bill tomorrow, I should not object to the request.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the Committee on Banking and Currency is holding hearings on the bill providing for extension of the Commodity Credit Corporation's activities, and also is holding hearings on the question of subsidy payments in working out a roll-back arrangement. At the request of Mr. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, we have arranged for a meeting tomorrow, and have agreed to hear him at 10:30 a. m. Of course, the next day is Saturday. If we shall be able to conclude consideration of the bill tomorrow—and I believe we shall be, with the limitation of debate—I should like very much to be able to comply with both obligations: To be in the committee meeting, and also to be present at the session of the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I should like to go through with the program. I have always endeavored to be reasonable and to yield to the wishes of the Senator in charge of a bill. If the agreement we made earlier in the day would include limitation of debate on motions, as well as limitation of debate on the bill and on amendments thereto, I think it would be agreeable to have the Senate recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, if we can have an understanding as to limitation on motions which might be made on the bill, as well as on amendments and on the bill itself, I think we might make more progress by recessing at this time until tomorrow.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, those of us on this side of the Chamber are very much interested in what is going on. We are not able to hear. Will the Senator please repeat his statement?

Mr. RUSSELL. I shall endeavor to lift my voice; I was not aware that I was talking in a lower tone than usual. I should be glad to stay here tonight if I thought there was any possibility of concluding consideration of the bill tonight. I do not like to tire Senators. If we can obtain an agreement about limitation throughout, I think we might as well recess until tomorrow at 12 o'clock. A number of Members of the Senate do not want to have the Senate meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow morning. Unless some unforeseen developments occur, we shall be able to conclude consideration of the bill tomorrow; and if its consideration is concluded tomorrow, the time at which the conclusion of its consideration is reached will not make a great deal of difference.

However, I wish to say that if tomorrow there develops some unforeseen situation which would carry us into the late hours of the afternoon, I shall insist that the Senate remain in session until consideration of the bill is concluded. The time in which the bill must be enacted into law is growing very short. In previous years we have been in conference on agricultural appropriation bills for as long as 2 months without being able to reach an agreement on all the matters at variance between the two Houses.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a limitation to apply to all motions as well as to all amendments and to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I did not understand the request.

Mr. RUSSELL. I asked unanimous consent that the limitation on debate be construed to apply to all motions as well as to the bill and to amendments thereto.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That would mean 15 minutes and 15 minutes, would it?

Mr. RUSSELL. That is correct. In that event, no Senator could speak more than once, or for more than 15 minutes, on the bill or on any amendment or motion, with the understanding that the total time allotted to any one Senator would not be more than 30 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection——

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Chair state what we are now asked to consent to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia has requested unanimous consent that the 15-minute limitation be extended to all motions affecting the bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, are we asked to act now on the motion of the Senator from Georgia that the Senate recess until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the Senator from Georgia has not made such a motion.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the announcement made at the beginning of the session today by the distinguished senior Senator from Alabama included only a limitation of debate to 15 minutes on the amendments. A moment ago I suggested—and request is now being made—that motions be included in that agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has just agreed to the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. McNARY. I did not so understand. A question was asked. Has the Senate agreed to the unanimous-consent request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No objection was made.

Mr. McNARY. Very well. Mr. President, I suggest that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I hope that suggestion will be followed. I wonder if we could not include in the agreement with reference to the time of convening tomorrow an agreement as to the time for taking the final vote on the bill—for instance, to have the final vote on the bill taken at 5 o'clock or 5:30. If that were agreed to, we should have arranged for the whole program.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in order to comply with the Senator's suggestion, it would be necessary to have a quorum call tonight. A quorum call would not be required in connection with voting on a motion or on an amendment; but if action is to be taken on final passage of the bill, a quorum call would be required tonight. I, myself, can see no objection to having the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I suggest that the hour of meeting be made 11:30 tomorrow morning.

Mr. McNARY. No; 11 o'clock.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, a number of Senators are affected by this matter. Now that we have a limitation as to the length of debate, I think it will be possible to conclude consideration of the bill tomorrow. My suggestion is that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, is it the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock tomorrow?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes. I was expressing the hope that it would be agreeable to the Senate to recess until 12 o'clock tomorrow. That would be agreeable to me. With the limitation on debate, I think it would be possible to have the Senate conclude consideration of the bill if it convened at 12 o'clock tomorrow. A number of Senators who are interested in the pending matter have expressed the hope that the hour of meeting tomorrow would be 12 o'clock.

Mr. McNARY. I shall defer most reluctantly. I do not see why one committee which is to meet in order to hear Mr. Green or anyone else should determine the course of action which the Senate should take.

Mr. RUSSELL. I will say that more considerations are involved in my suggestion than the one referred to by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. I think the matter should be left as suggested. I shall object to having the Senate meet at 12 o'clock.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, let me ask what is the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. Unless something unforeseen develops, I think it will be possible for the Senate to conclude consideration of the bill by meeting at 12 o'clock tomorrow.

RECESS

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I offer a substitute motion that the time of meeting on tomorrow be 11 o'clock a. m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute motion of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, what is the pending question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama has moved that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock tomorrow. The Senator from New Hampshire has made a substitute motion that the Senate meet at 11 o'clock a. m. tomorrow. The question is on agreeing to the substitute motion.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, what is the objection to meeting at 11 o'clock a. m. tomorrow so that we may have full assurance of being able to complete consideration of the bill? We have been meeting at 11 o'clock.

Mr. RUSSELL. Not on the pending bill.

Mr. McNARY. But we have been meeting at 11 o'clock for the consideration of other bills not as pressing as the pending bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I have made some commitments to Senators who are absent from the floor at this time that, insofar as I was concerned, I should be willing to have the Senate meet tomorrow at 12 o'clock. Probably those Senators have relied upon that assurance in making their arrangements to return to the city.

On my part, I prefer to have the Senate meet at 12 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. McNARY. Of course, Mr. President, if the Senator has made commitments, that is a different matter. But, for my part, I should be glad to have the Senate meet at 11 o'clock a. m.

Mr. RUSSELL. The suggestion to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. was made only in the last few minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls attention to the fact that the motion is not debatable.

The question is on agreeing to the substitute motion of the Senator from New Hampshire that the Senate take a recess until tomorrow at 11 o'clock.

The motion was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER The question now is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Alabama that the Senate take a recess until tomorrow at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 8 o'clock p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, June 11, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JUNE 10, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, the God of our fathers, be near us when we call and answer us when we pray, and when Thou hearest, forgive. There are truths that he who runs may read; there are deeper truths which come only to those who wait and meditate in Thy holy presence. Unfold these, we pray, that we may feel Thy sacred nearness and be led by the fullness of Thy wisdom. In the secret of Thy fellowship, in the depths of soul, preserve us from idle reverie, from the spirit of petulance, from superficial judgment and from the gnawing fragments of self-pity.

We praise Thee for the strength of the life of faith. O may the great crises of today serve to bind us to something beyond the vain, empty repetitions of this world. Dear Lord, give us courage to identify ourselves with every cause of human need, where sorrow cannot wholly rise, whatever the denial or honor it may involve. Fill us with the understanding that the world belongs to him who wills, who knows and prays, trustfully walking with Thee whose ways are paths of peace. In our dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. BREWSTER members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of August 5, 1939, entitled "An act to provide for the disposition of certain records of the United States Government," for the disposition of executive papers in the following departments and agency:

1. Department of Agriculture.
2. Department of the Navy.
3. Executive Office of the President (War Manpower Commission).

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1563) entitled "An act authorizing the acquisition and conversion or construction of certain auxiliary vessels for the United States Navy, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. BREWSTER members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of August 5, 1939, entitled "An act to provide for the disposition of certain records of the United States Government," for the disposition of executive papers in the following department:

Department of Agriculture.

LEGISLATIVE BRANCH AND JUDICIARY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1944

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 2409) making appropriations for the legislative branch and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. O'NEAL, HENDRICKS, GORE, KIRWAN, JOHNSON of Indiana, H. CARL ANDERSEN, and PLOESER.

WOMEN LAWMAKERS

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, my attention has been called to an article by John O'Donnell in the Times-Herald of June 9, under the caption "Capitol Stuff," in which he quotes a "lady lawmaker." An anonymous statement or letter is always the resort of a coward.

As dean of the women in Congress, I resent this filthy article and believe it to be an unwarranted, contemptible, cowardly attack on all women lawmakers and other women as well. My colleagues in the House are representative of the highest type of womanhood. I know none would author the statement quoted in the article referred to. Nor do I believe Mrs. Hobby would be a party to what is described as a "super secret agreement," reached by the high ranking officers of the War Department. The loose talk that has been indulged in recently concerning our women in the armed service can be nothing less than Nazi-inspired propaganda to frighten the mothers and relatives of young women who have volunteered and those who are considering service in the armed forces.

The issue is not, as he describes it, one of "religion, honor, politics, and medicine," but of decency and morality. I know a great many exceptionally fine, highly qualified young girls serving in difficult positions in the Army, Navy, and marines who could be enjoying every comfort at home had they been less patriotic and more selfish. I know the attacks that have been made on them will be resented by every fair-minded person from one end of the country to the other.

Mr. O'Donnell is doing a great disservice to our country by writing such stuff. If he cannot put on a uniform and serve his country, he should not slander those who are doing so. I am surprised that a reputable newspaper would publish such filth.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I deeply deplore the article referred to by the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON]. She has checked with the women legislators. I have checked also. No woman legislator made any such statement as is reported in Mr. O'Donnell's column.

It is difficult for me to understand why such things are published today, why there is a whispering and an open campaign of statements against the decency and honor of the women of the United States. It is directed not only against the women in the armed forces really, but against women in industry and in agriculture. There is an underlying attack on all women in this country. There is no doubt in my mind—and I have gone into it quite fully and shall continue to go into it—that there is an effort to discredit the splendid women of our country. Nothing would please Hitler more than to do that.

If we ever allow the people of the other nations of the world, or anyone in our own country, to say or believe things about our women that will ruin the whole structure of our great country.

The men of the United States I have always believed to be the most decent, the most honorable of the men of any nation of the world, and I know that each and every one of you would have the deepest resentment against any person who made slanderous remarks about your wife, or your daughter, or your sister. Also I am sure that you will do everything you can to stop this insidious, more than insidious, this open campaign that tends to destroy the faith in the women of our country.

LIDICE

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, this is June 10, which is the first anniversary of the murder of a village by the Nazis—a murder boastfully proclaimed to the world by them—and which is dedicated by the United States and all the United Nations to remembering.

The thing that we should remember and will remember is a little road leading down a gentle slope to a little village in a valley. It was springtime, and the air was fragrant with blossoms. About 90 roofs clustered about the spire of a church. This was Lidice.

For over 600 years these little cottages, these outlying farms had been handed down from father to son; about 400 people lived there; children played there; men worked there at farming, metal work, and mining. It was a small, happy, ordinary village—remote, peaceful.

Then one night the Nazis came. They came in their stamping boots and brown shirts.

Only one man lives today to tell the story of what happened in Lidice on that ghastly night. He hid in a hole outside the village when the Nazis came. He heard the screaming of the women and the children, the rattling of machine guns, after that the terrible sounds—then the rumble of heavily loaded motor trucks, the bleating of a human herd being driven on the highway. Later he heard the roar of explosives, blast after blast. Then, creeping from his shelter, he saw his village ablaze—all of it.

What he heard was the shooting, before the eyes of their wives, mothers, children, sweethearts, and grandchildren of 200 men, including an old man of 82; and the driving off of the women and children into concentration camps and correction schools.

Mr. Speaker, other villages have suffered a fate similar to Lidice—Polish, Yugoslav, Chinese villages. But in no other case has the murderer boasted of his crime. Lidice remains forever the flaming example of Nazi self-confessed atrocity.

Now, a year later, as we of the United Nations unload our bombs on Duesseldorf, Berlin, Essen, Dortmund, on Mannheim, we are remembering Lidice.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. SIMPSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER] be granted leave of absence for the remainder of the week, because of serious illness in the family.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article from the Christian Century.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial from the New Republic concerning the Chinese exclusion law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

(Mr. LAMBERTSON asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.)

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, the Office of Price Administration has just started its roll-back program with a subsidy. So that they might make it a little more ridiculous than they could otherwise do they have placed a subsidy upon coffee. The wholesale price of coffee a year ago was 13 cents a pound. Today in this morning's paper the wholesale price of coffee is carried at 13 cents a pound. What common sense can there be in this unless it is as indicated in this article from the New York Herald Tribune of June 3:

Frank Russell gets Potter's Office of Price Administration job here. Coffee and sugar exchange official will head New York district office of price agency.

This thing is getting to be an awful mess. The further the Office of Price Administration goes with subsidies and the further they attempt to adopt some system which continues to muddle up the price and rationing situation in this country, just so long as they do that the situation is going to get worse and worse. It is time it stopped.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a resolution by the Arkansas Press Association.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, June 14, after the conclusion of the legislative business of the day and other special orders, I may address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article by Merlo Pusey appearing in the Washington Post of June 8.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the Galveston News on the public debt.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein statements having relevancy to H. R. 2536.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

TEMPORARY ADDITIONAL PAY FOR RURAL LETTER CARRIERS

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BURCH].

Mr. BURCH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 2080) to provide temporary additional pay for equipment maintenance for each carrier in Rural Mail Delivery Service.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, do I understand that this increases the pay of mail carriers from 5 to 6 cents a mile?

Mr. BURCH of Virginia. That is correct.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And is this bill recommended by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and by the Post Office Department?

Mr. BURCH of Virginia. It comes to the floor with a unanimous report of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and it is approved by the Post Office Department.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It is approved by both and it is unanimous?

Mr. BURCH of Virginia. It is unanimous.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That each carrier in Rural Mail Delivery Service shall be paid for equipment maintenance a sum equal to 1 cent per mile per day for each mile or major fraction of a mile scheduled in addition to the 5 cents per mile per day for each mile or major fraction of a mile scheduled as now provided by law. Payments for the additional equipment maintenance as provided herein shall be at the same periods and in the same manner as payments for regular compensation to rural carriers.

SEC. 2. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such amounts as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. This act shall take effect May 1, 1943, and shall remain in effect for the duration of the war and for 6 months thereafter, or until such earlier date as Congress by concurrent resolution may prescribe.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 7, strike out all of section 3 and insert a new section 3 as follows:

"SEC. 3. This act shall take effect immediately upon its enactment, and shall terminate June 30, 1945, or such earlier date as the Congress may by concurrent resolution prescribe."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CAPITOL NOW OPEN TO SERVICEMEN ON SUNDAYS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Mr. RANKIN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

COMMERCIAL FEEDING DIFFICULTIES

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to include some recommendations from the canning industry.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Mr. GROSS addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

CANNOT CONTROL PRICES SATISFACTORILY WITHOUT FREEZING EXCESS PURCHASING POWER

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] brought up a very interesting point about confusion concerning prices. We will have more problems concerning prices until we do something about the excess purchasing power. I am not attempting to defend any confusion or rules or regulations that are not reasonable or logical. In England, we are told, they have a very small office to control prices. The same is true in Canada. But in England and Canada they siphon off so much of the purchasing power from the people through taxes. The people do not have the money to buy with that we have here, therefore they do not have that pressure and that competition for the purchase of goods that we have here. Unless we place taxes on this excess purchasing power and unless possibly we have forced savings or do something to drain this excess purchasing power off, our problems regarding prices are going to increase.

RESPONSIBILITY HERE IN CONGRESS

The President asked the Congress to put on $16,000,000,000 additional taxes, which would have drained off a lot of this excess purchasing power, but Congress did not do that. Instead, Congress passed a bill which had the effect of forgiving seven or eight billion dollars instead of passing a bill providing for $16,000,000,000 additional taxes. So the responsibility right now for many of these problems, in my opinion, is right here in Congress.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRADLEY] may be permitted to extend his own remarks in the RECORD and include an address which he made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SHAFER]?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE TO ESCORT PRESIDENT OF PARAGUAY INTO HOUSE CHAMBER

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as a committee to escort the President of Paraguay into the House Chamber the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM], and the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

RECESS

The SPEAKER. The House will stand in recess, subject to the call of the Chair.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess, subject to the call of the Speaker.

During the recess the following occurred:

The President of Paraguay and his party entered the Chamber at 12 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m., and the President of Paraguay was escorted to the Speaker's rostrum by the committee of Representatives appointed for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. Members of the House of Representatives, it gives me unusual pleasure to have the privilege of presenting our guest on this occasion. He comes from a sister republic in South America, from a people who for more than 100 years have been a liberty-loving, brave, and fighting people. They have maintained their freedom in an atmosphere of hostility many times. They are still a free and a great people.

It gives me great pleasure, therefore, to present to you the head of that great government, the President of the Republic of Paraguay.

The PRESIDENT OF PARAGUAY. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives, the magnificence of the Capitol is fitting to shelter within its gigantic walls the outstanding figures of the illustrious persons whose statues stand in the rotunda as mute guardians of the imperishable traditions of this House, from which has emanated the wise democratic legislation that has exercised such marked influence on the material and spiritual progress of this great Nation.

It signifies a high honor for me to occupy this rostrum, not only as President of your sister nation but above all as a citizen of the Americas, as a member of the great family of nations united around a common cause.

The United States of America entered into an independent life on the basis of a well defined program that appears in the Declaration of Independence of 1776, completed later by the Constitution and by the Bill of Rights and the Gettysburg Address.

The Declaration of Independence is, in my opinion, the most trancendental document of its kind. It begins with the enunciation of the fine international juridical principle according to which "the separate and equal station of the nations of the world is a right to which the laws of Nature and of Nature's God entitle them"; it proclaims in the public order "that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights—that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness"; and it establishes in political matters one of the cardinal principles of democratic regimes: "That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed." Since the memorable date of that Jeffersonian declaration more than 166 years have passed, and still those principles continue to be the foundation stones of the juridical structure of the free people.

Thirteen years before the French Revolution, the United States of America had set forth the principles of the Bill of Rights, which later served as a model to the new nations of the great American family in the framing of their constitutions.

My country, together with the other countries of America, and following the example of the older sister to the north, adopted a democratic form of government. It has been and is a democratic country since the early days of its history. Paraguayan in origin was the revolution of the Comuneros, which in 1727, long before the middle of the eighteenth century, proclaimed to the whole world that the will of the common people must be above all other wills, as a principle which belongs to public authority.

Up till 1939 Paraguay had governed itself by one of the most liberal constitutions in the world.

The new questions which arose in the field of pure law inspired the reform of 1939, in order to place that fundamental law in harmony with the modern conquest of law; and assure a greater well-being. The problem was not stated with a view to abandoning the road followed up to then and traveling by a different one, but with a view to modifying the direction and trying to expedite it in a convenient way, leaving out obstacles and illusions, in accordance with the modern ideologies, and in line with the processes that other American countries had established. It has not followed any absolutist tendency, but the sound purpose of satisfying a need without impairing, as stated in the declaration of purposes, the cardinal principles of American democracy contained in the Philadelphia Constitution.

There is no doubt that the democratic system, as a political and social organization, is the only one which conforms with man's nature; but it is also true that any system or body or doctrine can and must be modified in the light of truth without removing, of course, the bases of the juridical structure so that it may not err by trying to operate in a vacuum. "The inquiry, knowledge, and belief of truth," as stated in an inscription in the facade of the central gallery of the Library of Congress, "is the sovereign good of human nature."

I do not need to state that we are not dealing with a finished work. Rather, I believe in the reform of its flaws and omissions. That is why I have advocated recently its revision, after consulting my people with favorable results, and always considering the basic principles of a true democracy.

In the chronological division of universal history, the contemporary age starts with the French Revolution. The fair thing in my opinion would have been to take as the starting point the date of the independence of the United States of America, of the approval, by the Second Continental Congress, of the outstanding statements to which I have just referred, at least in America, where the seed of liberty has sprouted into institutions which honor the peoples that are a part of the American community and that live under the same civic preoccupation and the same common aspirations.

In the light of events in the United States during the past 10 years, it may not be unreasonable to state that a new era in history has begun in the New World. Let me review but two of these events:

First, the inception of the good-neighbor policy, coincidental with the inauguration of President Roosevelt, who from the rostrum of this Capitol said that in the field of international relations he dedicated this Nation to the good neighbor who respects himself and who, therefore, respects the rights of others; the neighbor who, in a world of neighbors, honors his obligations and the sanctity of his word.

And, second, the consolidation of pan-Americanism, from the first meeting of foreign ministers in Panama in 1939 to the third such meeting, in Rio de Janeiro in 1942, the immediate result of which was the most magnificent cooperation of the American countries ever recorded in history, for the purpose of defending themselves against the common danger which struck against them with the treacherous attack on Pearl Harbor, of struggling for the maintenance of the undying principles of liberty and justice which govern their living together, and of aiming at the formation of a world better than the present one on the basis of respect for the principles of ethics and law and of the practice of a true fraternity, as principles essential to a democracy.

Paraguay has kept and will continue to keep faithfully and honorably all her international pledges. Even before the third meeting of foreign ministers in Rio had come to a close, she had broken all diplomatic, economic, and financial ties with the Axis.

Respectful of her tradition and an active advocate of the principles expressed, she has not hesitated a single moment to put herself on the side of the United States and the other United Nations in the greatest tragedy which the imagination has conceived and which history has recorded in all time.

The Paraguayan people reaffirm, through me, on this solemn occasion, their adherence to the cause of this glorious country, which is also the cause of all America, and pays homage to the heroism of its brave fighting men in the fight for liberty and justice.

At 12 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m., the President of Paraguay and his party departed.

AFTER THE RECESS

The recess having expired, at 1 o'clock and 1 minute p. m., the House was called to order by the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the proceedings occurring in the Chamber during the recess of the House will be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1943

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2536) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise and their return to civil employment," approved June 2, 1920, as amended, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 2536, with Mr. GORE in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this bill, as its title states, is a bill to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise and their return to civil employment."

By reference to the first page of the report you can see something of the history of this bill. The subject has been under consideration for approximately 2 years. The first bill introduced was H. R. 5906. Some study was given that bill. Then H. R. 7484 was introduced and extensive hearings were held on it by a subcommittee. Following that, the committee decided to use the information gained at that hearing and introduced H. R. 699. On that bill we held additional hearings. At the close of the hearings and the consideration of that bill, which covered a period of approximately 3 months of executive sessions and discussions, I introduced the bill H. R. 2536, which is sometimes referred to as the "clean" bill, since it comes to the floor without the necessity of having a great number of clarifying amendments.

May I say this at the outset. During my stay in this House I have never known of a piece of legislation receiving more careful consideration by a committee than this. There was never the slightest tinge of partisanship in the committee room. The bill is truly a committee bill. When reported out, it was reported by a unanimous vote of the committee. One member of the committee suggested that he might want to reserve the right to offer an amendment, but the bill was reported with the unanimous approval of the Committee on Education.

I shall not burden the House by going into a detailed discussion of the various provisions of the bill, but it is decidedly an improvement over the basic act, which has been in operation for approximately 23 years. During that time those in charge of its administration have built up a reputation that I think should be regarded by this House as quite commendable. They have been handling about 50,000 cases a year, and at the present time they are handling 75,000 cases, I think. The cost of rehabilitation is a little under $300 per individual, as compared with the first attempt made in rehabilitation following the World War, when the cost ran up to approximately $5,000 per case.

The administration of this act is in the Office of Education, which by Executive order was placed under the Federal Security Administrator. It may be interesting to you to know that the entire personnel in the Washington headquarters office, to handle this entire program, consists of 22 people. I think Dr. Kratz, the head of this bureau, is entitled to that statement.

In this bill we attempt to provide and do provide for the rehabilitation of the industrial injured, the non-service-connected veterans, the civil air patrol and the merchant marine, and the congenitally disabled, the whole theory of the bill being that if a blind person is rehabilitated to the extent that he can earn a living he not only becomes a better citizen but he goes off the Government pay roll, so to speak, because the United States Government pays blind benefits.

As to those who are injured and crippled in industries, under this program we can make them better citizens, enable them to take care of their families, and eventually create a saving to the Federal Government as well as the State governments and society in general.

The service-connected veterans were taken care of in Public 16, a law passed by this Congress sometime ago. When this bill was originally introduced, it carried a section which provided for a cooperative arrangement for the handling of service-connected veterans. This provision was carried in H. R. 7484 and in H. R. 699. Then the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation considered a bill which was virtually section 1 of H. R. 699 and reported it to the House, and it became a law. We struck that section out of this bill, but in Public 16 was incorporated this provision:

> The Administrator * * * may utilize and extend existing Veterans' Administration facilities and utilize those of any other governmental agency as well as those maintained by joint Federal and State contribution.

This program is maintained by Federal and State joint contributions, and is the set-up referred to.

In this bill, therefore, we make the service available to the Veterans' Administration at his discretion when the agreements are made.

There is another feature to this bill. The service-connected disabled veterans constitute only about 10 percent of the veterans needing rehabilitation. Therefore it becomes highly important and necessary that this act and these facilities be made available. The veterans are already returning, and may I say right here that this department is the only governmental agency that has been or is now taking care of the rehabilitation of the veterans. However, the Veterans' Administration is as rapidly as possible setting up the machinery to take care of the service-connected veterans under Public Act 16, but I might mention in that connection that, as is well known, there will be many veterans who have service connections but who will not be declared service connected for some time to come. As a matter of fact they are still declaring some veterans service connected from the last World War. This bill provides the cooperative machinery to fit with the other bills, making a complete working law, just as we intended in the original H. R. 699 with section 1 deleted. The 50-50 matching is in this bill. The State pays 50 cents of every dollar in the handling of the program, except the administrative cost, which is paid by the Federal Government. The management of the program is with the State vocational board, and in every State of the Union they have these boards set up, and the superintendent of education is usually the man who presides over the board. We have safeguarded every right to the States. We have said what kind of a State plan, and what the plan would really consist of, which shall be submitted to Washington, and when the State plan contains the provisions set up in this act, it is then approved in Washington.

Mr. MORRISON of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. Yes.

Mr. MORRISON of North Carolina. Is there any provision where State institutions are concerned under which the rehabilitation of some of these defectives may be recognized under this act, as well as other institutions? For instance, our institutions for those who cannot see or speak or hear——

Mr. BARDEN. Yes.

Mr. MORRISON of North Carolina. They can recognize that institution?

Mr. BARDEN. Yes; and utilize every facility in the State.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS. The gentleman is doing a very fine piece of work, and we are all indebted to him. I wish to ask a question with reference to what schools will be recognized in this rehabilitation program, in all of the categories. It is not confined to any particular branch of schools? Will they include our privately owned commercial schools?

Mr. BARDEN. Absolutely. That is exactly why the administrator has been able to keep this cost down to such a remarkably low figure. It is by utilizing the facilities that have been set up, in making contracts with them.

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. The gentleman also will agree that the handling of the program will be for all physically disabled.

Mr. BARDEN. Why, of course.

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. And the gentleman further states it does not affect privately owned schools.

Mr. BARDEN. No. I state to the gentleman in all frankness that I have received quite a lot of mail about this bill, and all that I have received from all of the privately owned schools throughout the country have contained praise and a prayer that it would soon become a law.

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. Yes.

Mr. JENSEN. Do I understand that the soldiers of all wars receive equal treatment under this bill?

Mr. BARDEN. Absolutely. There is no distinction in this bill as to what war one incurred an injury in or whether it was after the war.

Mr. MOTT. Is there any change between this bill and existing law as to the authority and jurisdiction of the Federal Government in regard to this program? Or, let me put the question in this way: Is as much authority left in the States under this bill as under existing law?

Mr. BARDEN. There is considerably more, and we have placed more safeguards around it. The basic act was a rather wide-open proposition. However, I may say that we had a very fine Administrator at the head, Dr. Kratz, who did not use even a small percentage of the power given him, and I say this to his credit, that it was at his suggestion that some of that power was taken out of Washington because he did not like to have power lying around, as somebody would be accusing him of using it.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. Yes.

Mr. HARE. Is there any limitation on the appropriations now applied to all this work?

Mr. BARDEN. I do not understand.

Mr. HARE. In the amount appropriated.

Mr. BARDEN. Certainly not. May I say to the gentleman that in the past years it has been costing around $3,000,000—three to four million dollars. That is, the Federal share of it. I am informed that it will likely run to possibly ten or twelve million dollars in the light of the present industrial activity and of the war.

The gentleman would have to tell me how many people were going to be disabled and how many soldiers were going to need treatment before we could get at the amount of money.

Mr. HARE. I understand that heretofore the act provided for no limitation on the amount that could be appropriated by Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BARDEN. I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Mr. HARE. As I understand, heretofore there has been no limitation on the amount that could be appropriated by Congress for this purpose?

Mr. BARDEN. I think not.

Mr. HARE. This act does not contemplate any change in the policy?

Mr. BARDEN. No, it does not, if my memory is correct. I think it would be very unwise if we were to try to guess at the cost.

Mr. HARE. I was not expressing an opinion on the matter. I just wanted to be sure that there was no limitation.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. I yield.

Mr. GRANGER. Has it been your experience that there has been no discrimination in the case of disabled veterans, where the States have not been able to comply with the requirement of the Federal Government as to furnishing training for them?

Mr. BARDEN. May I have the gentleman's question again? I did not understand it.

Mr. GRANGER. This is a 50–50 proposition between the States and the Government?

Mr. BARDEN. That is correct.

Mr. GRANGER. Has there been a case where a State has failed to take care of its veterans because it has not had the funds with which to do it?

Mr. BARDEN. Well, there have been some cases where the States have exhausted their appropriation and therefore had to cut their activities. But in view of the war and in view of the fact that all State legislatures are closed, we have placed a provision in this bill that where a State exhausts its money and it is necessary for the work to go on until the next session of the State legislature, that can be done.

In working on the physical-restoration feature of this bill we were exceptionally fortunate in having one member of the committee who held a fellowship in surgery at Mayos', and who had had 10 years in China, with a vast amount of experience in this field. That is the gentleman from Minnesota, Dr. JUDD. His services on the committee, I think, were invaluable, and I am sure all members appreciated it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has again expired.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this bill does not present a new subject to the Congress of the United States. It is one that has been on the statute books and in operation for 20 years.

I want to take this opportunity to pay my respects—and I think I share the sentiments and opinion of all other members of the Committee on Education of the House of Representatives—to our distinguished chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN]. He has led that committee in the consideration of this bill for over 5 months of deliberations. In all that time I can say without any fear of contradiction that no man in this House displayed greater patience, tolerance, and uniform courtesy to the members of the committee, no matter on which side of the table they sat, than the distinguished chairman of our committee [Mr. BARDEN].

When this bill first came to the committee for consideration it contained some 26 or 27 pages. The bill which we present to you today contains about 15 pages. The deletion is due largely to the fact that we struck out title I, which had to do with veterans' affairs and which subject was dealt with by another committee. If there was any one thing that challenged the attention of all members, it was to be sure that in the presentation of this legislation the rights of the States were protected.

I join in the opinion expressed by the chairman of the committee that this is a States' rights bill. The statute now on the books, as we all know, provides for a 50–50 matching of State and Federal funds. This bill does the same thing. No State is required to do anything under this bill unless it chooses to do so. The States inaugurate the program. They include in it the plan they desire to carry out and the classes of persons which they desire to rehabilitate. When their plan is approved by the Federal Administrator, then it becomes the program of the State, and the State administers it. There is no change in the substance of the basic law, in my opinion, with one exception; that is, that in the present law the cost of administration is borne equally by the States and the Federal Government. In this bill the Federal Government pays the cost of administration.

It was thought by many members of the committee that that provision was fair to the States; that it did not confer upon the Federal Government any new authority, because the States submit their statements every 90 days to the Federal Government, and the Federal Government sends them a check.

Mr. GWYNNE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield.

Mr. GWYNNE. Who selects the schools which participate in this program? Is that left to the States?

Mr. DONDERO. That is left entirely to the State boards of vocational rehabilitation, just as it is now. However, this program has very little to do with schools.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I prefer to finish my statement, and then I will yield to the gentleman.

This program of vocational rehabilitation is not a large one. During the last fiscal year the amount of money expended was approximately $6,000,000; $3,000,000 on the part of the Federal Government and $3,000,000 on the part of the States. The question was raised how much larger this program would be under this bill, with limited physical restoration included. The estimate was $12,000,000; $6,000,000 on the part of the Federal Government, and an equal amount on the part of the States. Perhaps the best answer is that if we knew how long the war would last and how many would be injured as a result of the war, and in industry, we might better be able to answer the question with a greater degree of certainty and accuracy. That is not a large program. It is a very modest program, and one that will pay large dividends to the American taxpayer. Under the present law it amounted to about $60,000 annually per State. That is a small amount of money. We have rehabilitated under the present law more than 200,000 cases. These people have become self-sustaining citizens and are taxpayers instead of tax eaters. The average cost per case has been $300, and the Federal cost of administration is about 1½ percent.

I think the fact is worthy of repeating that the entire Federal program, here in the Nation's Capital, has been carried on and administered, including clerical help, by a staff of 22 people under the able, efficient, and economical supervision of Dr. Kratz, administrator of this program.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. TARVER. My interest in this matter is whether or not there should be a limitation on the authorization. I am interested in that because I sit on the subcommittee which writes the appropriation bill which provides for this agency. I am very much in favor of this bill as a whole, but in all previous legislation as I understand on this subject a limitation has been fixed by the Congress as to the total amount which should be appropriated. In the act of July 2, 1920, there was a limitation of $1,000,000 fixed; and in section 531 of the Social Security Act a limitation of $3,500,000 was fixed.

I can appreciate the difficulty of determining just how much money will be needed to carry out the purposes of the program, but I do not like the idea of just knocking out the limitation entirely and leaving the sky as the limit. It seems to me that we ought to leave some limitation. The gentleman says $6,000,000 is the estimate. Why not name $7,500,000, or some other top figure beyond which the appropriation could not go? Otherwise we might be asked in the course of years anywhere from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 or whatever the administrative authorities figure it might be possible to expend. Does the gentleman not think it wise to fix a limitation?

Mr. DONDERO. May I answer the gentleman from Georgia in this way: The program under this bill is set up entirely by the 48 States. They must submit their budget estimates and their share of the costs to their legislative bodies. I believe that in itself places a reasonable limitation on the amount to be expended under this program.

Mr. TARVER. Does the gentleman think that it has been unwise heretofore to have a limitation in the law? We have always had one. Why should it be changed? Why should the procedure be changed where we have had a limitation of the authorization heretofore for 23 years, and Congress has always insisted upon having such a limitation?

Mr. DONDERO. I have tried to answer the gentleman by saying that the States under this bill have complete authority over the entire program, and it seems to me a fair limitation is placed on this subject because the States must pay half of the cost.

Mr. TARVER. Does the gentleman feel that it has been an unwise procedure over the past 23 years during which we have had a limitation with respect to the amount to be appropriated?

Mr. DONDERO. No; I do not think so, and I do not wish to be understood as saying so. But it does seem to me that in face of the conditions in which we are now situated and at war there is an effective limitation in the matching of funds and the restrictive powers carried in the pending bill.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LANHAM. During the 23 years to which the gentleman from Georgia refers there has not been the uncertainty as to needs that there is in this time of war, when both in the military services and in industry men are being disabled who can be rehabilitated and returned to service.

Mr. DONDERO. Exactly.

Mr. BLACKNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BLACKNEY. The gentleman is making a very fine statement. I am very much interested in the problem because of its educational scope, but I want to be sure that there is nothing in this bill that continues the apparent policy on the part of the Federal Government to encroach on the educational policies of the States. That is not in the program?

Mr. DONDERO. That is not in this bill. May I say to the gentleman that this bill does not in any way touch the subject of education except to rehabilitate those who have been incapacitated.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS. I would like to say to the gentleman that for many years I have been consistently in favor of this kind of legislation and I am now, and I am strengthened in my support by a telegram which I received today from the director of education of Ohio, in which he says:

Congressman THOMAS A. JENKINS,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Just advised that H. R. 2536 is on the calendar for Thursday. This vocational rehabilitation bill has many items of merit which would enable us to provide more benefits to Ohio citizens. We would appreciate the support of the Ohio delegation on this bill.

M. B. PERRIN, Director.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MURPHY. I would like to state that for years in Pennsylvania I was in favor of this type of program. And may I suggest it was the opinion of the committee, the reason why it did not wish to fix a limitation in the bill was because of the war and industrial uncertainty in the country, as well as its willingness to be protected under the wise, industrious, and able ability of the gentleman from Georgia, Judge TARVER.

Mr. DONDERO. Let me say that out of the last World War came 330,000 applications for rehabilitation within a 10-year period. One hundred and seventy-nine thousand of these were placed in training. That was based on an Army of 5,000,000 men. If the present program of the War Department is put into effect under which the armed forces are to be raised to 10,000,000 men, then we may expect, proportionately, double the number of cases for rehabilitation, or 600,000.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MASON. First, I want to compliment the gentleman and the committee, particularly its chairman, upon the good job they have done in the consideration of this legislation.

Secondly, I want to state that I have been a schoolman all my life and associated with schoolmen all over the United States. I naturally receive mail from them today as a Member of Congress and every particle of mail from schoolmen that I have received recently concerning this proposed legislation has been favorable to the bill.

Mr. KERR Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. KERR. I understand the purpose of this bill to be mainly to assist those who can be taken care of under a rehabilitation program attached to the school system in order to help those men who are untrained, particularly those who need to improve their talents, so that they will be enabled to meet the problems of life and be happier persons.

Mr. DONDERO. The bill provides for vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise and limited physical restoration. It enables physically handicapped people to become self-sustaining.

Mr. KERR. It would be just a school feature for that purpose, then, and does not go further?

Mr. DONDERO. It does not.

Mr. TALLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield.

Mr. TALLE. Will the gentleman explain what was said about the proposed change in administrative costs?

Mr. DONDERO. The administrative costs under this bill, because the people who may be eligible for the services provided herein will be cases growing out of our war effort, is borne entirely by the Federal Government. That is a change from the present law, which provides a 50–50 matching with the States.

Mr. TALLE. And the gentleman does not believe that the proposed change will deprive the States of any power they now have?

Mr. DONDERO. I do not; because the States submit their bills for the cost of administration to the Federal Government, and the Government reimburses the States for the amount.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to correct a statement I made a few minutes ago in response to a question by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HARE] I believe it was. He asked me if there had been any limitation in the preceding acts on appropriations for this bill. I answered in the negative. I now find I was incorrect; there has been a limitation on the amount to be appropriated, but in this particular act the only limitation which exists is the limitation to be placed by the Committee on Appropriations and by the amounts set up by the States to be matched.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. I yield.

Mr. CARTER. I am a former member of the Committee on Education and am very much interested in this legislation and the work that has been carried on in the fields of vocational education and rehabilitation, but I do feel that there ought to be some limitation placed in section 9, the section that authorizes the appropriation.

Mr. BARDEN. I must be frank and make this admission to the gentleman: I think that the committee is composed of fairly intelligent men; I believe the program has been handled by fairly intelligent men. After a careful search of our minds and of the statistics we found nothing to guide us in fixing a limitation because we did not know how many hundreds of thousands were going to be injured in industry, we did not know how many soldiers were going to be crippled; there was simply no way to arrive at an estimate or to handle it except to reach out in thin air and just pluck a guess out of the air. The Committee on Appropriations is composed of men who sit down and comb these facts. They are not going to give any more money than can be absolutely justified.

Mr. CARTER. As a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I want to thank the gentleman for his kind remarks.

Mr. BARDEN. And may I say to the gentleman that apparently we have much more confidence in you than you have in yourselves.

Mr. CARTER. Notwithstanding the fact I am a member of the Committee on Appropriations and the unbounded confidence the Committee on Education has in the Committee on Appropriations, I still insist there should be a limitation. This is very poor authorization legislation, for you fix absolutely no amount. I would be willing to be generous and have an amount fixed that would probably be in excess of what might be used, but I do feel very strongly that there should be some limitation on this authorization so that we shall know at the end of the year not only how much money is being appropriated but how much money has been authorized.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. I yield.

Mr. TARVER. In addition to what the gentleman from California has said—and I may say I heartily approve his statement—there has been in the law heretofore a limitation on the administrative expense, but if I understand this bill correctly it just leaves the sky the limit on the matter of administrative expense.

As one member of the subcommittee which handles this particular appropriation I want to say that you put a rather severe burden, a heavy burden, on the subcommittee, because these educational authorities in their enthusiasm for their work, which is good work of course, will prepare programs which in all probability will far transcend anything which Congress had in mind when passing this legislation, and so far as administrative expense is concerned, the sky will be the limit with them if it is the limit with you; you ought to provide some limitation here.

Mr. BARDEN. The estimate of the present Administrator, as I said a minute ago, was that the first year it would not run much over $12,000,000—it may go a little above that—but he did not see much chance of a peak beyond approximately $25,000,000. He was conservative in his estimates and of course this must be matched by the States, with the exception mentioned by me previously. I might say to the gentleman that under the production training program right now there is being spent $166,000,000 a year.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. I think the bill also provides that the States shall submit an estimate to the Federal Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

The bill provides that the States shall submit an estimate of their program to the Federal Administrator each year, so that the Federal Government will know in advance substantially what the whole program will be for the coming year.

Mr. BARDEN. It is not a question of our resisting a limitation. We are frank enough to admit that we do not know where to put it, and I do not know of anybody else who knows how to fix such a limitation. Does the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. DONDERO. I think the gentleman has stated it accurately.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. CARTER. Did the gentleman have any testimony before his committee as to the probable cost or estimate?

Mr. DONDERO. Yes. I stated that it is expected that the present program perhaps will be doubled. In other words, it will be $6,000,000 on the part of the Federal Government and $6,000,000 on the part of the States, which would be an average of about $125,000 per State.

Mr. BARDEN. I believe the Director said it would likely go to $22,000,000 or $25,000,000 at the high peak.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, this is the first Congress in which I have served on the Committee on Education and it has been thus far a strenuous service but a very pleasant one. We all have an affectionate regard for our Chairman. He has been very patient and very considerate in our discussions of this particular measure. I do not think that any committee has been more industrious in trying to solve a problem before it than has the Committee on Education in the consideration of this particular bill.

I call your attention to the fact that under existing circumstances this is peculiarly and necessarily and very largely a Federal bill, one for proper participation of the Federal Government because in its essence it is in the nature of a war measure. This bill, if enacted into law, practically supersedes the former legislation with reference to this subject.

We are having a great many men injured in industry in our war effort. We are having a great many of the soldiers fighting on the foreign fronts returned to us wounded and disabled. Here we have the prime purpose of enabling those people to get back into the war effort, and in these days when we are constantly reminded that there is a shortage of manpower, it becomes doubly our duty to rehabilitate vocationally these disabled people as rapidly as possible and get them into the respective tasks for which they are or can be fitted.

It is a little difficult, of course, to estimate the exact amount of money that is going to be required for this purpose because we cannot know absolutely how many will be injured in industry who can be rehabilitated and how many will be disabled in the conflict of the war. Heretofore this program has been economically administered with a small Federal force of 22 persons, and I doubt if that can be duplicated in any service of the Government taking into consideration the proportionate tasks of those services. We were very much impressed with the representations made to us concerning the administration of this act.

Mr. TALLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. TALLE. I should like to be fully satisfied that it is wise to make the change involving administrative costs which is proposed in this bill. Here is a force of 22 people which has done a good job under the present plan. Will an equally good job be done under the new plan? During the course of this debate I should like to have the administrative costs broken down so I may know what kind of services will be included under that head.

Mr. LANHAM. I am sure there will be members of the committee who will do that for the gentleman. At present I wish to call attention in the brief time at my disposal to one or two other features of this legislation.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. The gentleman stated that this is largely a Federal bill. I think he should have said that it is a Federal bill from the standpoint of responsibility but not a Federal bill as it pertains to control.

Mr. LANHAM. Yes; I was just about to make that distinction.

Mr. Chairman, we who serve on this committee have been very much interested in seeing that the provisions of this law would provide for State operation and State control. The Federal angle comes in necessarily by reason of the fact, as I have stated, that this is essentially a war measure to provide manpower for our various lines of activity. The States under the proposal involved in this measure have a great deal more authority than they ever have had under laws of this character and we have been very meticulous in trying to get that kind of legislation. We feel we have done a good job.

One further matter I wish to mention is with reference to the physical rehabilitation of these people who are disabled. We are providing that this physical rehabilitation shall be given to those whose disabilities have become static. In other words, we are not going into the therapeutic treatment of all kinds of people for all kinds of trouble. If a disability has become static, if it is possible for the person to be reabsorbed into industry, it can be done quickly. For instance, suppose that a disabled person has lost some of the fingers of a hand or has lost a foot and the condition has become static. By the use of prosthetic appliances we can very quickly put that person back into industry and make him a useful and component part of our war effort.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. VURSELL], a member of the committee.

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry I have only 5 minutes. I wish I had 15 minutes, but we are very short of time. I shall make only one or two general observations. It would take me almost 5 minutes to read the passage in the bill here in answer to the question, but if you will turn to the bill it will save me the trouble. It is on page 8, beginning with subparagraph (1).

We worry about whether or not too much money will be spent under this bill. If we believe in the democratic processes of government, I think that will answer the question to begin with, because if Illinois sees fit to appropriate a certain amount of money for physical vocational training, the Government then matches that amount of money. In other words, the cost of this act will depend upon the number of people who are physically rehabilitated and upon the will of the people, expressed through their representatives, in the various States of the Nation.

When this bill came to us it had a good many ideas promulgated there that drifted away from the protection of the States. During some 30 days the 21 members of this committee attempted at all times to curb the power of the Government, not to extend bureaucracy but to retard its onward march in this country. I think I speak the sentiments of every man on the committee when I say that we labored at all times with that in view, and with the bigger end in view of reconstructing physically people who need it and are not able to give it to themselves, taking them out of the position of being a burden to society and putting them into a position where they can have their own self-respect and not only contribute to maintaining themselves and their families but contribute to society generally. Thousands and thousands of them have been rehabilitated and are now working in the war plants. The records show that there is less absenteeism and that the production if anything is a little greater from these men who have been rehabilitated through the vocational educational systems under this contractual arrangement between the Government and the States.

We quibble about how much it will cost. It will not cost anything. This measure is legislation of economy. It places people in a position to get off the financial back of the National Government and sustain themselves. The more it costs, if it is well and economically run, as it has been, the more good it will do, and in the main, in the larger view, the more it will save the Nation.

I notice that the N. Y. A. has a bill in which it is asking some $400,000,000 to set up some sort of an educational institution within the various States in competition with the public-school system to a certain extent. I assume there will be many people who will pass this large amount as a matter of course, and they will pass judgment favorably.

The National Housing Administration is asking in one bill alone for some $400,000,000, in the face of the fact that Under Secretary of War General Patterson the other day testified that employment in the War Department has reached its peak and that it is going to be reduced by 100,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Chairman, in my judgment, this measure is legislation looking to the happiness and the development of the morale of the American people. This is not looking across the seas. We give billions to lend-lease. We spend billions to send the men in the Army to fight and to be maimed and crippled. What does it matter how much it costs when this is for our own people, to rehabilitate them and help out in our own economy, when it is for the happiness and contentment of our own people? This is an introspective view, something for our American people, and it is only a pittance, that we flit away with the wave of a hand in this Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK].

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of this measure and wish to compliment the committee on the careful consideration they have given this program. I do not know anything about what has been accomplished in the other States of the Union but in my own State of Georgia, under the leadership of the State educational department, specifically under the direction of Mr. Paul Barrett, a great piece of work has been done in rehabilitating the physically handicapped persons and furnishing them the opportunity to work in the war program.

As I understand, this bill broadens the act a little bit and makes it possible also to rehabilitate those whose handicap is not entirely physical. It continues a program which has been successful, economical, and humane, and that has contributed in part to solving the shortage of manpower in industry during war time.

I do not believe it is generally known just how serious the problem of the handicapped is. The best information I have been able to get is that there are more than 20,000,000 people in the United States, or 1 out of every 7 of our population, who have some handicap, either major or minor or in between. There is a vast waste of productive capacity, a vast loss of earning power in this country due to our failure to make it possible for these people to earn a livelihood as they would be able to do if they had not become disabled.

A great many of our war industries today are making fine use of people who suffer from physical handicaps, because many of them have been trained outside of this program by industry itself and many others have been trained as a part of this program. Today they have found that these physically handicapped persons can do their part in the war effort. You will find thousands of them working in the war industries of the United States today because they have been given an opportunity to become qualified for that type of work.

I do not know whether or not we ought to put a limitation on this appropriation. We have millions of people working in our war plants today who never worked before. Millions of our war workers are working under stress and strain due to long hours and the desire to produce as much as possible. In all cases proper safety devices have not been provided. In addition, we are going to have many handicapped persons coming back from our armed services. Certainly it makes good sense, in my judgment, to provide sufficient funds to do this job and do it right. We ought not to be too economical about it, although of course we should not waste money.

As far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to abide by the judgment of this splendid committee. I know they have given long and careful consideration to this subject. We know, of course, that we have the check of the Committee on Appropriations as well as the check of the Members of the House and the Senate themselves before any money can be appropriated for this purpose.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. What is the judgment of this committee in regard to the amount of money that should be authorized for this particular purpose?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I do not undertake to speak for the committee, but I have heard several here say that there is no way to estimate at the present time what the need will be, and I doubt the wisdom of making them come back to Congress and get an amendment increasing the authorization, when we have the splendid gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER] and 42 other fine men on the House Appropriations Committee, and if I can judge from what they have been doing recently, they are not wasting any money. I think we may as well leave that up to the gentleman and his colleagues on the Appropriations Committee, checked, as it will be by the Budget, by the Senate, and by ourselves as Members of the House, when the appropriation may be brought here. I am willing to leave it in that state. Let us do this job, let us give these people a chance to play their part in the activities of the United States, and in the war effort. We ought to pass this bill, in my judgment, without a dissenting vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GORE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 2536, and had come to no resolution thereon.

USE AND OPERATION OF WAR PLANTS IN PROSECUTION OF THE WAR—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I present for printing under the rule a conference report and statement upon the bill (S. 796) relating to the use and operation by the United States of certain plants in the interest of national defense.

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION OF DISABLED PEOPLE

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H. R. 2536.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 2536, with Mr. GORE in the chair.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 12 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD] a member of the committee.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, I should like at the beginning to pay my tribute along with the other members of the committee to our chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina, for his patience with the committee, which was composed in large part of new members, and for whom this was the first bill on which we ever worked in Congress. The bill was considered conscientiously and painstakingly, so that we could learn as much as possible, and we all appreciate the chairman's unfailing helpfulness and wisdom, along with that of the ranking minority member on the committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO]. To work with them was as fine an introduction to the committee workings of this body as a new member could ever hope to receive.

I want to ask some of the questions that may be raised in regard to this bill, and try to give answers to them. First, how big a problem is this? As has been said, there are about 16,000,000 people in this country who are physically handicapped, but only about 3,000,000 need assistance in order to be placed in adequate remunerative occupations. Many of these need some help physically, but they are employed at least part time and managing to get along. However, there are more than 2,000,000 with major disabilities who are not financially able to get adequate training or occupation for themselves.

In addition to that 2,000,000, there are about 100,000 becoming disabled each year. Their number is greatly increased, so says the National Safety Council, because under the present war urgencies a great number of unskilled and partially trained people are entering highly skilled trades in war industries, and there are about 2,000,000 nonfatal accidents a year, and out of that number there are almost 100,000 whose disability is permanent, and require rehabilitation to get them back into useful occupation.

In addition, there are the registrants who are rejected for physical reasons by the draft boards, running as high as 45 percent. In many the disabilities were not known until they had physical examinations under the selective-service boards. Many need training for entering war factories.

Again there are those who are being discharged each month by the Army and the Navy. They passed the physical examination, but under the strenuous military training, some old injury like a football knee "pops up," and they are being discharged. Some of them are worse but their disability is not service connected and they cannot expect to get assistance under the bill for service-connected disabled veterans.

In addition there are a great many people in civilian defense, air wardens, merchant marine, civilian air patrol who are more subject than previously to injury, and also people being compelled to go to farms, where they never worked before and therefore have a high accident rate.

Then there is always the latent possibility of air raids, which would greatly increase the number of disabled. That is one of the reasons why the committee thought it was impossible to make even an approximate estimate of the probable cost of the program.

So the task really is gigantic. Under this program the States were training about 10,000 a year before the war. It has already expanded to 50,000, and it probably will go to at least 100,000 a year.

They may be divided into three main groups. Some of them have an irremediable or unimprovable disability, and nothing that we can do or hope to do will improve them to a point where they can go back to their original occupation. They have to be trained around their disability. A man formerly worked as a policeman. Now both legs are off. He has to be trained at some job where he can sit down and use his hands, some technical skill that does not require the use of legs.

Then there is a second group whose physical disability is permanent, but can be corrected to a degree where they can return to their original jobs. This physical restoration is one of the things which this bill provides for and which was not in the previous legislation. All we could do before was to take a man as he is and try to train him around the disability for a new occupation. If a man had a cataract and there were no funds for having it removed, we had to train him in some skill suitable for the blind; whereas if perhaps $150 could be provided and the cataract removed, he could go back again to the job he had before. Certainly that was a better expenditure of time and money than to have him spend weeks and months trying to be trained in a new skill.

There are people who have crippled legs and hands where, by performing an amputation, you could fit a man with an artificial limb and let him go back to the work he was in before, rather than start him entirely de novo to learn a new trade. Or a plastic or tendon transplant operation to strengthen or stabilize an old infantile paralysis extremity. Better to operate and restore a stiff joint to useful function than to make a man enter an occupation where he would not use the particular extremity.

There are individuals who have facial or other disfigurements that are a little repulsive to the public. They cannot get or hold a job unless they are given plastic operations or prosthetic devices which can correct most of the disfigurement. Often that alone enables them to resume their former occupations and is certainly rehabilitation of the best sort.

So where it is possible by some physical correction or restoration to fit a man to return to his basic work, that is good economy. It was not provided for in the present legislation. It is provided for in this bill.

Third, there are individuals who need both physical restoration of a static disability and also some vocational training. We have tried in this bill to deal with all three types.

The question may come up, Cannot this be done by the States without assistance from the Federal Government? There is one State, New Jersey, which has had a magnificent program of physical restoration due largely to the enthusiasm and generosity of one doctor. In fact, we learned a great deal from the experience of New Jersey, but they admit they have reached the bottom of the barrel. They cannot finance this program any longer without some assistance, especially since the need has grown enormously because of the concentration of many war industries in that State, and the bringing in of workers from other places. It is too big for certain States to finance, because of the sudden increases in those areas.

Secondly, there are so many persons needing this new training who are primarily a Federal responsibility—those injured in war plants, which are the result of a war that the Congress declared. The merchant marine, the air wardens, the Civil Air Patrol—all of those individuals are working at a job which is a Federal job—war. We felt it was not right to saddle all these extra burdens onto the States without more help from the Federal Government than it had given in the past.

That brought up a third question: Could we get a workable relation, a satisfactory partnership between the States and the Federal Government that would meet three criteria—first, that would give Federal funds adequate to do the job to get these men trained, get them back to useful work, particularly during the war effort.

Second, could we have enough Federal control to avoid waste and inefficiency in the State programs; because we cannot turn over Federal money and have it squandered here and there.

Third, could we get proper Federal control and at the same time prevent centralization of power in Washington, prevent further breaking down of State's autonomy, prevent developing another army of workers who would be under Federal oath, responsible primarily to the Federal Government, whereby the Federal Government could try to coerce those States to its will, or use the workers as political agents for whatever administration was in power, or pour extra Government money into doubtful States to swing an election one way or the other, whether it was a Republican or a Democratic administration. We wanted to have safeguards over the use of the money and at the same time make sure we would not be building up another bureau that would be able to exert political or economic pressure in individual States. This has happened in so many other fields, as you are all aware, that it constitutes a danger which the committee could not rightly ignore.

The problem was to withhold funds from improperly administered agencies without starving out agencies that were properly administered, in this case an agency, which, as has been said, has an amazing record of efficiency and economy in administration. We worked harder on this in the committee than on anything else. I believe there have been written into the bill ironclad safeguards which will give the money to do the job, which will prevent any undue Federal interference with or control over the administration within a State under its own plan, and still will provide sufficient Federal control to avoid waste by the States of Federal money.

Now, lastly, what are the values of this program? First, from a humanitarian standpoint I am am particularly interested in that as a physician. I know the most devastating thing that can happen to a human being is a sense of uselessness, to have society bring forth a man and then have no use for him. There is not a man worth his salt who does not protest inwardly and fret about that and begin to deteriorate internally unless he has unusual emotional insight. He loses his self-respect. He is a victim of pauperization and paternalism.

What can restore him so much as being able to make his own way again? Second, from a social standpoint, you cannot build a sound society with men who are primarily objects of charity.

The way to help men is not to give them things, but help them to help themselves, to acquire productive capacity or earning power, so they can be independent and self-sustaining, can hold their heads up in the community in which they live.

Discontent grows among men who are idle, men who are resentful over something that has happened to them, perhaps because of their patriotic and loyal service to their country, where the Nation has received the benefit and they are in effect cast aside except perhaps for a pittance as a pension or handout.

Third, as has been said by several others, from the standpoint of the war effort. When we are scouring the country to get men to work in factories and to work on farms, when we are disrupting millions of homes in order to put wives and mothers in many occupations to free men for heavier work, surely hundreds of thousands of those jobs being taken over by mothers could be done by men with physical handicaps if they had training to enable them to do that work, and thus relieve able-bodied men to switch to more difficult jobs, men who have more physical stamina and skill for very hard work. We cannot afford to have so many men idle because of disabilities which can be corrected or made employable.

But if one does not consider the above three reasons, there is the economic standpoint. I believe this a perfectly sound and necessary piece of legislation, viewed from the hard-headed standpoint of dollars and cents.

I do not regard this program primarily as a charity, I do not regard these men primarily as an obligation of the Federal Government. The primary consideration is that we have a government, which is spending money by the billions of dollars, and we want to get these men where many of them will not be on allowance of say, $30 a month, drawing money from the Treasury; that is not the solution, we want to give them the ability to be putting money back into the Treasury, as has been said, convert them from tax eaters to taxpayers. It is wholly in the interests of the Nation, as well as of the individual to get him transformed from a receiver of assistance to a normally self-respecting, self-supporting citizen. That applies no matter how, or when, or where he received his disability.

When we are spending a hundred billion dollars a year to make cripples, surely it is reasonable to spend six, ten, or even fifteen millions of dollars a year, on a 50–50 basis with the States in order to get these disabled persons back to productive work.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER].

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, H. R. 2536 relates to a program in which I have long been interested. The vocational rehabilitation of the physically handicapped citizens of the Nation is a program at once humanitarian in motives, practical in method, and effective in results. Established 22 years ago, this service for physically handicapped workers has proved its worth. I believe in it. And I am one who has followed its development and observed its accomplishments for well over a decade. Even before coming to the Congress I had become familiar in my own community with the advantages of a service to provide vocational guidance, training, and other types of preparation to physically handicapped persons of employable age.

Since coming to the Congress I have watched the expansion of the program on a national basis. In 1935 the Social Security Act included a section on vocational rehabilitation which increased and made permanent the annual authorization for the work. In 1939 the authorization for Federal grants to the States was increased again, this time from $1,938,000 to $3,500,000 a year. With the aid of this modest appropriation by the Federal Government and an equal amount by the States, the service is now provided on a State-wide basis in each of the 48 States as well as in Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the District of Columbia.

The State divisions of rehabilitation provide service currently to about 60,000 handicapped persons. In the fiscal year now coming to a close the States will rehabilitate approximately 50,000 handicapped persons. Three-fourths of these rehabilitated workers will be employed by war production or war-supporting industry. The remainder will be placed in essential civilian employments.

Today industry does not have to be begged or persuaded to employ the handicapped. Industry is well aware that they can meet current manpower shortages only through the utilization of groups who formerly have not formed an important part of our labor supply. Everybody recognizes the necessity for the wartime employment of women. Not so many, however, realize the importance of fully utilizing the services of the three or four million persons of employment age who have serious physical impairments. Industry is anxious to employ them. Especially in the great aircraft factories of the Nation the physically handicapped worker has been hired in tremendous numbers. Here they have been found to be efficient, steady, and reliable. Their contribution has done much to enable the industry to meet the stupendous goals set by the Commander in Chief.

Recently I have seen letters from important producers of war materials saying that their handicapped employees are eminently satisfactory.

These letters are from industries in my own State, and I shall read excerpts. They are very illuminating. This is a letter from the General Electric Co., of Erie, Pa., and it states:

> In general, our experience is that these people are very grateful for an opportunity to be employed, and as a result have an inherent desire to make good.

From another industry in the State of Pennsylvania comes a letter from the Philadelphia Blueprint Co., a very large company in Philadelphia, in which it is stated:

> Our production is far superior in the jobs they are on to that of the more able-bodied. Absenteeism is at an extreme minimum. So far we have had very little turn-over. At the present writing we have had no accidents.

When interviewed by rehabilitation counselors and guided by them into jobs consistent with their abilities and suitable to their physical limitations, their productive output is on a par with that of the able-bodied. These handicapped persons appreciate a job, too. For that reason they stick to it, once they have it. Employers unanimously report that the rate of labor turn-over and the rate of absenteeism is far less among the handicapped than among the able-bodied.

But, mind you, the records already achieved did not just happen. Nor can the complete utilization of handicapped labor be achieved without constructive governmental action. State rehabilitation agencies have arranged the special types of training needed by handicapped persons; they have provided artificial appliances to restore lost function. Above all they have given practical and effective assistance in guiding the handicapped worker into a particular job in which his physical impairment does not detract from this productive efficiency.

H. R. 2536 extends and strengthens the provisions of the basic act under which the program has been operated. But there is no change in the fundamental principle or objective of the program. As I study the bill I find it has three basic objectives. First, it provides some additional financial assistance to the States; second, it corrects the greatest inadequacy of the present program, namely the lack of legal authority for providing physical restoration; and, third, it includes a temporary or emergency provision for additional expenditures during the 2-year period ending June 30, 1945. This last provision is, of course, intended to promote the fullest utilization of handicapped workers in war industries.

The Congress recently has passed legislation looking to the rehabilitation of persons disabled while serving in the armed forces of the Nation. That problem will be provided for through the facilities of the Veterans' Administration. There is, however, another and closely related problem which the Veterans' Administration does not have and did not ask to have—jurisdiction. I refer to the thousands of young men discharged by the Army and Navy as a result of a so-called non-service-connected disability. Already thousands of such men have been discharged. In writing this bill full provision has been made for assisting these men to prepare for and to find useful wartime employment.

Finally, let me say that this bill makes no change in the administration of the program or in the Federal-State relationship that has existed since 1921. I believe this is very important, for in this program the Federal-State relationship has been especially cordial. Administrative responsibility for the actual operation of the programs has been left with the States, with the Federal Government exercising the leadership and general direction which the State officials have expected from it.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, until this afternoon I was unaware of any objections to the bill as reported by the committee. The adoption of suggested amendments may be wise in order to insure the early passage of this important legislation.

Wisconsin was one of the progressive States which pioneered in the movement for rehabilitation of disabled persons. It has developed a remarkably successful program. Our legislature long ago established a State board of vocational and adult education, of which Hon. George P. Hambrecht is director. Its rehabilitation division has been successfully administered by W. F. Faulkes, and continues its great work even though handicapped by lack of funds for the proper expansion of its program.

In the 30 years since the Wisconsin rehabilitation division has been engaged it has handled over 27,000 cases. Of that number, 12,987 succeeded in being registered for service, and 6,580 have been closed and returned to suitable employment, and 3,904 received the special training for particular lines in industry.

Certainly, now of all times, there is need for the legislation this bill provides.

Mr. Faulkes, our State supervisor of vocational rehabilitation, has kindly given this measure his consideration, and I shall ask consent to include in my remarks a statement which he has provided, in which he emphasizes the surpassing importance of the rehabilitation program and dwells upon the features of needed legislation. It is as follows:

REHABILITATION NEEDS FOR THE WAR EMERGENCY

(By W. F. Faulkes, State supervisor vocational rehabilitation)

It is a trite saying that "comparisons are odious." Too often the basis of opposition to a new or different policy or plan is the likening to something within our immediate experience.

I recall an experience I had 30 years ago, when vocational education had its beginning in our State. It was a part-time program—part work and part education. The regular schoolman and "schoolmarm" had difficulty in reconciling actual work in a shop as part of an educational program. Today this reconciliation is generally recognized. The manual or industrial arts program then obtaining in high schools assumed that the ordinary manual arts instructor was qualified to teach any trade. He had to teach something of everything, but not all of anything. In other words, he was "jack of all trades" and master of none. When it was proposed, in the vocational schools, to have an instructor for each trade to be taught, the regular school people raised the cry of per capita costs. However, as the program progressed and commendable results were obtained, opposition gradually ceased.

Twenty-two years ago Congress enacted legislation providing for the vocational rehabilitation of physically handicapped persons. Prior to such legislation the physically handicapped person was largely barred from educational and vocational training activities, and to a larger extent such persons were denied the opportunity to work in accordance with their abilities. The fact that many physically handicapped persons were barred from attendance at public educational institutions was probably the reason for emphasizing education and vocational training as the major function of a rehabilitation program. At least, such was the interpretation placed upon such legislation, not only by the administrators of the Federal act, but by the administrators in many of the States. In Wisconsin the act happened to be drawn by lay persons and, as a consequence, it is one of the most comprehensive acts of its kind among the States of the Union. Notwithstanding the comprehensive features of the Wisconsin act, the emphasis has been placed upon vocational training and education in professional schools.

For a considerable number of years a few of the rehabilitation workers in the country have recognized that much more is involved in the rehabilitation of a physically handicapped person than that of education or vocational training alone. The Federal agency has been gradually brought to recognizing the other necessary features in an adequate rehabilitation program, such as prosthesis, physical restoration, and physical and occupational therapy. The physical correction of a physically handicapped person is not yet recognized by the Federal Government as a legitimate expenditure in the program that may be matched equally by State and Federal funds. The extension of a program of physical restoration involving hospitalization, corrective surgery, physical and occupational therapy will necessitate not only the introduction of specialists in such a program, but will necessitate a considerably increased staff for supervision. Then again, it has been difficult to bring about the recognition on the parts of State boards of education and State boards of vocational education that the rehabilitation of a physically handicapped person is largely one of an individual case-work character. The result has been that there is a greater need for actual case workers in a vocational rehabilitation program than there is in the regular vocational program that is being conducted by the States.

It can be vividly remembered by workers who are still in this field today that when the vocational education program was introduced in the States it was necessary, where an adequate program was promulgated, that a larger staff was necessary than in the regular educational program that preceded vocational education. Likewise, in the rehabilitation program, which necessitated individual case work, a larger staff was predicated than was the case in vocational education. Again comparisons were made, with the result that the work of the vocational rehabilitation program has been impeded quite extensively over the country. We who have been working in the field of vocational rehabilitation have recognized that our first responsibility is to the physically handicapped person. Regardless of prerogatives that may prevail, it is essential that the Nation and the States render such service to the physically handicapped person, whether or not such person's disability has originated directly as a consequence of the war or in one of the many industries that are contributing to the war effort. All of these people must be served and reinstated physically, vocationally, and economically as close to their previous status as it is possible to accomplish.

A brief résumé of what has been accomplished since the initiation of the rehabilitation service may be opportune here, as it will indicate the needs for expansion.

The total number of cases reported to June 30, 1942, was 26,452. Of this number 12,987 had been registered for service and 6,580 have been closed as rehabilitated and returned to some kind of suitable employment. Of this number of rehabilitated cases, 3,904 had received some kind of training in preparation for the particular employment. However, also during this period approximately 4,000 were closed as nonsusceptible, persons so severely physically disabled that placement in regular employment was not possible. Many of these severely disabled could work under sheltered conditions such as the home or a shop especially provided for such purpose. In order to provide such opportunity to this deserving group, the 1940 legislature made available an appropriation of $25,000 for such services. During the fiscal year 1940–41 the United States Office of Education agreed to match the State appropriation. The United States Office of Education has agreed to extend such aid to January 1, 1943, to the amount of $11,000.

In order to carry out the policy of local participation, such homecraft service was worked out in cooperation with local vocational schools. During this initiatory period costs of instruction, travel, and supplies were paid from State and Federal funds. Although the Rehabilitation Division of the State Board of Vocational and Adult Education had accumulated considerable data indicating such need, the approach to the solution of the problem was largely experimental, and because of this it was considered best that during this finding period the costs should be taken care of from available State and Federal funds. The amount of money available, of course, limited the extent of the program. In order to obtain Federal funds for this homecraft program it was necessary to set up definite qualifications for the teachers for such program. Such qualifications were based upon training and experience. During the past fiscal year 24 centers operated under the State-Federal aid program, and 4 counties without such aid. Funds are not available for any expansion of the program at this time. Time will permit only a brief summary of the accomplishments. From July 1, 1941, to March 31, 1942, total sales amounted to $14,173.67; material costs were $4,077.88, yielding a profit of $10,096.61 to the participants in the homecraft program. The continuation and extension of this service depends to a large extent upon future legislation, both Federal and State.

At this time there is pending in Congress a legislative proposal for materially expanding the rehabilitation program. This bill is being sponsored by the National Rehabilitation Association in accordance with suggestions from the Federal Security Agency and the United States Bureau of the Budget. Congressman BARDEN, of North Carolina, introduced the bill in the House, H. R. 7484, and Senator LA FOLLETTE introduced a companion bill in the Senate, S. 2714.

This bill comprises three titles. Title I relates to the vocational rehabilitation of disabled individuals with war-connected disabilities. Title II relates to persons disabled in industry or otherwise. Title III relates to the vocational rehabilitation of blind persons.

Title I provides for the rehabilitation of the disabled persons who are members of the armed forces. Briefly, this title provides:

1. Sum sufficient to carry out the purposes of this title.

2. Administrative expenses of the State boards in carrying out the purposes of this title shall be paid by the Federal Government.

3. The rehabilitation training shall be delegated to the State boards in accordance with a plan set up for such purpose. The Federal Government shall pay all costs of such training.

4. All other services, such as determining eligibility, susceptibility, physical restoration, prosthesis, and placement, shall be the responsibility of the Federal agency unless such services are incorporated in the State plan.

Title II provides:

1. That rehabilitation training shall be the responsibility of the State board in accordance to the provisions included in the State plan.

2. The State boards will be reimbursed 100 percent for all administrative expenses.

3. The State board retains authority to appoint the personnel, which must, however, be in accordance to a merit system approved by the Federal agency.

4. For each dollar of Federal money expended for rehabilitation training there shall be expended by the State at least 50 cents for the same purpose.

There is one major discrepancy in this title. The first three lines of subsection 1 of section 202 read as follows: "In order to provide for the rehabilitation training of individuals certified to the States for such training by the Federal Security Administration," etc. It is proposed to amend this clause by striking out the words "certified to the States for", and inserting the words "entitled to", and striking out the words "by the Federal Security Administrator."

According to conversations with the representatives of the Federal Security Agency and the Bureau of the Budget, more than three-fourths of the States are understaffed for the current program, and no State is adequately staffed to carry on the proposed expanded program.

Under the proposed program as included in the above legislative proposals, there will be added physical and occupational therapy, surgical and medical services, and considerable extension of prosthesis, and an expanded program of placement carried on on a functional basis.

It is my opinion that any State which sets forth an adequate and efficient program will be granted full authority to proceed. On several occasions, Wisconsin was complimented by the representatives of the Bureau of the Budget for continually expending more than the population allotment. I have contended for many years that physical rehabilitation should be included in the State program, but my pleas have always met with a deafened response.

Title III refers to the rehabilitation of blind persons, and proposes that such program be taken over entirely by the Federal agency. This title was added by the National Society for the Blind.

There is urgent need for an impetus and expansion of the rehabilitation program. We must face the fact that the demand for manpower is rapidly increasing; in fact, the surplus is almost exhausted. Recent surveys have indicated that many millions of man-hours of labor can be supplied by disabled, who can be rehabilitated and prepared for many of the tasks in the defense industries and employments. Recently General Hershey stated that it has become mandatory for industry to make place for the one-armed and one-legged applicants in industry. During the past year the Rehabilitation Service placed in permanent suitable employment 731 physically handicapped persons. More than 50 percent were placed in the defense industries. During the current year the objective of accomplishment is a minimum of 1,000. The industries must have these workers in ever-increasing numbers. To win this war adequate production must be had, and production is not possible without adequate supply of manpower. That the disabled can be and have been refitted for employment and satisfactorily employed has been demonstrated a thousand times in our own State.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TROUTMAN].

Mr. TROUTMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the pending legislation which should have the unanimous support of the entire House. The Committee on Education has very carefully studied the bill now before you; and after very extensive hearings under the able direction of our distinguished chairman, the bill was unanimously reported out for your consideration.

In these critical times when it becomes necessary to appropriate extraordinary sums for the purpose of waging war, all expenditures which are nonessential for the successful conduct of the war should either be eliminated or drastically curtailed. The present legislation, while causing an increase in expenditure, nevertheless makes a very important contribution to our entire war effort.

The present bill is an amendment to the act approved June 2, 1920, as amended, which provides for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise and their return to civil employment. The original act, together with the amendments thereto, has apparently been a workable piece of legislation. There has been complete harmony between the Federal director of vocational rehabilitation and the various State vocational rehabilitation boards. The pending measure makes no drastic change in the present arrangement except to clarify and enlarge the present vocational rehabilitation program.

The present bill does make two very important changes to which your attention is called. It provides for a matching of funds by the Federal Government and the States. For each dollar appropriated by the State, the Federal Government will appropriate a dollar. The Federal Government will also pay all administration expenses. The present act places the appropriation of funds on a ratio of population, which system has not been conducive to a maximum appropriation of funds for this important work by the various States. The pending legislation clarifies the existing law by providing for physical restoration where the disabled individual is found to require financial assistance with respect thereto. Provision of physical restoration by the States is not forbidden. It has not been provided in the past because of limitation of funds and the feeling of the administrators that expenditures for such restoration were not authorized. The bill does not set up a State medical program but specifically limits the treatment to such treatment as might be necessary to correct or substantially modify a physical condition which is static and constitutes a substantial handicap to employment and is of such a nature that such correction or modification should eliminate or substantially reduce such handicap within a reasonable length of time. The act further provides for the furnishing of prosthetic devices as are essential to obtaining or retaining employment.

The main object of the legislation is to furnish services necessary to render a disabled person fit to engage in a remunerative occupation, within certain limitations. The purpose of the act is to bring back into gainful occupations those who are physically handicapped, the correction or modification of which handicap would permit them to become gainfully employed. Naturally some handicapped persons cannot be rehabilitated because of the severity of their disability or because of mental or emotional disturbances. It is estimated that within the male population 15 to 65 years of age there are some 7,000,000 persons whose physical condition was such that some vocational rehabilitation might be needed in their occupational guidance and selected placement. Somewhat more than a million others could be equally placed after minor physical repair or training around their handicaps or both. This group together with those suffering from defective vision, and women suffering from disabilities who would be available for industrial employment if rehabilitated, indicates the huge reservoir of manpower much of which could be utilized in a brief time and at a comparatively small cost.

There are very few problems facing our country more important than that of manpower. The needs of our armed forces must be met, and as a result severe shortages of workmen, both in industry and on the farms, are now prevalent. By tapping the huge reservoir of those persons whose physical handicaps can be corrected or modified so as to fit them for gainful employment, much of this acute shortage can be met. In my own State of Pennsylvania there is a potential load of 200,000 disabled persons in need of vocational rehabilitation. Each year approximately 80,000 new cases become permanently disabled through industrial or public accidents and disease. The very rapid expansion of industry, the increased speed of operations and the increased number of inexperienced workers, have caused the rate of disabilities from industrial accidents to increase at an alarming rate. During the past 3 years there has been an increase of about 30 percent in the employment of workers in industry, but, on the other hand, there has been an increase of 70 percent in the incidence of disability among workers in industry. In addition, there are civilians whose disabilities are more directly connected with the war, particularly those in the protective services. There was a common agreement among all witnesses testifying before the committee as to the need for a greatly expanded vocational rehabilitation program. It was stated that at present more than 2,000,000 cases need the attention of the State rehabilitation services as speedily as it can be given them. Consideration must also be given to the fact that these disabled persons are doubly handicapped, not only by being injured, but also being unemployed without an opportunity for work.

Vocational rehabilitation will not only provide men for essential work but will also better the economic conditions of the handicapped person. Disabled persons are potential charges on the community and the State unless given an opportunity to make the most of what is left to them. They not only do not produce, but they consume a portion of the productive efforts of others. The State suffers economic loss because of the lack of productive power and because of the reduced purchasing power of this group. It is economically unsound to allow them to remain dependent. Unassisted, most handicapped workers are unable to prepare themselves for, secure, or hold employment in competition with normal workers.

Again referring to the State of Pennsylvania, approximately 13,000 disabled persons have been rehabilitated under the present program at an average cost of $300 a person. To maintain a dependent at public expense costs from $300 to $500 a year. The potential income of a disabled person is $1,200 per year and in many instances the average yearly wage of a rehabilitated person is in excess of his wage prior to his injury. The citizens of Pennsylvania are proud of the splendid work that has been done and is now being done by the Vocational Rehabilitation Bureau. Today more than 75 percent of the disabled persons who are prepared for and placed in employment by the Pennsylvania Rehabilitation Service are placed in work essential to war production, such as motor repairing, machine shop practice, bench workers, power machine operating, welding, tinsmiths, sheet metal, and drafting.

The bill now pending also takes into consideration vocational rehabilitation for the blind. There is probably no handicap suffered by man which is less understood than that of blindness. At one time to become blind was to become utterly useless not only to yourself but to the community. When we speak of the blind, we immediately picture a figure in dark glasses standing at a street corner with a tin cup. In the face of the present shortage of manpower for essential war industries, we are just beginning to become aware of a reservoir of competent, dependable labor that has been waiting for an opportunity to become useful—the blind workers of this country. The list of jobs in industry in which blind workers are excelling is surprising and the range of possibilities is even wider. The list includes shell loading, inspection, rivet sorting, drill press operating, lathing, welding, and many other jobs too numerous to mention. His highly developed sense of touch, his greater powers of concentration, his care and precision in his movements, and his great store of physical energy has made the blind worker an extremely valuable addition to our labor army.

The question may be raised as to whether or not industry is willing to employ physically handicapped persons. As a matter of fact, industry is making repeated demands upon the various rehabilitation bureaus to furnish men and women for employment.

In a recent letter from the American Armament Corporation, of Allentown, Pa., to the Pennsylvania Bureau of Rehabilitation, the personnel director writes as follows in relation to a blind girl who had been employed by the company 3 months before the date of the letter:

> In reply to your letter of February 26, I am pleased to advise you that the girl whom you placed with us on December 1, 1942, has proven to be a most satisfactory employee.
> In addition to the hand-burring job on which you placed her, she has mastered several go-no-go gage operations in our inspection department. On all jobs her production has definitely been equal to that of any sighted employee doing the same type of work.
> She has had one raise since starting and is at present receiving $26 a week.

In another letter from a large manufacturing company located in the city of Erie, Pa., to the Pennsylvania Bureau of Rehabilitation, the personnel manager of that company writes as follows:

> We have yet to find one cause for disappointment in placing physically handicapped people on jobs in our shop. Although in some instances their production is not equal to the top operators, it is within the average and what deficiencies they might have in production they make up in steadiness and dependability. We have not lost, through voluntary separation or discharge, any of our physically handicapped employees. In reference to your question of accident frequency we find them to be as safe workers as any in our plant.

Most of the large manufacturing companies of the country have seen the value of employing physically handicapped people who have received rehabilitation training. In my own State of Pennsylvania, the General Electric Co., the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., the Armstrong Cork Co., the American Car & Foundry Co., and scores of other companies have placed and are placing large numbers of physically handicapped workers into gainful employment. Under present conditions our industries and factories are taking all of the rehabilitated workers that they can secure.

The present bill will afford an opportunity to expand the present program so that many more thousands of disabled persons may be brought back into gainful employment.

The real man is often masked behind his physical handicap. Rehabilitation not only brings to the foreground the capabilities and desires of the individual, but develops in him the feeling of confidence and satisfaction which enables the disabled person to excel in the accomplishments of life.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL].

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Chairman, at the outset of my remarks I think it only fair to offer my congratulations to the chairman and also to our distinguished minority ranking member on the Committee on Education, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO]. I think they are to be complimented at this time for bringing in legislation of this type. Perhaps my words may sound a little bald when I say that it may have been a good thing that the First World War was fought 25 years ago, before the present dilemma we find ourselves in. I make this statement because I feel it has given us a background for legislation such as is now being considered for the benefit of those disabled. It will take care of persons disabled in connection with industry in wartime, and it is also leading the way for even more complete vocational rehabilitation than we have ever known before. I was looking over a bit of the history of veterans' legislation not long ago and I noted that although peace was declared in November of 1918, scarcely a step was taken before 1920 to rehabilitate soldiers coming home from the battles of 2 years previous. I believe I am correct in stating that the first rehabilitation act was not passed until the middle of 1920. Such a predicament, it seems to me, must have created a lot of confusion and indefinite action on the part of the country. It therefore seems to me that we are moving in the right direction when we take steps to care for the men who will return from the present war. We should take this action before the advent of peace which we hope will come in a comparatively short time. As I have said, early veteran legislation was confused; it was indefinite, and it took a great deal of time, and possibly the benefit of knowledge of all the misfortunes of the First World War has resulted in this step being taken today, the consideration of this bill. I feel sure this is but the beginning of what is going to be done in behalf of the greatest body of American manhood ever to return victorious from a great war. I hope as we consider other measures of this type we will take into consideration all the needs, and anticipate their needs.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I yield.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. As I understand this bill it is on a 50–50 basis of cost between the States and the Federal Government.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Is that the way it was handled in the previous law?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I am informed that it is.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I was wondering if the committee had taken into consideration the fact, for example, that New Mexico has more of her men in the armed forces injured and prisoners today than any other State except possibly Texas; that the wounded in battle are not distributed on an equal basis between the States. It seems to me that some consideration ought to be given to that fact so that States like New Mexico, which has had so many of her boys injured, could receive a little more consideration than is proposed in the pending bill as I read it in its present form. I hope the Congress will correct this situation within the next 2 years.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. I may say in answer to the gentleman from New Mexico that this bill contains a variable clause to run for 2 years in order to accommodate exactly the situation the gentleman presents to the House. I am sure the State of New Mexico will be taken care of.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I am glad the bill is before the House today and I hope it will be passed unanimously. When the boys come marching home, they will rejoice at their Congress' intelligent action, which will take adequate care of those who are maimed, disabled, wounded in the terrible conflict now raging.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, we have two amendments to offer to this measure.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. For a question.

Mr. FISH. If the gentleman is a student of this bill I should like to ask him whether it covers members of the merchant marine who are suffering the greatest casualties of any group in America today in the World War?

Mr. RANKIN. I am not sure about that, but I want to discuss another phase of it, and I have only 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, we have an amendment we propose to offer to take the disabled veterans out of this bill. One of them is on page 5 after the word "duty", strike out all of line 5 and the balance down to and including all of line 9; and on page 6 beginning with line 3, to strike out all of line 3 and all of that paragraph down to and including all of line 9.

This measure reaches out and takes in service-connected disabled veterans, and that is unnecessary because they are already being taken care of by a bill reported by the World War Veterans' Committee passed and signed by the President. This amendment is also opposed by the veterans' organizations, and it is not looked on with favor by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LANHAM. I would like to explain to the gentleman that General Hines was before us on this matter. There are certain facilities to correct a disabled individual which exist in one place and the Veterans' Administration may not have a facility where the disabled person is.

Mr. RANKIN. I understand what the gentleman has in mind. This bill invades the jurisdiction of the World War Veterans' Committee and the Veterans' Administration, and is disturbing the set-up that we now have.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Also the legislation passed for the Veterans' Administration provides that the Veterans' Administration shall use all available facilities?

Mr. RANKIN. Why, certainly.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. We have that legislation already.

Mr. LANHAM. We want to give that permission also in this measure.

Mr. RANKIN. General Hines says that insofar as the Veterans' Administration is concerned, there is no necessity for the provisions of section 2 (10) and section 3 (a) 1 of H. R. 2536.

Those are the exact provisions I propose to strike out. Not only that, but I have letters from various veterans' organizations, and I have had a conference with the leaders of the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and the American Veterans of the World War today, and all three of them ask that those provisions go out of the bill because, if passed, it will begin disturbing our jurisdiction and stir up controversies over these veterans which they do not want, and if we do not win the fight here it will be carried over to the United States Senate.

I hope every Member of the House will vote with me to strike these provisions from the bill, and if that is done we will have no objection to its passage.

Here is a letter from one of the veterans' organizations:

VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS OF THE UNITED STATES,
May 27, 1943.

Hon. JOHN E. RANKIN,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN RANKIN: This is in reply to your note of the 25th requesting my reaction to provisions of H. R. 2536 which relate to disabled veterans, and I wish to say that in my opinion the references in this bill to disabled veterans are meaningless.

In the first place, Public Law 16, Seventy-eighth Congress, takes care of the rehabilitation of veterans having service-connected disabilities and the Veterans' Administration needs no additional authority insofar as that class of veterans is concerned.

In the second place, H. R. 2536 would cover veterans having non-service-connected disabilities in the same manner that it covers persons without military or naval service, without need of mention of "disabled veterans."

Section 2, clause 10, refers to "any disabled veterans certified pursuant to section 3 (a) (I)," and section 3 (a) (I) relates only to disabled veterans covered by Public Law 16, Seventy-eighth Congress, since it refers to an "agreement between the Administrator [of the Federal Security Agency] and the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs." Obviously, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs could only agree to something concerning that over which he has authority, and he has nothing whatever to do with the vocational rehabilitation of veterans having non-service-connected disabilities.

Since the Federal Government furnishes all of the funds for the rehabilitation of veterans having service-connected disabilities, there is no need for it to give to the States for a program with which the States have nothing to do.

And, since the States, in their rehabilitation of veterans having non-service-connected disabilities, would not differentiate between such veterans and persons without military or naval service, there is no need for the mention of "disabled veterans."

It is evident that the sponsors of H. R. 2536 have included reference to disabled veterans in this bill for sugar-coating purposes and to gain support of the bill by appearing to favor veterans.

If the sponsors of H. R. 2536 really want the bill to mean anything to veterans, they should eliminate the existing reference to disabled veterans and insert a proviso to the effect that disabled persons having an honorable discharge from the armed forces showing service of 90 days or more during a war, campaign, or expedition, shall be given preference. Otherwise, it is our recommendation that reference to disabled veterans be deleted from the bill.

Respectfully yours,
OMAR B. KETCHUM,
National Legislative Representative.

The section 2, clause 10, referred to by General Hines, has reference to any disabled veteran certified pursuant to section 3 (a) 1 and section 3 (a) 1 relates only to disabled veterans covered by Public Law 16, Sixty-eighth Congress. So you merely duplicate the work and stir up trouble for the Veterans' Administration when it comes to handling these men to whom we owe the highest obligation.

I hope my amendments will be agreed to when offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that the gentleman from Mississippi saw fit to make certain statements in connection with this bill. The veterans' organizations that he speaks of have not been as cautious and as attentive about these matters as I would like to have seen them. There is not a single organization in the United States of America today rendering rehabilitation service to the veteran except this rehabilitation service here, and the war has been going on for 1½ years.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. I do not yield at this time.

Mr. Chairman, I do not run around asking the veterans' organizations what I can do. I have been a member of veterans' organizations ever since they were created. I have served on virtually every committee in the American Legion and some of the other organizations, and I think I know a little about the duties, the responsibilities, and the wishes of the American Legion and some of the other organizations.

I have here a letter from the Veterans of Foreign Wars saying that they approve of the bill. I quote from the letter as follows:

> This bill is within the scope of the current program of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States. We believe it to be a most important one, and urge its favorable consideration.

Mr. GEARHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. I cannot yield at this time.

Mr. GEARHART. I have a letter to the contrary.

Mr. BARDEN. Who are you going to believe? Here is the letter.

Mr. GEARHART. All right. Read this one. Let us put both of them in the RECORD.

Mr. BARDEN. I do not know how we are going to legislate for veterans' organizations if they are going to write the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART] one kind of a letter and write me another kind of letter.

Mr. GEARHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. Will the gentleman permit me to get to a certain point?

Mr. GEARHART. Have you any doubt about the stand of the American Legion?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declined to yield.

Mr. BARDEN. I yield to the gentleman. What was the question?

Mr. GEARHART. Have you any doubt as to the stand the American Legion has taken in reference to this bill?

Mr. BARDEN. I do not know anything about what the American Legion's stand is in connection with this. I know they appeared before the committee and they said they wanted section 1 of the bill taken out and if that was taken out they were in favor of the rehabilitation bill.

Mr. GEARHART. Let me ask one more question. Did you not call the American Legion less than a half-hour ago and they told you they were against this bill?

Mr. BARDEN. Now, I called the American Legion headquarters and I called for Mr. Sullivan. Mr. Sullivan was not there. I called for Mr. Stubblefield and he was not there. The lady said, "I am interested to know what you are calling about." I stated that I was calling about this bill to see if they had changed their minds. She said, "If the veterans are in they want them removed." Does that answer the gentleman's question?

Mr. GEARHART. That is a very precise answer.

Mr. BARDEN. Where were they? The last time I saw them the bill was O. K. Let me tell you all there is in this.

When we were considering this bill before the committee, the committee struck out section 1 known as the veterans' provision. When Public, 16 was passed, this is what they put in it, and they put it in at the request and after the statement of General Hines, who said that he wanted and expected to use the facilities of this organization because they had done a grand job with it. This is what was written into Public, 16:

> And may utilize and extend existing Veterans' Administration facilities and utilize those of any other governmental agency as well as those maintained by joint Federal and State contribution.

That is a specific and direct reference to this act.

Now let me come to what we put in this bill.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I have a message from Mr. Rice, of the Disabled American Veterans, and he is very anxious to have us support the Rankin amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. BARDEN. I yield myself 5 additional minutes, Mr. Chairman.

This is what we are dealing with. These folks sit downtown and phone up here. I feel that I have some responsibility for these veterans. The men in Africa and in the Pacific do not belong to any veterans' organization. I feel that I have some responsibility for this rehabilitation program. Public, 16 takes care of only 10 percent of those in the armed services who will need rehabilitation. It takes care only of those who are service-connected after the Veterans' Administration declares them to be service-connected, which may be 1 month, 2 months, 5 years, or even 20 years as it is operating now. Somebody must look after the rest of them.

This is what you are attempting to do. We begin on page 2 of this bill, section 2 (a):

> To be approvable under this act, a State plan for vocational rehabilitation shall—

Then you come over here to subparagraph (10):

> Shall also be available to any disabled veteran certified pursuant to section 3 (a) (1).

Now let us take section 3 (a) (1). This refers to the payments to the States:

> From the sums made available pursuant to section 2, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State which has an approved plan for vocational rehabilitation, for each quarter or other shorter payment period prescribed by the Administrator, the sum of amounts he determines to be—
> (1) Necessary expenditures in such period (exclusive of administrative expense) for vocational rehabilitation services provided disabled veterans entitled thereto under laws administered by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs and certified therefor pursuant to agreement between the Administrator and the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs.

Is not that what they intended in this law, Public, 16, when they wrote in this language:

> And may utilize * * * other governmental agency as well as those maintained by joint Federal and State contribution.

This is what we are trying to do here. We are trying to make the best possible set-up for General Hines to utilize the only agency in the United States that is equipped to do it. There is no restriction, there is nothing else in there. This will enable the rehabilitation service to carry on a better and a more workable program.

This is the statement of General Hines:

> Insofar, therefore, as concerns the Veterans' Administration, the provisions in question in the present bill are considered unnecessary, but no objection thereto is expressed in view of the complete authority in existing law.

If the rehabilitation services officials say this makes a better and more workable bill for them, when they have been doing the work for 23 years, and General Hines says there is no objection and that it will in no way interfere with him, then why strike it out?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman referred a white ago to the letters. I read from General Hines' letter, where he said that these provisions of the bill are not necessary.

Mr. BARDEN. Why does not the gentleman read the rest of it and say, "But no objection thereto is expressed in view of the complete authority in existing law"? Why does not the gentleman read the rest of it?

Mr. RANKIN. Because it is not in the letter to which I referred, written on June 3. The other letter I read was from the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has again expired.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

I am just as much interested in the veterans of this country as any member of the Veterans of Foreign Wars or the American Legion in the United States of America, and I know about as much about this subject. I have been in the work long enough to know that. God knows I would not put a word in here that would impede or hinder any serviceman from getting the best possible treatment. I was the one who started this. My bill was under consideration before the gentleman from Mississippi or the Legion folks downtown ever thought about it, and the war had been going on a whole year.

Mr. RANKIN. I understand there was an attempt on the part of some people to get jurisdiction of the veterans, and they will not get it.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. The gentleman from Mississippi knows better than to make a statement like that. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LANHAM. If this is stricken out, what provision will there be for the rehabilitation of disabled veterans whose disabilities have not been service-connected?

Mr. BARDEN. There will be some question about it.

Mr. LANHAM. And the fact that we struck it out would make a question.

Mr. BARDEN. Who is going to take care of these veterans who come in here and say, "I am a service-connected veteran" and they are told that the Veterans' Administration has not so declared them such, and then they go ahead and rehabilitate that man before the Veterans' Administration ever recognizes him as a service-connected case?

Mr. GEARHART. If he is not officially declared to be a disabled veteran, he is entitled to rehabilitation under the terms of the act that the gentleman is asking us to pass, is he not?

Mr. BARDEN. Certainly.

Mr. GEARHART. Then if he is, he is entitled to rehabilitation under the act that we passed in the last Congress.

Mr. BARDEN. Certainly, but the man will not say that he is not a service-connected veteran. He is going to contend that he belongs in that list.

Mr. GEARHART. It is not for him to say, it is the law.

Mr. BARDEN. The gentleman knows this, and I will be fair with the gentleman. He knows, and the gentleman has heard me on the subject of the Legion and the veterans enough to know that I would not put a word in here that would invade General Hines' authority, or injure a veteran. If these Legion boys downtown are going to try to look after the boys in the present war they should try to find time to come by and offer their assistance to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes. My record in this House during the last 10 years will speak louder than anything that I can say today. I have always supported legislation which, in my judgment, was reasonable and would bring just benefits to the veterans of this country. I would not today oppose the Veterans' Administration. When they came before our committee and requested that title I of the proposed bill be stricken out it was stricken out. This is all new that an amendment should be brought on the floor of this House today to strike out the language in the bill as suggested by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]. It seems to me it would be a mistake, because only those veterans that the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs desires to include under the Federal Security Agency will be included. No request was made by the veterans' organizations nor the Veterans' Administration to delete the language in question.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The Government and the country would not allow for one minute that the veteran should not come under this. The only thing that we are trying to do is to keep out 10 percent and have them under the Veterans' Administration, where they have always been cared for. Under that resolution, you have the right now to Mr. McNutt's assistance, and surely this bill would take care of 90 percent, and they would be classed as people, and not as veterans. When their service connection is established, where a man says I am, and the Administrator says he is not, then that kind of a case should be taken care of under the law.

Mr. RANKIN. Every veterans' organization is opposed to this bill.

Mr. DONDERO. Then why did they not come to the committee and say so?

Mr. RANKIN. They think that you are reaching out and mixing the veterans with all of these other social securities, and the veterans will be made a common carrier to break down the appropriation for all of this vast expenditure that will come in the future. They want to be separate and distinct, to be treated as they have been treated in the past, and every veterans' organization is for this amendment which I propose to offer.

Mr. DONDERO. Why did they not say so to our committee?

Mr. RANKIN. I conferred with them today.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. J. LEROY JOHNSON].

Mr. J. LEROY JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I also want to add my humble endorsement to the fine work of this committee.

The reason I am taking these 3 minutes is that I had a little experience in rehabilitation work following the last war. When I came out of the war and tried to rebuild my law practice I worked for about 2 years on a part-time job for the Veterans' Board for Vocational Training. That gave me an insight into the value of this kind of work.

I want to say I think this bill presents every correct principle for handling this problem. First, it teaches a man to stand on his own feet, no matter what his disabilities may be. Second, it utilizes existing facilities. In my State of California we have had 25 years of tremendously successful work in rehabilitating disabled men of all kinds. The work they do is utterly surprising. Third, it decentralizes the administration of this affair.

The results to be attained by this legislation, as I see them, are twofold. One is monetary. In other words, you take men who are drones in society because their disabilities make it impossible for them to work and build them into citizens who can take care of their families, pay their taxes, and carry their own burdens.

But it has another aspect that is far more important than the monetary gain, and that is the social aspect. During my limited experience I got jobs for and supervised the work of about 150 men. When you observe those men, many who are very despondent, who are utterly helpless, who feel the world is entirely hopeless, and that they cannot make their way in life and you get a job for them, and they build themselves up and they learn to surmount their handicaps, you see the brightness come back to their eyes, you see them again become excellent, self-reliant, independent citizens. Their whole attitude and outlook changes. I do not know of any program that can appeal more to human beings than that kind of a program. In my short experience those men had every disability—lost limbs, lost eyes, stomach ulcers, one was partially insane. They were built back into creative citizens. As the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] said, there is nothing we can think of that is more constructive, that has a more far-reaching influence in the future than this particular kind of work. There is no better Americanism program than this vocational program.

Therefore I want to add my testimony in support of and urge my colleagues to vote for this bill. I hope we will not bog down into a fight over some of the provisions of this bill between the various departments of Government, because it is a fine, constructive piece of legislation. If there is overlapping jurisdiction, let us take out those provisions which some think curtail the authority of the Veterans' Administration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON].

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Chairman, in considering this very important legislation, let us keep ourselves on the plane that the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] has lifted us to. He spoke of his own experience and the great need of men who are injured beyond bearing. I would like to plead with this Committee to consider long before they permit a lowering of the ideals for which this bill stands. If we allow this legislation to slide down the hill into a place where the need of the soldiers will be made the gateway for political abuses it will be the most tragic rather than the most beautiful thing this Congress has ever done. I would like to beg you very earnestly to consider the few parts of this bill that have been suggested as best to be taken out.

There is so much going on today similar to that to which the gentleman from New York referred. Out at Walter Reed Hospital today a young man, an officer terribly burned many years ago, spends 2 days a week going to those burned beyond recognition and saying to them, as the blind man did in England, "Fellows, I, too, have been burned out of all recognition; early plastic surgery was done on me and I am ever grateful. Now they are doing these things better. You'll have to get used to it, of course. I did, and you can. I'm telling you they will give you a face again with which you can go out into the community and hold your heads high and live a full and constructive life."

That is happening twice a week right this moment.

Mr. Chairman, so much of this is needed and will be. Let us rejoice that there are such men as these.

If we are seeking to do this thing well, let us search not only our hearts but the implications and the double meaning of words in the language of this bill, remembering that members of the committee have told us they would not have been put in had they known the feeling of the veterans' organizations.

I think that we will do ourselves an injustice as an institution, as the finest legislative group there is, if we permit ourselves to do less than our best. I would like to leave with you the hope that you will delete from this bill those few little passages which have in them very real danger to the aim and purpose for which this legislation has really been framed by a loyal, hard-working, and splendid committee.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of the time on this side to the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART].

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, despite the fact that there has been a little acrimonious discussion with respect to one part of one section of this bill, acrimony which I am largely responsible for, I am very wholeheartedly for the legislation we have under consideration. I do want to congratulate the Committee on Education for producing it.

But notwithstanding my approval of the bill as a whole, I am very much opposed to part of section 3 because I know it is going to be used to deprive the Veterans' Administration of the right to rehabilitate our disabled veterans who are yet to be returned to us, some of them so broken and crippled as to be just tragic human caricatures of the fine boys who marched so bravely away. I want the great responsibility of caring for the disabled veterans to be left exclusively and completely in the trained, experienced, and sympathetic hands of those in whom the veterans themselves repose confidence. Adopt the Rankin amendments, and the fears so many of us have expressed will be forever laid away.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY].

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, this measure is one of great importance. One wonders why such legislation was not proposed long ago. At this time of war with a manpower shortage looming large this legislation becomes necessary. Ten years of social work has brought to me the conviction that some program should be adopted to aid the disabled—to rehabilitate them and thereby place them back to normal lives and lives which offer a productive contribution to the Nation. The splendid feature provides for veterans' border-line cases—those which are not of service-connected disability. I have seen many of these cases—cases which were worthy of attention but under existing law no help could be provided.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I have never seen a piece of legislation that was so carefully drawn. The two provisions that have been discussed here are granting provisions; they are not restrictions. I shall hate very much to see this House interfere or upset a bill that has been so carefully worked out as this bill has been. They will save General Hines and possibly the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] much grief. But I say in all frankness and fairness the language in the bill helps Public 16 more than it helps this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise and their return to civil employment," approved June 2, 1920, as amended (U. S. C., title 29, ch. 4), is amended to read as follows:

"AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS

"SECTION 1. Moneys made available for the purpose pursuant to this act shall be used for making payments to States (and Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico, herein referred to as 'States') which have submitted, and had approved by the Federal Security Administrator (herein referred to as the 'Administrator'), State plans for vocational rehabilitation of disabled individuals.

"(6) provide such methods of administration, other than establishment and maintenance of personnel standards, as are found by the Administrator to be necessary for the proper and efficient administration of the plan;

"(7) provide that the State board will make such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Administrator may from time to time require, and comply with such provisions as he may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports;

"(8) provide that no portion of any money paid to the State under this act shall be applied, directly or indirectly, to the purchase, preservation, erection, or repair of any building or buildings, or for the purchase or rental of any land for administrative purposes;

"(10) provide that vocational rehabilitation provided under the State plan shall be available, under such rules and regulations as the Administrator shall prescribe, to any civil employee of the United States disabled while in the performance of his duty, and shall also be available to any disabled veteran certified pursuant to section 3 (a) (1).

"(b) The Administrator shall approve any plan which he believes to be feasible and which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a) of this section, except that he shall not approve any plan which he finds contains such restrictions with respect to the expenditure of funds under such plan as would (1) substantially increase the costs of vocational rehabilitation in the State, or (2) seriously impair the effectiveness of the State plan in carrying out the purposes of this act.

"PAYMENTS TO STATES

"SEC. 3. (a) From the sums made available pursuant to section 2, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State which has an approved plan for vocational rehabilitation, for each quarter or other shorter payment period prescribed by the Administrator, the sum of amounts he determines to be—

"(1) necessary expenditures in such period (exclusive of administrative expense) for vocational rehabilitation services provided disabled veterans entitled thereto under laws administered by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs and certified therefor pursuant to agreement between the Administrator and the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs; and

"(2) one-half of necessary expenditures under such plan in such period (exclusive of administrative expense) for rehabilitation training of other disabled individuals; and

"(3) one-half of necessary expenditures under such plan in such period (exclusive of administrative expense) for rehabilitation services specified in subparagraphs (A), (B), (C), (D), and (E), to disabled individuals (other than those with respect to whom payments are made under par. (1) found to require financial assistance with respect thereto, after full consideration of the eligibility of such individual for any similar benefit by way of pension, compensation, or insurance, such rehabilitation services being—

"(A) corrective surgery or therapeutic treatment necessary to correct or substantially modify a physical condition which is static and constitutes a substantial handicap to employment, but is of such a nature that such correction or modification should eliminate or substantially reduce such handicap within a reasonable length of time;

"(B) necessary hospitalization, in no case to exceed 90 days, in connection with surgery or treatment specified in subparagraph (A);

"(C) medical examination where necessary to determine eligibility for vocational rehabilitation, the nature of rehabilitation services required, or the occupational limitations of the person examined;

"(D) such prosthetic devices as are essential to obtaining or retaining employment;

"(E) maintenance not exceeding the estimated cost of subsistence during training, including the cost of any necessary books and other training material;

"(4) expenditures in such period necessary for the proper and efficient administration of the plan, including necessary administrative costs in connection with providing the foregoing services to, and guidance and placement of, disabled individuals.

"(b) In the case of any State found by the Administrator to have substantially exhausted its funds available for necessary expenditures specified in subsection (a), he may increase amounts payable to such State under such subsection during periods prior to July 1, 1945, under such conditions as shall be prescribed in regulations promulgated by him.

"(c) The method of computing and paying amounts pursuant to subsections (a) and (b) shall be as follows:

"(1) The Administrator shall from time to time estimate the amount to be paid to each State under the provisions of this act, such estimate to be based on (A) a report filed by the State containing its estimate of the total sum to be expended for vocational rehabilitation during the period for which such estimate is made, and stating the amount appropriated or made available by the State and its political subdivisions for such expenditures in such period, (B) a report filed by the State containing its estimate for such period of the administrative expenses to be incurred by the State board in carrying out its functions under such State plan, (C) records showing the number of individuals in the State needing and eligible under the State plan for vocational rehabilitation, and (D) such other investigation as the Administrator may find necessary.

"(2) The Administrator shall then certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount so estimated by the Administrator for any period, reduced or increased, as the case may be, by any sum by which he finds that his estimate for any prior period was greater or less than the amount which should have been paid to the State for such prior period, except that such increases or reductions shall not be made to the extent that such sums have been applied to make the amount certified for any prior period greater or less than the amount estimated by the Administrator for such prior period.

"(3) The Secretary of the Treasury shall, upon receiving such certification, pay, through the Division of Disbursement of the Treasury Department and prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office to the State, at the time or times fixed by the Administrator, the amounts so certified. The money so received by the State shall be paid out in accordance with the provisions of the State plan.

"OPERATION OF STATE PLANS

"SEC. 4. Whenever the Administrator, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State board, finds that in the administration of the plan there is—

"(1) A failure to comply substantially with any provision required by section 2 (a) to be included in the plan, or any restriction on expenditures imposed in conflict with section 2 (b); or

"(2) A failure to afford reasonable cooperation with other Federal and State agencies providing vocational rehabilitation or similar services, the Administrator shall notify such State board that further payments will not be made to the State under this act until he is satisfied that there will no longer be any such failure. Until he is so satisfied the Administrator shall make no further certification to the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to such State under this act.

"SERVICES FOR STATE BOARDS

"SEC. 5. To facilitate the operation of State plans under this act, the Administrator is hereby authorized to enter into agreements with State boards needing access to special facilities and services and to furnish to such boards, on a cost basis, services and facilities; and is hereby authorized to establish such needed facilities. Costs of furnishing such facilities and services for any State shall be paid from funds appropriated pursuant to this act, but shall be deemed expenditures under the State plan, and reimbursement with respect to such cost shall be made by deducting an amount equal to such cost from payments made to such State under this act.

"DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

"SEC. 6. Out of funds made available for the purpose, the Administrator is authorized to provide vocational rehabilitation services to disabled persons actually residing in the District of Columbia and to formulate and carry out a plan of cooperation with the United States Employees' Compensation Commission with respect to the vocational rehabilitation of any such disabled residents as are civil employees of the United States disabled while in the performance of duty.

"ADMINISTRATION

"SEC. 7. (a) In carrying out his duties under this act, the Administrator is authorized—

"(1) to utilize and enlarge facilities of appropriate units of the Federal Security Agency, and to enter into agreements and cooperative working arrangements with public agencies and private persons, agencies, and institutions, within the United States, its Territories, and possessions, for services and use of facilities of such persons, agencies, and institutions and to compensate them and such units for such services and use;

"(2) to make studies, investigations, and reports with respect to abilities, aptitudes, and capacities of handicapped individuals, development of their potentialities, and their utilization in gainful and suitable employment, or to contract with other agencies, including foreign agencies, for the making of such studies, investigations, or reports by such other agencies;

"(3) to conduct appropriate courses of instruction for any personnel who participate or will participate in carrying out the purposes of this act, and to detail such personnel to attend such courses and appropriate courses of not more than 6 weeks' duration conducted by other public agencies and private agencies and organizations, which detail shall be part of the official duties of such employees;

"(4) to provide personnel so detailed with necessary books and other material and pay their tuition, or reimburse them for expenditures therefor; and, in any case where such detail is away from an employee's official station he may, for purposes of subsistence and traveling expenses, be deemed on travel status.

"(b) Payment for use of facilities, and services obtained pursuant to this act by the Administrator from units of the Federal Security Agency or other Federal agencies, shall be by check either in advance or as reimbursement, for the actual or estimated cost of such facilities and services, and amounts so paid shall be credited, as determined by such Administrator, either to special working funds as provided in existing law or to the appropriation or appropriations against which charges are to be made or have been made in providing the facilities or services, and payment for services and facilities of other agencies shall be made by check to the payee or payees specified by such agencies.

"(c) The Administrator is hereby authorized to promulgate such regulations, and to delegate to any officer or employee of the United States such of his powers and duties, except the promulgation of regulations, as he finds necessary or expedient in carrying out the purposes of this act.

"REPORTS

"SEC. 8. Annual reports shall be made to the Congress by the Administrator as to the administration of this act.

"APPROPRIATION

"SEC. 9. There are hereby authorized to be included for each fiscal year in the appropriations for the Federal Security Agency such sums as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, including an equitable share from District of Columbia funds of the sums made available for carrying out the purposes of section 6.

"DEFINITION

"SEC. 10. As used in this act, the terms 'vocational rehabilitation' and 'vocational rehabilitation services' mean any services necessary to render a disabled person fit to engage in a remunerative occupation. Such terms shall not, however, be considered to require any State to provide all such services which may be necessary, but a State plan may be limited to training, or to training and any one or more of the other vocational rehabilitation services.

"SHORT TITLE

"SEC. 11. This act may be cited as the 'Vocational Rehabilitation Act'."

SEC. 2. Effective July 1, 1943, the act entitled "An act to provide for the vocational rehabilitation of disabled residents of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved February 23, 1929, as amended, is hereby repealed.

SEC. 3. (a) The act of June 2, 1920, as in effect prior to the enactment of this act, and plans and regulations approved and promulgated thereunder prior to the enactment of this act may, notwithstanding the amendment made by section 1 of this act, be considered to remain in effect with respect to the period ending 90 days after the date of the enactment of this act; and the plan formulated with the United States Employees' Compensation Commission pursuant to the act of February 23, 1929, as in effect prior to the enactment of this act, and regulations promulgated under such act of February 23, 1929, prior to the enactment of this act, shall remain in effect except to the extent they may be hereafter modified or superseded.

(b) If any State cannot fully comply with the conditions of the Vocational Rehabilitation Act, as amended by this act, on the date of the enactment of this act such State may secure the benefits of the Vocational Rehabilitation Act as so amended, until 60 days after the legislature of such State first meets in due course after such date of enactment or until the earliest effective date after such 60 days which could be given in such State to legislation passed within such 60 days to secure the benefits of this act, whichever is the later, if it complies therewith to the extent possible.

SEC. 4. This act may be cited as the "Vocational Rehabilitation Act Amendments of 1943."

Mr. BARDEN (interrupting the reading of the bill). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered as read, to be printed in the RECORD at this point, and to be subject to amendment at any place.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the section to which I have called attention, and which I hope will be stricken out of the bill by the adoption of the Rankin amendment, is totally unnecessary to the complete administration of the measure we have under consideration, if it becomes a law. It is entirely unnecessary to the legislation, put in, I am quite certain, for one purpose and one purpose only: To give to the Federal Security Administrator the power to take over, through the control of the purse strings, the control of the responsibility of rehabilitation of disabled veterans, which we conferred upon the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs in the act of March 24, 1943. If that were the purpose, the objectionable section was ingeniously conceived. That it would lend itself to such an unhappy manipulation cannot be denied.

How could that be accomplished? Very, very easily. The section which the Rankin amendment would strike out would, in effect, require the appropriation for the care of disabled veterans and their rehabilitation to be made, not to the Veterans' Administration, but to Administrator McNutt's organization. Then, in order for General Hines to get any part of that money for the purpose of compensating State agencies that he may avail himself of, it would be necessary for him to enter into some sort of an agreement with Administrator McNutt. In the making of that agreement the terms could be so broadly stated that the entire administrative responsibility for the enforcement of the act of March 24, 1943, might be delegated to the Office of Education, the objective so many have been so long seeking, the opposition of the veterans notwithstanding. It is not fear of the words themselves, the words which the Rankin amendment would strike out, that prompts this suggestion; it is fear of the use to which those words could be put by one in official position who might desire to achieve those ends.

Suppose there was somebody in higher authority, higher authority than either Paul McNutt or General Hines possess, and should intimate to the two of them that he would be pleased if they would sign such an agreement. Is there anyone within my hearing so naive as to think that such an agreement would not be forthcoming? The result? The rehabilitation of disabled veterans would be vested in the Office of Education, and the will of the Congress as expressed in the act of March 24 would have been defeated.

General Hines needs none of the authority which this offensive section would enact. Let us not so legislate that he might be compelled to sign an agreement which might render it impossible to do the job we all want him to do—to rehabilitate and retain our heroes, disabled returning veterans—to face successfully what will be, to them, at least, a very different competitive world from the one they went forth to defend with "all they had."

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEARHART. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. And is it not true that General Hines has stated that it is not necessary to have this provision? The veterans can have their civilian status if they are not disabled by a service-connected disability. He does not need this language. I was talking with General Hines only a few moments ago on the telephone.

Mr. GEARHART. That is entirely correct.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEARHART. In just a moment, after I have commented upon the point raised by the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

The act of March 24, the act which provides for the rehabilitation of disabled American veterans is complete in every detail, all comprehensive, so to speak. It confers upon General Hines all the authority he needs, all the jurisdiction he requires, to proceed to rehabilitate those veterans suffering from war-connected disabilities; so it is utterly unnecessary that any additional legislation, in this or any other bill, be enacted. General Hines has so expressed himself. That should be the end of it as far as we are concerned.

I am grateful to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts for reporting her conversation with General Hines to us. When he says that this legislation is not necessary, that should settle it.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GEARHART. I yield.

Mr. BARDEN. I am very much afraid the gentleman has overstepped the facts, because half of the money used for this purpose under this bill will be State money, and the very provision the gentleman seeks to strike out provides that if the State takes this money to be approved under this act a State plan for vocational rehabilitation shall make provisions for the facilities to be used by General Hines if he calls for them. We certainly would not have the right to force a State to do something for which there is no provision of law.

Mr. GEARHART. If the gentleman will read section 2 of the act of March 24, 1943, he will find that General Hines has all the authority in himself that Paul McNutt will have, when the instant bill becomes a law, to enter into contracts with the States.

Mr. BARDEN. The law the gentleman refers to states that he may use State and Federal facilities, but when we get to passing a law to make a State spend its own money without its consent it is going too far.

Mr. GEARHART. But where are we going to find constitutional authority to compel a sovereign State to do something its people do not want to do?

Mr. BARDEN. Through the appropriation of money and their acceptance of it.

Mr. GEARHART. That would constitute an agreement, the only way under whichever law we proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RANKIN: Page 5, line 7, after the word "duty", strike out down to and including all of line 9.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. J. LEROY JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, in reply to my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. REED], let me say that no man in or out of Congress has more sympathy for the disabled than I have, and especially for the blind.

The other day a question was asked, Who was the outstanding woman in America? My answer was, Helen Keller. I think her accomplishments will go down in history as probably the greatest achievements of any human being in America, considering the handicaps under which she labored.

I am not opposed to, and I have never opposed habilitating the disabled, but there is a vast difference between habilitating people who have never been able to do anything and rehabilitating veterans who are injured in war and who are compelled thereby to change occupations.

After the last war, through the Veterans' Administration, we put on one of the greatest rehabilitation programs for disabled veterans the world has ever seen. We propose to do the same thing again. But we do not propose to mix the disabled veterans who are to be rehabilitated with all of the vast multitude of people who have never been able to do anything and who have to be habilitated and make the veteran the common carrier to rake down the millions or billions of appropriations that will be necessary to carry on that vast program.

I know there has been criticism of the veterans' organizations. I have been chairman of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation for 13 years. I sat at the elbow of Royal Johnson, chairman of that committee, from the time it was organized until he went out of office and I want to say to you that if you do not pass this amendment and leave these veterans in the hands of the Veterans' Administration, as we have provided, you will not only stir up a row that will echo in every post of the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, and D. A. V. in America, but I can tell you this bill will not pass the Senate in its present form.

What we are asking you to do by this amendment is what we have asked from the very beginning, and that is not to interfere with the rehabilitation of the disabled veterans of this war. The man who is not disabled as a result of the war in later years will be a civilian, and this bill here would apply to him with these amendments adopted. This encroachment on the Veterans' Administration is not justified and I say it would be a terrible blunder, in my opinion, at this time.

Mr. J. LEROY JOHNSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. J. LEROY JOHNSON. I wish the gentleman would answer this question. Will the bill that the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART] referred to enable the Director of the Veterans' Administration to make these transactions with the various States to rehabilitate the veterans?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; and, also, with private institutions. We saw to that, I will say to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HINSHAW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HINSHAW. As this language in the present bill is admittedly surplusage, it can do no more than confuse the situation to leave it in.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; it will not hurt the bill a particle to eliminate it.

Mr. BARDEN. It will not injure his bill one particle to adopt these amendments.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. After the other war I was a member of the Committee on Education of the House and so was Mr. REED. Dr. Fess, of Ohio, was chairman of that committee.

Mr. RANKIN. Do not go into ancient history now. I do not want the gentleman to take up my time.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I want to confirm the gentleman's convictions.

Mr. RANKIN. All right. Go ahead.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. The question came up just as it has now. There was vocational training or rehabilitation for those injured in civil life and for the veterans. We brought in two bills and we passed two bills.

Mr. RANKIN. That is right.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. That is what I am in favor of today.

Mr. RANKIN. We separated them and that is what the veterans' organizations are trying to do now.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 5 additional minutes if he so desires.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. May I ask the gentleman if he can tell us this: The service organizations, the Legion, and the V. F. W. have examined the bill. What is their opinion?

Mr. RANKIN. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that Ted Ray, who now represents the American Legion in Washington, while our friend Mr. Sullivan is in the hospital, came to my office this morning, went over this bill carefully, and said, "By all means these amendments should be adopted and this language should be stricken out." There also came with him the legislative representative of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Mr. Homer Ketchum, with whom we are all acquainted, and Mr. Ketchum said that by all means these provisions should be stricken out. I read his letter into the RECORD a while ago. There came with him Mr. Millard Rice, representing the Disabled Veterans of the World War, who agreed with them thoroughly, and he gave me a copy of his letter to General Hines. I have just read you the reply of General Hines in which he said this language is not necessary.

Of course, General Hines was not going to come in and oppose any provision of the bill. He is a part of the administration. He did not want to get at loggerheads with Mr. McNutt, who is also another member of the administration. But everybody connected with the veterans' organizations who has gone through this fight all these years knows this provision should be taken out of the bill.

Mr. COMPTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. COMPTON. I want to know if any of these veterans' organizations appeared before the committee to object to this bill?

Mr. RANKIN. The veterans' organizations, when this matter was first considered, became very much disturbed about it. It was their impression that all these provisions that would include the service-connected disabled veterans of this war would be stricken out. Mr. Sullivan is in the hospital, and until a few days ago I was not aware that these provisions would include the very veterans that we have taken care of heretofore.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. I want to answer the question that the gentleman just asked.

Mr. RANKIN. Please do not take up my time.

Mr. DONDERO. It is a very singular thing that not until this afternoon did any member of the Committee on Education have any intimation whatever that the veterans were opposed to that provision which the gentleman seeks to strike out by amendment.

If they wanted it out, why did they not say so to the committee at the time that title I was stricken out?

Mr. RANKIN. They thought it was out.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Did the Committee on Education make any attempt to determine what the viewpoint of the veterans was on this point?

Mr. DONDERO. In answer to the gentleman from Ohio, may I say that representatives from the veterans' organizations were before our committee and asked that title I be stricken. We did that. Had it been suggested that this language was offensive to them, undoubtedly this would have been stricken out at the same time.

Mr. RANKIN. I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that they went before the committee and asked that that provision be stricken from the bill because it did just exactly what these provisions do. The thing you should have done was to have followed it up and wiped out these provisions. The veterans do not want these two provisions in this bill. If they are out the veterans will have no objection to the passage of the bill. But you are about to stir up a conflict of jurisdiction that is going to stir up a row from one end of the country to the other and, in my opinion, your bill will never become a law unless these two amendments are adopted.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. May I ask the chairman of the committee when this bill was printed and made public?

Mr. BARDEN. It was printed May 7, 1943.

Mr. RANKIN. I may say to the gentleman from Iowa that the legislative representative of the American Legion, who has been looking after this proposition, has been in the hospital for several weeks.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. I am very much in favor of all legislation pertaining to veterans being kept separate, but there is one thing in this bill that, listening to the debate, concerns me. Under the present veterans' legislation is it possible for one who is not service-connected to get rehabilitation?

Mr. RANKIN. Adopting these amendments would not affect non-service-connected veterans in the future because they would be civilians. It would not affect them at all.

I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is very strange that this bill has been printed for over a month and those of us on the committee never knew until this afternoon that the veterans' organizations were not in favor of certain provisions of the bill.

Mr. DONDERO. If the gentleman from Minnesota will yield, the bill bears the date of April 19, and then was committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on May 7, more than a month ago.

Mr. JUDD. I do not understand how this happened because, of course, we worked very closely with the veterans' organizations, or we thought we did. I do not know what their legislative representatives were doing when we had the bill out all this time.

But the point is, if there is objection to this provision, if there really is a ghost under the bed, which I cannot see but which others apparently fear, then I think it should be stricken out. I think it is rather unfortunate that this fight came here this afternoon. Because that provision was put in there, I know, only because we thought it gave more service to the veterans, not less; better, not worse. We wanted to be sure the States would allow their programs, for which they are contributing half the money, to be used by the disabled veterans if requested by the Veterans' Administrator. They probably would do that anyway, but we are saying here in effect to the States, "Unless you allow your State rehabilitation facilities to be used by these veterans when General Hines asks to use them, we will not give you the Federal money to help with your State programs." That was our way of making dead sure that the States in order to get the money from the Government would allow their facilities to be used by the veterans when General Hines asked them to do so. That was solely what we had in mind.

If the bill does not do that—and as the gentleman from Mississippi and I were discussing the other day, sometimes words do have meanings that were not in the mind of the speaker when he uttered them or in the mind of the writer when he wrote them—if this paragraph has the meaning he finds in it, then, I want it stricken out. But Mr. Chairman, I assure the Committee of the Whole House that there was never a thought of that sort in our minds. We thought we were providing better service for the veterans, not worse.

There is one further point I would make. I feel that in general it is far better for the veterans, once they have been examined and their disabilities determined and the treatment and rehabilitation that is necessary decided upon by the Veterans' Administration, not to set up a whole new set of facilities across the street from the ones the State already has, but to use those facilities and train the men there along with their fellow veterans whose disabilities are not service connected and with their fellow civilians.

For 20 years our doctors' offices have been crowded with men who were too long in veterans' hospitals. They became crippled psychologically worse than they were physically. It is almost impossible to get them to fit back into ordinary civilian life. After all, what we are fighting the war for now, it seems to me, is the privilege of being civilians the rest of our lives.

I assure the gentleman from Mississippi that our sole purpose was to try to guarantee better rehabilitation service, not poorer, for the disabled veterans.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUDD. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. I am not questioning the good intentions of the gentleman from Minnesota or the gentleman from North Carolina, but we have provided for every service that is necessary in connection with the service-connected disabled veterans through the Veterans' Administration, and we not only provide for using these State institutions, we can use them or we can use private institutions; but what we do not want is the conflict of jurisdiction. For that reason we are asking that it be stricken out.

Mr. JUDD. And may I reply to the gentleman, that even if the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs wanted to use a State's facilities, and the State board of vocational education was busy, or filled up with its own trainees, there is no way under Public Law 16 that I know by which you could compel the State to allow the Administrator to use those facilities. This bill would compel the State to make them available, because, in order to get Government money for its own program, the State would have to agree to that.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman has stated definitely the purpose of the committee to be helpful to the veterans, and that General Hines himself has stated that in this way he might be able to avoid duplication of facilities in many cases, and thereby promote economy and assist some rehabilitated disabled veterans.

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUDD. Yes.

Mr. COMPTON. Has the gentleman any fear in his heart about any of the States depriving any of the veterans, whether there was authority or not, from having any rehabilitation that they were able to give? Has the gentleman any fear that that would be done because there was some question of jurisdiction?

Mr. JUDD. No. I hope with all my heart that it would not be, but this would seem to be a guaranty.

Mr. GEARHART. I do not want to be understood as questioning the good intention of the gentleman's committee, in fact I want to record myself as believing just the opposite. The point is this: Would you have included this authority to train disabled American veterans with war-service-connected disability in the present bill if you knew that under Public Law 16 exactly the same authority has been conferred upon the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs.

Mr. JUDD. We would not have put it in, if we thought that covered it. We thought then, and I think now, that Public Law 16 might not adequately cover it. This was to make sure that when the Veterans' Administration wants to negotiate for facilities, the State would have to agree.

Mr. GEARHART. General Hines has precisely the same authority.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUDD. I yield gladly to the majority leader.

Mr. McCORMACK. Let me make a personal inquiry. The thought enters my mind to inquire of the gentleman, and we all realize that the committee intended to help the veterans, but there is one basic thought that I am possessed of and I would like to have the gentleman's reaction to it. Why should the States be compelled to take care of disabled veterans? Why is not that the duty and obligation of the Federal Government?

Mr. JUDD. It is not primarily a duty or obligation of the States except as has been said here. We were requiring that the States do it if needed, in order to help out the Veterans' Administration and the veterans. We have been at war a year and a half, and the Veterans' Administration has not yet been able to set up adequate facilities, and these boys are coming back, sometimes several hundred per week, and the idea was to take facilities already established and make them available to the Veterans' Administration now as an emergency—and later whenever the Administrator considered it advantageous. I believe they will generally get better training for return to civilian life and employment if trained along with civilians being trained by the States. When a man's papers are made out in the Veterans' Administration—where all authority would be kept—and the man is assigned for physical therapy or for special training in an occupation, he would get to use the same facilities, already in operation, established, and set up.

Mr. McCORMACK. Coming back to the question of responsibility, and that is what concerns me, our men are serving the United States of America, which, of course, is our Union—the Central Government. If they are disabled, why should not the Central Government assume the responsibility rather than pass it on to the States?

Mr. JUDD. It does under this legislation.

Mr. McCORMACK. Fifty percent under this bill.

Mr. JUDD. Oh, no. Under section 3, under the title "Payments to the States," it reads:

> The Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State * * * necessary expenditures the sum of amounts he determines to be—
> (1) * * * (exclusive of administrative expense) for vocational rehabilitation services provided disabled veterans.

That covers the total cost for veterans.

Subsections (2) and (3) provide one-half of necessary expenditures for rehabilitation services for other individuals. Under subsection 1, if the States train the war-connected disabled veterans at the request of the Veterans' Administrator, then the Government shall reimburse the States in toto for the cost of such training.

Mr. McCORMACK. All right, but why should not the full responsibility be under the Federal Government?

Mr. JUDD. It is; it merely engages and pays for the use of State facilities.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUDD. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. I want to say to the gentleman from Minnesota that the gentleman from Massachusetts has put his finger on the spot. The Veterans' Administration is authorized to use these State institutions; every State college, and private institution, and these boys are not fighting for the State of Minnesota or for Michigan or for Massachusetts or for Mississippi. They are fighting for the whole United States, and the Veterans' Administration assumes this entire responsibility and, therefore, it is unnecessary to put these service-connected disabled veterans under the provisions here which would involve not only mixing them with the people you are training, and to rehabilitate for the first time, but at the same time unload a part of that responsibility on State facilities. As I have said, this thing is unnecessary; it hampers the bill instead of helping it.

Mr. JUDD. Would the gentleman make the disabled men now coming home wait until whole new facilities can be set up by the Government before they receive training? However, if this language says what the gentleman from Mississippi thinks it says, I am for striking it out. I only wish we had had the information some time ago, for then it would not have been here.

Mr. RANKIN. On that date we were speaking of awhile ago, we were wrong and the gentleman was right about the time it was reported; but, as I said, the head of the American Legion in Washington was in the hospital and it was not called to our attention.

Mr. JUDD. Were the heads of the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the Disabled Veterans also in the hospital?

Mr. RANKIN. They had written some letters, but in the rush of correspondence mine had been misplaced, but it was called to my attention only yesterday, and for that reason I brought it to the attention of the House.

Mr. JUDD. The gentleman from Mississippi will agree, I am sure, that it was, after all, somewhat unfortunate that it came before the committee this afternoon for the first time?

Mr. RANKIN. If I had known that this language had not been stricken out at the time they struck out title I, I certainly would have appealed to the committee.

Mr. JUDD. And it would have been stricken out, without question.

Mr. MURPHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUDD. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MURPHY. Is it not true that there was testimony before the committee that the veterans themselves or their agencies are now using State facilities, existing facilities, and that this was only to avoid the question of duplicating facilities?

Mr. JUDD. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has again expired.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that this discussion has reached the point it has. There has been considerable fog turned loose in this House. The Rehabilitation Service has enough to do. They have a tremendous job and more than they can attend to now. The Veterans' Administration will have its problems. The Veterans' Administration intends to use every single one of these facilities and have so declared. They have already been over with 400 service-connected veterans to contact the Rehabilitation Service, to do the rehabilitation. Now, there is a reason for that, and I wish the Members would listen to this. Here is the report of the rehabilitation work that was done after the last war which, on account of duplication, lack of facilities, and setting up new facilities cost this Government $5,000 each. That is General Hines' statement. We knew that. Now, they have been rehabilitating, with this organization, for less than $300. Now, just listen to what we are quarreling about. In the act to which the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] refers—by the way, I wish we would stop and think, that the service-connected disabled constitute only about 10 percent of the veterans needing rehabilitation. We cannot legislate for 10 percent and walk off and leave 90 percent.

In the act to which the gentleman refers they make this reference:

> Utilize this or any other governmental agency such as those maintained by joint and Federal contribution.

I am not so sure that we have the right to provide for the expenditure of State money in that way. I am not so sure of that. We were not so sure when we wrote this bill. But we were sure of one thing, and that was that we wanted the veterans to have the best possible service. So what did we do? We said they have put language in Public 16 to provide for the use of this Federal and State contribution program—and they were referring to this rehabilitation program—they put this in the bill, and I wish we could separate all other impressions and get this clear—we put into H. R. 2536 a section known as the State plan, section 2, "to be approvable under this act a State plan for vocational rehabilitation shall"—one of the few things we said to the State they shall do. Now, what is it they shall do? They shall provide that vocational rehabilitation provided under the State plan shall be available under such rules and regulations as the administrator shall prescribe, to any civil employee of the United States, and so forth, and shall be available to any disabled veterans certified pursuant to section 3 (a) 1, which says that they shall take care of any veteran which the Veterans' Administration sends down and certifies that he is entitled to it and makes an agreement as provided in this law for him to be taken care of. Now, that is all there is in it. I am so sure that the American Legion would run like shot cats from any audience of soldiers in America if somebody were to get up and clothe them with responsibility for striking out this provision that we put into this bill. What on earth can they be thinking about?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. I yield briefly.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman says that the law which came out of the World War Veterans' Committee only affects 10 percent of the veterans. That means service-connected disabled veterans. The non-service-connected veterans are covered under the rest of this bill as civilians. But this is the provision that we object to, reaching out and seizing control or seizing jurisdiction of the service-connected disabled veterans that are taken care of in that bill.

Mr. BARDEN. I challenge the gentleman's statement. I challenge the statement of any man on this floor who says there is a word that reaches out and takes jurisdiction. The only reaching done was in Public, No. 16, when they reached out and said they were going to spend State and Federal money. The gentleman from Mississippi would be as helpless as a baby to spend a dollar of Mississippi's money under his act, without the consent of the State of Mississippi. Therefore, to correct a very apparent error in the act to which the gentleman refers—Public, No. 16—we put in the State plan, that a State in submitting its plan shall make provision to take care of any service-connected veteran that General Hines sends down and certifies and orders taken care of and makes agreements to pay, and so forth. You cannot make anything else out of this, and I challenge any statement by any Member and I challenge him to prove it, that there is a word in this bill that attempts to take any jurisdiction of any service-connected veteran.

Did they previously make an arrangement that they did not make under that act? I am not a constitutional lawyer. There seems to be about 400 in the House, but I am not one of them. I do say that the State, when it is putting its money in, should have control. I do not think the gentleman could say with one stroke you are going to spend State money.

It is not going to ruin that program. It is not going to hurt the veterans; it is going to put the States in a position where they can say whether or not they want to take care of these men.

I want it distinctly understood where the responsibility for striking out this language is, if it is stricken out; I want it known where the responsibility rests. I want no part of it, and I do not take any other interpretation from any man who may be downtown, and I would suggest to them, the American Legion representatives, and they have been up to my office and talked with me. I never got any impression from them that they were not satisfied with this bill, or with this section. I think there has been some confusion here or there.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. I yield.

Mr. GEARHART. Veterans' organizations have done everything in their power, not in the last few days as some people have seemed to understand, but for a period of 2 years, and they have been going to the Committee on Education and to the World War Veterans' Committee.

Mr. BARDEN. Will the gentleman stick to the matter under discussion. I know what they have done and what they have not done, and that the Legion representatives, the only two I know, Mr. Sullivan and Mr. Stubblefield, have not raised this issue with me—and to do so at this time strikes me as being ill-timed and ill-considered.

Mr. GEARHART. Is it not true that for 2 years the representatives of the veterans' organizations have come to your committee, every one of them, and told you they wanted you to drop all of this education to disabled veterans: that the veterans did not want this?

Mr. BARDEN. Let me say this: Right now this Congress, and you and I have been a part of it, we have had the responsibility for looking after this program for the veterans. This Congress, when the session started this year, did not have before it any such legislation; the Veterans' Committee did not make a move until the latter part of last year. The veterans' bill to take care of the 10 percent disabled has been passed. That was to take care of the disabled, and it is this program, the rehabilitation program, that is saving the veterans today.

Mr. GEARHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. It is the administration of this program.

Mr. GEARHART. How has this legislation saved the disabled, when it has not even been enacted, and when the veterans' bill is already the law and was signed by the President on March 24, 1943?

Mr. BARDEN. This bill amends the basic act. The disabled have been rehabilitated and trained for the last several months under the State-Federal rehabilitation program. Does not the gentleman know that there are a lot of veterans now who are being trained under the State-Federal program, where the States are paying for the training, and where there is no provision for reimbursement?

Mr. RANKIN. Not those with service disabilities.

Mr. BARDEN. Absolutely; and the record will support this statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last paragraph.

Mr. Chairman, the House knows that the World War Veterans Committee has been working upon rehabilitation for some months and finally secured the passage of legislation.

I would like to read the testimony of Millard Rice, given in February 1943. This is in response to a question by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES], in which he said:

> I believe that the movement was started by those who want to bring about the process of levelization in this country, taking off the hill tops and filling in the valleys; and the first vulnerable point would be the leveling of the benefits allowed to veterans as compared to other needy citizens purely on the basis of need.
> One of the processes of levelization is between the handicapped disabled veterans and the handicapped disabled civilians, leveling them off through the Federal Security Administration. The second is the levelization through the entire country.

Then Mr. Rice goes on to say that it has to be separate and apart.

I have just talked to General Hines and he told me that he does not need this legislation for his purpose.

I would like to point out to the committee that if the Veterans' Administration has to go to the Social Security Administration for its appropriation there will be a great deal of delay in the training of veterans. Going back to World War No. 1, at the time the rehabilitation program was established, the rehabilitation of veterans was handled through vocational training. I was visiting with the disabled veterans at that time. In the hospitals it was difficult to help a man to take that training; there was a great deal of delay because you had the Veterans' Administration to deal with, the War Risk Insurance, and you had also a Vocational Training Bureau. There was a great deal of delay in organization and securing appropriations. Only 10 percent of the disabled veterans will come under the social-security program. The other 90 percent of disabled veterans who are serving their country, will go back to their civilian status and will be taken care of in that way. I can see no need for this. I shall support the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

I should like to compliment the gentleman from North Carolina on the fine job he and the members of his committee are doing in this rehabilitation work. It is greatly needed and very necessary, but we do not want this provision for the service-connected veterans in the bill. This is no time to take away from the Veterans' Administration any of its prerogatives. This is the first one. If this succeeds others will follow and you will gradually weaken that Administration so that the World War veterans will be classed with other civilians, and not veterans.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. The reference the gentlewoman made a moment ago to the conversation she had with General Hines, as I understood it, was to the effect that General Hines said they did not need the provisions we propose to strike out of the bill.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. He said he was not offering objections but he did not need them to carry on his work; he was perfectly satisfied. He was not opposing the committee and I can see why he would not want to, but he does not need that provision in the bill.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. JENSEN. If this amendment is passed is there any question in the gentlewoman's mind but what the Congress will pass all the legislation necessary to take care of veterans?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am positive of that. We have such a law on the statute books at the present time for the service-connected cases.

Mr. JENSEN. And we will give that power to the Veterans' Administration where it justly belongs.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. And, of course, the veterans know that. It seems to me this is a very important amendment.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. JUDD. I just wanted to read from another part of the bill to confirm a thing which has been said several times, namely, that the Committee on Education inserted these provisions only because it believed it will make sure the facilities of the States would be available for veterans when requested. I refer to section 4, on page 9, which reads:

> Whenever the Administrator, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State board, finds that in the administration of the plan there is—
> Omitting (1)—
> A failure to afford reasonable cooperation with other Federal and State agencies providing vocational rehabilitation or similar services, the Administrator shall notify such State board that further payments will not be made to the State under this act until he is satisfied that there will no longer be any such failure.

I quote that merely as corroboration of the point we are trying to make that these services would have to be rendered to the Veterans' Administration by the States if requested by the former.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. He has power to set up the machinery under the bill the Congress has already passed, and that has become law.

Mr. JUDD. He is not actually carrying on this rehabilitation program as yet.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. He has administered veterans' rehabilitation in the past.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, one of the previous speakers said it would be wise to let the men speak for themselves. I happen to be a service-connected disabled veteran, and speaking for my post, the World War Amputation Post in New York City, I wish to express these thoughts: That they want to be left alone where they are because they are in very happy surroundings. It is true that after the last war, when the Veterans' Committee was formed to administer to the veterans of the last war, when the Veterans' Administration tried to make pocketbook makers out of motormen and jewelers out of shoemakers, they nade plenty of mistakes because they were new and they were young; but as they went along they saw the plight of the disabled veteran.

They listened to his needs and they served every interest which he desired.

Although these various veterans' organizations have not appeared before the committee in its consideration of this bill, the hour is not too late. This Congress has, since the last war, given ear to all the veterans' organizations in the legislation which they have sought, and surely now, even at this last hour, you must have heard, as I have, that the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the World War Disabled American Veterans, do not want this. I ask you in their name, I ask you as a rehabilitated disabled veteran, to listen to them and to favor the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to see if we cannot arrive at a limitation of time. I believe we have overemphasized things a little here, that there is not half so much danger as some seem to think.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment close within 20 minutes.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I modify my request and ask that all debate on the pending amendment close in 30 minutes.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, there are 10 Members standing who want time. The House gladly listened to the chairman of the committee and gave him an additional 5 minutes, and have listened to all others for 5 minutes. We can well afford to spend an hour on this subject because it is an important amendment to the veterans and the men of this war. I object to anything less than 5 minutes to each Member who wishes time on this amendment.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my request.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the only reason I come to the rostrum on this occasion is, as I stated previously, that I have heard from Pennsylvania, and on no occasion did I hear any protest against the provisions of this bill.

When the legislative representative of the American Legion was before our committee, and I refer to Mr. Sullivan, I took it upon myself to make sure that Mr. Sullivan had every opportunity so that he could amplify his remarks, and I asked the committee to agree that he might do so in writing at a later date.

The first I heard of any objection to this particular provision covered by the pending amendment was this afternoon. At the present time the Veterans' Administration is using the existing facilities in the several States. General Hines was before our committee and other representatives, and the intent and purport of the testimony of the representatives of the service organizations was to request that we strike out title I. Title I was stricken out. The provision now under discussion was put in the bill merely for the purpose of protecting the veterans so that there would be some compulsion instead of merely a moral responsibility on the States to make existing facilities available for training veterans instead of the necessity of having duplications.

If, however, the veterans feel that they would prefer to have General Hines use moral persuasion rather than the Federal Government use financial persuasion, that is, withholding it in order to get the use of existing facilities, I am perfectly agreeable. If it will help remove any possibility of this bill not becoming law at the earliest possible date, I would agree to the amendments although I do not see how the language in any way can hurt the veterans.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words.

Mr. Chairman, there is one thing that every veteran of the World War will agree to and that is that the hospitalization, the treatment, the rehabilitation of men who are disabled during a period of war is absolutely the responsibility of the Federal Government and until they are completely rehabilitated that responsibility should not be spread over the 48 different States. It has been said that under this program the Director of Veterans' Affairs would certify to the State of Connecticut in regard to a Connecticut veteran that John Smith has received the maximum benefit of hospitalization and is now eligible for vocational training. "We turn him over to you in competition with those who have suffered industrial accidents and with others who may need vocational training," and under the direction of the State supervisor he would receive that training. The Federal Government for the time being drops him until such time as his training is completed. If he still has a disability which has not been compensated by his training he may or may not be later picked up by the Veterans' Administration. We do not want that kind of a situation.

It was the understanding of the veterans' organizations, and I talked with their representatives, that when title I was stricken out of the original bill all reference to the service-connected disabled veteran was removed from this bill. I think there is some confusion in our thinking when we use the word "veteran." The man who serves in this war and who will be a veteran at the end of this war, and who later suffers an industrial accident will, of course, be entitled to the benefits of this act and will receive all such benefits. But so far as the man who is suffering from a service-connected disability is concerned the Federal Government must assume that responsibility.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. When General Hines appeared before our committee I asked him this question:

General, why should the Committee on Education be dealing with veterans' affairs?

He answered:

They will not be if this bill passes. The Veterans' Administration will be handling it. We will be using some of their facilities.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Yes; they will be using some of their facilities. Which is as it should be providing that control is maintained by the Veterans' Administration and not the State.

Mr. DONDERO. I simply quote that to show that in committee we raised the question why we should be dealing with Veterans' Administration affairs.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. If the question could be put to the House now the members of the committee, or many of them, and the majority of the Members of the House would strike this section out so that there would be no question about it.

Mr. HINSHAW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HINSHAW. In view of the fact that everyone agrees that if this is going to in any way conflict with the Veterans' Administration operation of the rehabilitation program, I see no reason why the committee should not accept the amendment without any further argument.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I wish the members of that committee would accept the Rankin amendment. If the committee would accept it, there could be no question about it later.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. That is the point I want to bring out. The adoption of my amendment will not cripple this bill in any way whatsoever. The non-service-connected veteran who will later come in as a civilian may take advantage of it.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Absolutely.

Mr. RANKIN. It will eliminate a conflict that is going to be confusing, dangerous, and damaging to the service-connected disabled veteran.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 3 minutes on another subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, it is unfortunate that this controversy has come up in connection with this bill because we were all quite happy at having this bill before us, as it deals with an important subject, a subject that is very close to my heart. I refer to the rehabilitation of men who suffer from disability, whether it is from war or from an industrial accident.

Earlier in the day reference was made to the amount of money that might be needed. I hope this program can be permitted to grow just as rapidly as it is possible to obtain trained personnel, and no more rapidly than that, because if we do not get the right kind of personnel to handle and carry into effect this legislation we might do a great deal of harm to not only the disabled veterans but to disabled civilians. I hope that when this war comes to an end and the Veterans' Administration writes its regulations to carry into effect the acts we pass, there will be one expression stricken from their regulations and that is the expression "permanently and totally disabled." I do not want to see the Veterans' Administration or any other agency of the Government ever to say to a man, even though it might possibly be true, and to have him declared on the records of the Federal Government, that he is permanently and totally disabled, because, unfortunately, there are thousands who are so psychologically constituted that they believe it. They believe that because the Veterans' Administration has formally declared them permanently and totally disabled they are on the shelf for the rest of their life, and it is tragedy when a man does accept that interpretation.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. That provision was never written into any veterans' law until after the First World War, when it was written into the Sweet bill in 1921 before the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation was created.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I wish that could be dropped from all regulations.

In closing, I want to express this additional thought, and it does not apply to any member of this committee. There are those in Washington who would like to see the care and treatment of the veterans of World War No. 1 and World War No. 2 made a part of the social-security program. There are State directors of this rehabilitation program who would like by hook or by crook to bring under their control the training of disabled veterans. Why? Because they know that when they go to their legislatures if they are able to say that part of the money they are asking for is going to be used to train men who were incapacitated in the war, they know that they will get their appropriations much more easily than they would if this language were not in the bill. So I hope that to remove all doubt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi will be adopted.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, the committee has, of course, presented its views. This piece of legislation is entirely too important to be misconstrued. The committee does not now think the bill will be any better if these amendments are adopted. We think the boys now on the battlefields and the veterans' organizations will be injured more than the bill. But in the interest of conserving the time of the House, and in order to get this program going throughout the country, I have conferred with the minority members and many of the other members of the committee and their opinion is that if we are going to be misunderstood and the Washington representatives of the American Legion and the other veterans' organizations want to assume the full responsibility for the removal of this language, I should submit a unanimous-consent request that the provisions referred to be stricken in accordance with the amendments offered. It will not hurt the bill.

I believe the gentleman from Mississippi proposes to offer another amendment. I ask unanimous consent that these amendments may be read in order that we may strike the exact language. I think we can accept them by unanimous consent and avoid a lot of trouble and misunderstanding over what the chairman thinks is a very, very excellent piece of legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendments of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 1 offered by Mr. RANKIN: On page 5, line 7, after the word "duty", strike out down to and including all of line 9.

Amendment No. 2 offered by Mr. RANKIN: On page 6, beginning with the word "for", in line 4, strike out down to and including line 9.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that these two amendments be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the two amendments which have been reported by the Clerk as offered by the gentleman from Mississippi be adopted. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, if these two amendments are adopted then will we have met the objections of the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and the Disabled American Veterans, and will we also have met the objections of the members of the House Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation?

Mr. RANKIN. That is correct.

Mr. BARDEN. If the gentleman is asking me, I say not as presented to the committee; and I want it distinctly understood, and the Committee on Education wants it distinctly understood, that these organization representatives must assume full responsibility for these amendments. We do not cherish any part of it.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I said it would meet the objections raised by the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the American Legion, the Disabled American Veterans, and the members of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation of the House. Is not that correct?

Mr. BARDEN. I will let the gentleman assume that.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi is to cut out all of paragraph 1 on page 6 except a line and a half. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be modified to strike out the entire paragraph, and that the numbers of the succeeding paragraph be corrected.

Mr. RANKIN. That will be all right, Mr. Chairman; beginning with line 3, strike out all of lines 3 to 9, inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina that the two amendments submitted by the gentleman from Mississippi be adopted?

There was no objection.

So the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BARDEN: On page 10, line 12, after the words "agreements with", insert the words "two or more."

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, in this paragraph we were dealing with agreements with two or more State boards. The printer simply left out the words "two or more." This amendment is to correct that error.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WILLEY: On page 10, line 2, strike out the comma and insert in lieu thereof a semicolon and the word "or."

After line 2 of page 10 insert the following:

"(3) A denial of vocational rehabilitation on account of race, creed, or color."

On page 10, line 5, after "failure", insert "or denial."

Mr. WILLEY. Mr. Chairman, this particular amendment is offered for insertion under section 4, after line 2, page 10, of the bill, H. R. 2536, now under consideration by the House. The amendment is to strike out the comma where it appears after the word "services" and at the end of line 2, page 10, of the bill to insert in lieu thereof a semicolon and the word "or", and after said line 2, to insert the following:

(3) A denial of vocational rehabilitation on account of race, creed, or color.

Section 2 of the bill provides that there shall be a State plan for vocational rehabilitation approved by the Administrator.

Section 4 of the bill provides that if the Administrator should find that certain requirements of said plan have not been met by the State affected and if he is not satisfied that there will no longer be any such failure that said Administrator shall make no further certification to the Secretary of the Treasury and thus the State affected would be denied Federal funds. Part 1 of section 4 mentions a failure to comply substantially with any provision required by section 2 to be included in the State plan for vocational rehabilitation, which must be approved by Federal authority, or any restriction on expenditures imposed in conflict with section 2.

Part 2 of section 4 refers to a failure to afford reasonable cooperation with other Federal and State agencies providing vocational rehabilitation or similar services. The addition of part 3 provided by this amendment simply means that in the operation under State plans as federally approved that it must be shown there has been no denial of vocational rehabilitation on account of race, creed, or color.

The other part of this amendment is to insert in line 5 on page 10 of the bill, after the word "failure", being the last word in said line, the words "or denial." The present line means that the Administrator will notify a State board that further payments to the State under this act will not be made if there is a failure to comply with the terms of the act. This part of the amendment simply means that there must be no failure to comply with the terms of the act and no denial of the benefits of vocational rehabilitation on account of race, creed, or color.

Reviewing some of the legislation passed in recent years, it is found that provisions having a similar effect to the amendment proposed here have been inserted in a number of measures, of which the following are examples:

Fifty-third Statutes 855, Civil Aeronautics Act, 1938: "Provided, That in the administration of this act, none of the benefits of training or programs shall be denied on account of race, creed, or color."

Public Law 163, Seventy-fifth Congress, approved June 28, 1937, Civilian Conservation Corps, section 8: "Provided, That the Director may exclude from enrollment such classes of persons as he may consider detrimental to the well-being or welfare of the Corps; except that no person shall be excluded on account of race, color, or creed."

Selective service law, Public Law No. 783, approved December 20, 1941, section 4 (a): "Provided, That in the selection and training of men under this act, there shall be no discrimination against any person on account of race or color."

Thus, it appears by various laws enacted by the Congress in recent years that there is ample precedent for the inclusion of the words which are offered to be added to the pending bill by this amendment.

Also, there is no desire or attempt here to offer this amendment from the floor to the exclusion of committee consideration. The simple fact is the matter was not suggested until after the bill had been reported. It would have been more satisfactory for us to bring this question to the attention of the committee for action by its membership and before the bill had been finally reported out.

It is suggested that the reasons which impelled the Congress to insert the quoted language in the various measures which are here cited are just as urgent today as they were when Congress acted upon these other measures.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I regret very much that that amendment has even been offered. This program has been running for 23 years. There has never been the slightest inference of any discrimination. When this man, Ed Brown, who is some kind of a lobbyist around here, and who has been discussed on this floor before, came to me with that suggestion I said to him, "Why raise the issue, why do you want to render that disservice?" I was very anxious because I have a great deal of interest in the subject matter which this attempts to deal with. I led the fight in the State of North Carolina to increase the appropriation for colored schools, and I am not going to permit any discrimination. I went to the trouble of finding out some figures. If there is any discrimination, it is the other way. In the District of Columbia 25 percent of the rehabilitation cases are of colored people. In South Carolina it is 23.8 percent. So, if there is any discrimination, I am sure it is the other way, and I am afraid that this amendment will render a disservice if it is agreed to. There has never been the slightest controversy. The issue has never been raised. I certainly hope in this one grand program, that has been operated so economically and so efficiently, that there will be no interference of that kind. When Brown was discussing this he told me that he had not had one single complaint and had not heard one complaint about this department. Why raise the issue? It does not seem appropriate.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Of course, this amendment would just kill the bill. If the gentleman wants to destroy this legislation, that is the way to do it. Let me say to the gentleman from Delaware—and I am sure if the people of Delaware understood the matter they would see it in this light—in one of the meetings we had a great row over building hospitals for colored veterans, and the two men that led the fighting and held the committee in session until 2 o'clock in the morning were Dick Wilson from South Carolina and your humble servant. The men from the other sections of the country ridiculed us, but we stood with them until we got that settled.

Mr. BARDEN. I just hope that we will not carry this argument along, but let us vote on this and get through with the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Delaware.

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I rise to congratulate the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], chairman of the House Veterans Affairs Committee, for his success and alertness in looking out after the wishes of the veterans' organizations of the country. As I understand it, the gentleman from Mississippi has contended today that various service organizations have asked that they be excluded altogether from the terms of this bill. I understand that they prefer to be treated separately and to have their own program, and that that is what the committee agreed upon a few moments ago.

Whether this is wise or unwise, it seems to represent the wishes of some veterans in my State.

I do want to say to the chairman of the Committee on Education, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN] that I am strongly for his bill, but that I have received communications from ex-service groups in Arizona asking to have their program of rehabilitation kept separate and apart from this general rehabilitation legislation. I will take only a moment of your time here to indicate to the membership, as I have already indicated privately to the chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, that such is a request I have received from Arizona.

While I am on my feet I want to say that the rehabilitation program, which has been carried out so effectively throughout the entire country under its present auspices, has been very successfully done in Arizona. Even some in Arizona who are blind in sight have been trained to do war work in airplane factories and in other war plants in a most satisfactory and efficient manner. These blind and formerly helpless citizens are now doing their share and have become a real asset to their community and Nation.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I arise in support of this bill, H. R. 2536. I am not now a member of the Committee on Education. I have not heard anyone say how many persons will be rehabilitated annually under this bill if adopted.

Mr. BARDEN. I might say to the gentleman, if he is directing the question to me, at the present time I understand there are now about 75,000 cases being handled by the States and the Veterans' Administration. How much more that will be I am unable to say. I ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] how many cases are being handled?

Mr. DONDERO. Three hundred and thirty thousand since this program was inaugurated in 1920.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. As I have understood you gentlemen, there have been handled about 330,000 cases under this program, and there are about 75,000 now being handled by the States and the Veterans' Administration. What has been the average cost per case?

Mr. BARDEN. It has been less than $300, and in handling that number of people it might be interesting to say that in this entire Department in Washington there are only 22 employees.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. That is a very fine record of economy and efficiency. Have these 330,000 people been rehabilitated under this program?

Mr. DONDERO. As I stated, there have been 330,000. Over 200,000 have been rehabilitated.

Mr. LANHAM. Approximately 175,000 of those have been put back into gainful occupation.

Mr. DONDERO. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. This bill proposes to amend the act providing for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation for persons disabled in industry or otherwise and their return to civil employment, approved June 2, 1920. At that time, I was a member of the Committee on Education of the House, and so was Mr. REED who has spoken so ably and eloquently in behalf of this program today. Dr. Simeon D. Fess, of Ohio, was chairman of the committee. The Republicans had control of the House and a majority of the Committee on Education.

Our committee, after extensive hearings, reported favorably to the House a bill which became the act of June 2, 1920. This measure met with serious opposition in the House. Many Members of the House, especially from Virginia and other Southern States, took the position that Congress had no power under the Constitution to pass such an act and this act would invade the rights of the States. This view was ably presented by one of Virginia's great constitutional lawyers and one of the very ablest Members of the House. It was my pleasure and good fortune to urge that it was constitutional and our Federal Government should enter upon this policy to reclaim from the human scrap heap the physically disabled and make them self-supporting citizens. It is very gratifying to me to know that at least 175,000 of the lame, the halt, the blind, and the other physically handicapped have been rehabilitated and put into gainful occupations. It is one of the finest, noblest, best, and most humane policies ever adopted by the Federal Government. I strongly favor this bill in the hope that through the years even a greater number may be rehabilitated and become happy, prosperous, and self-sustaining citizens.

After World War No. 1 the question came up of providing vocational and other training for the rehabilitation of disabled veterans of that war. There were some who at that time, as they have today, insisted that the veterans disabled in service and persons disabled in industry should be trained under the same program; that is, the Federal Government cooperate with the States—contributing for that purpose. Many of us on the Committee on Education in the House took the position that the rehabilitation of veterans was a program solely for the Federal Government. They were injured or lost their health while serving the Nation as a whole, and therefore it was a matter to be handled solely and only by the Nation as a whole, and their rehabilitation should not depend upon the action of any individual State or community. It was the Nation's program, and our Committee on Education in the House brought out a bill for the rehabilitation of disabled veterans of World War No. 1, and another bill which became the act of June 2, 1920, for the rehabilitation of those who received their injuries or disabilities in civilian life and not in the armed service. Both of these measures were adopted by the Congress, and this measure merely amends the act of June 2, 1920.

The act of March 1943 provides rehabilitation for veterans who are disabled in the service of our country in World War No. 2. This bill, H. R. 2536, includes those disabled in the armed service as well as those disabled in civilian life. I did not believe after World War No. 1 that the veterans and those injured in civil life should be rehabilitated under the same program, and I am still of that same opinion, and in this I am in accord with the position of the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Disabled American Veterans' organization, the chairman and other members of the Veterans' Committee of the House, and the various veterans who have expressed similar views here today. I want the veterans rehabilitated under the act we passed in March 1943, and if that requires any amendment to give complete and adequate service to our disabled veterans of World War No. 2, I know the Committee on Veterans' Affairs of the House will bring out such amendments and Congress will adopt them and I therefore favor the amendments that have been offered by Mr. RANKIN, chairman of the Veterans' Committee of the House, striking certain sections of the bill on pages 5 and 6.

I wish to say, in my opinion, that the members of the Committee on Education that brought this bill out and included the veterans had but one purpose and that is to be helpful to the veterans and, I am sure, that if there had been presented to the Committee on Education of the House the objections of the veterans' organizations, and the facts that have been presented here today, the Committee on Education would have stricken those portions from the bill. Mr. BARDEN, Mr. DONDERO and other members of the committee had agreed to these amendments.

It is quite clear there has been no desire on their part except to do the very best thing to help the veterans in every way possible. I am gratified to see this fine spirit of cooperation. The Vocational Training Act for the veterans of World War No. 1 was likewise a decided success. Under that program thousands and thousands of disabled veterans were rehabilitated. Mr. Fay, a Member of this House, who was disabled in World War No. 1, was trained under that program and made a very eloquent plea here today for the bill. That program developed a great many able lawyers, physicians, surgeons, dentists, machinists, mechanics, farmers, and scores of others in useful professions and occupations.

After the present war there will be hundreds of thousands of disabled men and women who have heroically defended our country. We must improve this training so that we may rehabilitate every one of these disabled veterans whose rehabilitation and vocational training is feasible. The blind can be made to see and the lame and halt can be made to walk again so far as earning power and usefulness are concerned. The scrap heap will be large enough and we can render no greater service than rehabilitate and reclaim each and every one of these whose rehabilitation is feasible.

With the adoption of the Rankin amendments I can and do give to this measure my wholehearted support and, unlike in 1920, I doubt if there will be a vote against it.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BARDEN: On page 6, line 18, strike out all of line 18, down to and including the figure 1 in line 19.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I find by reading the bill after the adoption of an amendment a few minutes ago, there should have been stricken another line which was referred to in that amendment. It is beginning on line 18, the parenthesis "other than those with respect to whom payments are made under paragraph (1)."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I take this time in order to ask one or two questions with reference to this bill. Do I understand that under the provisions of this bill provision is made for increasing the Federal contribution to the State administrative costs of this rehabilitation program?

Mr. BARDEN. That is the only possible increase covered in this bill which the committee thought was justified by other circumstances.

Mr. KEEFE. My interest in this proposition lies in the fact that I conceive it to be the function of the Federal Government to provide the funds for the administration in the States of this program which is essentially a Federal program, although administered locally in the States. I want to be certain that in this bill, which I have not had time to read carefully, provision is made to take care of the administrative expenses out of Federal grants.

Mr. BARDEN. That is right.

Mr. KEEFE. That is correct; is it not?

Mr. BARDEN. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. KEEFE. Can the gentleman say how much it is anticipated this program will cost?

Mr. BARDEN. That has been discussed previously, but the history of it has been that it has been costing approximately $6,000,000; $3,000,000 for the States and $3,000,000 for the Federal Government. It is on the increase now, and the Administrator makes a fairly conservative estimate. He thinks that the estimate, under this act, if it is adopted right away, might reach approximately $12,000,000. That is, $6,000,000 for each. But at the peak, when those injured in industry and the soldiers out of the Army begin to come in, he anticipates it might reach as high as $22,000,000 a year.

Mr. KEEFE. Is it anticipated that this legislation will be passed so as to enable the Administrator to put this request before the Appropriations Committee to make it effective in the next fiscal year?

Mr. BARDEN. We are hoping to. You see, the program is operating now.

Mr. KEEFE. Oh, I understand that.

Mr. BARDEN. We are trying to get this done as quickly as possible.

Mr. KEEFE. The reason I am interested is because the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of which I happen to be a member will have charge of this particular appropriation, and I am interested to see to it that proper authority is given so that this expanded program may get into operation at the very earliest date.

I want to say to the gentleman that as far as my State is concerned I think it will be conceded, as indicated in the report, that it has been in the forefront for years in the matter of handling this particular phase of the rehabilitation of people who have been injured, who have been taken out as the result of industrial or other accidents. I want to say that the State supervisor of vocational rehabilitation representing my State has very unequivocally indicated that it has the complete support of the people of Wisconsin. I am glad to say that I shall vote for this bill in its present form.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

The pro forma amendments were withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, if there are no further amendments, the Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GORE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 2536, and, pursuant to House Resolution 247, reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 1258. An act to name certain locks in the St. Marys River at the falls, Michigan.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2714) entitled "An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943, and for prior fiscal years, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the House amendment to the Senate amendment numbered 5 to said bill, with an amendment as follows:

At the end of the matter inserted by the House amendment, after "Services", insert ", or the Federal Bureau of Investigation."

The message also announced that the Senate further insists upon its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 5 as amended, and Senate amendments numbered 60 and 61 to said bill, asks a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. GLASS, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. NYE, and Mr. LODGE to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

NAVY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL FOR 1944

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, before presenting my unanimous-consent request, I desire to advise the Members and the Speaker that I have taken this matter up with the majority and minority leaders and with the members of the committee, and with that understanding I am asking unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 2713) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the Naval Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

THE WAVES AND THE WAAC'S

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to include as part of my remarks a release made to the press this morning by Secretary of War Stimson, and also a letter from Major General Surles regarding the number of WAAC's who have been returned from Africa.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, in an effort to stop some of these fantastic and vicious rumors that have been going about regarding the conduct of the WAAC's—and, of course, about the WAVES, the nurses, and other women in uniform—I heard only yesterday that 21 of the WAAC's had been returned from Africa because of misconduct; in fact, I heard that a whole shipload of WAAC's had been returned—there have only been something like 250 WAAC's in Africa and General Surles writes me that only one was returned because she was having a baby. She was married; it was perfectly legitimate. One was being returned for medical attention, for a recurrent physical disability; and 1 was returned because of unsuitable temperament. Only 3 have been returned, and none for improper conduct or improper reasons.

The Congress of the United States should be the first to stop slander upon our patriotic women.

I know the Members of the House will join me in stopping any misinformation or false rumors that are being spread, because if you destroy even by implication the character of the womanhood of America you not only impair the war effort but you destroy America. If you destroy the character of the future mothers of America, you are destroying our entire country.

I invite your attention to the following press release by the Secretary of War and letter from Major General Surles:

STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF WAR AT PRESS CONFERENCE, JUNE 10, 1943

My attention has been attracted to sinister rumors aimed at destroying the reputation of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps. I refer to charges of immorality and particularly to the allegation that the War Department has agreed to the issuance of contraceptives and prophylactic equipment to the members of this corps. I wish to state that these rumors are absolutely and completely false.

The record of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps speaks for itself. Since July 1942 approximately 65,000 fine, patriotic women have enrolled themselves in this corps. And every one of these women who has gone to duty in the field has released a soldier for front-line duty. This is the equivalent of 4 combat divisions already. To appraise that, I remind you that our combat ground forces of the Tunisian campaign consisted of just 4 divisions.

The authorized strength of this corps is 150,000 and since the objective behind the enlistment of the corps is to relieve able-bodied soldiers for combat duty, you can well see that we are speaking now of a sizable increase in our fighting forces.

The enemy naturally is interested in our combat strength—the force by which we shall eventually bring him to unconditional surrender. Anything which would interfere with their recruiting or destroy the reputation of this corps and, by so doing, interfere with increase in the combat strength of our Army would be of value to that enemy. The repetition of any unfounded rumor concerning this corps lessens confidence in it and is actually an aid to the enemy.

Furthermore, any reflection on the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps is in essence a reflection on the whole of American womanhood; for these 65,000 women are a crosssection of the womanhood of our Nation. They are the teachers who taught your children; the wives, sweethearts, sisters, and even mothers of the men who are today fighting to save our freedom. When they are maligned, when vicious rumor destroys their reputations, the effects could reach into our very front lines, injuring the morale of the Army itself. The story of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps is already a fine chapter in the story of American womanhood, and I emphasize the fact that I have made a thorough investigation of these rumors. They are completely false.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 10, 1943.

Hon. EDITH N. ROGERS,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MRS. ROGERS: In answer to your query as to the number of members of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps who have been returned from Africa, I can report as follows as of this date:

Three members of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps have been returned from Africa:

One for pregnancy, married, legitimate.

One for medical attention as result of recurrence of gall bladder ailment.

One unsuitable temperament, incapable of adjustment to conditions.

A. D. SURLES,
Major General, United States Army, Director.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, along the lines of the statement made by the gentlewoman from Massachusetts, I wish to bring to the attention of the House so that any rumors may be dispelled, that we had occasion a few days ago to have officials of the Navy Department in front of a subcommittee and we inquired into some matters that have been circulating around town.

I want to report to the House, speaking on behalf of the Navy Department, that of the 16,000 enlisted young women of the United States in the United States Navy Auxiliary but 3 have been dismissed from the service because of misconduct. I think this record speaks for itself. As a matter of fact the women in the service are so far below the men insofar as dismissals are concerned that there is no comparison; the rate in our enlisted male personnel is a great deal higher.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and etxend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, it would seem unnecessary for any politician, bureaucrat, Army, Navy, or other officer to say anything in defense of the women in or out of our service. All of us had mothers; most of us have wives, daughters or sisters; so what is the sense in giving any publicity to any rumors which question the ability, the loyalty, the virtue of our women? We all know better. Why not let it go at that? Our women are women, American women, regardless of the uniform they wear. They need no defense from anyone.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

A LITTLE COMMON SENSE—A LITTLE JUSTICE—LESS USE OF THE WRECKING MACHINERY

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, today, Thursday, June 10, 1943, a group of Senators and Congressmen from the eastern seaboard are questioning Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes. They insist that if the East is to continue to support the war effort they must have more gasoline and, next winter, more fuel oil.

They ask that the Middle West, where at the moment there seems to be an abundance of gasoline, be further rationed. They insist that approximately the same restrictions relating to the consumption of gasoline which are now in force in the East be imposed upon the Middle West.

To the Representatives of the Middle West it seems unfair to require that their constituents be deprived of gasoline or fuel oil merely because transportation or storage difficulties now, for the moment, make it impossible for the East to receive all the gasoline or fuel oil needed.

Let us avoid any discussion which will tend to promote sectional feeling. Let us turn rather to the basic cause of all, or at least the greater part, of our domestic trouble. The reason for much of the burden of the inconvenience, and of the rules, regulations, and directives which are hindering not only industrial production but the production of food is the determination of the New Dealers to remake not only our form of government but our whole economic structure.

Coming from a Republican, that statement might be challenged as the result of political bias, but last week Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL, a blown-in-the-bottle Democrat, exasperated by O. P. A. regulations which threatened the poultry industry in his State, made the statement that responsible officials in the Administration were, and I quote:

> Taking orders from somebody and that what they are doing is only part of a plot to change our Government into communism, socialism, or some other foreign "ism," which means a dictatorship and regimentation of our people and abolishing our private system of enterprise.

The Senator did not understate the case. Not only are responsible Administration officials destroying the poultry industry; they are still limiting the acreage which the farmer may plant to produce necessary food crops.

By arbitrary and unreasonable restrictions, the Administration is strangling the packing and the canning industries. Last week, the packers of the Nation asked Chairman Vinson of the Economic Stabilization Board to secure a ruling which would permit them to pay their employees an additional 15 cents an hour to prevent those employees seeking employment in nearby industries engaged in war production, where the wages are, in effect, paid by the Government and are much higher.

They also ask that the O. P. A., without further delay, fix a ceiling price for the finished product of the canner, which would include all costs of production. The canners were not insisting upon a price which would insure them a profit. They are asking, however, that they be permitted to operate on a basis which would enable them to exist, for, if they were forced out of business, the already apparent shortage of food would be increased.

Not long ago, McNutt's War Manpower Commission issued an order containing an unprecedented provision requiring that labor unions be consulted on the hiring and firing of workers and the obtaining of exemptions.

When a union, which merely represents employees, who are neither stockholders in, nor charged with the responsibility of the management of, a corporation, must be consulted before men can be hired or fired, it is rank hypocrisy to talk about individual enterprise or the preservation of the ability of those on the home front to adequately support the fighting forces.

The confusion and the interference with industries, with business, with farming, has grown so great that no longer can it be charged to incompetency alone. As stated by Senator O'DANIEL, there appears to be a deliberate effort on the part of administrative officials to adopt, follow, and insist upon a course of action which common sense teaches us can only end in disaster.

No fighting force can win a war unless it is adequately supported on the home front. Support on that front means production of food, processing and transporting food, producing and processing and transporting of all the things needed by an armed force must be prompt and adequate. Notwithstanding that acknowledged fact, here at home the Administration continues to interfere with all three. Exasperation exists throughout the country and the conclusion of all too many was concisely expressed on June 7, before the House Small Business Committee when W. H. Albers, president, Supermarket Institute of Cincinnati, testifying, said, "Let the policy of the organization be based on facts and let the O. P. A. stick to that policy. The agency now has become so hopelessly disorganized that the time has arrived for mobs to descend on Washington." Mere words do not bring relief.

On the following day, the President, addressing the delegates to the United States Food Conference, reading from his prepared address, said:

> The better use of natural and human resources must be assured to improve living standards—

And he intimated, as he frequently has, that those improved living standards must exist throughout the world. He then added this extemporaneous statement—

And I want to add that all this will be accomplished without the exploitation of any people by any nation anywhere.

Unfortunately, what the President says is all too often followed by action which contradicts the import of his words. While the President is announcing that no individual anywhere is to be exploited; while the Senators and the Congressmen from the East are insisting upon more gasoline in order that their constituents may continue to contribute to the war effort, labor goons and labor racketeers operating under the protection of this Administration are exploiting people in the city of Port Huron, Mich., and they are defying the right of individuals to aid in the war effort.

From a courageous editor of that city comes a wire, which reads in part as follows:

Attorneys for the retail grocers here have applied to the circuit court for a temporary injunction restraining the teamsters' union, Morris Coleman, and certain other union officers from picketing, boycotting, and interfering with the grocery business by cutting off delivery of food, meat, and other items. The petition for the injunction sets forth that these acts by the teamsters' union are damaging the public health and welfare of the city of Port Huron. The court this morning granted a temporary injunction, following along the line requested, and an order to show cause on a permanent injunction, setting the hearing for next Monday morning.

Again in Port Huron there is a milk strike on. You may recall that some time ago from the well of the House your attention was called to the fact that men convicted of criminal offense, but hiding behind labor unions, were driving automobiles on rationed gasoline and rationed tires from the city of Detroit to the city of Port Huron, where they followed the conveyances driven by nonunion men used to deliver milk to customers about the streets of that city and interfered with their customers in an effort to compel the nonunion drivers to stand and deliver a portion of their wages to the union racketeers. There was an investigation, but the unlawful activities of these so-called union racketeers have been renewed, according to another wire, which reads as follows:

Labor "goons" again at work in Port Huron. No action from War Labor Board. Food shortage threatened here as result of teamsters' boycott on grocery stores handling milk supplies of blacklisted dairies. Situation serious for our community. Can't you help us stop these outlaws?

When there is, throughout the East, a shortage of gasoline; when, under our Constitution, men have the right to join or not to join a union; when, under that same Constitution, protection of property is guaranteed; when we are spending billions upon billions of dollars and sacrificing the lives of thousands of men to carry freedom from want and freedom from fear to all the peoples of the world, why should this administration extend protection or fail to prosecute those who, here in America—to be specific, in Michigan, in Port Huron—are being exploited by the political allies of this administration? What excuse is there for permitting the use of rationed tires and rationed gasoline by those who are insisting that loyalty to the union is more important than loyalty to the Government?

The President of the United States, who is so fond of calling himself Commander in Chief, has ordered our civilians to work and produce. Now comes the union organizers, who add a proviso to that order, which is that citizens shall work and produce when, and only when, they become members of a union.

If the President expects the respect, the wholehearted support of the civilian population, he must play fair; he must treat with justice those who have obeyed his order.

Not long ago the President appealed to the coal miners to return to work. Fifteen Peoria, Ill., coal miners went back to work on May 3, in answer to the President's demand. On June 4, those 15 miners were called upon by their local union to face the union's executive board and to answer for their disobedience to the union's order to strike.

As was asked from the well of the House on March 22, Who is the big boss? In time of war the President called upon those miners to dig coal. They dug coal, and now they are being prosecuted by their union for obeying the President's order, for refusing to obey the strike order of the union.

Are the people of Port Huron to be protected? Are those who in Port Huron and surrounding territory are producing milk to be protected in their efforts to deliver that milk? Are grocery stores engaged in distributing food to have their supplies of food cut off, food which comes in through interstate commerce, by striking teamsters of the A. F. of L.?

As Mr. Albers suggested to the Small Business Committee, if this administration does not straighten out the lawlessness which it is protecting by its refusal to act, there will be the formation and the unlawful activities of mobs.

Am I preaching violence? No, not by any means, for I abhor violence. I am merely anticipating the natural result of exploitation, extortion, racketeering, and violence.

Already in Los Angeles, the zoot-suit-wearing violators of the law, the insulters of soldiers and sailors and of their sweethearts, have learned what the anger of those in the armed forces means. We have had violence. Strange as it may seem, the military authorities have declared Los Angeles closed to the members of the armed forces. The obvious, the just, reaction to the practices of zoot-suiters would have been to punish them for their unlawfulness. Had a firm, just procedure been adopted in the beginning there would have been no need to bar Los Angeles to the armed services. Apparently we, in this country, must make a choice between lawless violence, unjustifiable assaults upon the constitutional rights of our citizens, and orderly constitutional processes.

The racketeers should be barred from Port Huron, Mich., and the zoot-suiters should be kicked into the jails of Los Angeles. Their constitutional rights should be restored to the people of Port Huron, and the soldiers, sailors, and marines—all those in the armed forces of Uncle Sam—should be allowed into the city of Los Angeles. Those who are going to sacrifice their lives in behalf of their country should not be barred from the streets of any American city. When the fighting men come home those who seek to deprive them and their relatives of the American way of life will meet a just, a swift, and effective retribution.

Unless this administration begins to preserve some of the "four freedoms" here in America, some fighting men may think it their right to do something before they go to preserve the American way while they are gone.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. O'KONSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include an article.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow after the disposition of the business on the Speaker's table and other special orders I may address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, can the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], the majority leader, inform us of the program for tomorrow and the early part of next week?

Mr. McCORMACK. On tomorrow we plan to take up the conference report on the labor bill, the strike legislation.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And that is all that is scheduled for tomorrow?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

On Monday of next week three bills reported out of the Committee on Immigration will be taken up. If any of those bills do not go through on Monday they will not be carried over to Tuesday. Monday has been set aside for the consideration of those three reports.

On Tuesday of next week individual bills on the Private Calendar will be called. I understand there are between 80 and 90 bills and I think there should be a call of the Private Calendar.

On Tuesday the Labor-Social Security bill will be called up and after disposition of that bill the War Agency appropriation bill will be called and then the War Department appropriation bill.

There is also a lend-lease conference report which I understand will be brought up in a few minutes. I understand there is a complete agreement on that.

If that is disposed of now there is a conference report on the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill still pending.

I am unable to give any information as to what day that will come up, but I will advise the gentleman.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman has given us what we need for the next day or two and I thank him.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

(Mr. MADDEN asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS TO CARRY OUT PROVISIONS OF AN ACT TO PROMOTE THE DEFENSE OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. CANNON of Missouri submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 2753) making supplemental appropriations to carry out the provisions of an act to promote the defense of the United States, approved March 11, 1941, as amended, and for other purposes:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2753) "making supplemental appropriations to carry out the provisions of an Act to promote the defense of the United States, approved March 11, 1941, as amended, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2 and 3.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: "Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment and at the end of the matter so restored insert "produced in the continental United States"; and the Senate agree to the same.

LOUIS LUDLOW,
EMMET O'NEAL,
LOUIS C. RABAUT,
JOHN TABER,
R. B. WIGGLESWORTH,
W. P. LAMBERTSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

KENNETH MCKELLAR,

GERALD P. NYE,
H. C. LODGE, Jr.,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2753) making supplemental appropriations to carry out the provisions of an act to promote the defense of the United States, approved March 11, 1941, as amended, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

No. 1: The House bill contains a provision that none of the funds appropriated therein shall be used for the payment of any subsidy on agricultural products. This matter is stricken out by the Senate. The conference agreement restores the House language and limits the provision to such products produced in the continental United States.

No. 2: Section 3, inserted by the Senate, amends the act of March 25, 1943 (Public Law 18) by increasing from 225,000,000 to 275,000,000 bushels the amount of wheat in governmental control that may be sold for feed purposes. The substance of this section has been incorporated in House Joint Resolution 133 which passed the House of Representatives on June 4 and the Senate on June 8. The conference agreement eliminates the Senate amendment.

No. 3: Corrects a section number in the bill to conform to conference action.

CLARENCE CANNON,
LOUIS LUDLOW,
EMMET O'NEAL,
LOUIS C. RABAUT,
JOHN TABER,
R. B. WIGGLESWORTH,
W. P. LAMBERTSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 2753) making supplemental appropriations to carry out the provisions of an act to promote the defense of the United States, approved March 11, 1941, as amended, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, this conference report is a unanimous report of the managers on the part of the House. There were only three amendments in disagreement.

The Senate struck out the House provision prohibiting the use of any of the money in the bill for the payment of subsidies on agricultural products. The conferees have restored the House language and modified it so that it applies only to agricultural commodities produced in continental United States.

The Senate also added an amendment increasing from 225,000,000 bushels to 275,000,000 bushels the amount of Government wheat that may be sold for feed purposes and the Senate has receded from that amendment. The Senate receded also on the third amendment which was really a technical amendment affecting a section number.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I see no reason why the House should not immediately agree to this report and send the bill back to the Senate for final action.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman from New York. The amendments involved relate to matters on which the House has repeatedly expressed itself and the agreement with the managers on the part of the Senate is in accord with the House position. I might say by way of explanation that the amendment relating to wheat was eliminated because the House on June 4 and the Senate on June 8 passed House Joint Resolution No. 133, which accomplishes the same purpose as that proposed by the Senate amendment. It has now gone to the President.

It covers the exact proposition and puts into effect all that the Senate amendment would have accomplished. For that reason the Senate receded.

Mr. TABER. Otherwise we would have been willing to yield to the Senate amendment?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. We would have yielded but for the fact that the legislation covering the same proposition previously passed obviated any need for further legislation on the subject.

Mr. TABER. Because it is necessary to have this wheat for feed at the present time.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Under the legislation already enacted 50,000,000 bushels more of Government wheat may be sold for feed purposes. The conferees of both Houses were in complete concurrence on the need for additional feed in order to provide for maximum food production.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I have received a petition from various organizations of the city of Washington interested in a proposed constitutional amendment giving to the citizens of the city of Washington the right to participate in the election of Presidential electors and to have such representation in the two Houses of Congress as the Congress may agree to. This petition is made by many organizations in Washington, headed by the Citizens' Joint Committee on National Representation for the District of Columbia, of which the grand old man of Washington and America, Theodore W. Noyes, is chairman.

I see no good objection to this proposed constitutional amendment from any angle. To the people who feel that the Federal Government should never surrender the power to govern the District of Columbia this proposed amendment should not be objectionable, because there is no surrender of that power proposed. If the amendment should be adopted and Congress should act under the grant of power conferred, Congress would retain the power to modify or even repeal the whole thing if the governmental arrangement inaugurated should not work. This proposed amendment will be merely an enabling provision granting power to the Congress to give to the American citizens living in the District of Columbia such rights to participate in the National Government as in the judgment of the Congress would not interfere with the Federal interest.

I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein this resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS]?

There was no objection.

The petition referred to follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

Your petitioners, the Citizens' Joint Committee on National Representation for the District of Columbia, and the Presidents of its Constituent and Cooperating Organizations, whose names are subscribed below, hereby reaffirm the principles proclaimed by the founders of our Republic that "Taxation without representation is tyranny"; that "Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed"; and in order that "Government of the people, by the people and for the people" may become an accomplished fact for all the people of the United States, respectfully represent:

That the over one-half million totally disfranchised and unrepresented citizens of the United States resident in the District of Columbia, obey national laws, outnumber the residents of each of 12 States and pay more national taxes than each of 22 of the States.

That over two decades ago, when they outnumbered only six States, they supplied to the Army and Navy of the United States, a larger number of men than any one of seven of the States, and oversubscribed their quotas of all wartime funds.

That again in the present war for the preservation of the principles of democracy and civilization as against despotism and barbarism thousands of these voteless and unrepresented Americans of the District of Columbia are now by voluntary enrollment and by draft serving in the armed forces of our country.

That these, your fellow Americans, now have no voice in their national Government which requires them to fight, to bleed and, perhaps, to die.

That as a fundamental right they are as justly entitled, as are other Americans, to voting representation in the Congress and among the electors of President and Vice President.

That the only sound reason which can be offered for any departure, in the case of the District of Columbia, from the fundamental American concepts of representative government is for protection of the national interest in the Nation's seat of government and then only to the extent required for such effective protection.

That this protection of the national interest—coupled with recognition of the interest and rights of the people of the District—is provided in our proposed constitutional amendment which confirms in Congress continuing control of District representation so that both the Nation's and the District's interests may always be equitably protected.

We, therefore, respectfully petition the adoption of House Joint Resolution 81 and the identical Senate Joint Resolution 33, which propose an amendment to the Constitution of the United States empowering Congress to grant the above sought relief to the citizens of the United States resident in the District of Columbia.

THE PROPOSED AMENDMENT

"The Congress shall have power to provide that there shall be in the Congress and among the electors of President and Vice President members elected by the people of the District constituting the seat of government of the United States, in such numbers and with such powers as the Congress shall determine. All legislation hereunder shall be subject to amendment and repeal."

Theodore W. Noyes, Chairman, Citizens' Joint Committee on District of Columbia National Representation; Granville Gude, President, Board of Trade; Harry S. Wender, President, Federation of Citizens' Association (66 member groups); John Locher, President, Central Labor Union (150 local unions); Mrs. Arthur C. Watkins, President, Federation of Women's Clubs (31 Clubs); Mrs. Eugene Callaghan, President, Voteless D. C. League of Women Voters; J. G. McConihe, Democratic National Committeeman for the District of Columbia; E. F. Colladay, Republican National Committeeman for the District of Columbia; Mabel H. Ellett, President, District of Columbia Congress of Parent-Teacher Associations (71 associations); Wilbur S. Finch, President, District of Columbia Suffrage Association.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD on the gasoline problem.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS]?

There was no objection.

PREVIOUS ORDERS

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, in asking for 30 minutes I did so because I understand that some of my friends in the House, particularly those from California have contrary opinions upon the subject which I shall address myself to, and in order to be fair I thought if I would impose myself upon them for 15 minutes I ought to be willing to have them impose their thoughts and questions upon me for 15 minutes. For that reason I do not propose to yield for the first 15 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, as a Member of Congress I am ashamed of the treatment we have accorded China over the years. I am especially ashamed of the fact that, although friendly to China, yet we furnished Japan a large part of the war materials she needed to carry on her aggressive war against China and to build up her war fleet to make war upon us. If we had placed an embargo upon the sale of war materials to Japan, as some of us advocated several years ago, she would have been unable to take over Manchuria, and certainly she would have been unable to prepare to make war upon us.

Mr. Speaker, today we have the opportunity to bring about a better understanding between the Chinese people and ourselves and to do justice to the Nation that is our most friendly ally in the present war. This opportunity presents itself in the proposal to repeal the Chinese Exclusion Act, which is now being considered by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

In considering a bill to repeal the Chinese Exclusion Act, as in the consideration of all other legislation that affects the welfare of this Nation, we should keep before us first, last, and all the time the question, What effect will this legislation have upon the general welfare of our people? On that point there can be no difference of opinion and no argument.

Therefore, keeping the interests of this Nation before me as the primary objective, I want to consider the effect of the passage of this bill from two different angles:

First. What will be the effect of its passage upon the war effort? Will it help or hinder the same?

Second. What will be the effect of its passage upon the post-war period? Will it aid or hinder us in providing jobs for our returning soldiers? Will it help us to preserve our American standard of living after the war is over?

I confess at the outset that in limiting myself to these two points of view, I am being entirely selfish and practical. I am deliberately ignoring the ethical questions involved and the moral justness of the measure. I am also excluding all sentimental arguments that might be made for lifting a stigma we placed upon a great people 60 years ago, the only people that can preserve peace in Asia in the years to come, and help us keep Japan in her place.

I

Taking up my first question, "Will the passage of this bill aid our war effort, and help bring the war to a speedy and successful end?" Mr. Speaker, I am not a military expert nor a military authority, therefore in finding the answer to this question I must depend upon those who can qualify in those respects. Our military experts tell us that because of transportation difficulties we cannot today send China much material aid in the shape of guns, tanks, planes, food, and so forth; aid that she needs so badly in order to carry on her heroic resistance against the Japanese aggressor. These military experts tell us we must first recapture the port of Rangoon, now in Japanese hands, and reopen the Burma Road before we can send China the aid she needs so badly. Chinese military experts tell us that the repeal of the Chinese Exclusion Act will do much to stiffen up the morale of the Chinese people and to help offset Japanese propaganda against the United States concerning our treatment of the Chinese people over the years. Our State Department very wisely removed one of the long-standing obstacles to good will between China and the United States when it voluntarily gave up our so-called extraterritorial rights in China. Now Congress has the opportunity to remove the other long-standing obstacle to good will and full friendship between the two nations by repealing the Chinese Exclusion Act, thereby placing China—as far as immigration is concerned—upon the same basis as other nations that have been given a quota.

Mr. Speaker, Admiral Yarnell, an authority on the war situation in the Far East, considers the repeal of the Chinese Exclusion Act as a very necessary and vital part of our war effort. He testified before our Committee on Immigration and Naturalization as follows:

> Japan has utilized American exclusion laws with much effect in her propaganda campaign in China and other areas of the Far East. By the repeal of these laws this means of stirring up hatred of the western nations will be eliminated. In the consideration of the repeal of these laws, we also should look beyond the war to the peace settlement and the years to follow. * * * In order to insure peace in the Far East, there must be a strong, stable, and democratic government in China. * * * It is my conviction that the repeal of these laws will have far-reaching effects as a war and as a post-war measure. It will also be a partial recognition of the bravery and endurance of a great people who for 6 years have been fighting America's most dangerous enemy. * * * China has a tremendous army available of excellent soldier material and all they need are munitions, leadership, and training. If we can keep China in the war, there is no necessity, as far as I can see, of sending a single American soldier to China outside of technicians and advisers and people who can help them organize and train their Army.

Constantine Brown, one of our best commentators on the war and war strategy, sums up the situation in China as follows:

> The campaign (in Burma) must wait until the monsoon season is over. And the question of whether the Chinese will be able to hold out until next October, when offensive operations in that area can be resumed, becomes increasingly important. China's special Ambassador to Washington, T. V. Soong, has not been pulling his punches recently and his warnings that China might be forced out of the war before the end of the year have not been taken as bluff and empty threats. * * * Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek sought to minimize the importance of the desertion of so many of his generals who went over to the enemy bag and baggage. His pride apparently induced him to suppress or discount the importance of these desertions. * * * The fiasco of the campaign against the Japanese in Burma, coupled with a renewed and powerful offensive of the Japs against Chungking, has brought the situation to a head. We are now being bluntly told that unless something decisive occurs China may be completely in the hands of the Japanese before the end of the year. Dr. Soong is said to believe that Chiang's forces may be able to hold on until the end of the monsoon rains and that if the Allies keep their pledge to start an offensive in Burma when the dry season begins, Chiang may stay in the war. This point of view is not shared by some of our war strategists. * * * According to information reaching Washington from China, the Japanese appear determined to end China's resistance before the Allies have an opportunity to make a serious drive against Burma next fall. And on the basis of what we know of China's war material and modern fighting equipment, some military men express serious doubts whether Chiang will be able to resist a determined Japanese drive this summer.

And so, Mr. Speaker, judging from the testimony of these expert witnesses, the answer to my question, Will the passage of this bill aid our war effort and help bring the war to a speedy and successful conclusion? is an emphatic "Yes."

II

Mr. Speaker, I now come to my second question, What will be the effect of the repeal of the Chinese Exclusion Act upon the post-war period? Will it aid or hinder us in providing jobs for our returning soldiers? Will it help us preserve our American standard of living after the war is over?

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DEWEY], perhaps the best informed man in the House on international finance, international credits, and international trade, testified before our committee on the possibilities for American commerce in the post-war period. His testimony was complete, convincing, and irrefutable. In substance he stated that China, with her 450,000,000 people, now on the verge of a great industrial awakening, offers the only real post-war market for American manufactured goods. He also stated that China will need billions of dollars worth of American products and that she can pay for these goods because she has vast amounts of raw products that we need, and so can establish the international credits that go with a favorable balance of trade. On the other hand, Congressman DEWEY pointed out that while Europe after the war will need vast amounts of American products of all kinds, Europe will have nothing to pay for them, neither raw products, nor cash, which means, of course, a repetition of what happened in our trade relations with Europe after the last war. Congressman DEWEY left no doubt in my mind that the answer to this second question, or series of questions, is as emphatic an affirmative as the answer we gave to the first question.

Mr. Speaker, I want to offer one or two observations of my own at this point in support of the convincing testimony given by my colleague from Illinois. Senator Beveridge, of Indiana, one of the greatest statesmen we have ever produced in America, stated in a speech made decades ago:

> Our trade henceforth must be with Asia. The Pacific is one ocean, and the Pacific is the ocean of the commerce of the future. Most future wars will be conflicts for commerce. The power that rules the Pacific therefore will be the power that rules the world.

My only comment upon this quotation from Beveridge is that with close friendly cooperative ties between Uncle Sam and the awakening giant of the Orient, China, there will arise no question as to what joint powers will rule the Pacific hereafter.

I now want to present another viewpoint on the vital effect the passage of this bill will have on post-war trade, a viewpoint given me at first hand by the leaders of the machine-tools industry of Rockford, Ill., the greatest center of machine-tools production in the United States.

The machine-tools industry of America, in its effort to support and sustain the Nation's war aims, produced during the past 2 years $2,200,000,000 worth of machine tools, the equivalent of its total output for 20 years preceding Pearl Harbor. Even though we assume that the Nation will be on a sustained level of prosperity higher than ever before, these permanent additions to the Nation's production tools are more than adequate to meet the demands of our economy for 20 years to come.

During World War No. 1 we piled up so great a supply of machine tools, compared to normal needs, that one-third of the companies building machine tools for the First World War were forced out of business; some went bankrupt, some sold out their assets, and some merged with other companies in the struggle for survival that was forced upon the industry in the adjustment period of the "difficult twenties."

Taking only machines 13 years old as a basis for determining the supply of efficient machines remaining after the war, the United States will have on hand a volume of modern machine tools at the end of 1943 that cost over $4,000,000,000, of which three-fourths will have been built in the last 3 years. It will require but few new or special machines to supplement this vast amount of potential metal-working capacity to produce all the goods and services the whole world can consume over many years to come.

In view of these facts, unless we find some way to dispose of the surplus machine tools left on our hands at the close of the war, at a profit, we will either have to dump them in the ocean or the thousands of former workers in the machine-tools industry now in uniform will find themselves out of a job when they come back because the plants in which they formerly worked will be closed. What is true of the machine-tools industry is true of many other manufacturing industries of America. This is a post-war situation that must be faced.

Mr. Speaker, China is awakening from her long sleep. She is on the verge of an industrial revolution. She will need billions of dollars worth of machine tools after this war is over to help in her industrial development. She will need railroads built; railroad engines and railroad equipment for those railroads; farm machinery for modernizing her agricultural methods; road-building machinery to build the vast system of hard roads that will be required; and mining machinery to develop her vast mineral resources. Best of all China will have the raw materials and consequent international credits to pay for these things. And so, Mr. Speaker, our potential trade with China after this war is over should furnish jobs to hundreds of thousands, if not millions, of our boys when they return from the war.

During the hearings on the proposal to repeal the Chinese Exclusion Act the testimony showed that the act was passed in 1882 to prevent a flood of cheap labor that threatened at that time. Since then we have passed laws that restrict immigration by placing all European countries on a quota basis. Under a quota only 107 Chinese people could enter this country each year. Therefore, if the Chinese exclusion laws were repealed and China were placed upon a quota basis like other nations, at the rate of 107 Chinese immigrants per year, cheap labor from China, the problem of the 1880's, could never become a problem in the future.

Looking at the question before us, the proposal to repeal the Chinese Exclusion Act, and keeping in mind the best interests of our people as our primary objective, I say we should repeal the act, and thereby place China, our ally and friend, upon an equal footing with other nations that have been placed upon a quota basis. This, in my judgment, is the least we can do at this time to rectify our past mistakes in dealing with China, and to do justice to our most friendly ally in the present war.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. If China is allowed a quota of 107, and I believe the number is 105—it has been refigured—will those people have to pass the ordinary tests as to health, literacy, and financial responsibility to enter this country?

Mr. MASON. They would all have to pass the same tests that other quota people from all nations have to pass now.

Mr. CURTIS. Is it or is it not true that the Chinese have been coming to the United States every year, lawfully, under various laws relating to wives of certain citizens, students, merchants, and other classifications, in the absence of a quota?

Mr. MASON. That is true.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HINSHAW. The gentleman referred to the people in the State of California earlier in his address. May I preface my remarks by stating that the people of California—and I believe that can be said also for Oregon and Washington—thoroughly appreciate the magnificent struggle the Chinese have been putting up against our common enemy. I think every Member of this House admires Mme. Chiang Kai-shek, whom, incidentally, I had the honor of meeting when she was known as Miss Soong Mei-Ling, many years ago. We have many friends among the Chinese people.

We recognize the problem, however, as the gentleman has aptly referred to it, as being an economic problem. Of course, the entry of 100 or 105 Chinese people, even if they were coolies, would not amount to a great deal as far as creating an economic problem in our Pacific States is concerned.

It must also be recognized that the problem presented is presented to the three Western States in very large measure, because these people seldom get beyond the Pacific coast. When they arrive there they find a salubrious climate, and they like to stay, just as do others.

The gentleman's committee proposes to admit 105 Chinese per annum. Without taking a position on that particular matter, I am interested to know whether the gentleman and his committee are also interested in admitting other Asiatics after this war is over in some similar volume or greater or less volume.

Mr. MASON. Speaking from the standpoint of the gentleman from Illinois, no. Speaking from the standpoint of the committee, I do not know what the viewpoint of the committee would be until that question was raised.

Mr. HINSHAW. The gentleman recognizes that it is a very large problem?

Mr. MASON. I do.

Mr. HINSHAW. And that it has to deal with world relations as well as our own economic condition?

Mr. MASON. I think I can say, from the standpoint of the committee, that not for 500 years would this committee, as it is now composed, if it lasted that long, be willing to permit one Jap to enter.

Mr. HINSHAW. The gentleman recognizes that there were 16,000 Japanese in the United States at the time of the Oriental Exclusion Act, and that through processes of their own that number has been multiplied to something between 125,000 and 130,000 at this time

Mr. MASON. They were not all legitimate processes, because a great many of them have sneaked in.

Mr. HINSHAW. The gentleman knows that the Immigration Service on our border is engaged very largely in protecting the United States from an influx of a great flood of orientals who would come in here and offer their services far below the prices that our own labor should have.

Mr. MASON. I agree with that, but this bill, restricting the immigration to 105 or 107, absolutely shuts out any danger of that possibility.

Mr. HINSHAW. I should like to ask the gentleman one more question. This is in all sincerity. I have due regard for the industries in the gentleman's district. It has been complained of heretofore that certain countries have been implemented in the production of devices for the destruction of others through our having shipped certain machinery, supplies, scrap iron, and so forth, in times gone by, and that with those materials they have built up a very considerable war industry.

Of course, we do not expect that the Chinese people, if we implement them with the machinery so well made in the gentleman's district and other parts of the United States, would be setting up a similar war machine against us, but the gentleman does recognize that competition from the peacetime products of those machines under the low wage scales existing in Asia might form a very serious menace to our foreign trade.

Mr. MASON. That is true, and that is a problem that will have to be met, whether we sell it to them or somebody else does, some 50 years from now, by perhaps tariff bars.

Mr. HINSHAW. Everyone must recognize that China has sufficient absorbing power for a great deal of goods, so that she could probably produce things for herself, and herself exclusively, for a long time to come, but the gentleman does recognize that the very low wage scales and low living conditions that exist throughout Asia form a serious competitive condition to other countries with high scales of living.

Mr. MASON. I do.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. Yes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I hope the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW] is not under a misapprehension, because I am the author of one of the bills to allow the Chinese to come in.

Mr. HINSHAW. Oh, the gentleman is assured that I have made no comment concerning a bill. I am simply speculating on other matters.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I may say to the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from California, that as for the 16,000 Japs that originally came in and that now through natural processes and smuggling, have grown to 130,000 or 140,000, I wish they might have been 140,000 Chinese that we had let come in in that way. May I ask the gentleman from Illinois this question? The gentleman knows, because he has been on the committee for many years, after all, speaking of the number of Chinese, that there are probably smuggled into this country 10 times the number proposed to allow in every year, but they would not be of as high class of people as would come in under the quota.

Mr. MASON. That is true.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. Yes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. We had hearings for 3 months, and is it not true that the abundance of evidence from the best brains of the country was that in order to save the killing of thousands of our young men in this war, that could be done by removing this restriction, and the evidence was also that China can handle herself in her own way, if we will only put them on an equal basis, and she even went so far as to say that she does not care whether you allow 107 or 7, as long as you remove the restriction and give her recognition, so that she may stop the propaganda of Japan which is going on every day.

Mr. MASON. Yes, and the summary of testimony would go to show, the testimony of Admiral Yarnell and others, that they need not an American boy, but it will keep her on her feet until she can get herself prepared.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Can the gentleman see any ground for the American Federation of Labor, or even for the American Legion, trying to throw water on this proposition from an economic standpoint?

Mr. MASON. As I brought out as they were testifying, they were testifying from their old historic standpoint, from the standpoint of lowering the price of labor, something that this bill would prevent.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Is it not true that in the committee consideration we have closed every loophole, and that only 107 would come in?

Mr. MASON. That is correct.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. Yes.

Mr. JUDD. To make this observation with regard to the question raised of potential economic threats by the Chinese as they become industrialized. I think we are together on the diagnosis, but the question is how to treat the matter. The history of mankind is that men who are free try to use their goods for themselves and to raise their standards of living, but that men who are controlled from the outside are kept on low standards, so that those who control them may use them from an economic basis to produce goods more cheaply.

Take Turkey, practically the only nation over there that came out of the war free. Look at Turkey's standard of living and see what it has done. She cannot undercut us now. England keeps India down. The Chinese will be kept down by the Japanese, if they should win, to a position of slave labor. We could not compete with that. The answer to it is to help China hold true and become free, and then by the time the 50 years is up she will more or less have developed her own industry and her standard of living would become sufficiently high that there would not be anywhere near as great a gap.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for another 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. Should we fail to keep China in the war against Japan, and China should capitulate and join Japan, then will there be any of the Asiatic people on our side?

Mr. MASON. No. The testimony shows that if that should happen, our war with Japan would be lengthened at least 5 or 10 years, if not longer.

Mr. CURTIS. And it would become a race war. Is that not right?

Mr. MASON. It would.

Mr. CURTIS. What does the gentleman have to say with reference to the outlook not only for the present generation but for our children and our grandchildren should this war become a race war and we not have a stanch ally in Asia, so that men of ideals can stand together rather than men of color?

Mr. MASON. I shudder to think about what could happen under those conditions.

Mr. CURTIS. The gentleman is the ranking member on the Committee on Immigration and he is acquainted with every member of the committee. While we differ as to many bills, what is the gentleman's opinion as to the majority of that committee on the general question of immigration? Does the gentleman feel there is a movement on foot to raise all bars and add to the immigration in this country?

Mr. MASON. I do not think there is any danger of that whatever. I think at least a majority of the committee as it is now constituted would be rather in favor of lowering the quotas than increasing the quotas. I am sure that is true today as the committee is now constituted.

Mr. CURTIS. As the law now stands there is a quota for Hitler but not for Mme. Chiang Kai-shek?

Mr. MASON. That is right.

Mr. HINSHAW. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MASON. I yield.

Mr. HINSHAW. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD] has aptly stated a truth to which we will all agree, I think, without any question. The gentleman has further stated part of it in his previous remarks. I believe that the Congress, in considering all of this matter, should have a principle before it. That principle should be that while we hope to raise the standards of the rest of the world to equal our own, we will take such a position on all matters that will not allow our own standards to be reduced in the process.

Mr. MASON. I will say "amen" to that.

Mr. HINSHAW. That is one of the vital things that we must consider. That is the reason why the American Federation of Labor and the American Legion and other organizations are very fearful of this act, that there will be something involved here as a precedent or otherwise that would ultimately reduce the standard of living, through such competition.

Mr. MASON. I will say to the gentleman they are not fearful of this act, because they have not studied this act, and they do not know what is in this act.

Mr. HINSHAW. They are fearful of the principle involved in this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MASON. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I appreciate what the gentleman from California is saying, but is this not true: Does England have any exclusion against the Chinese?

Mr. MASON. They do not.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Of course, if we do not sell the Chinese the things that they need to build themselves up, will not England and Russia sell her those things?

Mr. MASON. That is a self-evident fact.

Mr. HINSHAW. I was merely speaking of a general principle as to our own country.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Of course, they will sell to China. They are entitled to sell to the Chinese, but after this war, let the group who oppose this question from an economic standpoint understand that if we keep our exclusion acts on the books after the war and China does recover, of course she will buy from England and Russia and the other countries who say to her, "You are equal with us."

Mr. HINSHAW. The gentlemen should all understand that I may vote for this bill. I have not had an opportunity to give it the study that the gentlemen on the committee have given it, but nevertheless there are some principles which we must consider.

Mr. MASON. I want to interject this—that is, that my one regret is that those who were supposed to be contrary-minded to myself on the issue in the bill are not here to enliven the argument. We are too much agreed.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MASON. I yield.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. There were hundreds of witnesses and petitions representing over 80,000,000 people who came before the committee; churches of all religious denominations, civic and religious groups, have appealed for the repeal of the Chinese exclusion law, and there was not one answer against that. And those who have been opposing it have been opposing it either from the standpoint of politics or in spite of the fact that a war is on and our boys are going to pay for it unless we do what the committee is trying to do now.

Mr. MASON. I personally invited at least half a dozen of those of contrary mind to stay and take part in this discussion.

Mr. HINSHAW. Is that the reason the gentleman did not personally invite me here?

Mr. MASON. No.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, June 16, at the conclusion of the legislative program and other previous orders heretofore granted, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may address the House for 5 minutes and revise and extend my remarks and include therewith certain excerpts from letters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, there has been a growing question among our citizens at home concerning what is going to happen to them in the way of medical care if their doctors, dentists, and so forth are all or most of them removed from our midst. I have had occasion recently to learn what happens to a doctor when he comes under the purview of the Procurement and Assignment Service Office. It seems to me this service acts in a nonofficial status and in an advisory capacity in connection with the Federal Security Agency, and also with the Army and Navy. You will be interested in this letter, I am sure, which comes from the Procurement and Assignment Service in a stamped envelope, unofficial, and which I received from a physician in Los Angeles. It states:

On February —, 1943, you were mailed a blank military classification card with the statement that "The War Manpower Commission in Washington was making a definite request that this card be filled out by every licensed medical physician not in service, regardless of age or physical condition, or other interests."

This is not an attempt to force anyone into the service, but it is important that our records in this respect be completed. We are under obligation to our Washington office to complete this record, and you are under obligation to do your part by filling out and returning this card at once.

That is signed by the chairman of the Los Angeles County committee. The card enclosed has a blank to be filled stating which of several branches of the armed services the doctor prefers to serve in.

You might also be interested to know what happens to people like him, and no doubt there are a great many doctors who find themselves in the position where it would be very difficult to meet the call, in addition to the fact that they have families, probably, and who do not answer that letter.

In the event that letter is not answered, another letter is received. While this is supposed to come from the Procurement and Assignment Service, nevertheless the envelope in which the letter was mailed was a penalty envelope and marked on the penalty envelope it says:

Federal Security Agency, Social Security Board.

On the letterhead of the Procurement and Assignment Service we find this letter:

DEAR DOCTOR: Our records show that you were sent a letter from the central office, Procurement and Assignment Service, Washington, D. C., 2 or more weeks ago, requesting you to send to this office an enclosed card expressing your preference—expressing your preference for military service—Army, Air, or Navy.

Get that—

You will note they asked him to express his preference for which branch of the service he wants to enter; they are not merely asking him to go into the service; they are asking him the branch of service he prefers to serve in. It further states:

On April —, 1943, we wrote you that we had not received this card and asked you to send it in, or please communicate with this office, indicating your preference for service. We have had no reply.

Paragraph 8 of a directive to this office from the War Manpower Commission, Washington, D. C., dated Febuary 15, reads as follows:

"In all cases of available individuals who refused to make application for commission, the names should be referred to the State director of selective service as nonessential unless they are needed for relocation."

It is with reference to that situation the doctors would like to know. First they are asked to express their preference for the branch of service they want to be in, and then when and if a doctor does not state a preference, or does not want any branch, but prefers to stay home and attend to his practice, or if he does not make an application, his name will be turned over to the State director of selective service as nonessential unless he may be needed for relocation.

What kind of business is that? Are those mothers and children who live at home to have no consideration? Are the physicians of this country to have no consideration from their Government, particularly physicians who might be badly needed to take care of the people in their own home communities? Many communities are already dangerously short of medical services.

It seems to me that somebody should take a little look into that situation and see under what authority the War Manpower Commission can state that a doctor is nonessential in the event he has not made an application for a commission in the Army, the Navy, or the air force.

The concluding paragraph of the letter states:

If we do not hear from you within 1 week from this date, this directive will have to be complied with and your name sent to the State director of selective service.

And yet in the first letter it said:

This is not an attempt to force anyone into service.

The best answer is in the vernacular, "Oh, yeah?"

SENATE

FRIDAY, JUNE 11, 1943

(Legislative day of Monday, May 24, 1943)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock noon, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, we, the creatures of time and sense, with the fever of mortal days upon our spirits, with wistful longings which haunt the depths of our being, turn to Thee, the King eternal, immortal, invisible. We change with the changing days. We are fretted by every passing wind, tempest-tossed and afraid. But Thou art the same yesterday, today, and forever. Even now, as we face perplexing decisions affecting the lives and fortunes of untold millions who look to us for the wise word and the right action, wilt Thou lift us from the confusions and bafflements of these days into the unhurried calm of Thy presence? Grant us the peace which is the gift of Thy grace and the wisdom which is from above.

In the sacrifices now demanded for the continued boon of freedom may our eyes discern Thy judgments. In the worldwide strivings toward a brotherhood which knows nothing of color, creed, or race, may we see Thy kingdom's coming. In the clanking chains of the enslaved may our ears hear the voice of Thy command, "Let my people go." May the spiritual verities by which we really live assert their sovereignty and ascendancy over our hearts and minds as with unbroken vigil we keep the perpetual light of faith burning over the inner shrine of the soul. Amen.

REQUISITION AND DISPOSAL OF PROPERTY REQUIRED FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE (H. DOC. NO. 235)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am submitting herewith to the Congress a report of operations for the period October 16, 1942, through April 15, 1943, under the act of October 16, 1941, as amended, which authorized the President to requisition and dispose of property required for national defense.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 11, 1943.

AMENDMENT OF LAW RELATING TO SHIP CONSTRUCTION RESERVE FUNDS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 163) to amend section 511 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, relating to ship construction reserve funds, and for other purposes, which were, on page 3, line 14, to strike out all after the word "into" down to and including the word "case" in line 19, and insert "within 2 years from the date of such deposit," and on the same page, line 20, after the period to insert "of 2 years."

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments, and I think the motion may require a brief explanation.

The amendments relate to subsection (g) of section 511 of the Ship Construction Act of 1936. Subsection (g) provided that contracts falling within the provisions of section 511, especially of subsections (c) and (g) must have been entered into within 2 years from the date of the deposit with which the legislation was concerned.

For the 2-year idea the Senate substituted certain language by way of calendar dates, namely, "entered into after October 10, 1940, and on or before December 31, 1943, with respect to deposits made prior to January 1, 1943, or not later than 1 year after the date of such deposits."

The House did not agree to that, but substituted the language "within 2 years from the date of such deposit", and that is the language in section 511, which has heretofore been approved by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

A memorial of the Florida Legislature; to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

"House Memorial 15

"Memorial to the President and Congress to call a convention to frame a federal constitution for world government

"Whereas peace under ordered liberty throughout the world is an end devoutly to be desired and worth making sacrifices to attain; and

"Whereas intercommunication has become so rapid and the instruments of destruction so deadly that no nation can now lead a life of isolation in peace and safety; and

"Whereas systems of alliance and balances of power and leagues have failed to accomplish more than a breathing space between wars; and

"Whereas the people of the Thirteen States once faced the urgent need which free men through the world now face—the vital need of uniting their power in the strongest way to secure their common rights; and

"Whereas the people of the Thirteen States then met that need by creating a common government, in the midst of war, and when the war was thus won but the peace was endangered, helped develop that emergency government into the more perfect Union embodied in the Constitution of the United States; and

"Whereas these principles of federal union have proved for more than 150 years to be the most successful solution known to history of the problem now confronting all free peoples, viz, how to unite, so that all may live together peacefully, with freedom and prosperity; and

"Whereas the American people have never yet explored how far they might apply their federal principles beyond the confines of the 48 States in conjunction with other free peoples so as to secure the lasting world peace that only ordered liberty can provide; and

"Whereas such exploration cannot possibly do any harm and may achieve as great good as our Federal Convention of 1787: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the President and the Congress be requested to call at the earliest possible moment a convention of representatives of all free peoples, to frame a federal constitution under which they may unite in a democratic world government, subject to ratification by each people concerned; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President and the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of the Senators and Representatives from Florida in the Congress of the United States.

"Approved by the Governor, June 5, 1943."

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF COMMERCE FOR SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I desire to invite the attention of the Senate for a few moments to a bill which is on the calendar. It is Senate bill 883, Calendar No. 279. The bill provides for an Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Small Business. I desire to speak to that bill for a very few moments. The bill was reported unanimously from the Committee on Commerce. It has the approval of Secretary of Commerce Jesse Jones, and has the approval of the big businessmen of the country. It calls for no appropriation. It will create no additional bureau. It will not add to the overhead of government.

How, then, Senators may ask, will this Assistant function?

We have often heard it said that behind every great accomplishment is the lengthening shadow of a great man. Behind every great human effort there is the energy, vitality, and vision of a man or a group of men. All history repeatedly illustrates this truth.

Small business does not want a bureau in Washington which would increase bureaucracy. It does not want an organization with tentacles reaching out into its communities and into its businesses. What it wants is an articulate voice here, someone who understands its language and who recognizes the importance of small business in the economical, social, and political life of the Nation.

What, then, it may be asked, could an Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Small Business accomplish? He could be the liaison man in government, representing the small businessman. He could preach cooperation between small business and big business. He could reach out into the highways and byways of the Nation and utilize groups of small businessmen to the end that there may be cooperation and building for the Nation. There are innumerable chamber of commerce groups and civic association groups. There is the United States Chamber of Commerce which is now studying this problem. The Assistant Secretary of Commerce would cooperate with the C. E. D., known as the Committee for Economic Development.

When the war is over, the Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Small Business could have throughout the Nation a working organization of small businessmen who are not on the pay roll of the Government, but who are interested in maintaining the vitality and the character of their own little business concerns.

These men realize the tremendous job that has to be done in getting the millions who are now engaged in the war service or in war production back into industry and the economic life of the Nation on a peacetime basis. All the men and women thus employed and all those in the armed services must be transferred to civilian production work as soon as possible after the war is won. On this front small business and big business will be collaborating with labor. Through collaboration private enterprise will again demonstrate its vitality, as it has in this war enterprise.

The Committee for Economic Development is not a governmental committee. It is a private, nonpolitical, voluntary, nonprofit group made up exclusively of business men and women headed by Paul Hoffman, president of the Studebaker Corporation. Small business may fit into that group without any trouble, or it can have a committee of its own and collaborate with the C. E. D. group.

The point is that we want for small business someone here in Washington who recognizes the importance of small business to the economic and political life of the Nation. We want someone who will not simply talk but who will see to it that small business obtains recognition.

One of the jobs of C. E. D. is to educate each company, each little business interest in each little community, so that it will start now to do its own post-war planning. The Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Small Business would have no trouble collaborating with this group on that objective.

Small business is concerned with the post-war problem of public works in city, county, State and the Nation and, of course, the Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Small Business could render assistance in that direction and could assist existing business agencies and individual companies.

The initiative of the individual is what built this country, and it is not the purpose of the bill to interfere with such initiative. Rather, if the Assistant Secretary of Commerce is appointed, and the bill provides that he shall be appointed by the President, one of his objectives would be to add impetus to the growth, the initiative which has made America great. His purpose would be to interest small business in tackling its own post-war problems.

The Assistant Secretary of Commerce would stay out of politics. He would have no part in politics. His heart and soul would be in the high purpose of strengthening the economy of the Nation.

Small business recognizes that the nation will need more homes, food, radios, autos, clothing, air-conditioning, and a thousand other articles when the war is over. Small business recognizes that there is now a terrific deficit in machinery on the farm and that this deficit will grow greater; and this will also be true in the post-war period when there will be a deficit of machinery for manufacturing to supply the nation's needs. The outside world will need our help and this will call for expanded facilities. There will be new methods of production and new products to manufacture. We will have to build new schools and highways, and we will undoubtedly think in terms of great international highways both in the air and on the land. Small and big business is in that picture.

Small business wants to play its part in these great developments and adventures. There will be huge economic savings by individuals in banks and trust companies to aid in the accomplishment of the job which the nation is called upon to do. With its Assistant Secretary of Commerce, small business would have the cooperation of economists and scientists studying the policies of government and fostering maximum productive employment.

Mr. President, small business is a relative term. It includes nearly everyone except the very large business institutions. The perpetuation of small business means, as one great American said to me, the perpetuation of the American way.

The Department of Commerce estimates that in 1939 there were 2,758,272 small business establishments in the United States. These establishments, consisting of manufacturers, wholesalers, retailers, servicemen, that is, establishments which sell services rather than commodities, such as laundries, barbers, etc., construction men, hotel operators and owners of amusement places, employed 8,364,971 persons.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD, a table submitted to the Senate Special Committee to Study Problems of Small Business in December 1941 by the Department of Commerce Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, showing the position of small business in the national economy, embracing the number of establishments and personnel, output, sales or receipts.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TABLE 1.—Small versus large business, 1939—United States totals for manufacturing, wholesaling, retailing, hotels, amusement, and construction

Industry or trade	United States totals			Small business [1]			Ratio of small business to United States total

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, when Secretary of Commerce Jones appeared before the Senate Commerce Committee on May 27, 1943, in connection with my bill, S. 883, he expressed approval of the measure. He said:

> Small business numerically embraces 9 out of every 10 business establishments. It accounts for over one-third of the dollar value of goods and services. It employs approximately 45 percent of all wage earners.

The statement "45 percent of all wage earners" was confined, of course, to personnel of these specific industries—manufacturing, wholesaling, retailing, service establishments, hotels, construction, and places of amusement.

I understand that the Commerce Department's best estimate for the year 1942–43 was that the total business population would be reduced by about 500,000 individual firms, 300,000 of which would be retail. I am told that that is not an alarming figure, since it does not entirely represent failure of businesses especially induced by the war, but, rather, conversion to the war effort and depletion of stocks resulting in curtailment, in addition to the usual amount of failures or discontinued businesses which in normal times was about 1,000 a day.

Small business has always stood on its own feet, and it will continue to stand on its own feet.

Mr. President, we are living in a changing world. It has been contracted. It has grown much smaller. All of this calls for rational planning. It calls for learning to practice cooperation between all segments of our society—labor and management, small business and big business, Government and the citizen. It calls for more cooperation on the home front as well as on the international front. We are all one—we Americans—and in a sense we are each our brother's keeper.

If we pass this bill it will have a great psychological value. Whether its operations will be successful will depend upon the vision of the man who is appointed. Passage of the bill will notify the small businessmen of America that Congress has at last—at long last—taken cognizance of their situation. It will give the small businessman a shot in the arm and will make him feel that he has someone in Washington who is thinking about him, who is concerned about his affairs—someone to whom he can go or to whom he can write and to whom he can submit his individual problems.

When peace comes all business, big and small, must be ready to do the job that will then be necessary, ready to back up its Government in its effort for international collaboration, ready to take its part in employing those who come back from the service and those who come out of the war plants.

Only by thinking this problem through now can that result be accomplished. What a great job the proposed Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Small Business will have if he will make it great.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the bill I have introduced printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 883) providing for an Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Small Business was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.,

CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS AND DECLARATION OF POLICY

SECTION 1. (a) The Congress hereby finds that (1) the existence of American small business as an integral part of the American economic system is essential for the preservation of the system of free competitive enterprise in the Nation, (2) that the continued existence of American small business as a potent factor in the American economy is now challenged and threatened with extinction, and (3) that destruction of American small business burdens and obstructs the free flow of goods in commerce and interferes with the orderly and fair marketing of goods in commerce.

(b) It is hereby declared to be the policy of this act, through the exercise by Congress of its power to regulate commerce between the several States and to create executive offices, to preserve American small business as an integral and essential part of the American economic system, and to preserve the system of free private competitive enterprise in the Nation.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF COMMERCE FOR SMALL BUSINESS

SEC. 2. There shall be in the Department of Commerce an Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Small Business. It shall be the province and duty of said Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Small Business to foster, promote, and develop the conduct of commerce, manufacturing, transportation, distribution, and other business facilities and activities in the United States by small business with the end in view of the preservation of small business as an integral component part of the American system of free private competitive enterprise of the Nation. He shall be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate. He shall be charged with the supervision and coordination of governmental activities dealing with the small business and small-business problems, and such other duties as shall be assigned to him by the Secretary of Commerce and as may be required by law. There shall be detailed to his office such number of employees of the Department of Commerce as may be authorized by the Secretary of Commerce. The Secretary of Commerce shall make a report to the President, the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, each 6 months of the operation of the office of the Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Small Business, including such other information and such comments and recommendations with respect to American small business and small-business problems as he may deem appropriate.

SUPPLEMENTAL LEND-LEASE APPROPRIATIONS FOR DEFENSE AID—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. McKELLAR submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2753) making supplemental appropriations to carry out the provisions of an Act to promote the defense of the United States, approved March 11, 1941, as amended, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2 and 3.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment and at the end of the matter so restored insert: "produced in the continental United States"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the report. Its consideration will take only a moment, I am sure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, let me inquire to what bill the report has reference.

Mr. McKELLAR. The lend-lease appropriation bill.

M. McNARY. Oh, yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief statement relative to the conference report, if I may be permitted to do so. The House conferees were unwilling to accede to the elimination of the amendment prohibiting the use of lend-lease funds for agricultural subsidies, which was inserted in the appropriation bill on the floor of the House. The Senate conferees have agreed to the restoration of that amendment, although it was their position that subsidy legislation should not be enacted piecemeal.

However, I do not believe that the amendment prohibiting the use of lend-lease funds for the payment of subsidies on agricultural commodities will affect the procurement program of the Lend-Lease Administration. The Senate Appropriations Committee understands that the Lend-Lease Administration does not in fact intend to pay agricultural subsidies, as the committee pointed out in its report. The Lend-Lease Administration does intend to pay the full cost of agricultural products which it purchases, even though under a subsidy program the price to private consumers may be lower as a result of subsidy payments provided by other Government agencies. It is my understanding that that is not precluded by the proposed amendment.

Let me say that the amendment applies only to products produced in the continental United States. The amendment was agreed to, and I hope the Senate will agree to the conference report.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to say a word or two about the conference report. I signed the report on the lend-lease bill because of its very obvious urgency; but in the House there was inserted an amendment about which I have very grave doubts, and I do not want the conference report to be agreed to without having the RECORD show those doubts.

Language was inserted relative to the granting of subsidies. The matter was phrased in such very broad terms, and it was so poorly defined, that it seems to me it is subject to various interpretations. I read the language:

Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated in this act shall be used for the payment of any subsidy on agricultural products produced in the continental United States.

Mr. President, I am very much in sympathy with the broad purpose of the language as it has been stated to me by those who introduced it in the House; but the language used is so vague, it is subject to so many different definitions, and is attached to a bill as to which it could not possibly have any binding or practical effect, that I regard it as a brutum fulmen—a harmless thunderbolt, something which can only defeat its own purpose. So, while, of course, I heartily approve of the appropriation, and while I signed the conference report for that reason, I desire to have the RECORD show that I have doubts about language of that kind.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

THE PETROLEUM SITUATION IN THE MIDDLE WEST—NOTICE OF MEETING

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, in view of the current discussion over gasoline rationing and the possibility of imposing further restrictions upon gasoline consumption in the Middle West, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], and myself have taken the initiative in asking the Senators from district No. 2, which includes Wisconsin, Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky, Tennessee, North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, Missouri, and Iowa, to meet on Tuesday, June 15, 1943, at 11 o'clock a. m. in the caucus room of the Senate Office Building. The purpose of the meeting is to obtain information regarding the petroleum situation from representatives of the executive agencies concerned. Secretary Ickes will be present, and representatives of the O. P. A. and O. D. T. have been invited to attend.

I wish to say, Mr. President, that we have selected district No. 2 in order to arrive at some logical basis, although it may not be inclusive. I should like to say that any other Senators from States which they think might be affected, and who might be interested in this situation, will be very welcome if they care to attend the meeting.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I am intensely interested in the remarks made by the able Senator from Wisconsin in announcing a meeting of representatives of Congress from district No. 2 to discuss the situation relating to gasoline and oil and the forthcoming conference with the Honorable Secretary Ickes, that great liberal, who is now the Secretary of the Interior, and the Fuel Administrator. For only yesterday, 24 hours ago, it was my privilege, as one of the Senators from district No. 1, to sit in the Post Office Committee room of the House Building and examine Mr. Ickes and hear from him a report on the situation. I enjoyed his testimony. He was direct and forthright, as he always is. But out of that meeting came almost no satisfaction of aid or comfort for those of us representing the people of New England and the Atlantic States who are now bearing the burdens imposed upon the people of district No. 1, the Eastern Atlantic States, in the shortage of gasoline and fuel oil. So now we have the announcement by the senior Senator from Wisconsin of the meeting of Members of Congress from district No. 2, the Midwestern States. May I say to my good colleague that I hope that out of that meeting will not only come an examination of Mr. Ickes but, after hearing all the evidence, the Members of Congress from district No. 2 will rise to great heights and say to Mr. Ickes, "The whole is greater than any member, and we of the second district in regard to the oil and fuel situation realize the excessive burdens that have been thrust upon the people of the Eastern Atlantic States and New England, and, in a spirit of camaraderie and of common justice, we ask that pleasure driving be prohibited in our district No. 2, that our coupons be cut down, and that we be put on a parity with our brothers and sisters in the New England and Eastern States. We believe in and ask for equality of sacrifice." At least, then, I will give them a degree, magnum cum laude.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the purpose of the meeting is to ascertain what the actual facts are concerning the gasoline situation. I cannot speak for any other Senator, but I can speak for myself by saying that, so far as I am concerned, if the imposition of additional rationing in district No. 2, or any other district, would materially assist the armed forces of the United States or assist in relieving the gasoline and fuel oil shortage in district No. 1, I would be glad to see it undertaken, but I do not wish to see it undertaken simply on the theory that, because of physical difficulties, one district in the United States is compelled to do with less gasoline, all other districts should be compelled to do so just for the fun of it. It is the purpose of this meeting, so far as I am concerned, to ascertain what the facts are, and I can assure the Senator from New Hampshire that the patriotism of the citizens of district No. 2 will not be exceeded by the patriotism of the citizens living in district No. 1.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I am glad to have listened to the Senator from Wisconsin, and I knew that is what he would say. He always measures up along these greater lines, but, while I am not the seventh son of a seventh son, I have the gift of prescience, and I can promise that, after the conference gets through, the pronouncement can be made, and it can be written on the blackboard, that they undertook to solve the gasoline and oil problem by the algebraic formula X, which is an unknown quantity. [Laughter.]

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 95, line 12.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, last night I gave notice that I wished to be heard on the amendment, and that I intended to speak on it. I am not in physical condition this morning to enter into a discussion. I merely wish to make a very brief statement on the amendment. Upon inquiry, I find that this amendment, reported by the Senate Appropriations Committee, if approved, would affect only the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation; that is to say, that no other agency would be affected by the elimination of the committee amendment to section 2. I think, Mr. President, that all of us are familiar with the old R. A. C. C., and with the operations which have been conducted under it. The R. A. C. C. was organized when we were in the very depths of a depression; it was a corporation which came into existence not very long before the Democratic administration came into power, when all the banks of the country were in fact closed. It was intended to provide the means of credit to livestock producers and other types of farmers in the United States, because credit was not then available through the regular credit channels.

Following the R. A. C. C., of course, additional Federal lending agencies were set up. There are some 19 or 20 of them, as we discovered in the investigation which was carried on by the Byrd committee, which are actively engaged in supplying credit to all types of farmers in the United States.

At this time there is no reason for the revival of the R. A. C. C. operations. We have a national income now estimated at from $140,000,000,000 to $142,000,000,000, the highest income in the history of the Nation. There is now on deposit in the banks nearly $90,000,000,000 available for loan. Practically all other Federal lending agencies are in operation, and can meet the needs of those who have not adequate collateral or have not such assets as will justify ordinary commercial loans.

The R. A. C. C. was, in fact, almost a dormant corporation. It was kept alive in order to furnish money to certain particular projects and to certain restricted groups. I have no objection to the R. A. C. C. continuing to function as it has functioned up to this time, so far as all the special projects and special groups are concerned. This amendment would not interfere with that operation. It could not do so, because those groups are very well organized. Loans may be made to them as they have been made in the past, and it would not be necessary to approve the Senate committee amendment in order to permit this Corporation to function as it is now functioning.

It is very well known that the R. A. C. C. has approximately $44,000,000, as I recall. It was partially liquidated. That $44,000,000 is adequate to take care of the special projects and special groups which have been served through this Corporation. In addition, the $44,000,000 may be expanded to the extent of at least $250,000,000 for general loan purposes under the original act creating the Corporation. It is possible that that fund might be expanded beyond $250,000,000, but the Senate can see at a glance that if the R. A. C. C. is to be revived and put back in full operation, it will add at least $250,000,000 to the debt of this Corporation and the R. F. C.

Our debt is high enough; our obligation is already heavy enough; and at this time there is no possible reason for the revival of this Corporation. Bear in mind that the particular projects and special groups such as the apple growers, who were referred to last night by my distinguished friend from Washington [Mr. BONE], can be cared for by the Corporation. I have no doubt that they can be cared for without the language proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. BONE. What sort of machinery would be provided for caring for them as the Senator suggests? This provision forbids the use of any money whatever to pay the expenses of anyone in connection with the servicing and processing of loans.

Mr. GEORGE. How have they been cared for?

Mr. BONE. They have made their loans through the R. A. C. C.

Mr. GEORGE. Through what agent?

Mr. BONE. The R. A. C. C. at present has two agencies left which are functioning, one at Minneapolis and one in Wenatchee. The Wenatchee agent, as I understand, is the man who processes the loans. He is the man on the ground. There is not very much of a staff. I think there is only one man there.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me suggest to the Senator that if he would offer a very simple amendment, I think he might meet the situation.

Mr. BONE. In the event that the Senate should not sustain the committee—and I hope it will not do so—I have an amendment which I think would serve to protect Wenatchee, but I was hopeful that I would not have to tender the amendment. I will read it to the Senator. It is in the form of a proviso:

On page 96, strike out the period at end of line 2 and insert in lieu thereof a colon and the following language: "Provided, however, That in any region in which commodity loans were being made on December 1, 1942, under the above-mentioned Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932, as amended, such credit program then in effect, shall be continued, and the officers and employees of the Department of Agriculture, or any bureau, office, agency, or service of said department, necessary in the administration of such program in such region, shall be retained, and compensation for their services is hereby specifically authorized."

That would narrow the operation, and filter it down to one or two spots.

Mr. GEORGE. It is broad enough to cover any area in which the R. A. C. C. has been functioning.

Mr. BONE. It would apply to any area in which it was functioning and making loans on December 1, 1942. As I recall, the testimony before the committee was that only two sections were receiving aid on December 1, 1942. There was one office at Minneapolis, and one at Wenatchee. On that date no other section of the country was receiving this loan service. I have hesitated to offer the amendment because I do not want to put myself in the position of cutting out other sections. It would save the Wenatchee section, because on that date loans were being processed and serviced in the Wenatchee area, and I understand out of the Minneapolis office, but nowhere else in the country. If I am in error I hope I will be corrected, but that is my understanding. I presented that view to the committee, and it was not challenged there, so I felt that I was fairly accurate in that assumption.

Mr. GEORGE. I would not have the slightest objection to that, or any similar amendment which would accomplish the purpose.

Mr. BONE. I will say further to my friend from Georgia that I showed this amendment to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] yesterday and he told me he would have no objection to it. I have hesitated to offer it, because it would very materially narrow the activity. Nevertheless, I wish to serve the people in Wenatchee. Last year they were loaned $8,000,000, which has all been paid back.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand.

Mr. BONE. They are going ahead with their own program if they can be given this little help in the extension of Government credit.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have said all I desire to say on this amendment. I simply wish to prevent the expansion or revival of the agency as such throughout the country, because it is wholly unnecessary. It cannot be justified. We are wide open to the charge that we are extravagant, that we do not wish to bring about any economies, that we do not wish to rid the country of any overriding bureau. There can be no possible reason for the revival of this corporation in the wide areas of the country in which it has been dormant for several years.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I have only a very short time, but I am glad to yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let me ask the Senator whether he objects to the so-called nonrecourse loans which are being made for the production of needed war crops?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; I do. They have occasioned a great deal of difficulty. The bottleneck is not money. The bottleneck is manpower and machinery. The nonrecourse loans, if dropped down into the middle of my home county, for instance, would almost eliminate every bona fide farmer who has put his own money into his farm operation, or made his own arrangements. It is easy to make the arrangement. He cannot compete with it. The nonrecourse borrower can bid for what little labor and machinery is left, but the production of food crops would not be increased. It would be decreased. I am now speaking of the general farming operation. I have no objection to the continuance of this corporation in any area, or with respect to any group which it has continued to serve during the time when it has been dormant in all other parts of the country.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. For example, take the production of flax. I understood that it was intended to finance as much as 650,000 acres of flax in North Dakota. Does the Senator contend that that activity should be financed by the local commercial banks or other institutions if the nonrecourse type of loan should be made under those circumstances?

Mr. GEORGE. I have some slight familiarity with the production of flax. It is backed today by one of the strongest financial corporations in the country, and there is no question of financial aid. There is involved a problem of labor and machinery, with which we are all familiar. But, the mere increase of credit facilities would not, in my opinion, help in the production of any vital war material or any food product.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to ask a further question.

Mr. GEORGE. However, if the corporation is functioning in that area, and with respect to that operation, I am suggesting that that operation be cared for and not be interrupted.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I know only what I glean from the testimony. It seemed to me that the testimony indicated that a considerable amount of financing had been done which seemed to be connected directly with increased production of needed war crops.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Georgia on the amendment has expired.

Mr. GEORGE. I will take time on the bill.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I am not very familiar with the operations of this corporation, but I am under the impression that it did a great deal of good at a time when farmers could not obtain credit.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; undoubtedly that is true.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. There has been some objection to it in the past year or two because it had many employees on the pay roll who went out soliciting ordinary loans.

Mr. GEORGE. That is true. There have been some abuses.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. However, with respect to financing the production of flax, I think that if the Government wants flax for war purposes it can afford, through some agency, to place nonrecourse loans to stimulate the production of flax. In the first place, there is a great deal of risk accompanying the production of flax. It is very sensitive to various kinds of diseases. It is very susceptible to frost, and, as a rule, the yield is very small. Ten bushels of flax to the acre is considered a very good crop.

I know that through its various agencies the Federal Government has been importuning the farmers in the areas where flax can be grown greatly to increase the acreage of flax. I also know that farmers hesitate to take the risk. If flax is needed I do not believe that the farmers should be asked to assume a greater risk than they ordinarily would assume by putting in a large crop. One night of frost may kill half a million acres of flax.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. So if a greater production of flax is needed, some inducement should be offered to the farmers so that they would not be required to carry all the risk.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes. Let me state to the Senator that this amendment would not directly interfere with the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation. It has ample capital to take care of special situations.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. It has ample capital now?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; it has ample capital at the present time, without expanding

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I wish to point out that under the terms of this amendment the R. A. C. C. cannot use that capital, because the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation Act provides that the Corporation shall be managed by officers and agents to be appointed by the Farm Credit Administration under such rules and regulations as it may prescribe. Under the House language no regulations could be prescribed relating to the R. A. C. C. because the employees would be stricken from the pay roll. There is a further provision in the act creating the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation that all its loans shall be subject to the approval of the Farm Credit Administration. So none of those loans could be approved by any person who would not have his salary stopped under the House language. That is one of the reasons which prompted the Senate committee to strike out the provision.

The question is much more complicated than appears on the surface. Yesterday, when this amendment first came up, I stated that the members of the committee were divided in their opinion as to the necessity of making these loans. I think the committee was practically unanimous in believing that the R. A. C. C. should not make any F-1 loans in any event, and that F-2 loans should be confined to circumscribed areas and to projects already in operation.

If the House language should be adopted as it now stands, there would be grave question as to whether even the loans outstanding could be collected.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I fully agree with my colleague's statement. I wish an amendment could be drafted and offered in lieu of the committee amendment, or as a further amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the committee has been criticized a great deal for undertaking to legislate on this bill. When this matter was considered I think it was generally recognized that there should be some limiting provision. The question was an involved one. We did not know fully the views of the House. We knew that the House language would have an effect which even some of its authors would not anticipate. I am sure they had not anticipated the question of whether outstanding loans could be collected under that provision. For that reason I hope that the committee amendment will prevail. We shall meet with the House conferees, who will undoubtedly insist upon the House provision. I believe that some reasonable plan can be worked out in conference.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, that attitude on the part of the chairman of the subcommittee, my distinguished colleague, is quite agreeable to me. I think the problem can be met in the way he suggests. However, we ought to understand the situation as it is insofar as the general revival of this corporation as an operating agency throughout the country is concerned.

There is one thought I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate and my colleague, and that is with respect to the revival of the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation for the purpose of making of all types of loans. At one time I think that Dr. Black stated distinctly that he did expect to expand it wherever there was a necessity for it or a demand for money. More and more the Treasury is obliged to depend for the enormous financing operations involved in carrying the burdens of this war upon the country banks, upon the small banks, upon the banks which are in agricultural areas, and if those banks are to meet the unfair competition which in certain sections has developed—I do not say it is universal—they will be obliged practically to close up or they will be very seriously crippled. It is a matter which I think I am justified in saying has concerned the Treasury. Up to now financing operations have not had to involve what we speak of as country banks, local banks, in the agricultural areas; but henceforth such banks will have to carry a tremendous burden, and they ought not to be crippled, particularly when there is no need for the operations of this corporation in the general agricultural areas of the country, because credit is available in ample quantities, not only through Federal agencies but through ordinary commercial channels. The difficulty is in a superabundance of cheap credit which creates and aggravates an already desperate labor problem on the farm and even a machinery problem.

I had hoped that the differences on the amendment might be composed, and I should be agreeable to any disposition of it which I believe can be, and I am hopeful certainly will be in any event, worked out along the lines my colleague has indicated. I did not make the motion to disagree with the committee amendment in the first instance, although, if the matter goes to a vote, I shall, of course, vote to eliminate it. I express the hope, however, that some general amendment or proviso may be offered which will make it possible to keep the matter open in conference so far as the operations of this corporation go in those areas and with respect to those special group interests that should be cared for.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I can assure my colleague that there is no disposition on the part of the committee to encourage the operation of the R. A. C. C. in connection with normal agricultural production under normal conditions. Undoubtedly, there is ample credit available for normal operations under normal conditions at the present time, but I think that it would be most unwise to permit the House provision to be agreed to in its present form, because it would even endanger the collection of more than $30,000,000 of loans already outstanding, and it would prevent the fulfillment of commitments which have already been made and which have been partially undertaken, in addition to destroying the special areas referred to by the Senator from Washington. Of course, we can protect them by amendments here on the floor, but the other matters cannot be so protected.

I hope the Senate will vote for the committee amendment, in order that this matter may go to conference, where we will endeavor to work it out on a fair basis. The House is not going to surrender on this question without any struggle; Senators may be assured of that, and the Senate conferees are not encouraging the making of loans by the R. A. C. C. for normal operations under normal conditions. I can assure the Senator that will not be done.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, let me ask him, if this amendment should prevail and the Corporation should be eliminated, what then would be the status of the loans which have been made? Would liquidation or collection of the loans be transferred to some other agency?

Mr. RUSSELL. That is one of the reasons I gave in advocating the committee amendment, which would leave this matter open so that we can endeavor to work out problems of that kind. The committee was advised that, if its amendment were not agreed to, there would be doubt as to the ability of the Farm Credit Administration to pay people, even to undertake to collect loans outstanding, and it would cause confusion on commitments already made. That was one of the reasons which prompted the Senate committee to strike out the provision in the House bill, in order that we might attempt to clarify all those details, and not do an injustice to any citizen or to the Government.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, did the House bill provide for liquidation?

Mr. RUSSELL. The House position was to absolutely close down the operation of the R. A. C. C. at the present time by the simple expedient of denying them any funds for any administrative expenditures whatever.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Did it provide for liquidation?

Mr. RUSSELL. It did not provide for liquidation. It did not even provide for the collection of loans; but merely provided that no person should be paid any compensation carried in the appropriation contained in this bill to perform any function or approve any activity of the R. A. C. C. The Senate committee has recommended that that be stricken in order that there may be some fair adjustment of this matter without leaving it in that very uncertain and nebulous condition.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. May I ask the Senator another question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LUCAS in the chair). The time of the Senator from Georgia has expired on the bill and on the amendment.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia has not the floor.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I thought I had the floor. I asked for recognition when the Senator from Georgia had finished.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not recognize the Senator from Minnesota. He merely said that the time of the Senator from Georgia had expired on both the amendment and the bill. The Chair now recognizes the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. BONE. The very question the Senator from Minnesota asked the Senator from Georgia and the explanation he has offered about the hopeless involvement in winding up the affairs of this agency in case we should not accept the views of the committee, has made me hesitate to offer the amendment I suggested, because if we accept the House language with this amendment, I have been far from certain whether I would accomplish what I sought to accomplish, and would add anything whatever to a matter that is already hopelessly confused.

The suggestion of the Senator from Georgia is that we accept the views of the committee, our own committee, and let the question go to conference and see what can be worked out. Perhaps that is the best plan; I do not know; but I do not want merely to offer an amendment which would provide no relief for a district which was one of the distressed areas of the United States—I refer to Wenatchee—and so declared by the President of the United States. These loans were a Godsend to the people there; they are now paying their debts a hundred cents on the dollar, and very promptly. I cannot stand on this floor and permit the destruction of this activity without protest, especially when it does not represent anything except the Government extending a little credit to people who need it.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Of course, it was an emergency corporation created to meet an emergency. What I am wondering about is what will happen to these loans if this Corporation is now eliminated, and who will liquidate and make collections.

Mr. BONE. If there is no authorization to spend a penny of money for anyone handling the loans, either making the loans or collecting them, I do not know what would happen. We would have to have emergency legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia a question. Would the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington——

Mr. BONE. I have not offered it as yet.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator has not offered it, but if he should offer it, would it not enable the conference committee to work out a satisfactory solution?

Mr. RUSSELL. I hardly think it would, because we would have in conference only the provisions of the loans which were made prior to 1942.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. If we strike out the House provision——

Mr. RUSSELL. No; the Senator proposed to add this in case the committee amendment were rejected and the House provision were left in the bill. The Senator from Washington proposes to offer an amendment to the House language, as a result of which there would be no such language in conference in the way of the House language.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I hope the Senator from Georgia can propose a compromise which will be satisfactory. The provision brought in by the committee is absolutely unsatisfactory to me, and I shall have to vote against it if it comes to a vote, yet I should like to see the matter adjusted and worked out. The R. A. C. C., as it is operating all over the country, opening up new agencies, going into the loan business on a land-office scale, with nonrecourse loans, is an inflationary influence of the most extravagant nature, and it should be stopped and must be stopped. It seems to me we are dealing with a question which is of vital importance.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator has been present during the consideration of the bill, and he has heard the criticisms which have already been leveled at the committee for undertaking to iron out certain matters which had been given most careful consideration in the committee. While I should like to settle this matter on the floor by an amendment, I would not undertake to draw an amendment at this late hour and offer it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Senator from Colorado has not only heard the discussion and participated in the voting, but he has supported the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. I appreciate the fact that the Senator has, but he can realize that it would be most difficult for me to draft language here and now which would conform with all the divergent views on this subject. It would be impossible for me to do so.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that the seeding season is over. The nonrecourse loans have been made. Provision should be made for their collection, and for carrying out the payments in case of loss, that is, the cancelation of payments on whatever terms the nonrecourse notes are made. Collection must be made of loans outstanding. Unless some provision is made for it, unless someone shall be given authority to make collections, I do not know what will happen to all these loans. I think there is now no necessity for this Corporation going out and soliciting loans among farmers, unless it be for the purpose of inducing farmers to produce risky crops in aid of the war effort. If they are asked to increase acreage and take increased risks, I think the nonrecourse loans are justified, and should be carried out.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am as strongly opposed to the solicitation of loans as described by the Senator from Minnesota as is any other Senator. I say that, as a general matter, the solicitation of loans by any Federal agency, except for especially difficult crops, is now absolutely inexcusable.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Anyone who could not get a loan from private sources should be able to get it somewhere, and at a reasonable rate of interest, if it is a good risk.

Mr. RUSSELL. I agree wholly with the Senator as to ordinary risks.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question of the junior Senator from Georgia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired both on the bill and the amendment.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Nebraska about the financing of the corporation under discussion, and I invite the attention of the Senator from Georgia. I understand that it gets its funds from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and has funds available to handle the servicing of its outstanding loans.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President——

Mr. BALL. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska for a comment on that.

Mr. WHERRY. My understanding of the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation set-up, as it was organized in 1942, is that it is a subsidiary of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and that whatever its province and power, it operates under the Farm Credit Administration. The Farm Credit Administration appoints any supervisor it cares to appoint, and the supervising and all expenses are paid for out of the funds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. This is provided in section 1148 of the original act, and that is the way it has operated since 1932.

I helped make loans in Omaha. The Corporation had an organization of their own, and they were responsible to the R. F. C. for the set-up. The testimony of Governor Black is that at this time they have $44,500,000 on hand, and they can use that for all expenses incurred in connection with the operation of the Corporation.

This was brought out in the other House; the same matter was argued there that is now being discussed. What the junior Senator from Georgia is suggesting is only his own opinion. There is no authority in the hearings, except that of Governor Black, for saying that if this amendment is deleted they cannot continue to function as they have functioned since 1932. Otherwise, there is no authority in the hearings.

Mr. President, I respect the opinion of the junior Senator from Georgia. He has a right to his opinion, but we all have our own opinions, and I wish to know whether if this provision is reinstated, the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation can continue to operate under its set-up as it has since 1932. The only thing we provide is that no appropriations in the pending measure shall be turned over to the R. A. C. C. They can continue to service loans they have already made by the funds they have on hand, under the provisions of the section to which I have referred.

Mr. RUSSELL. Will the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. BALL. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. Of course, the Senator from Nebraska is entitled to his opinion, but I do not think anyone could be more in error than the Senator has been in the statement he has just made.

Under the language creating the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation, the corporation must be managed by officers and agents to be appointed by the Farm Credit Administration, under such rules and regulations as the Farm Credit Administration may prescribe. Under the limitation in section 2, if the Farm Credit Administration undertook to prescribe any rule or regulation relating to the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation, the salary of the Governor or officer of the Farm Credit Corporation carried in the pending bill would be immediately extinguished.

There is no question that this House language stops the R. A. A. C.'s dead in its tracks, because in the act it is provided—and I invite the attention of Senators to a reading of the act—"that the corporations are hereby authorized and empowered to make loans and advances to farmers and stockmen the proceeds of which are to be used for an agricultural purpose, including crop production, or for the raising, breeding, fattening, or marketing of livestock, and charge such rates of interest or discount thereon as in their judgment are fair and equitable, subject to the approval of the Farm Credit Administration."

They cannot take a step that does not have to be approved by the Farm Credit Administration, and this amendment would stop them right where they are, because if the officials of the Farm Credit Administration undertake to comply with the duty imposed upon them by statute, of approving any of these acts, or prescribing any rule or regulation for the making of these loans, they will immediately be rendered ineligible to receive the salaries provided for in the appropriation to which this limitation applies.

If the Senate wishes to strike this Corporation dead, and cause the confusion which will result as to whether or not it can be liquidated at all, as to whether or not, where two of four advances on a loan had been made, the others could not be made, or as to whether or not these special projects should be kept alive, it has the right to do so; there cannot be any question about that. Representative HORAN, of Washington, made a very fervent plea on the floor of the House for the project in his State, recognizing, as was appreciated by all Members of the House, that this language would have the effect of closing down the project in the Wenatchee Valley. I understand there is another project, in Minnesota, which is similarly situated, but I do not know the details of it, since no one appeared before the committee in behalf of that project.

The law further provides:

> Each Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation created under the authority of section 1148 of this act, in addition to the powers granted prior to August 11, 1937—

And be it said this is an amendment to the basic act—> shall have, and, upon order or approval of the Farm Credit Administration, shall exercise, the following rights, powers, and authority.

Nothing could be clearer under the law. It is even so clear that he who runs and who wishes to do so, may read. It is so clear that even a wayfaring man could understand that this Corporation could not move a hand or take a step under the language inserted by the House. I say it is a very grave question whether it would even be authorized to collect an outstanding loan.

Mr. President, I have no great interest in this matter, but I do think that the Senate should consider well before it leaves an agency of Government in such a position as this amendment would leave the R. A. C. C.

I have stated, and I repeat, that the Senate committee did not believe that these F-1 or credit loans be made in competition with existing lending facilities, and undoubtedly there is ample credit available today for most farmers without the R. A. C. C. Everyone on the committee has had it drummed into him ever since we brought the bill onto the floor that when an attempt is made to do what is now proposed to be done on the floor, no one knows what the effect will be. We do not know what the effect of the proposed action will be, and no Senator knows how far-reaching it will be in its effect.

In my judgment the Senate should accept the Senate committee amendment, and let us see what can be worked out on this matter in conference. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] will be a member of the conference. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] will be a member of the conference on this bill. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] will also be members, and so will the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], as well as the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. President, I think we can work this matter out equitably without trying on the floor of the Senate to write in language when no one knows how far-reaching its effect will be.

Mr. BALL. I thank the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words in support of the position taken by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL]. At the present time there are 1,100 bankruptcy actions filed by farmers under the Frazier-Lempke Act and pending in North Dakota. I do not know how many bankruptcy actions are pending in Minnesota, but I know some are pending there. Thousands of persons in my State cannot obtain a loan from the banks. I should like to have my distinguished friend the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] go to North Dakota and investigate conditions there. He and the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] have spoken of the many banks which are bulging with money. There are thousands upon thousands of good, fine, honest farmers in North Dakota who cannot borrow one penny from the banks. There are farmers in North Dakota who, until 2 years ago, have not had any crop in 10 years. As soon as they obtained some money they were compelled to use it to pay their taxes in order to save their farms.

There are thousands of Indians in North Dakota, and the average bank in North Dakota will not lend money to an Indian. When I was Governor of North Dakota I got down on my knees to some of the banks there and tried to persuade them to lend money to Indians, but they arbitrarily refused to do so. It was not until the F. S. A. was established, and the loans we are now discussing were made available, that the Indians were able to obtain sufficient money to buy 8 or 10 or 12 cows and to establish themselves on farms.

Mr. President, I repeat what I said yesterday, that the farmers are now getting along quite well, but they are still in debt. Many of them have boys who are growing to an age when they want to establish themselves on quarter sections of land, but they cannot obtain money for that purpose except by way of these nonrecours loans.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] stated yesterday that the program in question represented a step toward communism. I wish to say to the Senate that this is the first time in my life I have heard a statement to the effect that if a man can obtain a loan with which to buy a piece of land, and own that piece of land, and become a capitalist, that is a trend toward communism. It is just the opposite, because every man who obtains one of those loans becomes a home owner.

I wish to return to the conditions which existed in 1932. I wish to show Senators the effect of these loans in North Dakota alone during the last 4 or 5 years. Six years ago we heard much about the effort which was being made to strike the names of Communist candidates from the ballots. Laws were passed in six States providing that Communists could not have their names placed on the ballots.

Mr. President, what causes a man to become a Communist? If a laboring man cannot pay his rent and is thrown out of his home and has no place to go with his wife and children, he may become a Communist. When President Roosevelt was first elected, in the same election the Communist candidate who ran against me received 5,000 Communist votes. The President after his election gave us the Farm Security Administration and gave us nonrecourse loans, and what happened? Many of those who had previously been Communists became home owners. Each owned a little plot of land of his own, and 2 years later only 1,100 Communist votes were cast in North Dakota. In 1936, as the F. S. A. development continued, only 333 votes were cast for the Communist ticket in the State of North Dakota.

Mr. President, those who borrow money under the F. S. A. are poor people. For the first time in a generation they have had someone in Washington trying to help them. We in North Dakota need the nonrecourse loans if the food so necessary for the war effort is to be produced. As was so eloquently stated by the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] yesterday, if we are going to produce the much needed food the men who produce must be encouraged. Unless these nonrecourse loans are afforded them, many small farmers will not be able to continue to produce food.

In conclusion, I call attention to the fact that the payments made by those who have obtained nonrecourse loans represent a remarkable achievement. The borrowers, according to statistics, have paid back more than 50 percent of the money borrowed, and they have done so at a time when they have been compelled to pay in taxes all they have accumulated, and to repay seed and feed loans.

Mr. President, I hope the committee amendment will be supported by everyone who believes in helping poor folks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BONE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LUCAS in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Andrews	Gillette	Nye
Austin	Green	O'Daniel
Bailey	Guffey	O'Mahoney

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 95, line 12.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I respectfully suggest that the Senator is entitled to a record vote on a matter of this importance. I am sure we shall save time if he is allowed to have one. It hardly seems fair that the Senate should be unwilling to go on record in this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair can do nothing about that.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let me suggest that the Chair recapitulate his count and see.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will be glad to recapitulate.

On a second count, on the persuasion of the Senator from Michigan, a sufficient number have seconded the demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I merely desire to point out that I did not make the point of order against the second count.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator had made the point of order, the Chair would have sustained it.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Chair state the pending question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 95, line 12.

Mr. BONE. A "yea" vote would be an agreement with the committee amendment; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, has the roll call been commenced?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll call has not as yet been commenced.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Then I desire to say a word before the vote is taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has already spoken on the amendment. The Senator has a right to speak on the bill if he desires to do so.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes; I simply wish to say that I came today with the intention of voting for the committee amendment. In view of the questions which have arisen in the debate today, I think the matter should go to conference in order to get further information about the nonrecourse loans, and to clear up the points raised in the discussion which has been had on both sides of the question, very logically, by those who are on the two sides. If I correctly understand, the Senator is opposing a controversial amendment of this kind on the floor of the Senate, although he is not a member of the committee. I do not like to vote on such a proposition; but I shall have to do so with the hope that the matter will be cleared up in conference.

Mr. MURRAY subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at a point preceding the action of the Senate on the committee amendment on page 95, a statement prepared by the Montana Livestock Association in support of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

CREDIT FOR AGRICULTURE

On August 7, 1919, steers on the Chicago market, weighing 1,050, sold for $12.60 per hundredweight. Cows on the same date sold for $9.25 per hundredweight. Approximately the same date in 1920, steers of the same class, same weight, on the same market, sold for $6.25; cows $4.35. This was the beginning of the depression that was generally considered brought about by World War No. 1.

The winter of 1919 was one of the severest known in this Northwest country. Stockmen, as a whole, had been purchasing land and building up their livestock numbers; many of them rather heavily in debt. On top of that, most of them had to borrow more money to purchase additional feed to get their stock through that severe winter.

In the early twenties, the stockmen found themselves very heavily in debt, and the banks found themselves short of money, and not being able to rediscount livestock paper. Therefore, the situation was so serious that, in order to save the banks and the farmers and ranchmen, something had to be done about the money situation.

Congress came to the rescue by making an appropriation and setting up the War Finance Corporation under the management of Eugene Meyer. The War Finance Corporation loaned money to the ranchmen to pay the banks, providing the bank would guarantee the loan. Later on prices began to improve; ranchmen got in better financial position, and the War Finance Corporation was liquidated.

After 10 years, history repeated itself; the crash of 1929, stockmen again found themselves in a very critical situation, the same as they had in the early twenties. Again the Government came to the rescue of the ranchmen and the banks by creating the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and then creating the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation to finance agriculture.

After going through these two strenuous periods, the Department of Agriculture realized that there should be some permanent set-up controlled by the Government to take care of these situations; therefore, in 1933 Congress enacted the Farm Credit Act. The discussions clearly indicated that Congress intended the system to be cooperative, to be permanent, and to be ultimately owned by the farmers and stockmen of the country, and that lastly, it should be free of political interference since it was not intended that the system should lend Government money.

Congress was the first large body to recognize that agricultural credit needs were seasonal, dependent upon types of farming, and that loanable funds must be available when and as needed. With all the years of experience by banking institutions, banks failed to recognize this need; consequently agriculture never received proper consideration until Congress passed the Farm Credit Act of 1933.

You will note that part of the act authorizing the formation of the production credit system was simple and brief and yet one of the most complete pieces of legislation ever enacted.

You will note in the copy of the Summary of Operations for 1942 that the associations throughout the United States served 265,749 farmers. To this number of farmers the associations advanced $477,714,000. All members of the association did not borrow as their financial condition was such that they did not need to use the facilities of the organization. The total membership at the end of 1942 was 317,633 stockholders.

Since stockholders are accorded the privilege of listing their stock for sale when they do not care to use the facilities of the association, many in the past 9 years have taken advantage of this opportunity. In the Spokane district, for example, the 30 associations had 11,660 members, but during the past 9 years more than 18,000 farmers and stockmen have used the production credit associations. The majority of those not members today were able to improve their financial condition to such an extent that it is questionable when it will be necessary for them to borrow again. On the other hand, those retaining membership in the association who do not borrow believe in cooperation and are leaving their stock investment in the organization for two reasons: First, they have a place to borrow when they need to, and second, to help capitalize and strengthen the organization which served them well when credit was not available elsewhere.

I have had occasion at various times to visit with Members of Congress and note that there still exists a general impression that the associations are lending Government money. Of course, you are busy having to keep track of all matters of legislation so you have a good excuse for not being acquainted with all the ins and outs of the operations of production credit associations.

This letter, together with the two pamphlets which I am sending you, are intended to help you get better acquainted with the work being carried on within the State by your farmer friends and mine.

Banks throughout the country are appealing to Congress for help. This is only natural since all banks are flooded with deposits, and general prosperity of the public leaves them without many loans in their note pouch. Production credit associations do not accept deposits, so are not confronted with this problem. However, our business likewise is down because of the prosperity of the farmers and stockmen. While the banks in this district are appealing to you for aid, it would be interesting to note that if the loans in the production credit system in the four Northwest States were divided amongst the banks making agricultural loans, it would only increase the loans in the note pouch by $40,000 per bank.

One of the great services rendered by Production Credit was the general lowering of all rates of interest to farmers. Banks have lowered their rates but, of course, have not met the Production Credit Association rate, (4½ percent) except to a few preferred clients. Our rate is 4½ to every farmer and stockman. The banks' rates vary from 4½ to 8 percent and the man or farmer who has the least ability to pay interest is generally charged the 8 percent.

Another thing that you will be interested in is the preservation of the original $120,000,000 appropriated by Congress. This money was promptly invested in bonds and used to capitalize the associations. If the system were to be liquidated today the Government would receive not $120,000,000 but $147,000,000. The net worth of the system is $171,685,000. Of this amount the farmer-members have invested $23,034,000 of their own money. Legal reserves and surplus built up by the associations amount to $25,090,000, so it can be said that the system has been successful even beyond the original expectations of Congress when the act was passed.

Another item in which you will be interested is that the system has received no appropriation from Congress since the original appropriation in 1933. It is entirely self-supporting, operates economically, and best of all has decentralized authority. As you know, each district is supervised by a production credit corporation. The corporation does not make loans, it merely organizes, capitalizes, and supervises production credit associations.

It holds stock in the production credit associations, receives dividends when dividends are declared, it operates on a budget and supports the main office in Kansas City.

It is interesting to note that while the bankers throughout the country are attacking production credit associations in this State, the following bankers helped incorporate production credit associations by attending the organization meetings and signing the papers of incorporation.

These bankers knew at the time that the system was to be permanent, yet they recognized its need, wanted it organized, and worked hard to get the associations started.

R. E. Towle, manager, Federal Reserve Bank, Helena branch; A. T. Hibbard, president, Union Bank & Trust Co., Helena; P. B. McClintock, cashier, Farmers National Bank, Chinook; Fred Heinecke, president, First National Bank & Trust Co., Helena; E. F. Galt, vice president, First National Bank, Great Falls; J. G. Reitsch, vice president, Union Bank & Trust Co., Helena; Howard Doggett, banker, Townsend; R. P. Findlater, vice president, Bank of Miles City; George C. Sinton, banker, Manhattan; Axel Nelson, vice president, Richland National Bank, Sidney; L. Pride, president, Baker National Bank, Baker; T. L. Ryerson, vice president, First State Bank, Froid; C. H. Rittenaur, vice president, First National Bank, Helena; J. E. Brown, banker, Havre; H. D. Myrick, director, Federal Reserve Bank, Helena; C. J. Cutz, cashier, Stockmen's Bank, Cascade.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays having been ordered, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McCLELLAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON]. I am not advised how he would vote if present. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], who, I am advised, would vote "yea." Therefore, I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is absent on official business for the Committee on Military Affairs.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] is absent on official business for the Special Committee to Investigate the National Defense Program. I am advised that if present and voting, he would vote "yea."

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] are detained on important public business. I am advised that if present and voting, the Senator from Louisiana would vote "yea."

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], who is necessarily absent, has a general pair with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED].

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] who is detained on important public business, is paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY]. I am advised that if present and voting, the Senator from Maryland would vote "nay," and the Senator from Oregon would vote "yea."

Mr. WHITE. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] is detained at the House of Representatives on important official business. If present he would vote "yea." He is paired on this question with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS].

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. REVERCOMB], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WILLIS] are absent on official business.

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] are members of the congressional committee attending the funeral of the late Representative Guyer, and are therefore necessarily absent from the city.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] would vote "nay," if present.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BUCK], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON] are necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 41, nays 31, as follows:

So the committee amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment passed over.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 84, after line 24, it is proposed to strike out:

Loans: For loans in accordance with sections 3, 4, and 5, and for the purchase of property and costs and expenses incurred in connection therewith in accordance with section 7 of the Rural Electrification Act of May 20, 1936, as amended (7 U. S. C. 901–914), $20,000,000.

Total, Rural Electrification Administration, $22,258,000.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, in view of the objections which have been raised to the legislative provision for handling this item through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, as has been done in past years, I have consulted with as many members of the committee as I could reach—and I think I have talked with all of them, with possibly one or two exceptions—and I shall therefore ask that the Senate reject the committee amendment, which struck out the direct appropriation on the part of the House. I shall then offer an amendment from the floor increasing the appropriation to $30,000,000, the amount of the Budget estimate. It will make no difference in the operation of the Rural Electrification Administration. The only difference that will obtain will be in the method of handling the funds. For the past 4 or 5 years the R. E. A. has been financed by Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans. That requires legislation on an appropriation bill. It makes no difference to the R. E. A. or those who are interested in the cooperatives where the funds come from so long as the cooperatives are permitted to operate.

I therefore hope, Mr. President, that the committee amendment will be rejected. I shall then offer an amendment from the floor increasing the appropriation to $30,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 84, after line 24.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I now offer an amendment, on page 85, line 4, to strike out "$20,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$30,000,000"; and in line 5, to strike out "$22,258,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$32,258,000."

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. What difference would this amendment make in the operation of the R. E. A.?

Mr. RUSSELL. It would not make any difference. The R. E. A. has funds available, and will expend them under the substantive act creating the Rural Electrification Administration. In times past we have provided for borrowing funds from the R. F. C. That requires legislation, because the basic act has no provision for borrowing funds from the R. F. C.

Mr. SMITH. I was a little curious to know why the language involving the $20,000,000 was stricken out.

Mr. RUSSELL. It was done because the Senate committee instructed me to offer a legislative proposal for borrowing $30,000,000 from the R. F. C. That was offered as a substitute, and a point of order was made against the legislative provision, so we handled it by way of a direct appropriation. So far as the operation of rural cooperatives is concerned, it does not make a particle of difference. Under the terms of the amendment which I have offered, they will receive the full amount of $30,000,000 estimated by the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. SMITH. As I understand, the language proposed to be stricken out by the committee will remain in the bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is true. The Senate has rejected the committee amendment. The language which appears in the bill as it came from the House will be retained, and my amendment proposes to increase the amount from $20,000,000 to $30,000,000.

Mr. SMITH. What effect would that have on the operation of the R. E. A.?

Mr. RUSSELL. It would have no effect whatever. It would not touch the basic act creating the Rural Electrification Administration. The provision which had been suggested in the nature of legislation to permit borrowing from the R. F. C. had only to do with the source from which the funds were to be derived, and did not in any degree affect the local cooperatives in their operations.

Mr. SMITH. I am merely wondering why the Senator wants to increase the figure to $30,000,000.

Mr. RUSSELL. Because we thought that amount was necessary to enable the cooperatives to continue their development and growth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, by direction of the committee, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 54, line 3, after the words "Chief Forester", it is proposed to insert "at $9,500 per annum."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the other day the question was raised as to what the effect might be upon other salaries in the Forestry Service. I have a letter from the United States Civil Service Commission, which I should like to have included in the RECORD.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, may the letter be read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES
CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., June 2, 1943.

HON. CARL HAYDEN,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR HAYDEN: This is in answer to your request for an explanation of the situation which would be created with respect to the salaries of key positions in the Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture in case the salary of the Chief Forester, the head of the bureau, were fixed at $9,500 by specific legislative enactment.

In case this action should be taken by the Congress, there would be under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, no result flowing automatically therefrom which would affect the salaries of other positions. Since the salary ceiling in the bureau would be raised, the Commission would not be surprised to receive from the Department a request for the upward reallocation of key positions in the bureau immediately below the Chief. Action on such a departmental request, however, would be subject to the Commission's determination after careful consideration of the responsibilities of the positions concerned, their relationships with the Chief's position and to each other, and especially the kind and degree of responsibility delegated by the Chief to key positions concerned.

In similar instances which have occurred in the past, action by Congress in raising the salary ceiling within a bureau has permitted the Civil Service Commission to recognize classification levels for certain key positions which it felt it could not previously recognize because the result would be a definite conflict with the salary of the bureau chief. Legislatively raising the salary of the chief in those cases removed the conflict.

It may be that in the case of the Forest Service a similar result will occur, but each individual case will be thoroughly analyzed by the Commission on its merits.

Sincerely yours,

WM. C. HULL,
Executive Assistant.

Mr. HAYDEN. The question was asked the other day, when this proposal was made, whether it would have the effect referred to in the letter, and I stated I did not want the amendment adopted by the Senate under any misapprehension. For that reason I have placed the letter in the RECORD. The changes cannot amount to much. Senators who are familiar with the Forest Service will remember that Mr. Clapp has been the acting head of the Service and therefore has been drawing $9,000. He now goes back to the status of bureau chief and will draw $8,000. The fact that he has those responsibilities might permit of a salary reclassification. My main argument in favor of the amendment is that the Forest Service is one of the chief bureaus of the Department of Agriculture. Practically every other bureau chief is receiving a larger salary. The Chief of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics receives $10,000 a year; the Chief of the Agricultural Research Administration receives $10,000 a year, the Chief of the Commodity Credit Corporation receives $10,000; the Chief of the Agricultural Marketing Administration receives $10,000; the Chief of the Rural Electrification Administration receives $10,000; the Chief of the Farm Credit Administration receives $10,000, and the Chief of the Farm Security Administration receives $10,000.

Certainly a modest increase of $500 in this instance would be fully justified.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not at all propose to dispute the assertions that the Chief Forester is a splendid public servant, and that he is entitled to the amount recommended which is very small. But, I believe it is clear from the letter which has been read by the clerk, that while such an increase would not automatically compel a raise in grade and raise in pay of all subordinates in that bureau, it would, as a practical matter, tend to have that effect. We all know that that is the way in which this agglutinative process of magnification takes place in the Government, that officials get together and promote one man and everybody else is promoted accordingly. If that is what we want to do, we ought to do it consciously and not by indirection.

Mr. President, moreover it seems to me that a case can be made out for other officials which would be just as good and equally as strong as the case made out for this particular official. By taking the action proposed we would set a precedent which would undoubtedly be used in the very near future, because we are acting on the whole question of what to do about adjusting the compensation of Government employees in the light of the inflationary forces which are at work in the country. I believe we should deal with the matter as a major problem, and not in a piecemeal manner. In my opinion this is a legislative question in its essence, and I am growing more and more disturbed at the way in which the Appropriations Committee, of which I am a member, undertakes constantly to pass upon legislative matters. I know the motive behind it. It is a natural one, namely that an appropriation bill must be passed; it is one bill which will not be pigeonholed. So, if we attach something to it, it has a good chance to be enacted into law. That is certainly a practical consideration, and we want to be practical. We do not want any doctrinaire or theoretical consideration to prevent us from doing what we think is right. But in the Appropriations Committee there is not the background of knowledge concerning such matters that exists in a legislative committee. The Appropriations Committee does not hear both sides. The testimony it receives is usually of an ex parte nature, and the result is that we take up a lot of odds and ends and our efforts result in a hodgepodge. As I say, I am sure the official in this particular case is entitled to the recommended promotion, but I do not think this is the proper way to proceed.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I make the point of order that this is general legislation.

Mr. HAYDEN. The point of order is conceded. There is no question about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

The clerk will state the next committee amendment passed over.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 65, after line 8, it is proposed to insert:

WAR FOOD ADMINISTRATION

Salaries and expenses: For expenses necessary to enable the War Food Administration to perform its functions, including those prescribed by Executive Orders 9280, 9322, 9328, and 9334, independently or in cooperation (by transfer of funds or otherwise) with public and private agencies and individuals, including not to exceed $10,000 per annum for an Administrator; other personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; not to exceed $50,000 for the temporary employment of persons or organizations by contract or otherwise without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; printing and binding; the purchase of lawbooks, books of reference, periodicals, and newspapers; the purchase, operation, and maintenance (including two in the District of Columbia) of passenger-carrying vehicles; $25,000,000: Provided, That transfers of funds to other offices or administrative units in the Department with respect to which transfers of funds are otherwise authorized in this act shall be in addition to, and subject to the same restrictions as, the amounts provided therefor in the Budget schedules.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, this is the appropriation for the War Food Administration, presided over by Mr. Chester Davis. It went over the other day at the request of some Senator.

I wish to say that, of all the public officials who have ever appeared before the committee, I have never seen one who more convinced the committee that he was trying to provide an economical administration than Mr. Davis, and, in view of the duties which are imposed on him, I think this is a very reasonable request. I wish to say to the Senator from Ohio, who raised the point that they were getting ready to set up entirely new committees throughout the country, that Mr. Davis assured the committee that he had no such intention in mind and that no new committees would be set up anywhere.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I have read the testimony since the other day, and I quite agree that if Mr. Davis can carry out the plan he has in mind he will reduce duplication rather than increase it. I certainly shall not oppose the appropriation, but I hope that his assurance and the assurance of the committee will be carried out.

Mr. RUSSELL. I join the Senator in the hope he has expressed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment passed over.

The next amendment passed over was an amendment offered by Mr. RUSSELL, on page 78, after line 12, to insert:

EXPORTATION AND DOMESTIC CONSUMPTION OF AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to further carry out the provisions of section 32, as amended, of the act entitled "An act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes," approved August 24, 1935, and subject to all provisions of law relating to the expenditure of funds appropriated by such section, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, funds appropriated by or for the purposes of section 32 of said act shall be available to the Secretary of Agriculture for the maintenance, expansion, and operation of a school milk and lunch program under clause (2) of said section 32: Provided, That such funds shall be available for such purposes during the fiscal year 1944 without regard to the requirement therein relating to the encouragement of domestic consumption.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, that amendment also went over on request of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. What was the amendment? I thought the clerk referred to an amendment on page 78.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment just read, to come in on page 78, was offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] under the heading "Exportation and domestic consumption of agricultural commodities."

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, is the amendment accompanied by a motion to suspend the rule?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment be again stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will again state the amendment.

The amendment was again stated.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 4, after the numerals "32", it is proposed to insert the words "in a sum not exceeding $35,000,000."

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I do not wish to oppose the continuation this year of the school-lunch program. The amendment proposes simply that it be not enlarged beyond its present scope. The expenditures last year amounted to $26,000,000. It is said that the cost of food is now somewhat greater and that certain services heretofore rendered by the W. P. A. can no longer be continued. I, therefore, have made the figure $35,000,000 instead of $26,000,000 which was the amount for the current year, with the idea that such an appropriation will enable the continuation of the school-lunch program in its present form.

Mr. President, I desire to give notice that next year I certainly shall oppose any provision of this kind in the appropriation bill, because it does not belong in an appropriation bill. The only reason I do not like to oppose it now is that this program is in effect; many children are receiving this assistance; many school districts are receiving the assistance, and have budgeted their programs for the next year, so that it would be very difficult for many of them to change their plans. Furthermore, it is almost impossible to get through general legislation before the first of July of this year, and, therefore, I do not want to oppose the continuation of the program. But, Mr. President, every possible objection that can be made to legislation on an appropriation bill can be made to this provision.

There is no law authorizing such a program as is now carried on in behalf of school lunches in this country. All Senators know how the program started. It was started by the Surplus Commodity Credit Corporation. They had certain surplus commodities and desired to find places where they could advantageously use them, where they could give them away, if you please, and they found that the school lunch was a good place, and no doubt it was an excellent place.

Undoubtedly they did have a great many surplus commodities. Now there are no longer any surplus commodities, and I say they have taken this surplus-commodities program and turned it into a subsidy program, and are paying the people providing the lunches direct subsidies, amounting to approximately $10 per child per year, a few cents subsidy every day, subsidies which go to every child, although three-fourths of the children are perfectly able to pay for the lunches.

The act under which it is done, the Surplus Commodities Act, provides that the Corporation may encourage domestic consumption by diverting commodities from the normal channels of trade and commerce. This program is no longer diverting any commodities from the normal channels of trade and commerce. It is entirely apart from the purpose of the act, and a Nation-wide program to feed and subsidize all the school children in the United States was developed wholly without legal authority.

Mr. President, it is a typical example of what has happened repeatedly in the spread of governmental bureaus. It is particularly obnoxious, in my opinion, when it sets up a Nation-wide program in which the Federal Government deals directly with people throughout the entire United States, bypasses the ordinary school system, bypasses all the States themselves, and undertakes to distribute bounty, if you please, to individuals scattered throughout the United States.

To cite merely a few of the similar activities of bureaus showing the usurpations of authority which have occurred, I cite first the Lanham Act. Congress passed the Lanham Act to help schools in the areas around camps and around new industrial plants, which were growing so rapidly that the local people could not take care of the situation. What happened? The Federal Works Agency took over the old W. P. A. organization, and has proceeded to spread the money to schools, not only for education, but they have set up nurseries to take care of the children of women workers, without the slightest legal authority.

The subsidy program which is now proposed has the merest shadow of legislative authority. The W. P. A. are proposing to spend $500,000 through the R. F. C., without any legal authority whatever, and if their claim that there is some legal authority is valid, it will authorize them to spend five billion or ten billion dollars just as well as the four hundred or four hundred and fifty million dollars they are talking about.

We saw the order which practically abolished all tariffs on goods coming into the United States, under the shadow of a little bill intended to permit naval vessels coming home to bring the stores they acquired in foreign countries.

We saw under the lend-lease program an effort to expand it into a measure to lower our tariffs after the war, and make reciprocal agreements—a usurpation of authority condemned unanimously by the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate.

I hear every day B. E. W. is doing this and that—so far as I am concerned—wholly beyond any legislative authority.

The Federal Government, without any authority, has required the Governors of all the States to turn over the State employment agencies, and has set up a Federal employment system throughout the United States, without any legal authority.

We have today seen how the local rehabilitation loan business has gradually expanded, beyond any authority granted by Congress, requiring us again to legislate on an appropriation bill, if we want to continue it.

Mr. President, it seems to me that Congress must now take a firm stand, and say that we will not authorize or justify or appropriate for activities which are undertaken without any legal authority from Congress.

In the second place, this program violates all the principles of State aid, because it bypasses the States. The lunch money is handed out to the local school districts which happen to have lunch programs. If not, so far as I can ascertain, it is handed out to Rotary Clubs, who may be conducting such lunch programs, or it may be handed out to parent-teachers' associations, wholly irresponsible bodies, scattered all over the United States, none of them, so far as I know, subject to any audit by the Comptroller General of the United States.

If we are to have this kind of program, it should be carried on through the State boards of education, which should supervise the arrangements for the lunches. If we should undertake to legislate on the subject, we would have a different system, a very much better system, than now prevails.

Incidentally, there is no assurance of local contribution; there is no requirement. The officials of the Government bureau may subsidize the whole lunch program, or they may subsidize one-tenth of it. They may discriminate in favor of one district against another, or in favor of one State against another. There is no general legislation providing how the money shall be handed out, and to whom it shall go.

Mr. President, these are merely examples of the unwisdom of attempting to legislate on an appropriation bill, because when we do, we merely hand someone money which he can use practically without restriction. The Committee on Appropriations naturally has not considered the details, cannot consider them, cannot consider how the matter shall be handled, the kind of legislation required. The information at hand is wholly inadequate to enable us to deal with the situation with which we desire to deal.

Of course, there is a serious question as to whether the Federal Government should undertake to subsidize all the school children in the United States, regardless of their financial condition. The testimony shows the activity will cost about $10 per child a year. There are 25,000,000 school children in the United States. If we permit the expansion provided for, we may expand it from twenty-five million to fifty-nine million, but if the expansion continues, it can in the end cost $250,000,000 a year on the part of the Federal Government, if it covers the field undertaken by the Surplus Commodity Corporation in this respect.

Mr. President, it seems to me perfectly clear that while the argument against stopping this movement perhaps is sufficiently strong—and I do not wish to stop what is actually being done—there is no real ground for an expansion of the system.

It was stated a few days ago that the W. P. A. had ceased providing services in some cases, but the testimony of Mr. Hendrickson shows that only about one-third of all the projects received any W. P. A. aid, so that would not be a very material figure. There is no reason I can see why the local districts should not undertake to provide the assistance formerly given by W. P. A.

The Surplus Commodities Corporation are perfectly frank about the matter. They say, "Our present plans for 1944 contemplate a substantial expansion of the school-milk and school-lunch program."

I see no reason for that. It is not a war undertaking. In fact, probably there is less need for it now than there is in time of peace. There is more general prosperity, and the parents of the children are better able to take care of the matter. So it is a question of a permanent provision; it has no relation to the war.

In asking this limitation, I think it is fair to say that, so far as I know, this is the only case in which we are asked to increase a nonwar activity in the appropriation bills of this year. I see no reason why we should do so at this time, and I ask for support for my amendment fixing the figure at $35,000,000, which, according to all my information, will enable the Agency to continue the present program, but not to expand it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, on the day the bill came before the Senate I urged the importance of separate legislation clearly defining the responsibility of the Federal Government, the States, and local school districts for this program. The Congress should establish definite and clear standards. We cannot handle that matter in connection with the pending bill.

I hope the Senate will not agree to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio, limiting the appropriation to $35,000,000. While some order should be brought out of the present confused situation, that is a matter of legislation, and we have no assurance that legislation will be enacted, or, if legislation shall be enacted, that the sum which would be permitted under the amendment of the Senator from Ohio would be sufficient. There has been a very decided increase, as all Senators know, in the cost of food and of milk. The amount which the Senator from Ohio would allow, $35,000,000, might be enough under the increase at the present time to defray the cost of the food and milk which have been supplied to carry on the program in the same proportions as in effect today. But in the event there should be inadequate supplies of food of the kind which has been used, and it was necessary to purchase slightly more costly foods, it is entirely conceivable that the amendment of the Senator from Ohio could cause the abandonment of the school lunch and the school milk program in some of the schools of the Nation.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. What figure does the Senator from Georgia think would adequately continue the present program without expansion? I have no special brief for the figure $35,000,000, but it seemed to me that that amount would cover any possible increase in cost in food during the year.

Mr. RUSSELL. I may say to the Senator from Ohio that I do not know that we should confine ourselves absolutely to the program which is now in effect. I can conceive of very good reasons why this program should be given to some schools which do not have it at the present time. There are areas in the United States where this program is not today available to the schools, where a great number of the mothers of the children who attend those schools are at work in defense plants, thereby creating a great need for more care on the part of public agencies, such as the schools, to prevent the mounting tide of juvenile delinquency which is shocking the public conscience of the American people today. I do not think that we should so circumscribe this program that it would be likely that any school would be prevented from receiving the benefit of the milk program, even if the lunch program were not expanded in any of the schools of the country.

I wish to suggest to the Senator from Ohio that the original sum which was contemplated to be expended for this purpose in the Budget estimates which were sent to the House of Representatives was $81,000,000. The House refused to appropriate the unexpended balances of $25,000,000. The Senate committee also did not recommend that appropriation. Therefore, the amount which was available for the school-lunch program was reduced to $59,000,000. Under the Budget estimate as it stands today the $59,000,000 can, I may say, be spent on the school-lunch program. I should like to see some limitation or some restriction placed on the amount, but I could not accept the figure proposed by the Senator from Ohio. If no other committee member should object, I would have no objection to setting a definite figure which would not result in materially restricting the school-lunch program. If the Senator were to propose $50,000,000 I would not oppose it.

Mr. TAFT. $50,000,000—that figure seems large. How about $45,000,000?

Mr. RUSSELL. No; I could not accept that figure.

Mr. TAFT. I will modify my proposal by suggesting $50,000,000. I wish to place a limit on the amount. I feel very strongly that the program should be carried forward within that limitation. Mr. President, in the amendment offered on behalf of the committee, on page 2, line 4, after "32", I move to insert "in a sum not exceeding $50,000,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio to the amendment offered on behalf of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment offered on behalf of the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 86, line 16, after the words "Farm Credit Administration" and before the semicolon it is proposed to insert "Provided, That the requirement (12 U. S. C. 952) that Federal land banks and joint stock land banks shall be examined at least twice each year is hereby modified so that such examinations need be made only once each year: Provided further, That the expenses and salaries of employees engaged in such examinations shall be assessed against the said corporations, banks, or institutions in accordance with the provisions of existing laws except that the amounts collected from the Federal land banks, joint stock land banks, and Federal intermediate credit banks pursuant to the Act of July 17, 1916, as amended (12 U. S. C. 657), shall be covered into the Treasury and credited to a special fund, and the Administration shall estimate the cost to the Farm Credit Administration of the administrative supervision of the Federal land banks, the banks for cooperatives, the Federal intermediate credit banks, and the production credit corporations for the fiscal year 1944 and shall apportion the amount so determined among such banks and corporations on such equitable basis as said Administration shall determine and shall assess and collect such amounts in advance from such banks and corporations and the amount so collected shall be covered into the Treasury and credited to said special fund, which fund is hereby made available to said Administration for expenditure for the purposes set forth in this appropriation: Provided further, That as soon as practicable after June 30, 1944, said Administration shall determine, on a fair and reasonable basis, (1) the cost of the examination services rendered during the fiscal year 1944 to each Federal land bank, joint stock land bank, and Federal intermediate credit bank and (2) the amount which fairly and equitably should be allocated to each Federal land bank, bank for cooperatives, Federal intermediate credit bank, and production credit corporation as the cost during the fiscal year 1944 of their administrative supervision, and if the sum of these two items in any case is greater than the total amount collected from the bank or the corporation concerned, the difference shall be collected from such bank or corporation or, if less, shall be refunded from said special fund to the bank or the corporation entitled thereto."

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I undertook to discuss this amendment when the bill first came before the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. I understood the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] made a point of order against this amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL. No point of order was made against the amendment. A Senator suggested that it go over in order that he could have an opportunity to study it.

Mr. BAILEY. Is this the Bankhead amendment?

Mr. RUSSELL. No; this is not the Bankhead amendment. The amendment carries language which is in the bill at the present time, providing for payment for supervision of Federal land banks, supervision of Federal intermediate credit banks, supervision of banks for cooperatives, supervision of production credit corporations, examination of Federal land banks, Federal intermediate credit banks, and joint stock land banks by assessment against those institutions rather than by appropriation. It was approved in the Budget estimates this year. It was placed in the bill by the House committee, and went out on a point of order made by one Member on the floor of the House.

This item, Mr. President, is in the interest of economy. It is solely for the purpose of obtaining a reduction in the amount of the appropriation made for the administration of the Federal land banks. The amount asked is $2,049,019. If the Senate sees fit to reject this provision, which has already been in the bill, which is in operation now, with funds having already been set up by the affected units to defray the cost of this auditing, it will be necessary for me to offer an amendment from the floor increasing the appropriation by $2,000,000. The amendment saves the $2,000,000 and does not hurt anyone or anything.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered on behalf of the committee on page 86, line 16.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. That concludes all the amendments within the bill, and all the amendments I was directed by the committee to offer from the floor of the Senate. Having reached this stage, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Andrews	Gillette	Nye

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The bill is open to further amendment.

THE CORN SHORTAGE IN NEW ENGLAND

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, the most thought-provoking and direful news which has come to the American people for some months was the announcement in the morning press that the leaders having the matter in charge predict a food shortage in this Nation of ours. This morning in the Committee on Banking and Currency the distinguished president of the American Federation of Labor, Mr. Green, in the course of his remarks on the pending bill, said that our greatest duty is to stimulate the increased production of food; and, of course, we concur.

We have set up in this Nation administrations to regulate the prices and supplies of commodities. I now desire to speak to the Senate for approximately 3 minutes on one phase of the subject: the restrictions in the price and supply of a great commodity—corn—and the grain situation in the country.

I come from New England, and I hold a brief for the small farmers of the New England States who raise poultry for a living. They are a part of the $2,000,000,000 poultry industry. Those men, in a patriotic desire to cooperate with the Government and, at its request, with the county agents, have cooperated and have even doubled, in some cases, the supply of chickens and eggs this year, involving great effort and expense in chicken houses and equipment. They went ahead and made this contribution and effort at the Government's request for cooperation in securing greater food supplies. But now, as a result of this patriotic cooperation, they find themselves unable to buy a pound of corn anywhere in the New England States. We are faced with a shortage. Let me point out that the feeding of poultry is so delicately balanced that when an attempt is made to change the balanced ration used for feeding—a ration of which perhaps from 40 to 50 percent always is corn—the productive capacity of the flock is thrown out of balance and out of gear, and production is seriously impaired. When that is done, the food supply of the Nation is threatened.

The poultry producers acutely need the corn. They must have it. Where is it, Mr. President? Some of it is in the hands of the Government, some is in storage under loans, and some of it is so-called free corn. Where can we get it? We cannot get it, because the Government has put on it a ceiling price of $1.03 at Chicago, and by the time the corn has reached my district the price is approximately $1.20. Even so, it is impossible to obtain the corn, because the farmers will not sell it to the poultry producers. The farmers who have the corn feed it to hogs, and thus are able to obtain a larger income; and no one can blame them for doing that.

When I am asked what the remedy is, I make this suggestion: We have to have the production of our food supplies stimulated. The only solution I can see of this matter, after going through it to the full extent of my mental ability, is to increase the ceiling price of corn, and not only the price of corn, but the price of the things fabricated from corn and sold to the public in one form or another.

Some may say that such a procedure will increase costs. Perhaps in a measure it will. We have already had certain price increases throughout the country, but, above all things, the desideratum is to obtain the production of food necessary to be had in order to feed the Nation, and for lend-lease to our allies, and for our armed forces abroad.

So, Mr. President, without further ado, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD—I shall not take time to read them—a series of letters and telegrams which have been sent by the operators of poultry farms and by grain dealers in my State and in other New England States. I ask that they be printed as a part of my remarks, and that the Senate carefully consider this situation which is so pregnant with direful consequences for the American people as a whole.

There being no objection, the letters and telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MANCHESTER, N. H., June 8, 1943.

Hon. CHARLES W. TOBEY,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR TOBEY: After hearing for a number of years about the tremendous surpluses of grain which the Government has accumulated, it comes as something of a shock to learn that there is only about a week's supply of stock and poultry feed in New Hampshire and that the prospects of its being replenished are not good. If the surpluses of grain do exist, I cannot understand why they should not be made available at this time, for it would be nothing short of a catastrophe if the poultry raisers of New Hampshire, who have increased their facilities at the Government's request, should be forced to liquidate their flocks for lack of an adequate supply of grain. Yet apparently this is the very situation which they are facing. The growers of cattle and hogs are apparently facing the same situation, and already the supply of hog ration is practically exhausted and I understand that none is being mixed.

I suppose that you have received many letters of a similar tenor from your constituents, and I would appreciate it if you would let me know what can be done and what you are doing to remedy the situation.

Yours very truly,

FREDERICK W. BRANCH.

CHRISTIE'S POULTRY FARMS,
Kingston, N. H., June 8, 1943.

Senator CHARLES W. TOBEY,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CHARLES: Referring to my telegram of yesterday, I am writing you at this time in more detail so that you will better understand the feed shortage situation which faces the poultry industry of our region, and the entire country for that matter. I understand that the bill authorizing the Department of Agriculture to release 50,000,000 bushels of feed wheat has been passed by both the Senate and House. This is a relief because it will take care of us so far as wheat is concerned, temporarily at least, but you must bear in mind that additional allotments should be made as soon as possible for future use.

Now about corn—the situation on corn is very critical. Large feed manufacturers and dealers of New England tell me that unless shipments of corn begin to roll East by next week that the corn situation will become even more critical than the wheat one has been. The reason for this is not because there is a shortage of corn, because we understand elevators all over the country are bulging out with corn, but because of Government restrictions on ceilings which makes it impossible for legitimate grain dealers to do a legitimate business. These grain dealers tell me that they can go out and sell an auction short and satisfy the needs of their customers, but if they did that they would lose anywhere from 3 to 6 cents a bushel, which of course they are not willing to do. The Government must release some corn and release it quickly. One method of doing so would be lifting the present price restriction.

* * * * * *

For your information chickens are a peculiar animal. They must be fed certain formulas day in and day out in order that they live, grow, and lay a lot of eggs. To do this they must have a complete balanced ration which cannot be changed from day to day. Corn supplies about from 40 to 50 percent of this ration and wheat or oats or any other grain cannot be substituted for corn, even for a single day, without throwing the birds' digestive system out of balance, and as a result, out of production immediately. If this happens there is nothing for the poultryman to do but to sell his hens because they will not come back in production for several months and no poultryman can afford to keep birds that are not laying for even a day.

Every time 5,000 laying hens are sold, the production of eggs from that flock alone drops 20,000 eggs each week. We need these eggs and chickens to feed our armies, our people at home, and for lend-lease purposes. You may be interested to know that prior to the war we only dried around 10,000,000 pounds of eggs in this country. This year's goal is between three hundred and four hundred million pounds of dried eggs. It will be impossible to achieve the dried-egg goal as well as the egg for home consumption and poultry meat end of it, if the industry is handicapped at every turn. Millions upon millions of hatching eggs and baby chicks are shipped out of New England to all parts of the country as foundation stock for next year's producers of market and hatching eggs, and baby chicks. If this source of supply is stymied in the least, not only our industry will suffer a tremendous economic loss but our war effort will suffer immensely, and we are more concerned about that than we are about our economic loss.

Your efforts to expedite movement of grains for poultry and livestock feeding purposes will be greatly appreciated.

Sincerely yours,

ANDREW CHRISTIE.

STRATHAM, N. H., June 4, 1943.

SENATOR TOBEY: The poultry industry is faced with a 25-percent immediate reduction in grain supplies. Much of it is due to western stockmen and Corn Belt farmers feeding out corn instead of shipping into the Northeast here to help poultrymen. All other grain stocks are correspondingly short.

The Government has urged the industry to new heights of production. Now a grain shortage. The whole thing is defeating itself. Please, as our Representative, look into this situation at once, or we will be forced to dispose of 25 percent of our laying and growing stock. Grass is a big help in growing pullets, and lawn clippings help layers and breeders, but we must have grain. We can't turn them off to pasture for the summer.

Sincerely,

DUANE YOUNG,
Owner, Pineview Chickery.

Senator CHARLES W. TOBEY,
United States Senate Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: We are grateful to you for the work you have done in getting the 50,000,000 bushels of wheat released through the Commodity Credit Corporation.

The lack of corn has caused a rise in the price of barley of 18 cents per bushel in 12 days. Oats, likewise, are going up. I give these figures merely for your information.

Every day that passes with no corn flowing east brings us nearer to the time when the livestock here will have to be fed a mere sustenance ration containing no corn. Normal delivery time on a car of corn from date of order to date of arrival is about 10 days. This means that if a concern owns a 10-day supply of corn today, they will be out at the end of that period unless orders for corn can be placed today. Yesterday's Chicago Market News says: "There was no trading in corn which was bid at ceilings."

Isn't there anyone in Washington who can do something about this serious situation?

Very truly yours,

Desperate feeding problem faces New Hampshire dairymen and poultrymen, especially the latter. Reports from millers advise impossible to get corn and wheat. Thousands of our people responded to appeal for poultry meat and eggs as with milk. Feeding situation now so desperate unless relief immediately comes thousands of chicks, broilers, and layers will go hungry, and day-old baby chicks do not live long without feed concentrates. Advice via Boston corn and wheat plentiful supply, but fixed price on corn forces holding from sale. Chance to secure supply through Chicago auction market at price above Office of Price Administration fixed price. Millers do not care to violate Federal prices fixed or take loss in July market, Chicago sold short. Check if possible Federal holding corn and wheat and do at once all possible to relieve desperate situation. Urge quick Senate approval of bill passed today by House authorizing sale 50,000,000 bushels Government-owned wheat. Urge favorable influence on quick transportation via Great Lakes grain authorized for entry from Canada. Quick action imperative.

The poultry industry of New England in general, and that of New Hampshire in particular, is the seed basket of the poultry industry of America As such it has contributed more to the development and welfare of our $2,000,000,000 industry than any other factor. Our industry is very vital to our war effort. A serious emergency faces the feeders of poultry and other livestock in New England due to the shortage of corn products. There will be no poultry industry left to boast about in New England unless something is done to relieve the situation right away and not 2 weeks from now. Please act immediately.

Owing to a serious emergency that faces the feeders of livestock and poultry throughout New England, due to the inability to purchase corn and wheat through Government or regular channels, we are appealing to you for instant action for relief. Inside of 2 weeks, if unable to get supplies of these two important grains, New England will face a definite feed famine, feeders will be unable to secure feed, and chaotic conditions will result. We believe that there is an adequate supply of corn and wheat in the country to take care of feeding requirements for all sections, but due to governmental restrictions and ceilings, we are unable to buy. The present bill up before the Senate for the allotment of 50,000,000 bushels feed wheat should be passed, also; additional allotments should be made for future use. Once again we emphasize that immediate action is necessary on your part to make supplies of these grains available in order to save the New England farmers, either through changes in corn ceilings or such other methods as can be devised.

We are bread bakers employing 75 persons supplying about 25,000 families here in New Hampshire. At present our inventory on corn sugar and corn byproducts will be exhausted in about 2 weeks. We wish you would use your office with Food Administrator Chester Davis, Office of Price Administration Administrator Prentiss Brown, Economic Director Fred Vinson for them to take immediate action to relieve the critical corn situation. Unless this corn situation is straightened out immediately, we will be forced to stop baking bread, which is essential.

ALBERT E. GENEST,
President, Genest Bros., Inc.,
Manchester, N. H.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, poultry and eggs are a part of the common diet of all men. We must have them; and unless the feed necessary for the flocks of hundreds of thousands of poultrymen throughout the United States is obtained by them, I state today—and I say this advisedly—that they will become so discouraged about the situation that they will go out of business.

One man in my State of New Hampshire committed suicide. He had destroyed his flock. He was aided, perhaps, in his efforts to continue operations; but, nevertheless, he became discouraged and lost faith. The Government which had encouraged him went back on him when he came to get the supply of food he needed for his flock.

Mr. President, I have taken these few moments to raise my voice in behalf of the necessities of the poultry producers of the Eastern States.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, on behalf of the committee, I send to the desk an amendment which I offer. The amendment calls for no appropriation. It is legislation. I desire to make a brief statement concerning it. I ask first that the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALLGREN in the chair). The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill, it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. —. That notwithstanding the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, or any other provision of law, any owner, lessee, tenant, or operator of any farm land on which a substantial part of any crop was destroyed or damaged by flood or by insect infestation in 1943 so that abandonment or replanting of such crop is necessary, may market without penalty the actual production of cotton from any acreage planted on such farm land and the planting in 1943 of any acreage in excess of the farm cotton acreage allotment on such farm land shall not cause the producer to suffer any deduction or loss of eligibility for payment, commodity loans, or price support: Provided, That the acreage in excess of the farm-acreage allotment in 1943 shall not constitute past acreage or past production of cotton in determining the farm, county, or State acreage allotment for any subsequent year.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, we have had a very disastrous flood in the central-southern portion of the country. This flood has caused great damage in Arkansas and in Oklahoma. Under the present law the farmers in that area have a quota for the production of cotton. They may not exceed that quota unless the restrictions are removed. My amendment proposes to remove the restrictions on the planting of cotton in the green bug infested and flooded areas. The amendment is recommended by Mr. Chester Davis, Food Administrator. I ask unanimous consent that the letter from Mr. Davis be inserted in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WAR FOOD ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, June 1, 1943.

HON. HAMPTON P. FULMER,
Chairman, Committee on Agriculture,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. FULMER: This replies to your letter of May 24, 1943, to the Secretary of Agriculture, requesting a report on H. R. 2766, amending the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. MONRONEY, of Oklahoma.

The bill would provide that, on farms on which the substantial portion of any crop was destroyed or damaged by flood or insect infestation, cotton could be planted, produced, and marketed without regard to present marketing quota provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, and without causing the producer to be subject to deductions or loss of eligibility for payment, commodity loans, or price support.

I favor such legislation with respect to marketing quotas as would enable me to meet emergency situations where it is determined that the lifting of marketing quotas would increase the production of food and feed crops. I understand that this is the purpose of the proposed legislation. The committee may wish to consider whether the same objective could be reached by a more general provision.

In view of your request that this report be submitted immediately, we have not had an opportunity to clear it with the Bureau of the Budget, and, accordingly, we are not advised as to the relationship of this proposed legislation to the program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

CHESTER C. DAVIS,
Administrator.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this amendment removes the quota restrictions on the production of cotton in the green bug-infested and the flood-destroyed areas, and only for this year. Farmers in the northern part of the cotton belt can still plant cotton and have an opportunity to raise a crop if the fall is a little late. This is an effort to give the farmers in this distressed area an opportunity to raise a cotton crop this year. The amendment affects only the northern boundary of the cotton district, which is on the Arkansas River in the main, and covers territory in my State and in the Panhandle of Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I understand that all other amendments are now disposed of. I wish to make a motion. I offered an amendment with respect to which a point of order was sustained, and I have on file a motion to suspend the rule. At this time I make the motion to suspend the rule so that that amendment may be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, although I have the honor in part to represent a State which is predominantly agricultural, perhaps in a larger degree than any other State in the Union, yet, so far as I recall, I have not participated in any way in the debate on the pending measure. I have not asked for recognition, or occupied any of the time of the Senate. However, I feel that a few words should be said with reference to the motion which has just been made in the effort to bring before the Senate the amendment proposed by the illustrious Senator from Alabama.

I am impelled to make these few remarks, Mr. President, principally because of the superb address which was made the other day by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], and the further fact that the following morning one of the Washington newspapers carried, in headlines, a statement to the effect that the Senator from Alabama was attempting to revive the efforts of the farm bloc to break through the price ceilings.

That statement is so at variance with the facts that one cannot choose but to make reference to it. I do not blame the young men and women who report the proceedings and debates in the Senate. In most instances I find, on reading the press releases with reference to measures of this kind, that there is nothing in the statements of the news articles themselves, as reported by those young people, to offer any justification for the headlines. They do not write the headlines. Neither do they write the editorials.

Referring again to the statement of the learned Senator from North Carolina, I think I can agree with almost every word he said. He made a superb address. He referred to John L. Lewis.

At this point let me digress to say that the American people are prone to think in terms of symbols. At the present time John L. Lewis is a symbol of the object of the resentment of the American people against certain labor practices, whether John L. Lewis is responsible for them or not. I hold no brief for John L. Lewis, but I simply say that he has become a symbol of the object of all the resentment against improper labor practices, just as a short time ago my good friend Leon Henderson became a symbol for the object of every type of resentment against certain restrictions, rules, and regulations of the O. P. A., and just as another good Iowan, Harry Hopkins, has become in the minds of the people a symbol for the object of their resentment against any governmental administrative agencies which they designate under the heading "New Deal."

The Senator from North Carolina very properly referred to the danger of breaking through the price ceilings, which might, and probably would, result in all the evils of uncontrolled inflation. He very cogently, logically, and earnestly spoke along that line. However, his remarks, erudite as they were, and worth listening to as they were, have no reference whatever to the pending measure.

Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina spoke of the danger of breaking through the price ceilings. I refer to the Price Control Act which was approved on October 2 last. Let me read from that act:

That in order to aid in the effective prosecution of the war, the President is authorized and directed, on or before November 1, 1942, to issue a general order stabilizing prices, wages, and salaries, affecting the cost of living; and, except as otherwise provided in this act, such stabilization shall so far as practicable be on the basis of the levels which existed on September 15, 1942.

I supported that measure, as did other Senators. I am sure the Senator from Alabama supported it. A large majority of the Congress supported it. It is the law, authorizingthe President to fix price levels to "hold the line." The Executive authority has attempted to do so.

However, we placed two limitations in the act:

SEC. 3. No maximum price shall be established or maintained for any agricultural commodity under authority of this act or otherwise below a price which will reflect to producers of agricultural commodities the higher of the following prices, as determined and published by the Secretary of Agriculture:

(1) The parity price for such commodity (adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials), or, in case a comparable price has been determined for such commodity under and in accordance with the provisions of section 3 (b) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, such comparable price (adjusted in the same manner); or

and no maximum price shall be established or maintained under authority of this act or otherwise for any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any agricultural commodity below a price which will reflect to the producers of such agricultural commodity a price therefor equal to the higher of the prices specified in clauses (1) and (2) of this section.

Further—

SEC. 4. No action shall be taken under authority of this act with respect to wages or salaries (1) which is inconsistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, or the National Labor Relations Act, or (2) for the purpose of reducing the wages or salaries for any particular work below the highest wages or salaries paid therefor between January 1, and September 15, 1942: Provided, That the President may, without regard to the limitation contained in clause (2), adjust wages or salaries to the extent that he finds necessary in any case to correct gross inequities and also aid in the effective prosecution of the war.

With those limitations, we authorized the President to hold the lines. One of the lines was based on a parity formula. He could not put a price level on foodstuffs or articles processed in whole or in part from farm products, below a point which would reflect what? First, the parity price. What is the parity price? I shall not again enter upon that old discussion. It is more familiar to other Senators than it is to me.

On the 31st of May there came a statement from the Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the Department of Agriculture, fixing a certain parity list of prices based on the formula which we had laid down in the law. The so-called parity prices were computed. Conservation payments are not one of the factors taken into consideration under the law which we enacted.

Let me use this illustration: I use it particularly with reference to the esteemed Senator from North Carolina. I do not know whether the Senator has a farm in North Carolina or not. I hope he has. Let us suppose that he has.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GILLETTE. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. Let me enlighten the Senator. I have a farm in North Carolina, but I quit operating it, and for 12 years have not allowed anyone else to operate it. I am more prosperous and better off by reason of that policy.

Mr. GILLETTE. I am glad the Senator has made that statement. Thousands of farmers throughout the United States have found that that situation applies to them, and even more of them will find it applicable, if permission is granted to manipulate and distort the laws which are enacted by the Congress of the United States.

Let us assume that the Senator still has his farm, and that he raises cotton on it.

Mr. BAILEY. That is not correct.

Mr. GILLETTE. On the first day of June the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, under the formula we laid down, said that the parity price of cotton is 20.21 cents.

Now let us assume the Senator, as a United States Senator—and he is one of the best—operates a farm. As a Senator he draws $10,000 a year, and earns five times that much. Let us assume that in the legislative appropriation bill—I ask Senators to listen to this—when a sum of money was appropriated to pay the salaries of the United States Senators, including the Senator from North Carolina, there was added a provision that no portion, not a dollar, of the money appropriated for the salaries thereunder, should be used in computing the parity price for cotton on any farm in North Carolina or elsewhere.

That is not ridiculous. That is comparable. What does the Senator draw his $10,000 a year for? For raising cotton? For raising corn? He draws his salary for his services in the United States Senate. When an appropriation of money is made for the purpose of paying his salary, it should not be necessary to add that the salary cannot be used in determining whether the Senator has a parity price for the cotton produced on his farm in North Carolina. But apparently it is necessary in the case affected by the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. President, allow me to refer again to the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938. Listen to what these payments are for. They are not to pay the Senator's salary, nor to compute the price. I read from section 2 of the act:

It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress—

Under the Soil Conservation Act—for the purpose of conserving natural resources, preventing the wasteful use of soil fertility, * * * through the encouragement of soil-building and soil-conserving crops and practices—

To do so and so.

Subject to these limitations the Secretary is authorized to pay conservation payments to farmers. For what? I quote from the act:

(1) Their treatment or use of their land, or a part thereof, for soil restoration, soil conservation.

(2) Changes in the use of their lands—

The extent to which the utilization of cropland on the farm conforms to farm practices which the Secretary determines, and measures to prevent run-off by the building of check dams and ponds, and providing for facilities for applying water to the land, and flood control.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GILLETTE. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I remember distinctly when the Farm Conservation Act was passed. It was based to a large extent upon a survey made by the Department of Agriculture, the Forestry officials, the National Resources Board, and other agencies, indicating the great loss of a national asset, in the matter of soil, due to lack of soil conservation. By erosion, for instance, a hundred million acres of the richest farm land in the United States had been destroyed forever.

The theory of the act, and the expenditure of funds for conservation on the soil, was not based on paying the farmer for raising crops. It was to pay the farmers the cost of maintaining and building up the soil for future generations, as a great national asset. So long as these payments are made for the purpose of preserving and improving a national asset, of course it is ridiculous to add the cost paid for the conservation of this national asset to the parity price of the farmer.

Mr. GILLETTE. I thank the Senator from Minnesota. He is wholly correct.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. And it was never so intended.

Mr. GILLETTE. The Senator is entirely correct. The payments were made for a specific purpose. The money is appropriated for the specific purpose of soil building, flood control, and to preserve the fertility of the soil and the money is paid to the farmer for not raising the crop on the land, not for determining the price of what he has to sell.

Why in the world should it be taken into consideration in determining parity price? It is not under the law, and the law provides those factors. Why should the salary of the Senator from North Carolina be applied to the price of cotton, tobacco, corn, or wheat, on his farm in North Carolina?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. GILLETTE. I will take 15 minutes on the bill. The Senator's salary should be computed in determining his income, but not the price of the commodity which he has to sell; and there is no reason why conservation payments should be applied in computing parity price.

What was done under the law? Contracts were made with farmers last year. We said to them, "Conform to these soil-building, flood-control, conservation practices. Conform to them by putting in other types of crops, and we will pay you compensation for doing so." Those contracts were entered into, and the payments are due. We are providing in this bill a sum of money to pay them.

Now, the Senator from Alabama offers an amendment providing that these amounts shall not be used in computing the parity price for farm products. Why is it necessary to do that? Why should it be necessary to put into a legislative appropriation bill a prohibition against computing a legislative salary on a price? It is unique. But why is it here? Because of the fact that the executive authority has issued an order that soil-conservation payments shall be taken into consideration in determining the price ceilings.

The esteemed former Justice of the Supreme Court, the able former Member of this body, the highly respected Director of War Mobilization, Mr. Byrnes, whom we all love, appeared before the Agricultural Committee, and was asked categorically, "Do you think this ought to be considered in determining a parity price?" He replied, "Gentlemen, I am acting under that directive," and he read it. It was a directive from the President of the United States, which said that in determining price ceilings soil-conservation or benefit payments should be taken into consideration.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GILLETTE. I yield.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Is it not possible that all soil conservation payments might be made to individuals entirely different from those who raise the commodities on which a price is to be established?

Mr. GILLETTE. I thank the Senator. It is not only possible, but true in thousands and thousands of cases. There are areas in the United States—for instance, I come from a corn-producing State—which are outside the commercial corn-producing area. They cannot participate in a dollar of the fund. There are thousands and thousands of farmers in the South and in the East who cannot come in under the restrictions and limitations because they do not raise on their farms in a year more than 400 bushels of corn, which I think is the limitation.

So they cannot be considered, but the price they get for the corn and for the cotton is determined. Why, in the name of all that is sensible and reasonable, should they be compelled to figure in in order to determine the price a payment to someone else for a contract he has made and a consideration that he has paid? It is just as unreasonable as to expect in determining the price of cotton on a Senator's farm that there should be figured in his legislative salary.

Mr. President, I do not desire to occupy any more time.

Mr. WILEY and Mr. RUSSELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. GILLETTE. I yield first to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. WILEY. I am sorry I did not hear everything the Senator said. I wonder if he has put into the RECORD in his remarks the articles and commodities which have already reached parity?

Mr. GILLETTE. I have not, I will say to the Senator, but I have in my hand the Statistical Summary issued by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics as of May 31, 1943, containing a tabulation of parity prices for farm products and actual prices received as of that date. I shall be glad to put it into the RECORD, if the Senator desires.

Mr. WILEY. I should be glad to have the Senator do so. I think it would be very illuminating to anyone reading his remarks.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the table referred to be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

Mr. GILLETTE. I now yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the able Senator in his remarks referred to the confusion caused by press reports as to the effect of this amendment. I might say that the confusion is not confined to those who cover the proceedings of the Senate, for a great many Senators seem to be under the impression that this amendment is the same proposal which the Congress passed sometime ago and which was vetoed by the President. I hope before the Senator concludes his remarks he will clarify this situation, because it is certainly not the same measure. It relates only to a small part of the bill which was vetoed by the President; it affects only soil-conservation payments.

Mr. GILLETTE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. RUSSELL. I should like further to have the Senator point out, if he has not already done so, that this amendment, if agreed to, would not have the effect of increasing the market price of commodities, because all of them except wheat are at or above parity at the present time, but it would be an assurance that there could be no roll-back on the farmer of the amount of the soil-conservation payments received by him. It would not necessarily result in increasing the cost of wheat by one dime because of the fact that if these payments were not computed the price ceilings could still be in effect, and the amount of the parity payments made to the wheat farmers would merely be increased by the amount protected by the amendment. So, while it might have a psychological effect, so far as adding to the cost of commodities in the market place is concerned, I am of the opinion it would not add anything to such cost.

Mr. GILLETTE. I thank the Senator from Georgia. Of course, he is absolutely correct. He has stated his second proposal in much better terms than I could state it, but I may supplement what he said by stating that it is not the purpose of the amendment of the Senator from Alabama to break through the price ceilings at all. It would be absolutely unable to do so if it were so desired. It is simply intended to protect the appropriation made for a specific purpose and to see that it goes to that purpose and is not prostituted and channeled into another purpose.

With reference to the first point raised by the Senator from Georgia, I may say I am glad that he called attention to it. The original proposal which was voted on by the Senate, and which was passed, as I recall, by a vote of 78 to 2, prohibited the computation of any type of benefit payments in determining the price level. I think that was just and proper, but that was the measure the President vetoed and the measure which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture. The amendment now under consideration is limited entirely to soil conservation payments and no other kind of payments, and to no other purpose except to protect the appropriation which is made.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Mr. President——

Mr. GILLETTE. If the Senator from South Dakota desires to ask a question I yield to him.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Mr. President, I am very much in accord with the distinguished Senator from Iowa in the presentation of the case in regard to what was known as the original Bankhead bill; but what we are considering today is something else entirely. The Senate passed the Bankhead bill, as the Senator stated, by a vote of 78 to 2, as I remember. I voted with the majority for the bill because I thought the ideas contained in it were substantially correct and should be placed in the law. That bill was passed by both Houses of Congress and went to the President. The President vetoed it and returned it to the Senate, stating in detail his reasons for the veto. The Senate then referred the bill back to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The committee started holding hearings upon the bill and met for several days, but it is my understanding—and if I am mistaken I should like to be corrected—that the distinguished Senator from Alabama requested the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to discontinue its hearings; and I heard nothing further about bringing the bill before the Senate.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I have no recollection of making a request of anybody. I did think it was unwise at that time to proceed, because, as every Senator knows, we took that bill back to the committee not because of objections to the bill itself, but because of the labor problem which confronted us.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. I thank the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, as chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, let me say that I approached the Senator from Alabama and asked him if he wanted the commitee to report the bill back to the Senate, and he said "No."

Mr. BANKHEAD. I did not want it done at that time.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. I thank the Senator. It was my understanding that it was not further considered because of the request or desire or the feeling of the Senator from Alabama that the bill should not be brought out.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is what I just stated.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. The committee was going into an extended series of hearings for the purpose of proving, as we believed, that the President was mistaken in his reasons for his veto. We believed we could prove that, but when the hearings were discontinued, for whatever reason they were discontinued, so far as I was concerned, that seemed to end the matter.

Now this matter is sought to be brought in through the back door, as it were, instead of marching up the front aisle and entering the Senate there; it is brought in by an amendment to the pending appropriation bill. Personally, while I am very new in this body and not especially familiar with its practices, I do not like this kind of procedure. I hope the Senate will vote down the motion of the Senator from Alabama. Let us consider this bill, if it has any merit, on its own bottom, and vote upon it simply as a bill which we think will be good for agriculture.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from South Dakota will not make me regret that I yielded to him in my time, because I think he is wholly wrong. There is such a difference between the two proposals that I think they ought not to be connected in any way. This is simply a definite proposal applied to an appropriation that is made in the pending bill specifying that the appropriation and the money under it shall go into channels and for purposes for which it was designed.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. GILLETTE. I yield.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if, in substance, the motion does not include the idea of the original Bankhead bill, at least in part?

Mr. GILLETTE. Oh, in part, certainly; I just stated that it did.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. That is all I want to know, and I will say to the distinguished Senator that I renew my objection to lugging this measure in through the back door instead of fighting it out on its merits.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President——

Mr. GILLETTE. I will yield to the Senator from Colorado in a moment. I will say that this is not an attempt to lug in by the back door a measure which has been vetoed and is before the committee. It can stand on its own feet and can live or die on that basis. This measure is simply to safeguard an appropriation made in the pending bill for a definite purpose. It is limited to soil-conservation payments.

I now yield to the Senator from Colorado in my time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question in my own time and get his answer in my own time, if I may.

Mr. GILLETTE. I yield the floor then.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. No; I want to ask the Senator from Iowa a question. He may yield the floor, and I will ask the question in my own time.

A few days ago in a colloquy between the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] and the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] I was intrigued by what they said to one another. The Senator from Oregon stated:

> I think the Senator said—
>
> Referring to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]—
> I think the Senator said, if his bill were to pass, the farmers of the country would benefit to the extent of $75,000,000 over their present prices.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] replied:

> No; I think the Senator will find it was about $250,000,000.
> Mr. McNARY. Some one said about $75,000,000, and I think that estimate was far too high.

What I am interested to know, and the inquiry I wish to propound to the Senator from Iowa is, Where is the $75,000,000 or $250,000,000 coming from?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the Senator permit me to answer the question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Iowa has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I am speaking in my own time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Senator from Iowa was speaking of this very point, and I should like to have him answer, and the Senator from Alabama can answer also.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I can answer it right now.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I want the Senator's answer, but I want the answer from the Senator from Iowa first.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very well.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I have not yielded to the Senator from Alabama. I want to have an answer from the Senator from Iowa. Where is the $75,000,000 or $250,000,000 to come from?

Mr. GILLETTE. I do not know. I took no part in the colloquy.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I do not care whether the Senator did take part in it or not. He made the statement a moment ago that the prices of agricultural commodities would not be increased 1 cent. Is not that what the Senator stated a moment ago?

Mr. GILLETTE. No; I did not say that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. What did the Senator say about prices?

Mr. GILLETTE. I do not know whether or not they will be increased. I say the purpose of this measure is not to break through the price ceiling. We have a provision in the law, the Price Control Act, which provided that the price ceiling should not be fixed below a point which does not reflect the parity price of the commodity consumed. The only purpose of the proposal before us is that in computing what the parity price is, whatever it may be, whether it is below the present market price or above it, there shall not be taken into consideration an appropriation made for another and utterly different purpose. That is the only contention the Senator has made.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. If we do not break through the ceiling, what benefits in dollars are the farmers going to receive from the pending bill?

Mr. GILLETTE. I do not know that they will receive a nickel, and that is not the purpose. I think behind the administration's action is the thought that we must hold prices at a certain level, that we must not let them break through the parity price. That is the idea, and the officials say, "In order to justify us against claims for increased wages, we shall insist that payments made for an entirely different purpose shall not be computed in determining the parity price on which the ceiling is based."

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I thank the Senator very much. I thought that was what he had in his mind, and I will say to him that that is the way I saw the problem, but I was somewhat confused by the colloquy between the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. GILLETTE. If I may interpolate, I have been a Member of the Senate for a number of years with the Senator, and I have never before seen the Senator confused.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. This is not the first time, I confess.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I think I can clarify the matter.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I should like to have the Senator do so.

Mr. BANKHEAD. So far as I understand—and I think the Senator from Oregon Mr. [McNARY] will agree—we were talking about the effect of the original bill, not the pending amendment. We had no reference to the effect of the pending amendment. I think the Senator from Colorado will recall that, in connection with the first bill, I presented figures showing the difference between the parity price and the commodity price of corn, as well as of wheat and of sugar, the only three articles affected, and while some claimed it would increase prices about a billion and a half dollars, I was making the argument that it could not do that, because the total difference between the market price and the parity price was only $250,000,000. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] was present at the time, and asked questions, and took part in the debate. I certainly did not have in mind anything in connection with the pending amendment, and I do not believe the Senator from Oregon did.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. No; the colloquy referred to the original Bankhead bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is true. It is my position, which I hope to have the privilege later of elaborating—and I think I can convince the Senator, at least I hope I can, for he is clear-minded and open-minded—that the pending amendment will not break through any line, and will not increase the prices of farm commodities a single cent. The Senator from Wisconsin asked how, then, would it help the farmers? I will say to the Senator that it will help them by preventing a reduction or roll-back in their prices equal to the total amount of the appropriation for soil conservation in the pending bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I thank the Senator very much. He has cleared up the matter in my mind to a considerable degree. I shall listen to his presentation of the matter, however, when he takes the floor in his own behalf.

COMBINATION OF TEMPORARY INCREASES IN FIRST-CLASS POSTAL RATES

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator permit me to make a report? I desire to report favorably House Joint Resolution 134. It is merely to continue the temporary increase in first-class postal rates, which have been in effect for a number of years. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the joint resolution by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 134) to continue the temporary increases in postal rates on first-class matter, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I believe one of the bills making this provision was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and probably that is the committee to which it should have been referred. However, inasmuch as the time when the 3-cent postage rate is to be in effect will expire on June 30, I think we should disregard the question of the particular committee to which the joint resolution should have been referred, and pass the measure. Therefore I have no objection, and I hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have no desire to make objection, but I should like to know whether there was unanimous consent on the part of the committee, or whether any objection or opposition was heard in this matter.

Mr. GEORGE. No; this is merely provision for a renewal of rates which have heretofore been increased. I consulted with a good many members of the committee, desiring to dispose of the matter today, and at the moment the Senator from Massachusetts was out of the Chamber, or I should have conferred with him.

Mr. LODGE. Has the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] been consulted regarding the matter?

Mr. GEORGE. No; the Senator from Oregon has not been consulted.

Mr. LODGE. In view of that fact, I think I had better suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. GEORGE. I had rather the Senator would not do that.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, do I have the floor?

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to leave the joint resolution temporarily on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The understanding of the Chair was that the Senator from North Carolina yielded for the presentation of a report.

Mr. BAILEY. I did, and I thought I acquiesced in what was going on, but we seem to be going from bad to worse, and I do not know what is up now. There has been a suggestion of the absence of a quorum.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] just asked how long I would speak. I told him very briefly. He has a very important matter he wishes to have taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from North Carolina that the Chair recognized the Senator from Georgia. The Chair has not recognized the Senator from North Carolina. The Chair recognized the Senator from Georgia to permit him to make a report.

Mr. BAILEY. I beg the pardon of the Senator from Georgia. I thought the Chair had recognized me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of Joint Resolution 134?

Mr. BAILEY. I do not know in what right I was speaking, if the Chair did not recognize me. But I shall take my seat, in order that the Senator from Georgia may proceed.

Mr. GEORGE. No, Mr. President; I simply reported a bill from the committee and asked unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] suggested the absence of a quorum because the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] was not present. I asked him to withhold the suggestion, and allow the bill to lie on the table.

Mr. LODGE. That is perfectly agreeable to me.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I may suggest that the bill might be passed with the understanding that if the Senator from Oregon objects the vote by which the bill was adopted can, without objection, be reconsidered.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was about to suggest that that be done.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Oregon will be here in a moment. I think the suggestion made by the Senator from Georgia that the measure lie on the table for a few minutes is a very practical one.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 796) relating to the use and operation by the United States of certain plants in the interests of the national defense.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I wish to make my bow to the very gracious Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] and thank him for his exceedingly kind remarks. I should like to feel at liberty to say as many things concerning him which I have in my own heart. I think I would undertake to speak not simply for myself, but for the entire Senate, in praise and admiration of him. I hope no one will think that in saying that I am indulging in anything like reciprocity. I welcome the opportunity to say that he enjoys the confidence and admiration and the friendship of every one of us. It is very pleasant to discuss this matter with one who is so fair and so intelligent, and it is not pleasant to disagree with him. He takes the view that I have rather misconceived this matter. If I have I am in good company. The President has the same conception of it that I have. I have no words from him other than his veto message, an official document which is on my desk.

In response to an inquiry made by the Senator from Colorado, the Senator from Alabama made the statement that there is nothing in his proposal for the farmer except that it provides against a roll-back with respect to the farmer.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does not the Senator think that it will do considerable good for the farmer if it prevents a roll-back against him?

Mr. BAILEY. It is a beautiful thought, but there is no danger of a roll-back of the farmers' prices, as everyone knows.

Mr. BANKHEAD. They have not had any, have they?

Mr. BAILEY. Not that I know of. The farmers' prices are stabilized, and the whole effort is to keep them from going up. I do not think the farmers are in danger of getting less. That is not the present concern of the Government. The Government's concern is to prevent them from getting so much more that the whole national economy would be upset.

The new argument with respect to the proposed legislation is not the getting of better prices for the farmers but to keep the farmers from getting lower prices. That is the new argument which is being made with respect to the matter. That, however, is negatived by the actual situation which exists.

The demands which I hear from all authorities of the Government are that we do something to freeze prices, not to do something to prevent them from going down. The roll-back of which a Government authority speaks is not a roll-back of farm prices. It is a roll-back of the prices to the consumer, without reducing the prices to the farmer. That is the whole theory. That would be the only justification for the roll-back. So if the Senator bases his amendment, not on improving the prices but preventing the farmers' prices from going down, I suggest that he will receive aid from sources infinitely greater than the Congress in preventing anything like a roll-back or depression of prices. Prices are rising and not falling. The whole effort of the Government is to keep them from going up, and nothing is needed now to be done to keep them from going down. They cannot be gotten down. I believe I have disposed of that feature to my own satisfaction.

With respect to another feature, the Senator first said the proposal was very different from the original Bankhead Act, which was vetoed. It is different in degree. It is not at all different in kind. It is precisely the same legislation, although it is limited to payments made out of funds appropriated under this item; that is the soil-conservation item. What did the original Bankhead Act provide? I have the words of the President for that. He said:

> I am returning S. 660, generally known as the Bankhead bill, unsigned. It is a bill to exclude in the determination of parity price any deduction for any subsidy payment, parity payment, incentive payment, or other payment made with respect to any agricultural commodity.

The difference between the two proposals, Mr. President, is this: The Senator from Alabama has narrowed his proposition down to the soil-conservation payments, and it is insisted that such payments shall not be calculated or considered in determining whether a farmer has received parity. That is the position of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE].

Again I think the historical record is against the theory of the Senator. I have been in the Senate during all the recent agricultural legislation. This is the eighth or ninth bill on the subject. The first was introduced in 1933. What was it for? Under that bill we levied the processing tax to raise funds with which to bring prices up to parity. Those funds were certainly calculated then and used then to bring about parity. Parity for cotton in those days was, I think, 18 cents. If the farmer received 15 cents a pound for his cotton and 3 cents a pound from the processing-tax fund, we said he was receiving parity.

Now it is said that we should disregard that element of parity because the 1933 act is different from the conservation act. I will agree that the conservation act is different from the first 1933 act. The Supreme Court held that the whole Processing Tax Act of 1933 was unconstitutional. I think that happened in the latter part of 1934, after much good had been done under that unconstitutional act, against which I voted. I voted gladly for the Soil Conservation Act, and I voted for all the agricultural acts which were later passed containing the soil-conservation provision, because I think soil conservation is one of the primary tasks of our country with respect to the lands of the farmers.

The question here is whether in this unusual situation, when we undertake to say whether the farmers are receiving parity or not, we shall go back to the beginning and say "Yes, they receive parity when they get the market price, plus a sum from the Government which, calculated on the basis of the formula then in existence, equals parity price."

That is the historic conception here. Are we adding the conservation payment just as we did the processing payment to the price received on the market by the farmer, and if the market price plus the conservation payment equals parity, do we herald to the world that our farmers are receiving parity prices?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. As I remember, the declaration was made that the processing tax was put into effect for the purpose of increasing the price to the farmer.

Mr. BAILEY. It was for the purpose of raising the price paid to the farmer in the market to what the Department of Agriculture determined to be parity.

Mr. SMITH. Not in the case of the conservation payments; no.

Mr. BAILEY. Conservation payments were treated in the same way. I shall read to the Senator the historic interpretation.

Mr. SMITH. I do not understand that the conservation payments made for work done in preserving the fertility of the soil—payments in return for which the farmer must spend money in buying lime and in hauling dirt to fill up the holes caused by erosion—are to be subtracted from what has been designated in the law as parity.

Mr. BAILEY. Let me say to the Senator, in order to be perfectly plain, Mr. President, that the farmer receives value for the money spent for soil conservation. It is that much profit to him. If it were not, it would be very foolish to spend money for conservation. We do not spend the money for nothing. We put it into the land, and it is income to the farmer.

Mr. SMITH. I want to get a definition of what the Senator is driving at. The Senator wants to determine how much the farmer receives, whether he receives it in the form of parity or in the form of conservation payments—whatever goes into his pockets. The Senator is attempting to limit what the farmer receives, not the prices of his commodities.

Mr. BAILEY. I say to the Senator that it never was in contemplation that we should consider parity a floor. Parity is both a floor and a ceiling; and we cannot have any other conception of it. If we undertake to have any other conception of it, we run right into a hopeless competition of rates in the market. I hope that is plain. As prices of farm products are raised above parity, costs to the workers are raised; and then the workers come forward and justly ask for increased wages. If the workers are granted increased wages, the increased wages run right into competition with the prices received by the farmers. Then parity is raised again, and then we run right into the spiral of inflation.

Any conception of parity that is anything more than parity destroys parity. I should think that would be quite plain. Parity means equality; and the moment it is made inequality, the necessity for a new parity on the labor side of the picture is created. Then that is reflected back into a new demand for parity on the agricultural side. Parity is both a floor and a ceiling.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me for a moment, let me say that in theory what the Senator has said is true; but the trouble with the theory, as with all other theories, is that it does not work out that way. For instance, labor costs in the United States have gone up tremendously, but the farm prices of many agricultural products have not gone up in proportion as labor costs have gone up. As a matter of fact, many crops in the United States are not selling at anywhere near parity, as expressed in relation to the things the farmer must buy.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator was not in the Chamber when the Senator in charge of the bill said just a moment ago that there is only one crop which is not receiving parity.

Mr. WHEELER. Only one?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not know how many other crops are not on a parity basis, but certainly the wheat producers of my State are not receiving parity for their crop.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator mentioned wheat. He said that one or two other crops had crossed parity. I do not know whether he is correct, but certainly he said that.

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly, wheat is one of the great crops produced in this country. Of course, the Senator's argument falls flat when we talk about parity for wheat; because labor costs have gone up, but wheat prices have not gone up.

Furthermore, the prices of farm products do not go up at all in accordance with increases in labor costs. That has been shown to be so time and time again. The labor costs and the prices of farm machinery were maintained all during the panic. Why were they maintained? Because the production of farm machinery was controlled by a monopoly, and it could keep the prices of its products up, and did keep them up, by closing down its factories.

The same thing is true with respect to labor unions and the wages received by labor. The unions can keep the prices up, even though many of the men are out of employment.

However, the farmers cannot do that. Consequently, the spiral about which the Senator has talked—that which is said to occur when prices for agricultural commodities go up as the wages of labor go up—does not apply at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from North Carolina on the amendment has expired.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand that I have 15 minutes on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to be recognized on the bill?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, the Senator said the soil-conservation payments would be deducted from the prices received for the commodities.

Mr. BAILEY. I did not say so.

Mr. SMITH. That is the Senator's argument.

Mr. BAILEY. I said the conservation payments should be calculated and included in determining whether the farmer was receiving parity for his products.

Mr. SMITH. Very well. Suppose the farmer sells a lot of hogs and chickens. The Senator would say, "He is receiving that much income; therefore, put parity on the basis of how much is received."

Mr. BAILEY. If he is getting parity, he is getting parity.

Mr. SMITH. On what?

Mr. BAILEY. On his crop or product, whatever it may be. Parity is bound to be a fixed figure.

Let us say that parity for hogs is 10 cents—I do not know what it is. Against that 10 cents, let us say that the farmer is getting 2 cents on the market. If he gets 8 cents for soil conservation, he is getting a total of 10 cents.

Mr. SMITH. But not on the commodity for which he has been promised a certain price.

Mr. BAILEY. He would get it from the Government for his crop, and from the market for his hogs. I do not think that will make any trouble.

It is said that the price will be increased. Senators who said that undoubtedly spoke in good faith, but they overlooked the law. We have a law requiring that money be loaned on the basis of parity prices; and, if I understand the law at all, I do not think anyone will contradict me when I say that, with respect to soil conservation, it has been determined by law that a farmer can borrow up to the parity price on any crop, and then can obtain from the Government the soil-conservation payments as an additional sum.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am sure the Senator does not intend to leave an incorrect impression. The Senator stated that the farmer could borrow up to parity.

Mr. BAILEY. No; I did not say that. I said the farmer could borrow a percentage of parity. Is that so, or not?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, yes; that is so.

Mr. BAILEY. What percentage?

Mr. BANKHEAD. On some commodities, 85 percent; on others, 90 percent.

Mr. BAILEY. Exactly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. However, that is a long way from parity.

Mr. BAILEY. If I go into the market and borrow 90 percent, that is nine-tenths of parity. Then if I go to the Government and get my soil-conservation payments, I have gotten my parity; and I can hold my crop, and can put it where I please. I think it is one of the consequences regardless of whether it is one of the intentions in connection with the Act that because we have a new definition of parity, the farmer is enabled to borrow on his crop a larger sum of money than he otherwise would be able to borrow.

Now I go back to the main matter, which is the attitude of the President, as shown in the veto message on the Bankhead Act. I read from the veto message:

To the Senate:

I am returning S. 660, generally known as the Bankhead bill, unsigned. It is a bill to exclude in the determination of parity price any deduction for any subsidy payment, parity payment, incentive payment, or other payments made with respect to any agricultural commodity.

The President said, referring to his message of September 7, 1942:

I further stated: "The purpose should be to hold farm prices at parity, or at levels of a recent date, whichever is higher. * * * And in determining whether a commodity has reached parity, we should include all the benefits received by the farmer from his Government under the Agricultural Adjustment Administration program, allocable to the particular commodity. For it is unfair to give the farmer a parity price and in addition give him far more than parity."

To this view I still hold.

* * * * *

In approving that act on May 26, 1941, I stated: "I have taken up the construction of the law with certain legislative leaders chiefly responsible for it and have received from them letters stating that for the 1941 crop the broad intention is that parity payments should, if necessary, be so curtailed as to avoid a price above parity if added to the loan and the soil-conservation payments. I am, therefore, confident that in the pending appropriation bill this clear interpretation and intent will be carried out."

Let us go a little further with the President's message:

Let us consider the merits of the proposal. The act of October 2, 1942, directs the President to issue a general order stabilizing prices, wages, and salaries, which affect the cost of living; and, except as otherwise provided in this act, this stabilization shall be on the basis of the levels which existed on September 15, 1942. It is impossible to control the cost of living unless all of its vital elements are stabilized.

* * * * *

But it must be recognized that parity prices are only means to get parity income for the farmers.

If they get parity income, so the President says, they have what the Government justly owes them, and they should get no more.

That income goal has been attained for the cooperating producers of all basic crops. This bill would go beyond the goal of parity income and give to these producers an unwarranted bonus at the expense of the consumer.

Mr. President, those are the facts, stated from the standpoint of the President of the United States, who, as I have previously said, has proved himself to be an extraordinarily strong and true friend of the farmers. He has a national policy on his hands. He is trying to stabilize prices. He is trying to stabilize wages. He is dealing with a very desperate situation, and a very desperate and determined man.

In the midst of that situation the Senate proposes to override its rules and set them aside in order that it may write a definition of parity contrary to the President's conceptions, and contrary to the standards which have heretofore held, a definition which would increase the loan value of any crop with respect to which conservation payments are made, and which would necessarily tend in the direction of increasing prices of food products and farm products, and therefore would upset the situation.

If the Congress wishes to do that, it will take the responsibility. Right now the responsibility for undertaking to break down the national policy is upon one man, and his name is John Lewis. If the Senate adopts this amendment, it will share the responsibility with him, and will give him the best argument he has yet had—and he has not had a very good one. He started out wrong, and he got into the portal-to-portal issue with some administrative authority. He presented his argument in one way or another; but from beginning to end the rights and the facts in the case have been against him. If we now give him what is here proposed, he will go to the War Labor Board tomorrow and say, "Congress is not holding the line. It is not standing by stabilized prices. It is writing a new definition of parity, wholly with a view to increasing the loan value of a crop, and wholly with a view to increasing prices. I do not think all this talk about the roll-back of prices is going to get anywhere, even if it does come from a very respectable source."

Let him say that, and how long does anyone suppose the President could hold the line? How long does anyone think the Government could hold the line? How long does anyone think the War Labor Board could hold the line? How long does anyone think we could hold off inflation in America? It is not a great matter in size, but it is one of the greatest of issues in its implications and consequences.

Before I take my seat let me say that, God knows, I like to see workers have good wages. I like to see farmers have good prices. I like to see families have good incomes. I have never envied the man with a large income, or looked down on the man with a small income. I never saw a man whom I did not wish to have as good an income as I have. But, Mr. President, we cannot undertake to carry out those purposes at the expense of the national policy. We should not take a step here which would impair the strength of that policy. It is being attacked down the street; and when we wake up in the morning we wonder whether the President will be able to hold the line.

The other day a Senator on the other side of the aisle asked me if I did not feel that the line was being broken. I do not want to feel that it is being broken; that if it is broken I do not want anyone to say that the Congress was a party to it. Let the responsibility rest where it belongs, and let us not give anyone an excuse for breaking the line.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Alabama.

CONTINUATION OF TEMPORARY INCREASES IN FIRST-CLASS POSTAL RATES

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, from the Committee on Finance I report favorably, without amendment, House Joint Resolution 134, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). The joint resolution will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 134) to continue the temporary increases in postal rates on first-class matter, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the joint resolution was called up when I was temporarily absent from the Chamber, and objection was made. I have discussed the matter with the distinguished Senator from Georgia, and I find that the joint resolution received a favorable report from the Finance Committee and the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the pending bill has occupied the time of the Senate for an entire week. It has been rather exhaustively debated in most of its phases. I understand that a very important conference report is likely to displace the pending bill.

In order to bring the discussion on the pending bill to a conclusion, I ask unanimous consent that at not later than 4:30 o'clock the Senate proceed to vote upon the bill, and all motions and amendments relating thereto.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I rise to a question of privilege.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CONNALLY. I wish to interrogate the Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield for a question. I do not wish to lose my time. What is the question which the Senator from Texas desires to ask me?

Mr. CONNALLY. I wish to say to the Senator from Alabama that I wish to present the conference report on the antistrike bill at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I shall not occupy more than 30 minutes of the time of the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator from Alabama that it is with the greatest reluctance that I accede to him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama has the floor. He is proceeding in his own right.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very well, Mr. President. I thank the Chair for the information.

Mr. President, the time is drawing short. I recognize the impatience of many Senators. They are anxious to reach the conference report, and they are anxious to proceed to a final disposition of the pending bill.

I regret that a good many Senators have made up their minds about the amendment without knowing the facts. I am at a great disadvantage, especially with such a small attendance.

Mr. President, in the first place, there is nothing in this amendment which would increase the prices of any agricultural commodities. There is not a word in it which would increase the prices of agricultural commodities. The amendment is not intended in any way to increase the prices of agricultural commodities. On the contrary, its chief purpose is to prevent a roll-back of the prices of agricultural commodities with respect to which soil-conservation payments are made.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], who is not so ardent as I am in my friendship for the farmer, and not so anxious to protect the interests of the farmer as I am, has asserted that there is no prospect of a roll-back. Mr. President, a roll-back, certainly on cotton and probably on wheat, was prepared in the O. P. A. just before Easter, and sent over to the Department of Agriculture for the approval of the Food Administrator. Mr. Davis, in his great wisdom, sent it back. It contained a roll-back or reduction of 1.1 cents a pound on cotton, exactly the amount which would go to the cotton farmers under the soil-conservation plan. That is really what has disturbed me.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I do not wish to interrupt the Senator, but will he yield to me for one question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield, but the Senator from Missouri knows my situation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I understand the Senator's situation. If the Senator is trying to prevent a roll-back by subsidies, why does he not include in his motion to suspend the rule a prohibition against roll-backs?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I cannot reach the situation on an appropriation bill in that way.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator can reach it by a motion to suspend the rule.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I cannot reach it on an appropriation bill. Allow me to proceed. Whether the Senator from Missouri is in favor of the amendment or not, I ask my good friend to be patient and listen to me.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will listen to the Senator.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We are dealing with an appropriation for soil-conservation payments. What are soil-conservation payments? Those who have followed the agricultural program know what they are. They are payments for complying with the agricultural program. There are two aspects. The first relates to actual practices in soil improvement and the prevention of soil depletion, such as the planting of legumes and terracing, for which an actual outlay of money by the farmer is required. The next phase is compliance with the program announced by the Secretary of Agriculture in the matter of production to meet war food goals, the requirement by him of the planting of a certain percentage of the farm to war production goals, which may require rotation and the abandonment of crops which are more profitable to the farmer.

The testimony in the hearing discloses that about $195,000,000, practically half of this entire appropriation, has been obligated by the actual outlay of money by the farmers in pursuance of the soil-conservation program.

Let me read the announcement of the Secretary of Agriculture when this program was announced. I ask Senators who have an open mind upon this subject and who really want to treat the farmers fairly to listen to it. Here is the announcement made on December 5, 1942, by the Department of Agriculture, under the soil-conservation law, and in line with its annual practice for a number of years:

> Rates of payment to farmers cooperating with the crop production adjustment phase of the Agricultural Adjustment Agency's 1943 war program were announced today by the United States Department of Agriculture.
> Farmers may earn these production-adjustment payments in 1943 by complying with their Agricultural Adjustment Administration acreage allotments for corn, wheat, cotton, rice, tobacco, and peanuts, at the same time meeting individual farm production goals for special war crops. Following out the Department's policy of full production of all crops needed in the war, severe deductions will be made from each farm's total crop payments in 1943 for failure to plant at least 90 percent of an acreage allotment and 90 percent of a special war crop goal.
> This provision is intended to encourage farmers to make full use of their available land. In many instances, farmers will be encouraged to substitute special war crops for allotment crops (especially for wheat and cotton). After farmers first meet their 90 percent special war crop acreage requirement, they may take any special war-crop acreage above this figure and substitute it acre-for-acre for allotment crops in meeting the latter's 90-percent planting provision.
> In addition to the crop production adjustment payment described above, farmers also will be able to earn a production practice (or conservation) payment by carrying out specified agricultural practices which improve soil, help prevent erosion, and increase yields of needed war crops. Since these conservation rates vary by regions and States, they are being announced by State Agricultural Adjustment Administration committees.

In the same announcement the rates to be paid are published. I ask unanimous consent to have the table printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Crop	Payment rate
	1942	1943
Cotton, pound.....cents..	1.2	1.1
Corn (commercial area), bushel.....do....	5.5	3.6
Wheat, bushel.....do....	9.9	9.2
Rice, 100 pounds.....do....	2.4	2.0
Peanuts, ton.....dollars..	1.25	1.10
Potatoes (commercial), bushel.....cents..	1.8	-----
Tobacco, pound:
Flue-cured.....do....	.5	.4
Burley.....do....	.6	.4
Fire-cured.....do....	1.3	1.2
Dark air-cured.....do....	.8	.7
Virginia sun-cured.....do....	.6	.5
Pennsylvania type 41.....do....	.4	.4
Cigar filler and binder (other than types 41 and 45).....cents..	.6	.5
Georgia-Florida type 62.....do....	.8	.7

Mr. BANKHEAD. It will be noted that cotton, corn, wheat, rice, peanuts, potatoes, and tobacco are all listed, and there are shown the rates which the Secretary of Agriculture agreed to pay out of this soil-conservation money if these practices were complied with; if legumes were planted, if such planting was required, the farmers paying for the seed, paying for the cultivation, paying later for plowing under and for terracing when done and for diversions from the old-line crops in order to comply with the war-production goal. Then will any Senator tell me that there is not a real and honest obligation on the part of the Government of the United States?

What is the situation? Here is an appropriation made to meet that obligation of the Government; here is an appropriation to pay the honest debts of the Government of the United States; here is an obligation, not to pay to the farmer a subsidy, not to pay the farmer so as to give him a parity price, but to compensate him for complying with the obligation which he has assumed in response to the invitation of his Government, and in connection with which he has expended money, amounting already this year to nearly $200,000,000 in carrying out the invitation, properly made, in line with the practices in past years of the Department of Agriculture under the Soil Conservation Act.

It disturbs me when I find that my good friend from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], whom I like very much—he and I became Members of the Senate at the same time, and I admire his very great ability—employs his splendid eloquence and his appealing and effective arguments on the other side, especially in a cause by which my heart is so deeply stirred as it is in this instance, involving the preservation of the integrity of the Government of the United States in dealing with 6,000,000 farmers, scattered all over the country, who have no way to protect themselves except through the Congress of the United States.

I insist that the failure to protect those farmers will be considered a repudiation. The Government owes the debt; we are appropriating the money to pay it; but we put it in one pocket, and then by the Executive order of the President take it out of the other pocket by an equivalent reduction in the market price. That is the effect of the order of the President. Whatever soil conservation payments are made, if the Executive order is administered—and, as I have stated a while ago, I have ample evidence to believe it will be administered—under that order we are providing payment for the farmers by an appropriation, and the Executive order is promptly reducing and rolling back the market price in an equal amount.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time on the motion has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I shall speak on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized on the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Did the Chair rule that the unanimous-consent agreement heretofore made with regard to debate on amendments and debate on the bill applied to a motion to suspend the rules?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; because the unanimous-consent order was modified yesterday to include such a motion.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I just asked the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], in charge of the bill, for information on that subject, and he advised me that the order had not been changed.

Mr. RUSSELL. I said there had been no change in the unanimous-consent agreement that was made yesterday, and there has been no change that I know of, and I have been on the floor most of the day.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, with reference further to the roll-back, if I knew there would not be a roll-back on the farmers of this country, if I knew they would not have a reduction of their market price equivalent to the amount of money they are being paid on the obligations of the Government. I should promptly withdraw the pending motion. My amendment has in it no element under which prices can be increased. It seeks nothing except to prevent a reduction in prices.

I submit to my able friend who thinks that what I fear will not be done, what harm would the adoption of the amendment do? If these payments are not to be deducted from the market price, these soil conservation payments, not parity money, not other subsidies, but the soil conservation money which the farmers have earned, earned honestly and fairly—if they are not to be deducted, which means a roll-back in the price, of course, because that is the only way there is of deducting them, then I ask, in common sense and fairness, how does it help Mr. Lewis? If that is not to be done, nothing will be done, and everything will stand as it is now.

In the Committee on Banking and Currency yesterday, at a meeting attended by the Senator from Ohio, we had an announcement by the O. P. A. that they intended to roll back the prices of fresh vegetables, even without paying any subsidy, right back to the producer. Still, the Senator seems to be under the impression that there is no prospect of a roll-back. They are going to roll back now on butter, meat, and coffee. The effect probably will not go back to the producer, unless the processor gets into such a tight place that he has to reduce his price to the farmer, and that is very much dreaded by many representaitves of the farmers at this time.

As I have said, if they are not going to do it, what harm will there be? If they are going to do it, I cannot imagine a more horrible action by the Government of the United States than by a roll-back to take the money the farmers have earned. I cannot imagine anything worse. It is money of their own, used for subsidizing consumers, and the farmers paying for it, not the Government, but taking it out of the farmers' price. I do not believe there is a Senator on this floor who would be willing to do that if he understood the implications and effects of the program.

Mr. President, I know the fear of taking any action here with Mr. John Lewis still in Washington. I know that the labor situation, and probably the coal mine situation, had more to do with the change in position of many Senators, when the President's veto came before us on the Bankhead bill, than anything else. We could hear all around on this floor, "Send the bill back to the committee until Lewis has been disposed of." That idea has been thrown into this debate twice by the able Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY]. What has the prevention of a roll-back in prices got to do with Mr. Lewis, or what he is paid?

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] asked the Senator from North Carolina a question a few days ago which was full of significance, and as the days have passed since that time it has become more apparent that the thought in the mind of the Senator from Ohio seems to be sound. He asked the Senator from North Carolina if he did not feel that Mr. Lewis was going to "get his" anyhow. He did not get a straight answer from the Senator, with the Senator's usual candor and frankness.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not like to interrupt the Senator——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. I told the Senator from Ohio I did not believe that way. I do not know whether that was straight or crooked, but I thought it was plain.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very well. Since that time there have been numerous newspaper announcements that Mr. Lewis is "getting his." He is not depending on any subsequent developments here on a soil-conservation program to get what he demands in the way of wage increases.

Oh, there is the "portal-to-portal" about which we have heard so much, on which the operators in Pennsylvania are yielding here and there, step by step. Mr. Lewis is "getting his," but here we have a situation in which the farmers, who do not go from portal to portal, but who go from dark in the morning to night's darkness, all the long, drawn-out hours, producing food for the American people, do not get any consideration for travel to and from their fields—portal-to-portal. Notwithstanding Congress has decreed it, they have no consideration under the mandate of Congress that the cost of labor on the farms should be adequately weighted. Instead of giving the increase in farm prices—Mr. Lewis may be responsible for it, I rather fear he is—instead of the increase Congress intended for them, here we are confronted with a proposition, under the President's order, and with the intention of the O. P. A. to carry it out—the announced intention, unless they are blocked somewhere—we are confronted with such a situation that, instead of getting some reasonable increase such as labor has been getting, the farmers will get an actual reduction in net income. If the farmers' prices are rolled back, as I have said, it will mean a subsidy to the consumers paid for by the farmers themselves.

There is no real reason for a Lewis complex, for the thought that the prevention of a reduction in prices is going to justify the Labor Board in giving Mr. Lewis increases for his miners. Either they are going to break through the line or they are not. They are not going to break through or fail to break through—and every thoughtful man here knows it—as a result of merely holding the line for the farmer, or because of any subsidy paid for by the farmer. That is not going to have any influence on the action taken by Mr. John L. Lewis. If I thought it would have any influence on his action I would not press for my measure. If I thought it would have any influence at all in the settlement of the wage controversy I would not press it.

Mr. President, I was appealed to—though I did not believe as did those who made the appeal—to let the Bankhead bill go back to the committee and rest there until all the labor controversy was out of the way. On the other hand, I was appealed to by many Members of the Senate to stand pat and demand a vote on the question. I did not want to compromise the labor program, however, or its proper settlement and adjustment.

Today I am trying to make an explanation of my proposition to those Senators on both sides of the Chamber who have previously given very little consideration to it. I ask Senators to confer with corn farmers, wheat farmers, and cotton farmers concerning a reduction in their prices.

Let us take the case of corn. When the price of corn was reduced it resulted almost in a strike on the part of the corn farmers. They would not sell their corn, and they are not selling it yet although the administration promptly restored the amount of the reduction after the Bankhead bill was recommitted. The administration restored the 5-cent reduction it had made in the price of corn, but that action had practically no effect. Today corn is locked up. From all sections of the country there are coming into Washington telegraph messages from persons who are trying to find a place where they can buy corn. A few days ago I received a message from the State director of the extension service in Alabama telling me that there were great quantities of corn in the bins of the farmers, but the feed mixers and producers could get none. He asked me if I could find a carload or more of corn which could be shipped to Birmingham.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. My time has nearly run out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama declines to yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If I can obtain an extension of time I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. BAILEY. I shall not trouble the Senator.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Corn is locked up. The conservation payment will result in a reduction of nearly 4 cents in the price of corn which will be paid if the President's mandate is observed. Where do the feeders expect to obtain corn for feeding purposes? They cannot obtain any now. Reduce the price of corn 4 cents, and the chicken raisers and dairy men will almost have to go out of business, because they cannot buy corn if such a reduction is made in the price of it.

Mr. President, the same thing holds true with respect to wheat, though not in so great a measure as with respect to corn. Producers will put all the wheat into the loan, and this roll-back, as the Senator from North Carolina says, if made, will reduce the loan price. That is true. The loan price is made based on the market price as of the beginning of the marketing year. So the price to the farmer will be reduced, and his floor price will at the same time be reduced, and his income will be reduced. The farmer will be placed in a position where there is no encouragement for increasing his production.

Production, Mr. President, is the great remedy and answer to inflation. I am one of that school of thought which believes that inflation springs principally from two sources; one is the excess amount of money in the pockets of the people, and the other is the excess amount of consumer goods available. The loan cannot possibly result in inflation. The use of the loan money cannot bring about inflation when an equivalent amount is subtracted from the farmer's pocket. So I will have no part in the fear of inflation being helpful to Mr. Lewis in his labor wage fight. I think our Government is too big, and that our President and Mr. Justice Byrnes and the Labor Relations Board are too big and too broad, and have too much patriotism, and too much courage, to be influenced in the slightest degree by the fears which are expressed that inflation will result from the adoption of a program which is intended solely for the prevention of a roll-back in prices.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Alabama on the bill has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Can we not have a vote now on my motion to suspend the rule?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BAILEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, it is a matter of very great regret to me that I am forced to oppose the motion offered by the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], particularly because I have so often agreed with him on matters involving the agricultural interests of the country, and more particularly because I believe that fundamentally the Senator from Alabama is correct in his endeavor to restrict the subtraction of any payments for soil conservation from other payments due the farmers of the country.

Mr. President, I voted very cheerfully and very sincerely for the passage of the original Bankhead bill dealing with this same proposition. I thought then that the proposition of the Senator from Alabama was correct. I still think so. However, that bill which was almost identical with the proposal now before the Senate, except for being a little more inclusive, was vetoed by the President of the United States. At the instance of the Senator from Alabama himself, the Senate avoided the issue of passing that measure over the veto of the President, and, instead, the Senate referred this same proposition, as contained in the President's veto message, to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. In the debate had at that time it was suggested by the proponents of the measure that the measure be referred to the committee. Both the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], with whom I voted, and whom I was glad to follow, and the leader of the opposition to the motion, who also happened to be the leader of the majority, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], stated that the proposition was that Congress was putting a club in the closet—a club which might subsequently be used.

Mr. President, that situation has not changed. The club is still in the closet. As I have said, I voted for the motion of the Senator from Alabama on the theory that we were putting in the hands of Congress a club, so that, if the President or any other administrative authority yielded to outside pressure to break the line which has been established, Congress could still take out the club and could pass the Bankhead bill, and possibly all of us would go to hell in the hand basket together, which would be the result of breaking the line established against inflation.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am limited in time. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator when I conclude with my remarks.

Mr. President, the club is still in the closet; but what the Senator from Alabama is seeking to do today, as I see it, is to put upon Congress the responsibility for breaking the line which has been established against inflation. If we were to agree to the motion to suspend the rule, and if we were then to agree to the amendment which the Senator from Alabama proposes to offer, not only Mr. John L. Lewis and his organization but every other labor organization in the United States would have an excuse to say that Congress had breached the line. The President of the United States; my dear friend, Mr. Justice Byrnes, who is in a very responsible administrative position; and my dear friend, Judge Vinson, who is in another very responsible administrative position, would be thoroughly entitled to throw up their hands and to say, "Congress has breached the line."

Mr. President, I undertake to say that if the Bankhead motion is voted down, we shall have laid the proposition of holding the line—a course which nearly everyone in the United States knows is absolutely essential to the welfare of the country—squarely in the lap of the President of the United States and of his great administrative assistants, Mr. Justice Byrnes and Judge Vinson. If they weaken, if they permit either Mr. Lewis and his miners' union or any other group of claimants to breach the line—that is, if they yield to any of them in excess of the Little Steel formula—the responsibility is and will be upon the President and upon Mr. Justice Byrnes and Judge Vinson and the other administrative officials who may be responsible for taking such action. If that should occur, Mr. President, I make bold to predict that within 24 hours the Bankhead bill would be drawn out of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and would be passed in this body by a majority of 4 to 1 or 5 to 1, over the President's veto, and by an overwhelming majority in the House of Representatives, and would become law.

However, Mr. President, the proposition which now is being made, by the motion of the Senator from Alabama, as I see it, is that the Congress, without giving the President and his new organizations headed by Mr. Justice Byrnes and Judge Vinson an opportunity to function, should make a breach which would be a justification to Mr. Lewis and to anyone else who desired to do so, to break down the whole formula for preventing inflation, pure and undefiled.

Therefore, much as I am in sympathy with the general principles enunciated by the Senator from Alabama, it seems to me that Congress ought not at this time to take the responsibility of breaking the whole line against inflation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. RUSSELL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I desire to take only a few minutes.

First, I wish to say that, while the wheat farmers in my State are not receiving parity for their wheat, I have not heard of a single wheat farmer there complaining about the price of wheat. When we are talking about holding the line, we mean one of two things. When we talk about parity to farmers, we mean one of two things. Either we mean giving them parity, or we do not mean giving them parity. Let us not try to fool anybody. The truth is that some of the farmers are not receiving parity. The Congress and the administration are not giving them what was promised them, and what they were told they would receive under the farm bill.

Every Senator who knows anything about the subject must realize that we are breaking faith with the farmers, who are not receiving parity when we do not give it to them, and that the administration is breaking faith with them when it does not give it to them.

Much is said about holding the line. Because of John L. Lewis, a great sentiment has been whipped up in the Senate against approving a proposal which would give the farmer parity. Is it any wonder that the people criticize the Senate? Is it any wonder that the people lose faith and confidence in a legislative body when Senators say, in effect, that the Senate has not the courage to enact a measure because of a fear that someone else will do something.

Either the farmers are entitled to parity or they are not entitled to it. Either they are entitled to what the Senator from Alabama is asking or they are not entitled to it. Think of it. To say that the Senate is afraid to pass a measure because of John L. Lewis or someone else is the most ridiculous, nonsensical, silly argument which I have heard made in the Congress since I have been a Member of it.

While I have the greatest respect and affection for my friends, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], I must confess that I am shocked and surprised to hear them say that we must not do this because of John L. Lewis. I know that the popular thing to do is to denounce John L. Lewis, and say what a terrible man he is. It is said that he broke the line. Does anyone mean to tell me that the line had not already been broken? If I had the time, I could point out instances of the line being broken in the past few days. It has been broken several times. If it has not been broken, it has been badly bent and warped. It all depends on who is trying to breag the line. If one hires Ed Flynn as his lawyer, he can break the line.

The reason why there is agitation in the country with reference to some of the labor organizations is not John Lewis. I know something about the miners in my State. I say that what is causing the disturbance is the fact that the administration permitted men to receive exorbitant wages in war industries on the coast. Those industries are taking men from the copper mines and coal mines, because they refuse to go down into the bowels of the earth and work in the most hazardous occupation on the face of the globe when they can go to work in the war industries on the coast, where men are falling over each other and receiving $250, $300, and $400 a month.

Did any Senator rise on the floor of the Senate and shout about that? Did any Senator stand on the floor of the Senate and shout about contractors receiving 10 percent-plus, so that they could employ more men than they needed, when the more they had on the pay roll the greater the amount which went into their pockets?

Let us not be hypocritical about this matter. Let us be frank and honest about it. That is what has caused the trouble in the coal mines, and that is what has caused the scarcity of labor in the copper mines. That is what has caused many of our troubles.

I say, without fear of contradiction, that I do not believe there is a Senator who knows anything about the subject who will say that under the conditions existing today the coal miners have not a good case. I do not approve of the methods used by John Lewis, but in my judgment the coal operators, with the exception of those who operate captive mines owned by the steel companies or by the railroads, will say that they feel that the miners have a good case.

Mr. President, I do not care whether Senators vote for the motion or not. In my judgment, it does not mean very much one way or the other. However, I shall vote with the Senator from Alabama on this question. For Senators to stand on the floor of the Senate and use old John Lewis as a whipping boy for the purpose of trying to frighten Members of the United States Senate into not voting for something is a procedure which I cannot follow. I say that we ought to vote for the motion because we believe it is right, or vote against it because we do not so believe.

When the Bankhead bill was under consideration it passed the Senate by an overwhelming majority. Senators thought it was right. They voted for it honestly, according to their convictions. Then, when the President vetoed it, after having marched up the hill, they turned around and marched down again, and said, "We will send it back to the committee. We will hold it there and see whether John Lewis gets his money. If he does not get it, we do not dare to bring it out, because John Lewis is a bugaboo."

The one thing in which I am more interested than anything else—more than the Bankhead bill, the wage bill, or anything else—is whether or not we are to maintain a democratic republic in the United States. Because I am interested in that, I wish to see the Congress maintain the respect and confidence of the people of the United States.

Mr. President, the great issue which will confront the people of the United States after the war is whether or not we shall be able to maintain a democratic republic. At times I have voted against the administration, and have been criticized because I would not vote to give it certain powers. Let me say to my Democratic friends that the time may come in the not distant future an ultraconservative Republican President of the United States. We may have an ultraconservative Republican President. We may have a man who will be ambitious for power. There will be one crisis after another. There will be labor crises and other crises. That President may come to Congress and say, "I want this power because of this crisis, or that crisis." When Democratic Senators vote against it, our Republican brethren will say, "You voted to give it to a Democratic President, did you not? Why can you not give it to a Republican President?" But, thank God, I shall be in a position where I can say, "I refused to give it to a Democratic President, and I refuse to give it to a Republican President."

As I stated at the outset, I did not intend to speak on the bill. I rose only because of the argument which was presented that John Lewis scares the Senate of the United States into voting first almost unanimously in favor of a piece of legislation, and then almost unanimously against it. Senators were either right when they voted for it, or they did not know what they were voting for, or they were right the second time and wrong the first time, or vice versa.

We had better think about maintaining respect and confidence in parliamentary government in the United States of America. I shall not be intimidated into voting for any piece of legislation merely because I do not like the actions of a single individual in this country—I care not who he may be. I am not going to be afraid to vote for something in which I believe, merely because I think some other man may try to take advantage of me. If Senators should follow such a course they would not only say they are afraid of the man, but likewise afraid that the executive branch of the Government will not have the courage to do what is right if Congress votes contrary to the way it voted on another occasion. So, Mr. President, I repeat what I said a moment ago. First of all, I reject the idea that the Senate of the United States should make a whipping boy out of John L. Lewis for the purpose of scaring us into voting for a piece of legislation.

Secondly, I say that the miners of this country have a case. I know who is holding up settlement of the dispute. I know, as everyone else who is familiar with the situation knows, that there is politics in the matter. I know—because it has been told to me by persons who represent the coal operators—that the ones who are opposed to any settlement of the coal dispute are some of the big steel companies and railroads of the country. They own captive mines. That is what has been back of it all. If it had not been for those companies a settlement would have been reached a long time ago.

No one complained when members of the C. I. O. went out on strike and won large increases in wages. No one complained and shouted about the workers in the rubber industry when they went out on strike in Akron a few days ago. No one complained when the railroad brotherhoods received a raise from the Mediation Board. No one shouted about this, or about that, or about other strikes. But, the coal dispute has been played up.

We have been told we must not vote for the Bankhead measure because John L. Lewis—one man—is going to lick the country. Those who say that give him far more credit than, in my judgment, he deserves.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Does the Senator believe that the miners would have had difficulty in obtaining a settlement quickly if they had had Mr. Ed Flynn for their attorney?

Mr. WHEELER. I will say to the Senator that if he were the head of the miners' union they would not have had any difficulty.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Less than two-thirds of the Senators present having voted in the affirmative, the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is not agreed to.

The bill is still open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be offered, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 2481) was read the third time and passed.

Mr. RUSSELL. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, request a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. BANK-

HEAD, Mr. SMITH, Mr. NYE, and Mr. MCNARY conferees on the part of the Senate.

"FUNCTIONS AND DUTIES OF THE NATIONAL WAR LABOR BOARD

"SEC. 7. (a) The National War Labor Board (hereinafter in this section called the 'Board'), established by Executive Order Numbered 9017, dated January 12, 1942, in addition to all powers conferred on it by section 1 (a) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, and by any Executive order or regulation issued under the provisions of the act of October 2, 1942, entitled 'An act to amend the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, to aid in preventing inflation, and for other purposes', and by any other statute, shall have the following powers and duties:

"(1) Whenever the United States Conciliation Service (hereinafter called the 'Conciliation Service') certifies that a labor dispute exists which may lead to substantial interference with the war effort, and cannot be settled by collective bargaining or conciliation, to summon both parties to such dispute before it and conduct a public hearing on the merits of the dispute. If in the opinion of the Board a labor dispute has become so serious that it may lead to substantial interference with the war effort, the Board may take such action on its own motion. At such hearing both parties shall be given full notice and opportunity to be heard, but the failure of either party to appear shall not deprive the Board of jurisdiction to proceed to a hearing and order.

"(2) To decide the dispute, and provide by order the wages and hours and all other terms and conditions (customarily included in collective-bargaining agreements) governing the relations between the parties, which shall be in effect until further order of the Board. In making any such decision the Board shall conform to the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended; the National Labor Relations Act; the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended; and the act of October 2, 1942, as amended, and all other applicable provisions of law; and where no other law is applicable the order of the Board shall provide for terms and conditions to govern relations between the parties which shall be fair and equitable to employer and employee under all the circumstances of the case.

"(3) To require the attendance of witnesses and the production of such papers, documents, and records as may be material to its investigation of facts in any labor dispute, and to issue subpenas requiring such attendance or production.

"(4) To apply to any Federal district court for an order requiring any person within its jurisdiction to obey a subpena issued by the Board; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred on any such court to issue such an order.

"(b) The Board, by its Chairman, shall have power to issue subpenas requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses, and the production of any books, papers, records, or other documents, material to any inquiry or hearing before the Board or any designated member or agent thereof. Such subpenas shall be enforceable in the same manner, and subject to the same penalties, as subpenas issued by the President under title III of the Second War Powers Act, approved March 27, 1942.

"(c) No member of the Board shall be permitted to participate in any decision in which such member has a direct interest as an officer, employee, or representative of either party to the dispute.

"(d) Subsections (a) (1) and (2) shall not apply with respect to any plant, mine, or facility of which possession has been taken by the United States.

"(e) The Board shall not have any powers under this section with respect to any matter within the purview of the Railway Labor Act, as amended.

"NOTICE OF THREATENED INTERRUPTIONS IN WAR PRODUCTION, ETC.

"SEC. 8. (a) In order that the President may be apprised of labor disputes which threaten seriously to interrupt war production, and in order that employees may have an opportunity to express themselves, free from restraint or coercion, as to whether they will permit such interruptions in wartime—

"(1) The representative of the employees of a war contractor, shall give to the Secretary of Labor, the National War Labor Board, and the National Labor Relations Board, notice of any such labor dispute involving such contractor and employees, together with a statement of the issues giving rise thereto.

"(2) For not less than thirty days after any notice under paragraph (1) is given, the contractor and his employees shall continue production under all the conditions which prevailed when such dispute arose, except as they may be modified by mutual agreement or by decision of the National War Labor Board.

"(3) On the thirtieth day after notice under paragraph (1) is given by the representative of the employees, unless such dispute has been settled, the National Labor Relations Board shall forthwith take a secret ballot of the employees in the plant, plants, mine, mines, facility, facilities, bargaining unit, or bargaining units, as the case may be, with respect to which the dispute is applicable on the question whether they will permit any such interruption of war production. The National Labor Relations Board shall include on the ballot a concise statement of the major issues involved in the dispute and of the efforts being made and the facilities being utilized for the settlement of such dispute. The National Labor Relations Board shall by order forthwith certify the results of such balloting, and such results shall be open to public inspection. The National Labor Relations Board may provide for preparing such ballot and distributing it to the employees at any time after such notice has been given.

"(b) Subsection (a) shall not apply with respect to any plant, mine, or facility of which possession has been taken by the United States.

"(c) Any person who is under a duty to perform any act required under subsection (a) and who willfully fails or refuses to perform such act shall be liable for damages resulting from such failure or refusal to any person injured thereby and to the United States if so injured. The district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine any proceedings instituted pursuant to this subsection in the same manner and to the same extent as in the case of proceedings instituted under section 24 (14) of the Judicial Code.

"POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS BY LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

"SEC. 9. Section 313 of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act, 1925 (U. S. C., 1940 edition, title 2, sec. 251), is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 313. It is unlawful for any national bank, or any corporation organized by authority of any law of Congress, to make a contribution in connection with any election to any political officer, or for any corporation whatever, or any labor organization to make a contribution in connection with any election at which Presidential and Vice Presidential electors or a Senator or Representative in, or a Delegate or Resident Commissioner to Congress are to be voted for, or for any candidate, political committee, or other person to accept or receive any contribution prohibited by this section. Every corporation or labor organization which makes any contribution in violation of this section shall be fined not more than $5,000; and every officer or director of any corporation, or officer of any labor organization, who consents to any contribution by the corporation or labor organization, as the case may be, in violation of this section shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both. For the purposes of this section "labor organization" shall have the same meaning as under the National Labor Relations Act.'

"TERMINATION OF ACT

"SEC. 10. Except as to offenses committed prior to such date, the provisions of this act and the amendments made by this act shall cease to be effective at the end of six months following the termination of hostilities in the present war, as proclaimed by the President, or upon the date (prior to the date of such proclamation) of the passage of a concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress stating that such provisions and amendments shall cease to be effective.

"SEPARABILITY

"SEC. 11. If any provision of this act or of any amendment made by this act, or the application of such provision to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act and of such amendments, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby."

And the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the title of the bill and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following:

"Amend the title so as to read: 'An act relating to the use and operation by the United States of certain plants, mines, and facilities in the prosecution of the war, and preventing strikes, lock-outs, and stoppages of production, and for other purposes.'"

And the House agree to the same.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

A. J. MAY,
FOREST A. HARNESS,
R. E. THOMASON,
MATTHEW J. MERRITT,
DEWEY SHORT,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to consume much of the time of the Senate in the discussion of the conference report, in view of the fact that the report is included in this morning's RECORD, and I assume that all Senators who are interested have perused the report and know what it contains.

It will be recalled that Senate bill 796 passed the Senate on the 5th of May by a vote of 63 to 16. When the bill went to the House, the House struck out all the Senate bill and inserted what was called the Harness amendment, which included some of the terms and provisions of the so-called Smith bill, which the House had passed a year or more ago.

In short, the conferees agreed on practically every provision of the bill as passed by the Senate. The only important change was a provision with regard to the termination of the act, which automatically will occur 6 months after the war, and there was inserted a clause providing that it could be terminated at an earlier date by the passage of a concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In other words, it is perfectly apparent from the text that this is an emergency measure, confined exclusively to the war emergency, for the purpose of protecting production?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator from Michigan that he is eminently correct. It is not only that, it is limited to the war period and 6 months thereafter, and its operation is further restricted by provision that it shall not apply to anything except war plants where work is taking place in the production of munitions or supplies for the armed forces. So it is an emergency measure.

We have not undertaken to regulate labor in time of peace. No doubt there are many who would like to see that done, and the Senator from Texas is perfectly willing, when the occasion arises, to give his best thought and consideration to the issues which may then be presented. But we felt that our function in connection with the pending matter was to make this strictly a war bill, restrict it to the duration of the war, and restrict it to those plants and mines and instrumentalities which were engaged in the production of war supplies.

Let me say, furthermore, that the cardinal objective, the chief principle, back of the bill from the beginning, was not the idea of hunting for some individual in an effort to put him in jail, but the objective was how best we could provide for the continuous operation of plants manufacturing munitions.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LUCAS in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BILBO. If this is strictly a war measure, supposed to cover the field of stopping strikes which interfere with the war effort, how does the Senator explain the committee going so far afield as to attempt to regulate contributions by labor organizations to campaign funds?

Mr. CONNALLY. That is a pertinent inquiry.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Texas will yield for a moment I do not know whether the Senator from Mississippi intended to infer that the conferees went far afield. The provision about which he complains was in the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. CONNALLY. Exactly.

Mr. BILBO. I did not want the country to be misled into thinking that this has a thing to do with strikes, as a war measure. There is an attempt to hold out to the country that this is strictly a war measure. It has an automatic repeal clause at the conclusion, it is true.

Mr. CONNALLY. This matter was one which came within the jurisdiction of the conference, as suggested by the Senator from New Mexico. This provision was in the bill as it passed the House. The House conferees insisted upon it. The Senate conferees had already secured the agreement of the House conferees to practically every provision of the Senate bill, and the Senator from Mississippi should know that there must be negotiations and conferences and agreements and inducements, and we had to include some of the House text in order to get an agreement. That is why the provision was put into the bill, that we had to agree to something in order to get an agreement.

Mr. BILBO. I am still waiting on the Senator to show the connection, but he has not shown it yet.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have told the Senator the facts. If the Senator cannot deduce the connection from the facts, I cannot help it.

The Senator from New Mexico, the authority on elections and political ethics, assured me that he intended to introduce a bill right away to repeal that section, as soon as the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I should be very glad, if I could, to present such a measure and have it adopted. I wanted to say to the Senator from Texas that the amendment I am now drafting would equalize and bring into the same class with labor organizations the employer organizations, such as the United States Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers. If one is to be denied the privilege of making political contributions, the other should be also.

Mr. CONNALLY. I agree thoroughly with the Senator from New Mexico, as I generally do.

Mr. President, I was saying that the cardinal principle of this bill is to keep the plants going, and that is why we have in it the seizure section, which is section 3 of the bill. That is carried forward just as the Senate passed it.

Section 4 provides that in any seized plant, the labor relations and the wages which were in effect when the plant was seized, shall remain in status quo until one or the other of the parties apply to the War Labor Board for readjustment. The reason for the requirement of that status quo is to remove the temptation to strike in order to receive a benefit. If the employees cannot receive any benefit by striking, there will not be the same inducement to strike that previously existed.

Section 5 of the bill provides for resort to the War Labor Board by either party in a dispute as to wages or terms of employment.

Section 6 of the bill is probably the most drastic section of the bill. It is under the heading "Interference with Government operation of plants." In short it provides that when the Government takes over and operates a plant, it shall be an offense punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both, for anyone to interfere with the operation of the plant, or to coerce, instigate, induce, conspire with, or encourage any person, to interfere, by lock-out, strike, slowdown, or other interruption, with the operation of such plant.

Mr. President, that language is almost identical with the language as the bill passed the Senate, except that the conferees inserted the words "conspire with, or encourage." In other words, an individual incurs no penalty because he quits his employment or refuses to work. It is specifically provided that—

> No individual shall be deemed to have violated the provisions of this section by reason only of his having ceased work or having refused to continue to work or to accept employment.

But under the preceding portion of the section it is made an offense if, in addition to his individual refusal to be employed, he solicits other members not to be employed, if he instigates opposition to the operation of the plant, if he conspires or agrees with other members not to work. That is an offense under section 6.

Section 7 establishes by statute and vests with statutory authority the War Labor Board. Up to now that agency was more or less dependent upon Executive orders not only for its existence but for the powers it possesses. We thought it better to give it a fixed status and by law provide authority for the powers which it is to exercise.

I now come to section 7. Paragraphs (1) and (2) thereof apply only to plants not in Government control, but they must be war plants. In paragraph (1) of section 7, it is provided that the Board shall have the power—

> Whenever the United States Conciliation Service * * * certifies that a labor dispute exists which may lead to substantial interference with the war effort, and cannot be settled by collective bargaining or conciliation, to summon both parties to such dispute before it and conduct a public hearing on the merits of the dispute.

And so on. It is given the authority and power to decide the dispute, and to provide by order the wages and hours and all other terms and conditions. In doing so the conferees inserted language which would require the Board to conform to the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended; the National Labor Relations Act; the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended; the act of October 2, 1942, as amended; and all other applicable provisions of law.

Mr. President, I wish to say in this connection that it is the conclusion of the conferees that the employment of the language denominating these various acts and the employment of the language "and all other applicable provisions of law" includes Executive orders and regulations issued by authority of and pursuant to the provisions of any of these enactments of the Congress. For instance, it was provided in section 2 of the act amending the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as follows:

> The President may, from time to time, promulgate such regulations as may be necessary and proper to carry out any of the provisions of this act; and may exercise any power or authority conferred upon him by this act through such department, agency, or officer as he shall direct.

So that the Board must be governed by the provisions of these acts, and by Executive orders and regulations issued under the authority of these acts, and pursuant to the policies enunciated in the acts.

At this time I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], who rendered very distinguished and useful service as a member of the conference, to state what his view is with respect to that matter.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I think that one more step ought to be recorded in this connection in order to make complete the picture of what would occur under section 7 of the conference report, and that is the Executive order, issued under the Stabilization Act of October 2, 1942, on the next day after the enactment of that law, and, therefore, related to it in time as well as by direct reference. I quote from the Executive order:

> By virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and the statutes, and particularly by the act of October 2, 1942 (namely, the Anti-Inflation Act) * * * and in order to control so far as possible the inflationary tendencies and the vast dislocations attendant thereon which threaten our military effort and our domestic economic structure, and for the more effective prosecution of the war, it is hereby ordered as follows:

Then I omit some language and read further:

> 1. There is established in the Office for Emergency Management of the Executive Office of the President an Office of Economic Stabilization at the head of which shall be an Economic Stabilization Director.

It is under that Executive order that Mr. Justice Byrnes was appointed Stabilization Director. That position now is held by Justice Vinson. It is, therefore, the correct interpretation, I believe, as stated by the distinguished Senator from Texas, that the jurisdiction of the National War Labor Board covers war activities, and the settlement of disturbances and disagreements relating to wages and other terms of employment in war enterprises and in the performance of war contracts, and that the Board's decision is not unrestricted and unlimited and without review, but also must be passed upon and is passed upon by the Stabilization Director. In other words, under the statute and under the Executive order made pursuant to the statute, which is a law in effect, the power of deciding the dispute extends to the War Labor Board, plus the Stabilization Director.

Now, if I am not taking too much of the Senator's time——

Mr. CONNALLY. That is quite all right.

Mr. AUSTIN. I desire to distinguish the transactions with respect to the determination of such disputes under section 7 from the transactions with respect to determinations under section 5. There is a difference. Section 7, in paragraphs (1) and (2), of subsection (a) relates to war industries or war plants and war contracts which have not been taken over by the Government where no strike has yet occurred and perhaps no strike is even intended or contemplated, but a disturbance has arisen which gives reasonable ground to believe that the maximum continuous production of the necessary implements of warfare will be interrupted. Then paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (a) of section 7 come into play and the Board—that is, the National War Labor Board—hears the testimony, in the first instance.

But in the case of section 5 we have a plant in an entirely different situation. The plant has already been seized, and is being operated by the Government; and under this proposed law there can be no strike in that plant; it forbids a strike to exist—it is outlawed—in a plant which is operated by the Government. There can be no strike against the Government.

Nevertheless, if there is a labor dispute relating to wages or terms of the labor contract or conditions of work—any of the questions which may arise in peacetimes, or which may arise during wartimes in respect to any employment other than employment in connection with war contracts—a process is afforded before the same Board for hearing and deciding that issue. But in the latter case, the approval which is necessary is not that of the Stabilization Director. Under the conference report the approval of the President is required. So the two processes of law are distinct and different according to the different cases—in one of them, a plant which is operated by the Government; and in the other, a plant which is operated by private owners.

Now just a word more, if I am not taking too much of the Senator's time.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. The new thing, the big thing, about the pending legislation is that it puts the War Labor Board upon the solid rock of law. Heretofore, the position of the Board has been rather doubtful. It was on the shifting sands of nothing but an order; and we had to hunt through a number of laws in order to find whether there was the sanction of law behind the acts of the Board. I do not care to argue that question; for there will be no room for argument about it if this proposal becomes law.

Under this proposal, whenever the Board acts, whether under section 5 or section 7, it must act according to law; for section 7 says:

SEC. 7. (a) The National War Labor Board (hereinafter in this section called the "Board"), established by Executive Order No. 9017, dated January 12, 1942, in addition to all powers conferred on it by section 1 (a) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, and by any Executive order or regulation issued under the provisions of the act of October 2, 1942, entitled "An act to amend the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, to aid in preventing inflation, and for other purposes", and by any other statute, shall have the following powers and duties.

Thereupon, the two paragraphs (1) and (2) occur. In those two paragraphs the emphasis of the policy of the Congress is again laid upon the law; and the obligation is imposed upon the Board, as follows:

In making any such decision the Board shall conform to the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended:

Let me divert from the text long enough to say that one important point in that connection is that under the Fair Labor Standards Act there is a limitation upon the Board that it shall not have the power to impose a closed shop or an open shop or any kind of a shop upon any industry.

I resume the reading:

The National Labor Relations Act; the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended; and the Act of October 2, 1942, as amended, and all other applicable provisions of law; and where no other law is applicable the order of the Board shall provide for terms and conditions to govern relations between the parties which shall be fair and equitable to employer and employee under all the circumstances of the case.

Those last commands and limitations upon the judicial power of the administrative board are applicable only in the case of plants which have not been seized by the Government. The other broad powers—those I read in the first paragraph—are applicable to plants which have been seized and plants which have not been seized; so in all cases the law rules this Board as it never did before.

Now I read subsection (d), which appears below. It provides that—

(d) Subsections (a) (1) and (2) shall not apply with respect to any plant, mine, or facility of which possession has been taken by the United States.

It applies to only those two subsections.

The other subsection—subsection (a) of section 7—reads as follows:

SEC. 7. (a) The National War Labor Board (hereinafter in this section called the Board), established by Executive Order No. 9017, dated January 12, 1942, in addition to all powers conferred on it by section 1 (a) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, and by any Executive order or regulation issued under the provisions of the act of October 2, 1942, entitled "An act to amend the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, to aid in preventing inflation, and for other purposes," and by any other statute.

They do apply. They apply in respect to a plant which has been seized by the Government and is being operated by the Government. In other words, in the case of both operations the law rules, with respect to the decisions of the Board.

Mr. President, I see the Senator from Connecticut on his feet. I do not know whether he wishes to propound a question to the Senator from Texas or whether he wishes to propound one to me. If the latter is the case, I shall be glad to answer his question at this point, if I may have the permission of the Senator from Texas to do so.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator from Connecticut has a question, certainly. I thought he wanted to make a speech.

Mr. DANAHER. No, Mr. President. With the permission of the Senator from Texas, I should like to question the Senator from Vermont briefly.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am very glad to yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I should like to know whether the Senator from Vermont understands that any future Executive orders may have the authority to override in any way whatever limitations imposed upon the War Labor Board by the statutes and regulations to which the Senator from Vermont has referred.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think there is a place where there is reference to orders hereafter made. Has the Senator some particular part of the statute in mind in asking the question?

Mr. DANAHER. I will ask the Senator to pass the question for the moment while I say that I have kept pretty complete notes of our conference, and I have no recollection whatever of our having probed into the regulations and orders, having the force and effect of law, which have been issued or may be issued under section 7 (a) (2). Does the Senator from Vermont have any recollection of our having discussed the effect of any such regulations or orders within the meaning of that section?

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not know whether we discussed it or not. I know that I considered it. This morning I placed in the RECORD what I regard as a very learned treatise on this subject, which had no application in the mind of its author to this particular bill; but by a strange coincidence it pointed out many laws which are really gathered in by the proposal which is pending. I wish to refer to them only by name. I shall not undertake to read them, because the text of the admirable article by Mr. Montague, of New York, who is a great lawyer, has already been inserted in the RECORD.

When we probe, as the Senator asked me to do, the question whether regulations and orders made by the President have the effect and force of law, so as to come within the clause "and all other applicable provisions of law," my answer is in the affirmative. In illustration of my answer, I point to this short category of laws. From 1933 to 1941 Congress enacted numerous emergency statutes authorizing the President to make rules and regulations which should have the force and effect of law. Some of them apply to such a situation as this. Then there are the powers which were granted by the Council of National Defense Act of 1916; the Trading With the Enemy Act of 1917; the Espionage Act of 1917; and other First World War legislation, which long ago vested in the President the power of making regulations which should have the effect of law.

There are also many unnoticed and forgotten laws which have survived through many years, in ancient statutes which predate the First World War. They are scattered through the statute books.

Finally we have the great reservoir of power which is in the Constitution, and which expressly or by necessary implication gives to the President, the Commander in Chief, the power to do things by regulation or order. In addition, Congress passed the Second War Powers Act of March 27, 1942, title III, of which vested in the President the power, by regulation or order, to bind the property, the persons, the activities, and the lives of our people. I have some extracts from the statutes, but I shall not take the time to read them into the RECORD. As I say, this matter was not overlooked. It is my recollection that regulations and orders were expressly included in the House text. Does the Senator from Connecticut remember that?

Mr. DANAHER. I will answer the Senator from Vermont by saying that section 7 (a) makes reference to "any Executive order or regulation issued under the provisions of the act of October 2, 1942."

Mr. AUSTIN. I rely on that.

Mr. DANAHER. But I was directing my question, as the Senator may recall, to the provisions of section 7 (a) (2).

Mr. AUSTIN. I believe that the House text contained a direct reference to regulations and orders. But whether it did or not—I will not speak for anyone else in the conference—I consider the words "and all other applicable provisions of law" as comprehensive of the powers with which the President was vested, to create an agency or a director and say, "You do so and so."

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas further yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LUCAS in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I should like to invite the attention of the Senator from Vermont to line 4 on page 4. In addition to the reference to the Price Control Act of 1942, it says, "and by any other statute." So it is all-embracing.

Mr AUSTIN. Such references are very numerous. If a lawyer wanted a good job, he could get a long job compiling and codifying the various statutes which have never been repealed, and which have been forgotten, giving the President, the Commander in Chief, extraordinary powers in time of war or emergency.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas further yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. The Senator from Vermont answered the question in the affirmative and supplemented his answer by an explanation which, of course, is in aid of his earlier answer to the Senator from Texas, when he said "That is correct, I believe"—meaning the interpretation which the Senator from Texas had earlier expressed.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is what I thought.

Mr. DANAHER. The Senator from Vermont quite properly points out that section 7 (a), subclauses 1 and 2, would not apply in any case in which the Government had actually seized the plant.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is true.

Mr. DANAHER. Having that in mind, I ask the Senator whether or not in his judgment the President, by Executive order, will in the future have the power to override or supersede any order which the War Labor Board may enter pursuant to the conference of power which this proposed statute grants.

Mr. AUSTIN. My answer is "Yes."

Mr. DANAHER. Having established that much in our minds, for the purposes of the present colloquy I ask the Senator to revert to section 5, for he has pointed out that section 5, on page 3, will have application whenever the Government shall have seized a strike-bound plant.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is correct.

Mr. DANAHER. I read from that section this language:

> Upon receipt of any such application—

That means an application by a majority of the employees of a plant for a rectification of conditions—> and after such hearings and investigation as it deems necessary, such Board may order any changes in such wages or other terms and conditions which it deems to be fair and reasonable and not in conflict with any act of Congress or any Executive order issued thereunder.

Stopping the quotation at that point, I ask the Senator from Vermont if he also believes that this language imposes a limitation on the War Labor Board or creates a duty on the Board, to have regard to the very same statutes, the very same Executive orders, and the very same regulations which he has spelled out as having application under section 7 (a) (2)?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes. I think they should be observed; but this is an attempt to spell out, in the indirect way, after such hearings and investigations, what the order shall conform to. It says that the order shall not conflict with any act of Congress. Instead of saying that the judgment shall conform to certain acts, naming them, it is in reverse:

> Upon the receipt of any such application and after such hearings and investigation as it deems necessary, such board may order any changes in such wages or other terms and conditions which it deems to be fair and reasonable and not in conflict with any act of Congress or any Executive order issued thereunder.

That is one of the transformations which we made, from a prolabor pressure agency, operating with respect to employees alone, without regard to law, into a real judicial body, acting upon evidence and upon the law, and subject to confirmation by the President in one case, and by the Stabilization Director in the other.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas further yield to me?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I did not mean to imply, if the Senator gathered such inference from my earlier comment, that the points to which the Senator has allusion with reference to regulations and Executive orders had been promulgated, which, I think, was the Senator's word. I simply pointed out that they had not been discussed.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think the Senator is correct about that. I do not recall any special discussion about it.

Mr. DANAHER. That is correct.

Mr. AUSTIN. My own action in the matter of agreeing to the report was that I regarded that entirely adequate for our purposes.

Mr. DANAHER. And it was in our minds, was it not?

Mr. AUSTIN. It was in our minds.

Mr. DANAHER. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. And all other applicable provisions of the law.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, because of the far-reaching scope and the all-inclusive nature of this particular section we had provided for an appeal which would look to the review of the final decision of the War Labor Board, had we not?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Will the Senator allow me to answer that question?

Mr. DANAHER. No; I should like to have the Senator from Vermont answer the question.

Mr. HATCH. I merely wish to say to the Senator——

Mr. DANAHER. I do not have the floor, and I cannot stop the distinguished Senator from New Mexico from coaching the witness, but he does not need the assistance of the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. I really wanted to pay a little tribute to the Senator from Vermont. It was his provision which provided for the appeal.

Mr. DANAHER. After that encomium does the Senator from Vermont wish to answer the question?

Mr. AUSTIN. I would do so without it. I believe in the right of review. That is an American principle. I have for many sessions of Congress worked with the distinguished Senator from New Mexico and the distinguished Senator from Connecticut on a subcommittee dealing with the review of the decisions of administrative boards. I believe in the principle of review, and, believing in it, I tried to write an amendment which would insure that kind of review. I presented it, but—I do not undertake to violate the confidence of the members of the conference in saying this—for my part I changed my mind about insisting upon it, for two reasons. I will be perfectly candid in stating why. One of my reasons was perhaps all that was necessary, and that was that it could not be agreed to. But another reason was that the proposed legislation had to do merely with the prosecution of the war and the attempt to assure continuous maximum production of the things necessary to be sent overseas to our armed forces. Therefore, the idea of intruding into the war effort delays which might arise from appeals induced me to change my mind, and I withdrew the amendment which I had proposed. Is that correct as the Senator remembers it?

Mr. DANAHER. If the Senator from Texas will yield further to me, I should like to answer that question by pointing out to the Senator from New Mexico, who, of course, wishes to be accurate, that in lines 11 to 15, on page 6, of the Senate bill, the bill for which the Senate voted, as it left this body, appeared this clause:

> The decision of the Board, including particularly its interpretation of the provisions of the said Price Emergency Control Act of 1942, and said act of 1942, shall be final, except as it may be subject to review by the court on questions of law.

I quote from the bill which the Senate passed, and that is where the power of review was contained in the Senate version of the bill. Is that not correct, as I have just stated?

Mr. AUSTIN. Oh, yes. The Senator is speaking from the record.

Mr. DANAHER. Yes. Whereupon, in conference the Senator from Vermont did write out a section which proposed the questions which might be considered by the court on review, and those questions were questions of law, and very valid and very pertinent questions. The Senator from Vermont may recall that I added even to his draft an additional section which would have conferred on the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia jurisdiction to entertain a petition for review. All those things were before the conferees.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is correct.

Mr. DANAHER. Now, of course, it is the fact that there is no longer any petition for review possible under the proposed act, and no appeal is permitted under it.

Mr. AUSTIN. I cannot let that statement go without responding to it. It is my opinion that, if the measure were to become law as it is, and a violation of the rights of either employer or employee should occur which caused damage, there would be a remedy at law for him which would amount to the same thing as a review. In other words, there cannot be an arbitrary exercise of power in our Government.

Mr. DANAHER. Will the Senator from Vermont yield for a further question?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. DANAHER. Because, Mr. President, I should refresh the recollection of the Senator, and I certainly wish to correct the Senator from Texas with reference to his discussion of section 5. There is no provision whatever in section 5 for the employer to seek an appeal or rectification of the conditions which led to the dispute in a case of seizure of a strike-bound plant. Quite the contrary, the Government agency which is operating the plant, or a majority of the employees of the plant, or their representatives, may apply to the National War Labor Board. So the employer, the owner of the plant, has no redress whatever under section 5. I make that specific point, and ask the Senator from Vermont if that is not correct.

Mr. AUSTIN. If I understood what the Senator said—and I apologize for not hearing him distinctly because my attention was diverted to something else—assuming that the Senator said there was no redress for an employer if his rights should be violated, I should have to say "No," that in my opinion there is always redress for an owner of a plant, an employer of labor, if his rights are taken from him without due process of law. Our courts are open to him, I do not have very much doubt about that.

Mr. DANAHER. There is no redress for him under section 5, is there?

Mr. AUSTIN. It is not expressed there.

Mr. DANAHER. No; and the employer most certainly is not, under section 5, authorized to apply to the National War Labor Board for a change in wages and conditions, is he?

Mr. AUSTIN. Not under section 5; that is, when the Government is in control.

Mr. DANAHER. I agree.

Mr. AUSTIN. So the Government would not, probably, be envisaged as having any need to make such an application where it seizes a plant only for the purpose of dealing with a temporary stoppage and with the intention always of returning the plant, as the bill provides, not more than 60 days after the restoration of productive conditions.

Mr. DANAHER. So that when a plant has been seized, the owner or management may not, under section 5, apply to the War Labor Board for a rectification of the conditions which led to the seizure of the plant, may it, under section 5?

Mr. AUSTIN. No.

Mr. DANAHER. When we read subclause (d) of section 7, we find that the owner of a plant is debarred from any remedy under subsections (a) (1) and (2) also, is he not, when the Government has seized the plant?

Mr. AUSTIN. Certainly. It would be a queer situation if the Government of the United States had seized a plant, and was in full operation of it, and then found it necessary to go to some board which had to do with terms and wages and conditions of employment. The Government's power is so supreme that if there were trouble with the toilets, or if there were dangerous machinery, or wages were not right, the Government could act without having to apply to anybody. We have to envisage this practically. Under section 5, if a plant is seized by the Government, there should not be a situation in which the Government would have to apply for anything.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I wish to thank the Senator from Texas for his courtesy in permitting me to enter into the colloquy with the Senator from Vermont. I will say, merely by way of passing observation in regard to the last answer of the Senator from Vermont, that obviously, as the Senator himself frankly and candidly and quite correctly concedes, the owner may not seek the jurisdiction of the War Labor Board under section 5 if a plant has been seized, and he may not get jurisdiction before the War Labor Board under section 7 (a) (1) and (2) if a plant has been seized, so the only remedy the employer has is to go before the War Labor Board, in the event the Board sends for him by way of subpena, if the Conciliation Service certifies the dispute to the Board, or if the Board takes jurisdiction on its own motion on the ground that there is a serious threat to the continued productivity of the plant. Is that not so?

Mr. AUSTIN. I think that is a fair statement, except, as I have repeatedly said, that if the owner suffers any injury through the act of the Government in taking his property, he has redress, under the Constitution, in the courts of the United States.

The assumption I have in supporting this extraordinary legislation is that the owner will welcome and be very glad to have the interposition of a peacemaker if he is under the threat of a discontinuance of his effort as a war contractor.

Mr. DANAHER. When the Senator uses the word "redress," he does not mean review of the Labor Board's decision?

Mr. AUSTIN. No.

Mr. DANAHER. He means only that if the employer can prove damage, he may seek to exhibit it before a court and to obtain a recovery from someone?

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DANAHER. And from whom?

Mr. AUSTIN. From the Government of the United States.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. AUSTIN. The proposed act recognizes that.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, just one word, and then I shall yield the floor for the time being.

I wish to call to the attention of Senators, in regard to the court matter, that it appeared in the hearings that about 750 cases had been before the War Labor Board, and in only one case had there been any attempt to resort to the courts, and in that case the petition was dismissed. I now yield to the Senator from Alabama.

REJECTION

Executive nomination rejected by the Senate June 11 (legislative day of May 24), 1943:

POSTMASTER

Wallie E. Beasley to be postmaster at Biloxi, in the State of Mississippi.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JUNE 11, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Reverend Father Philip Gordon, Chippewa Indian and Catholic priest, pastor of St. Patrick's Church, Centuria, Wis., offered the following prayer:

Father Almighty, we lift our minds and hearts to Thee in sacred communion for these brief moments.

We praise and adore Thee. We thank Thee for the evidences of Thy good will and love toward our people and our Nation.

The black chimneys of industry and the glittering temples of commerce that dot our vast land all too well bespeak Thy favors and the afforded opportunity given to our great Nation to advance the welfare of its peoples.

Let us, O good Lord, not forget that we need a faith in Thee reared like the giant cathedral deep and solid in the bosom of the earth. Grant us, we beseech Thee, a firm belief in Thy power and majesty, Thy justice and charity.

Grant, we pray, that this legislative body be guided by true Christian principles, so that in the twilight of the lives of its individual Members well may it be said of them in the words of the ancient Latin hymn—

"Vexilla Regis prodeunt
"Fulget Crucis mysterium."

Bless, O Great Spirit, the Kitchi Manito of our forefathers, our Great White Father, our President and our Commander in Chief. Bless the Members of this Congress. Bless us all, dear Lord.

We beg these favors of Thee in the name of the Most Holy Trinity—Father, Thee, and the Holy Ghost. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

USE AND OPERATION OF WAR PLANTS IN PROSECUTION OF WAR

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 796) relating to the use and operation by the United States of certain plants in the interests of the national defense, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House may be read in lieu of the full report.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the text of the bill and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following:

Such power and authority may be exercised by the President through such department or agency of the Government as he may designate, and may be exercised with respect to any such plant, mine, or facility whenever the President finds, after investigation, and proclaims that there is an interruption of the operation of such plant, mine, or facility as a result of a strike or other labor disturbance, that the war effort will be unduly impeded or delayed by such interruption, and that the exercise of such power and authority is necessary to insure the operation of such plant, mine, or facility in the interest of the war effort: Provided, That whenever any such plant, mine, or facility has been or is hereafter so taken by reason of a strike, lock-out, threatened strike, threatened lock-out, work stoppage, or other cause, such plant, mine, or facility shall be returned to the owners thereof as soon as practicable, but in no event more than sixty days after the restoration of the productive efficiency thereof prevailing prior to the taking of possession thereof: Provided further, That possession of any plant, mine, or facility shall not be taken under authority of this section after the termination of hostilities in the present war, as proclaimed by the President, or after the termination of the War Labor Disputes Act; and the authority to operate any such plant, mine, or facility under the provisions of this section shall terminate at the end of six months after the termination of such hostilities as so proclaimed.'"

Upon receipt of any such application, and after such hearings and investigations as it deems necessary, such Board may order any changes in such wages, or other terms and conditions, which it deems to be fair and reasonable and not in conflict with any Act of Congress or any Executive order issued thereunder. Any such order of the Board shall, upon approval by the President, be complied with by the Government agency operating such plant, mine, or facility.

"INTERFERENCE WITH GOVERNMENT OPERATION OF PLANTS

"SEC. 6. (a) Whenever any plant, mine, or facility is in the possession of the United States, it shall be unlawful for any person (1) to coerce, instigate, induce, conspire with, or encourage any person, to interfere, by lock-out, strike, slow-down, or other interruption, with the operation of such plant, mine, or facility, or (2) to aid any such lock-out, strike, slow-down, or other interruption interfering with the operation of such plant, mine, or facility by giving direction or guidance in the conduct of such interruption, or by providing funds for the conduct or direction thereof or for the payment of strike, unemployment, or other benefits to those participating therein. No individual shall be deemed to have violated the provisions of this section by reason only of his having ceased work or having refused to continue to work or to accept employment.

"(b) Any person who willfully violates any provision of this section shall be subject to a fine of not more than $5,000, or to imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

"FUNCTIONS AND DUTIES OF THE NATIONAL WAR LABOR BOARD

"SEC. 7. (a) The National War Labor Board (hereinafter in this section called the 'Board'), established by Executive Order Numbered 9017, dated January 12, 1942, in addition to all powers conferred on it by section 1 (a) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, and by any Executive order or regulation issued under the provisions of the Act of October 2, 1942, entitled 'An Act to amend the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, to aid in preventing inflation, and for other purposes', and by any other statute, shall have the following powers and duties:

"(1) Whenever the United States Conciliation Service (hereinafter called the 'Conciliation Service') certifies that a labor dispute exists which may lead to substantial interference with the war effort, and cannot be settled by collective bargaining or conciliation, to summon both parties to such dispute before it and conduct a public hearing on the merits of the dispute. If in the opinion of the Board a labor dispute has become so serious that it may lead to substantial interference with the war effort, the Board may take such action on its own motion. At such hearing both parties shall be given full notice and opportunity to be heard, but the failure of either party to appear shall not deprive the Board of jurisdiction to proceed to a hearing and order.

"(2) To decide the dispute, and provide by order the wages and hours and all other terms and conditions (customarily included in collective-bargaining agreements) governing the relations between the parties, which shall be in effect until further order of the Board. In making any such decision the Board shall conform to the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended; the National Labor Relations Act; the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended; and the Act of October 2, 1942, as amended, and all other applicable provisions of law; and where no other law is applicable the order of the Board shall provide for terms and conditions to govern relations between the parties which shall be fair and equitable to employer and employee under all the circumstances of the case.

"(3) To require the attendance of witnesses and the production of such papers, documents, and records as may be material to its investigation of facts in any labor dispute, and to issue subpenas requiring such attendance or production.

"(4) To apply to any Federal district court for an order requiring any person within its jurisdiction to obey a subpena issued by the Board; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred on any such court to issue such an order.

"(b) The Board, by its Chairman, shall have power to issue subpenas requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses, and the production of any books, papers, records, or other documents, material to any inquiry or hearing before the Board or any designated member or agent thereof. Such subpenas shall be enforceable in the same manner, and subject to the same penalties, as subpenas issued by the President under title III of the Second War Powers Act, approved March 27, 1942.

"(c) No member of the Board shall be permitted to participate in any decision in which such member has a direct interest as an officer, employee, or representative of either party to the dispute.

"(d) Subsections (a) (1) and (2) shall not apply with respect to any plant, mine, or facility of which possession has been taken by the United States.

"(e) The Board shall not have any powers under this section with respect to any matter within the purview of the Railway Labor Act, as amended.

"NOTICE OF THREATENED INTERRUPTIONS IN WAR PRODUCTION, ETC.

"SEC. 8. (a) In order that the President may be apprised of labor disputes which threaten seriously to interrupt war production, and in order that employees may have an opportunity to express themselves, free from restraint or coercion, as to whether they will permit such interruptions in wartime—

"(1) The representative of the employees of a war contractor, shall give to the Secretary of Labor, the National War Labor Board, and the National Labor Relations Board, notice of any such labor dispute involving such contractor and employees, together with a statement of the issues giving rise thereto.

"(2) For not less than thirty days after any notice under paragraph (1) is given, the contractor and his employees shall continue production under all the conditions which prevailed when such dispute arose, except as they may be modified by mutual agreement or by decision of the National War Labor Board.

"(3) On the thirtieth day after notice under paragraph (1) is given by the representative of the employees, unless such dispute has been settled, the National Labor Relations Board shall forthwith take a secret ballot of the employees in the plant, plants, mine, mines, facility, facilities, bargaining unit, or bargaining units, as the case may be, with respect to which the dispute is applicable on the question whether they will permit any such interruption of war production. The National Labor Relations Board shall include on the ballot a concise statement of the major issues involved in the dispute and of the efforts being made and the facilities being utilized for the settlement of such dispute. The National Labor Relations Board shall by order forthwith certify the results of such balloting, and such results shall be open to public inspection. The National Labor Relations Board may provide for preparing such ballot and distributing it to the employees at any time after such notice has been given.

"(b) Subsection (a) shall not apply with respect to any plant, mine, or facility of which possession has been taken by the United States.

"(c) Any person who is under a duty to perform any act required under subsection (a) and who willfully fails or refuses to perform such act shall be liable for damages resulting from such failure or refusal to any person injured thereby and to the United States if so injured. The district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine any proceedings instituted pursuant to this subsection in the same manner and to the same extent as in the case of proceedings instituted under section 24 (14) of the Judicial Code.

"POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS BY LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

"SEC. 9. Section 313 of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act, 1925 (U. S. C., 1940 edition, title 2, sec. 251), is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 313. It is unlawful for any national bank, or any corporation organized by authority of any law of Congress, to make a contribution in connection with any election to any political office, or for any corporation whatever, or any labor organization to make a contribution in connection with any election at which Presidential and Vice Presidential electors or a Senator or Representative in, or a Delegate or Resident Commissioner to Congress are to be voted for, or for any candidate, political committee, or other person to accept or receive any contribution prohibited by this section. Every corporation or labor organization which makes any contribution in violation of this section shall be fined not more than $5,000; and every officer or director of any corporation, or officer of any labor organization, who consents to any contribution by the corporation or labor organization, as the case may be, in violation of this section shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both. For the purposes of this section "labor organization" shall have the same meaning as under the National Labor Relations Act.'

"TERMINATION OF ACT

"SEC. 10. Except as to offenses committed prior to such date, the provisions of this Act and the amendments made by this Act shall cease to be effective at the end of six months following the termination of hostilities in the present war, as proclaimed by the President, or upon the date (prior to the date of such proclamation) of the passage of a concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress stating that such provisions and amendments shall cease to be effective.

"SEPARABILITY

"SEC. 11. If any provision of this Act or of any amendment made by this Act, or the application of such provision to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the Act and of such amendments, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby."

And the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the title of the bill and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following:

Amend the title so as to read: "An Act relating to the use and operation by the United States of certain plants, mines, and facilities in the prosecution of the war, and preventing strikes, lock-outs, and stoppages of production, and for other purposes."

And the House agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 796) relating to the use and operation by the United States of certain plants in the interests of the national defense, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

SHORT TITLE

The first section of the conference agreement provides that the act may be cited as the "War Labor Disputes Act."

DEFINITIONS

Section 2 of the conference agreement defines terms used and is the same as section 1 of the House amendment.

POWER OF PRESIDENT TO TAKE POSSESSION OF PLANTS

Section 3 of the conference agreement amends section 9 of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, to extend the powers of the President to take possession and operate certain plants in the interest of the national defense, to plants, mines, and facilities at which there is an interruption of operations as a result of a strike or other labor disturbance. As a condition to the exercise of such authority the President is required to find, after investigation, and proclaim that there is an interruption of the operation of such plant, mine, or facility as a result of a strike or other labor disturbance, that the war effort will be unduly impeded or delayed by such interruption, and that the exercise of such power and authority is necessary to insure the operation of the plant, mine, or facility in the interest of the war effort. The plant, mine, or facility must be returned to the owners as soon as practicable, but in any event no more than 60 days after the restoration of the productive efficiency thereof prevailing prior to the taking of possession by the President. The authority to take possession of any plant, mine, or facility under section 9 of the Selective Training and Service Act, as amended, is to terminate upon the termination of hostilities in the present war, as proclaimed by the President or upon the passage prior to such date of a concurrent resolution by the two Houses terminating the bill. The authority to operate any plant, mine, or facility under such section 9 is to terminate at the end of 6 months after the termination of such hostilities as so proclaimed.

Section 3 of the conference agreement, above described, is substantially the same as section 1 of the Senate bill with the exception of the requirements of returning the plant to the owners, and in this respect the conference agreement is substantially the same as sections 7 and 11 of the House amendment.

TERMS OF EMPLOYMENT AT GOVERNMENT OPERATED PLANTS

Section 4 of the conference agreement provides that when possession of any plant, mine, or facility is taken under the authority granted by section 9 of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, the plant, mine, or facility, while so possessed, shall be operated under the terms and conditions of employment which were in effect at the time possession was taken, except as such terms and conditions may be modified in accordance with the procedure set out in section 5 of the conference agreement.

Section 4 of the conference agreement is substantially the same as section 2 of the Senate bill.

APPLICATION TO WAR LABOR BOARD FOR CHANGE IN TERMS OF EMPLOYMENT AT GOVERNMENT OPERATED PLANTS

Section 5 of the conference agreement provides that when possession of any plant, mine, or facility is taken under section 9 of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, the Government agency operating the plant, mine, or facility, or a majority of the employees at the plant, mine, or facility, or their representatives, may apply to the National War Labor Board for a change in wages or other terms of employment. The Board is authorized to order any changes in such wages or other terms which it deems to be fair and equitable and not in conflict with any act of Congress or any Executive order issued thereunder. The order of the Board, upon approval by the President, is to be complied with by the Government agency operating the plant, mine, or facility.

Section 5 of the conference agreement is substantially the same as section 3 of the Senate bill.

INTERFERENCE WITH GOVERNMENT OPERATION OF PLANTS

Section 6 of the conference agreement makes it unlawful to coerce, instigate, induce, conspire with, or encourage any person to interfere by strike, lock-out, or other interruption, with the operation of any plant, mine, or facility in the possession of the United States, or to aid any such interruption by giving direction or guidance in the conduct thereof or by providing strike, unemployment, or other benefits to those participating therein. Violations of this section are punishable by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 1 year or both. An individual is not to be considered to have violated this section by reason only of his having ceased work or having refused to continue to work or to accept employment.

Section 5 of the conference agreement is substantially the same as section 4 of the Senate bill and section 12 of the House amendment, except that the act of conspiring with or encouraging any person to so interfere has been made subject to the penalties above described.

FUNCTIONS AND DUTIES OF THE NATIONAL WAR LABOR BOARD

Section 7 of the conference agreement describes the powers of the National War Labor Board with respect to labor disputes which may result in a substantial interference with the war effort, and is substantially the same as section 6 of the Senate bill and section 8 of the House amendment, except that there has been included in this section the provisions of section 14 of the House amendment which provide that no member of the Board shall be permitted to participate in any decision in which he has a direct interest as an officer, employee, or representative of either party to the dispute.

NOTICE OF THREATENED INTERRUPTION IN WAR PRODUCTION

Section 8 of the conference agreement provides that in order that the President may be apprised of labor disturbances which threaten seriously to interrupt war production, and in order that employees may have an opportunity to express themselves, free from restraint or coercion, as to whether they will permit such interruption in wartime—

(1) The representative of employees of a war contractor must give to the Secretary of Labor, the National War Labor Board, and the National Labor Relations Board notice of any such labor dispute involving the contractor and such employees. The notice is to include a statement of the issues giving rise to the dispute.

(2) For not less than 30 days after any such notice is given the contractor and his employees must continue production under the terms and conditions which prevailed when the dispute arose, except as they may be modified by mutual agreement or by decision of the War Labor Board.

(3) On the thirtieth day after notice is given by the representative of the employees the National Labor Relations Board is directed, unless the dispute has been settled, to take a secret ballot of the employees on the question whether they will permit an interruption of war production. The National Labor Relations Board is to include on the ballot a concise statement of the major issues involved in the dispute and of the efforts being made and the facilities being utilized for the settlement of the dispute. The Board, upon conclusion of the election, must forthwith certify the results of the balloting, and the results are to be open to public inspection.

A person who willfully fails or refuses to do what this section requires is to be liable for damages resulting from such failure or refusal to any person injured thereby, and also to the United States if so injured. This section is not applicable with respect to any mine, plant, or facility of which possession has been taken by the United States.

Section 8 of the conference agreement embodies substantially the same policy as sections 2 and 3 of the House amendment, and the penalty for violation is substantially the same as that contained in section 4 (a) of the House amendment. The penalties provided in section 4 (b) and (c) of the House amendment are not contained in the conference agreement.

POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS BY LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

Section 9 of the conference agreement prohibits political contributions by labor organizations in connection with any election to which Presidential and Vice Presidential electors or a Senator or Representative in, or a Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, Congress are to be voted for. This section is the same as section 6 of the House amendment.

TERMINATION OF ACT

Section 10 of the conference agreement provides that the act is to cease to be effective at the end of 6 months following the termination of hostilities in the present war, as proclaimed by the President, or upon the date, prior to such proclamation, of the passage of a concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress stating that the act is to cease to be effective. This section is the same as section 13 of the House amendment.

SEPARABILITY

Section 11 of the conference agreement contains the usual separability clause.

The conference agreement contains a technical amendment to the title of the bill.

USE AND OPERATIONS OF WAR PLANTS IN PROSECUTION OF WAR

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to report to the House today that your conferees have brought back a unanimous report on this legislation. I shall not undertake to go into the details of the several sections of the bill to explain the conflicts that were ironed out and reconciled between the conferees of the House and the Senate. I desire to say, however, that the conference was an extremely pleasant one and I can say for the gentlemen of the Senate that they were forgiving, forbearing, and patient, and there was hardly anybody in the conference who was incorrigible except myself.

We finally greatly improved the bill as I believe because we accepted in part the Senate provision and in part the House provision. We put together the important sections of the two bills and arrived at a conclusion that I think will be satisfactory to the membership of the House.

I want to point out that there was one thing in the legislation that was of vital importance to me from the beginning to the end of it, and that was the question of conferring upon the War Labor Board the necessary powers to make effective whatever order it may enter in any labor dispute or in any controversy coming before it. The President's Executive order which set up the War Labor Board is confirmed and approved by the legislation, which means that it now has legislative sanction and legislative power and authority subject, of course, to the provisions of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, and the Stabilization Act of October 2, 1942, and the orders and regulations issued pursuant to those acts.

In addition, the committee in compliance with the section of the House amendment to the bill extended the power of the War Labor Board to issue subpenas and other processes to compel the attendance of parties and witnesses. Everybody knows, of course, how obvious the necessity for this is under the circumstances obtaining throughout the country.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I notice in paragraph 3 of section 7, appearing on page 4 of the conference report, that this language is used:

> In making any such decision the Board shall conform to the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended; the National Labor Relations Act; the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended; and the act of October 2, 1942, as amended.

I call particular attention to this language following immediately thereafter:

> And all other applicable provisions of law.

This language was in the Connally bill as it passed the Senate. The House in paragraph (b) of section 8 on page 15 of the House bill, referring to these same acts, used this language—

> And regulations and orders issued under such acts—

Instead of the language—

> And all other applicable provisions of law.

Was it the intention of the conferees that paragraph 2 of section 7 of the conference report should be construed the same as the language—

> And regulations and orders issued under such acts.

Mr. MAY. It was the intention of the conferees, and it was their purpose to make effective all of the provisions of the acts named and regulations and orders issued pursuant thereto and in no sense to weaken them, but, on the contrary, to strengthen them everywhere we could. The language which the gentleman quoted which appeared in the House bill was unnecessary, since any regulation or order issued pursuant to law is itself part of the law. The language quoted was omitted as unnecessary.

Mr. McCORMACK. Any regulations or orders issued under such acts?

Mr. MAY. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. In other words, to submit a specific inquiry, it is not the intention to interfere with the authority and powers of Judge Vinson that he has under the Executive order creating the office of Director of Stabilization?

Mr. MAY. None whatever. On the contrary, we would like to strengthen his hand wherever we can.

Mr. McCORMACK. It is the intention to strengthen rather than weaken.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

The conferees undertook, as far as they could, to maintain every provision of the House bill. Of course, there were so many similar provisions in the two bills that when you read the statement of the conferees and the report of the conferees together you will find that we took out of one bill one section and out of the other bill another section, and there were several instances in which the sections were the same. Where we wrote in one section it was probably the Senate bill or possibly the House bill. Under those circumstances, we were able to get together.

I am very glad to bring to you a unanimous report. I hope we can conclude the debate as promptly as possible, and that the report will be approved very promptly by an overwhelming vote.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. Being interested in maintaining the high degree of productivity that our workers have rather than venting our spleen on any individual, I wonder whether or not the conferees gave any thought to the possibility of affecting seriously that production record through the adoption of this report.

Mr. MAY. The conferees were of the opinion when we got through with the legislation, and are of the opinion now, as I am, that we have not done anything in this legislation to offend any labor group, but have left in their hands largely the power to control their own activities without dictation from anybody else or anyone, and that we have provided protection for all of their rights under the Wagner Labor Relations Act, under the National Industrial Recovery Act, and under the Wages and Hours Act, without any impairment whatever of any of those rights. We have left it to them that when they want to have an election on the question of whether they will strike or will not strike, they can have that election by secret ballot, the same as you and I have the right to vote on the question of the election of our Representatives and Senators in Congress.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the House to the history of a very vicious provision which the House, in Committee of the Whole, took out of the original May bill, which the gentleman from Virginia took out of his own amendment to the Harness substitute and which has now been put back again in this conference report. By the use of different language the same purpose is being accomplished.

When the original May bill was reported out of committee, it provided that the War Labor Board could not direct any worker to become a member or remain a member of any union. I pointed out that this might mean the end of the closed shop and might mean the end of the union maintenance clauses in the various contracts now in existence. This I did before the Committee on Rules.

Subsequently the Committee on Military Affairs met and recommended a committee amendment striking out that language, so that it would then be possible for the War Labor Board to continue union maintenance, the union shop, and the closed shop wherever they existed, because it was recognized that to do otherwise, to deprive the War Labor Board of the power to direct the union maintenance, the union shop, and the closed shop, would bring about anarchy and chaos in war industries. So the Committee on Military Affairs had an amendment prepared taking out that language.

Then the Harness substitute was offered and the Harness substitute omitted that language. At the time that a deal was entered into—we may as well speak frankly here, because labor is being pilloried and lynched—when a deal was entered into between those who were supporting the Harness substitute and the forces that were supporting the Smith amendment to the Harness substitute, the gentleman from Indiana and others were opposed to having that particular language in the bill. Thus the astute gentleman from Virginia who had put that language again in his amendment to the Harness substitute, because of the insistence of many of you who were ready to vote for the bill without that language, submitted a unanimous-consent request to withdraw that language, to eliminate it, but objection was made. Then the gentleman from Virginia went so far as to offer an amendment to his amendment striking out that language, and this amendment was carried. Therefore, when the bill went to conference, the language prohibiting the War Labor Board to order continuance of the closed union shop and union maintenance did not exist in this bill.

Now, we find this prohibition back again in this conference report, and I shall show you how they do it. I call attention to page 4 of the conference report, subdivision 2, which states as follows:

> In making any such decision the Board shall conform to the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended; the National Labor Relations Act; etc.

What do they mean by that? The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] very well knows that in dealing with a situation under the National Labor Relations Act, the National Labor Relations Board is dealing with just two problems: One, the right to organize, and, two, the right of the worker to choose his agent for the purpose of collective bargaining. There we have a situation where we are not dealing with a contract or a relationship between employer and a union in existence. We are dealing with the problem determining who shall be the agent to bargain collectively on behalf of the workers and the right of workers to organize. The National Labor Relations Board cannot direct a closed shop, union shop, or union-maintenance clause. Therefore, by inserting this clause you are now forbidding the War Labor Board to order a closed shop, union shop, or union-maintenance shop. I have explained this involved manipulation so that when you vote for this conference report you will know what you are doing, and I challenge anybody to deny that you are not voting to prohibit the War Labor Board from directing the continuance of a closed shop, union shop, or union-maintenance agreements. Further, I have consistently opposed this legislation because it undermines labor's no-strike pledge, it shackles American labor, it gives undue advantage to employers, it makes for disruption in war industry, it constitutes provocation for industrial disputes, and it is oppressive and coercive. It will injure our war effort.

Fundamentally, it substitutes for our American and democratic system of free American labor the fascistic labor set-up of Government-controlled labor unions. This legislation is incipient fascism. In the interest of democracy and victory, I ask you to vote down this report.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS].

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman begins will he yield for a question?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Briefly for one question.

Mr. WRIGHT. I am deeply disturbed by the situation disclosed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. I shall talk about that in a few minutes.

Mr. Speaker, your conferees, seeking to compromise the diversities between the Senate measure, S. 796, and the House substitute, enacted here just a week ago, have returned a proposal which I believe is the most effective solution which could be reached under the circumstances. It is, in my opinion, a far less satisfactory and effective proposal than the House measure, for it omits a House provision which I still believe to be most helpful and constructive. Worse, it retains the principal Senate provisions validating property seizure in case of strike or work stoppage. I have steadfastly maintained, and I still insist, that the forceful seizure of property is utterly no solution of the basic problems which lead to labor unrest. This is merely more arbitrary power added to authority already vested in the Executive to deal in a purely personal way in labor relations, and the record certainly is sufficiently clear that administrative law written at the whim and fancy of an individual simply will not work.

Even more vigorously, I have insisted that Congress could scarcely do more in a single act to jeopardize the American system of free enterprise and the constitutional rights of the individual than to endorse this principle of property seizure by an all-powerful Executive. I could not in good conscience, therefore, support this measure offered by the conference committee unless I sincerely believed that in endorsing property seizure we have safely limited and restrained the authority of the Executive by several provisions of this proposal.

First, this conference committee bill provides that property taken under this authority shall be returned to its private owners within a period not to exceed 60 days after normal production in the property has been restored. I wish here that the phraseology might have been more specific, for as the provision is now written the determination of the date on which normal production is resumed is left largely with the President. The owner of any property seized may, of course, seek the protection of the courts if the Executive is deemed to be delaying unduly the return of the property. Still, the very vagueness of the language in this instance might conceivably defeat the purpose the conferees had in mind, for a Socialist-minded leadership, or a very small minority of trouble makers, bent on holding a plant or an industry in Federal bondage once it has been seized, might cause petty disturbances, press petty issues, and hamper production almost endlessly. Likewise, those powerful forces within this administration which will never cease their drive to remodel the American economy on the lines of national socialism will find it easy to interpret the language of this provision to suit their own convenience.

Your conferees, however, have added another important safeguard in section 10, which provides that this act shall cease to be effective at the end of 6 months following the termination of hostilities in the present war, as proclaimed by the President, or upon the date—prior to the date of such proclamation—of the passage of a concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress stating that such provisions and amendments shall cease to be effective.

Under this provision, of course, it shall remain the prerogative of Congress to withdraw this extraordinary authority from the President any time it may be shown that the authority is being abused. This is a real protection which I confidently believe this or any future Congress will jealously guard and promptly exercise if the occasion should ever demand.

But most important of all the safeguards provided in this measure are those provisions by which we confidently rest the responsibility for labor harmony and the future safety of free enterprise squarely in the hands of the men and women in the ranks of labor. I have every confidence that these provisions will prove effective when the rank and file of American labor come to understand that we are at once placing tremendous responsibility in their hands and giving them the important beginnings of law which will restore to them the control over their own destinies within labor organizations.

I would like to speak again here about the tremendous responsibilities which will rest with the men and women of labor if this conference measure becomes law, for I believe it cannot be stated too often or with too much emphasis that property seizure is a real and immediate danger to labor. American labor has been bombarded by Communist and Socialist propaganda which always argues otherwise, but if there is any doubt in the mind of any workingman on this point, he needs only to look to any totalitarian nation he cares to take as an example to see how labor fares under a dictatorial government. In fact, he can see his own future status clearly defined if he will go no further than the arguments of the proponents of property seizure, who have made it perfectly clear in this instance that they consider this instrument a quick and effective way of crushing out labor troubles.

There is also another small group which contends that this has been, and is, a labor-coddling Government and that in the hands of this President the right to seize property will prove to be no effective means of suppressing labor disturbances. To those it must be pointed out that every concession this administration has made to labor has been in return for political guaranties which labor leadership has so far been willing to offer.

Granted that under these circumstances property seizure will be more nearly a means of destroying private industry than of ending labor troubles under this administration, at least so long as labor leadership is willing to give the blind political obedience expected of it. Let us even assume that there will never be a rift in the relations of labor leadership and this administration; and that labor could be duped into enthusiastic support of a program that would inevitably weaken or destroy private initiative and free enterprise in America. What a mess of pottage indeed would be the temporary privileges and immunities for which labor had traded its previous birthright.

But of more immediate concern to labor is the inescapable fact that it has no guaranty that it can always deal so successfully, even with this Executive. Suppose for any one of many possible reasons the situation changes and the President develops the same personal enmity for other union heads that he now feels for John L. Lewis. If that seems unlikely, do not forget that these two men were the closest business partners in one of the most sensationally successful promotional deals in all history. If these two men can fall into bitter controversy over the division of the profits of their partnership, remember that other lesser partnerships may come to the same end. And remember too that an unrestrained power which can grant special privileges and immunities can just as well impose hardships and injustices.

These inescapable facts are, I believe, clear to the rank and file of American labor. That is why I have such confidence in the effectiveness of the House provisions for a period of calm, judicious study of any points in dispute, followed by an orderly, protected, democratic decision by secret ballot on any threat to interrupt production.

I repeat what I have said hundreds of times before, that the average man and woman in labor is thoroughly loyal, and just as anxious as anyone else to avoid work stoppages which threaten our war effort. Given the opportunity to study the questions involved, and given full protection from violence, intimidation, and compulsion by orderly election procedure and a secret ballot, I am as sure as I can ever be of anything that the American working people will emphatically put an end to strikes and labor troubles.

That is why I am perfectly willing to trust the rank and file of labor with this final responsibility, this most important restraint against property seizure. I am certain of their patriotism, and I feel sure we can trust their good judgment to resist any interference with the war effort and any attempts to destroy the American system of free enterprise.

I presume that all of the Members have seen and studied the measure reported by the conference committee, and that each is conversant with the provisions.

Section 1 cites the short title, which may be termed the "War Labor Disputes Act."

Section 2 merely sets forth definitions, which I believe will be found concise and complete.

Section 3 defines the powers of the President to take possession of property, and this is the heart of the Senate bill, with which I am sure all of you are familiar. This authority to seize extends quite comprehensively to any plant, mine, or facility which may be required for the war effort, or which may be useful in connection therewith; and may be exercised by the President or appropriate Government agency after the Executive finds and proclaims that an interruption of production has occurred or may occur which impedes or may impede the war effort.

This is indeed broad authority, but you will note the limitation in this section that the President must return to its owners any property seized within a period not to exceed 60 days from the date at which normal production is resumed.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Briefly.

Mr. HINSHAW. The language contained in the report is not "normal production." It is further restricted by stating "productive efficiency thereof." If it was "normal operation" it might have been closer to the truth.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Section 4 provides that in the case a property is seized, that plant, mine, or facility shall be operated under the terms and conditions of employment which were in effect at the time possession was taken.

Section 5 provides that in a property operating under Government control, either the Government agency in authority or a majority of all the persons employed in the property or their representatives may apply to the National War Labor Board for a change in wages or other terms or conditions of employment. It should be pointed out to labor that this provision somewhat reduces its bargaining rights, for here only a clear majority of the employees may carry a case to the Board, whereas in an industry in regular private operation, any recognized bargaining unit, even though it may be less than a majority in the plant, may seek relief through appeal to the Board.

Section 6 provides the penalties for striking against the Government after the seizure of a property. Note that it shall be unlawful for any person, first, to coerce, influence, or conspire with another person to interfere with the operation of such property, or, secondly, to aid in any way with an activity interfering with the operation of such property. Any person who willfully violates any of the provisions of this section shall be subject to a fine of not more than $5,000, or to imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

Section 7 outlines the functions and duties of the National War Labor Board. It provides that the Board shall summon for hearing both parties to a dispute where the United States Conciliation Service certifies that a dispute exists which cannot be settled by collective bargaining or conciliation. The Board is empowered also to intervene on its own motion in a case which in its opinion has become so serious that it may lead to substantial interference with the war effort.

The Board is directed to decide the disputes, and provide by order the wages and hours, and all other terms and conditions of employment within the framework of the Fair Labor Standards Act, the National Labor Relations Act, the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942 and the supplementary act of October 2, 1942.

The Board is empowered to issue subpenas requiring the attendance of witnesses, and the production of papers, documents, and records material to the issue involved.

The Board may apply to any Federal district court for an order requiring any person within its jurisdiction to obey a subpena issued by the Board.

This section confers jurisdiction on any such court to issue such an order.

Section 8 is the provision which I have so vigorously supported through the entire discussion and debate on this legislation. It provides that due notice must be given of any labor dispute involving a war contractor, and that no strike or interruption of production shall be permitted for a period of 30 days thereafter.

This section also provides that in case conciliation fails to resolve the dispute within this 30-day period, the National Labor Relations Board shall forthwith take a secret ballot of the employees in the plant, mine, or facility to determine whether they will permit any such interruption of war production.

This, I repeat, is the heart of the measure I offered as a substitute, and which the House enacted a week ago. It is by this section that we propose to place in the hands of the rank and file of American labor the privilege and the responsibility to decide of their own volition whether there shall be strikes or work stoppages that may threaten our war effort.

Section 9 prohibits political contributions by labor unions by a very simple amendment of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act of 1925, and assesses the same penalties for violation which presently obtain against any national bank or corporation.

Section 10 provides for the termination of the act at the end of 6 months following the termination of hostilities in the present war; or by concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress stating that such provisions and amendments shall cease to have effect.

Section 11 in conclusion is the customary separability provision.

I would like to point out that your conferees bring back to you the basic provisions of my substitute bill, with the exception of registration and reporting of labor organizations. To American labor I want to point out that there is not a single provision in this conference measure which weakens or destroys any basic right of any group or individual. In fact, I believe I can say in all sincerity that this restores certain rights of the individual which have been seriously encroached in recent years, for it assures again to everyone a full voice in the operation of any labor organization of which he may be a member.

I ask labor to note, too, that there is in this measure none of the drastic features of previous proposals in the House to which it raised particular objection, such as prohibitions against picketing, jurisdictional strikes, sympathy strikes, the suspension of the Norris-LaGuardia Act reviewing injunctions, and the penalties for violence and intimidation.

In fact, I believe the conference measure is one which all persons in America who want labor harmony and uninterrupted war production can embrace without misgivings.

The argument has been made throughout the study of this problem that these House provisions, or any provisions for orderly, cooperative procedure in labor disputes specifically recognizes the right of workers to strike in wartime. I fully agree that we do, in these provisions, recognize such a basic personal right. In fact, I will always insist that this is a right of free people which we should and must admit. I know of no way to deny this basic right without descending to slave labor.

It should not be necessary to point out, for I am sure that everyone, including labor, understands that this or any other personal right is always a limited right, in that it may never stand above the national welfare and safety. I shall never condone the exercise of this or any other personal right in a way which might endanger national security and welfare, but I shall never admit that the American people are incapable or unwilling to subordinate their personal privileges and interests to the greater good of their Nation.

If we have any confidence in American labor at all, we certainly do not need fear the consequence of this simple recognition, for American workers with only the rarest exceptions have been and are displaying a spirit of sacrifice of which we can all be proud. The splendid record of production through voluntary cooperation is so clear that the point admits of no argument.

All we need concern ourselves with is to give these loyal Americans the means to protect themselves from the baleful influences which are responsible for labor troubles. Give them a real, tangible, workable code of labor laws which will end administration by personal whim and fancy; enable them to make their own decisions and choose their own leaders on the basis of real labor statesmanship. When we do that we can look confidently for complete harmony and unstinted cooperation.

I want to say again I regret the fact that this legislation has been formulated in an atmosphere of emotional stress. I wish we might have made a beginning toward a real code of labor law in a more calm, deliberate, and unhurried manner. But we were faced with the stark necessities of a war emergency which demanded prompt action to insure uninterrupted production for victory.

I urge you to support this conference measure with confidence.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON].

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, unlike my distinguished friend from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS] who just preceded me I have not a prepared text. I regret that in a matter of this kind, he has seen fit to inject partisan and political questions into this discussion. This is a national issue that affects all of us. It is bigger than politics. It involves more than labor policies. It is an emergency war measure to insure the production of war supplies. I might say that the House conferees are unanimous in this report, likewise the Senate conferees, except that one of the Members had some reservations to some of the sections, although he actively participated in making up the conference report. The conferees have been in almost continuous session for 4 days, and, I think, have brought back to you a sound report.

There is one thing about this conference report and this legislation that should not be forgotten, and I think it could be pretty well answered by the title the conferees saw fit to give this act when they called this the War Labor Disputes Act. And as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS] has just said, it does not repeal collective bargaining laws and regulations. It specifically provides that a man can strike if he wants to. It is still the right of every man to quit work if he wishes. There is no prohibition against collective bargaining, but if you want to know the heart of this bill, and the heart of this report, it is that in a war like this in which we are engaged, no man or organization is going to interrupt the production of war material.

Boiled down, it is a matter of very simple analysis. There are three things to be considered in this report. As a friend of labor, both here and in the State legislature for a good many years, I cannot understand how anybody can find serious objection to this temporary war emergency legislation. I might say in answer to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO], that the language to which he refers adopts exactly the same language that the President put in his Executive order establishing the War Labor Board when we said in the middle of subsection 2 of section 7:

> In making any such decision the Board shall conform to the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended; the National Labor Relations Act; the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended; and the act of October 2, 1942, as amended, and all other applicable provisions of law.

We have not repealed or altered a single word or line in the National Labor Relations Act. Whatever rights the laboring man or the labor unions now have under the National Labor Relations Act, they still have them under this bill.

There are three high points, as I see it, in this bill. The first is that when the President of the United States, who is the Commander in Chief of our armed forces, feels that there is an interruption or about to be an interruption in the production of war supplies, he has a right to go in and take over any plant, mine, or facility. He has done that in about five instances. The most outstanding case, I presume, was the North American Aviation plant in southern California. Just as soon as he took over that plant a bunch of Communists who inspired that strike ran to cover and that plant was returned, I think, within 3 days. It was reported in that case that the majority of the honest and patriotic workers did not want to strike. That is true of every other plant where he has taken over, except in the terrible emergency that now prevails in the coal fields of the country. It must not be forgotten that in this coal situation in which we now find ourselves, when the President took over the first time they ran up the United States flag, and there has been a strike against the Government and not the mine owners since that time. All in the world you can get out of this act is to say that the President not only has the right to take over a plant during this war emergency, but we will put teeth into the law for the War Labor Board, so they will not only have the right of subpena, so that they can compel the attendance of witnesses or of parties to that action, in an effort to try to determine what is the right and fair thing to do. No man is above the law and every man should be made amenable to it. There is no justification for striking against your Government, especially in wartime. Innocent and patriotic men will have nothing to fear from this law.

There are two distinct lines of cleavage in this bill, if you read the conference report carefully. The first one deals exclusively with seized plants.

The Government does not want to take over all the plants and properties in this country. That is the last thing they want to do. The President has proved in the four or five cases where the Government has taken over to restore order and production that he wants to return them to the private owners as soon as possible. It has happened in every case, except in the one that is now confronting the country in the coal fields.

Under another provision of the bill, when the Government takes over, the status quo is established. There is no change in wages, contracts, or conditions unless the majority of the employees say, "We are not satisfied with our wages; we are not satisfied with our working conditions. Therefore we appeal to the War Labor Board for help." Do not forget that is a seized plant. That plant is in the hands of the Government. That plant is making war munitions. When the majority of the employees request it, the War Labor Board gives them a full and fair hearing and decides the issue. That sounds to me both just and democratic.

The other provision in the bill is the case of a plant that is engaged in the making of war munitions and supplies, but has not been taken over by the Government. The Conciliation Service issues its orders for an election by the employees. I might say in passing that if you get the Railway Labor Act that has been in effect a good many years, you will find that this almost exactly copies, if not in words in substance, the language of the Railway Labor Act, where they have had cooling time and a fair, democratic election, and you have not heard of a strike by railroad employees for many years. That is exactly what we have done in this case. I know something about the administration of that act, and we are trying to follow that principle and that system, in order that the men may have the right to express their fair convictions at a secret ballot and have that certified to the Board, and then let us find out the facts and also their wishes. It might be that in some of these cases the men would not want to strike regardless of the wishes of their leaders. It seems to me that that is one of the things we are fighting for in this country—the democratic way of doing things and the will of the majority fairly expressed. This does in principle exactly what the Railway Labor Act has done so successfully for many years.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Is not that the greatest deterrent against the seizure of plants?

Mr. THOMASON. Yes; I think it is. I know it has worked with the Railway Labor Act, and that is what we have tried to follow here.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. In regard to the Railway Labor Act, many of the members of the brotherhoods work on rolling stock that is owned by plants. If any labor leader in the brotherhoods calls out one of those men on a strike, is he subject to a fine of $1,000 and the other penalties?

Mr. THOMASON. I do not think so. I think that is getting entirely too technical about a war measure. The truth of the matter is that the railroad brotherhoods have done a wonderful job in this country, not only in the line of their work but in peaceful relations with their employers. I also want to add that railroad employees are specifically exempted by the provisions of this act. Certainly they have no just cause for complaint because they are not covered.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I just want the gentleman's opinion. Would we have this bill before us at all were it not for what is known as the coal strike?

Mr. THOMASON. The gentleman's judgment about that is as good as mine, but I want to impress upon every Member of this House this fact, that this act expires 6 months after the war is over. This is a war act. We are in a frightful and dangerous emergency. Let us try to get together and keep war supplies moving and try to see to it that there is peace between the employers and the employees. This bill is not aimed at the great body of honest and patriotic labor who are doing a marvelous job. This is aimed at the willful, selfish, and guilty few who defy the Government and our Commander in Chief. That is all there is to this report.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MERRITT].

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, as one of the conferees on this important legislation, I am one of those who signed the conference report, even though I am opposed to the legislation. I felt it was my duty, in representing the majority of this House, to see to it that they get their just deserts, regardless of my personal opinions.

The committee was made up of five Senators and five Members of the House, eight of whom were lawyers, and as if there were not lawyers enough to act, and not being very cagey about it, they found it was necessary to have other lawyers in attendance. The other two were the gentleman from Missouri, who, I believe, trusted in the books written by Matthew, Luke, and John, and myself.

Yes; we did a lot of things to get better legislation, after being fooled by the House. We were successful in striking out the registration amendment from section 5 of the House bill.

During the conference—oh, many times—someone would say, "I offer this proposition," or a section reading such and such, and then they would say that "Even though I propose it, I am not wedded to it." Neither the House nor the Senate was wedded to anything. However, we have delivered a child. That child was referred to by the gentleman from New York who preceded me.

The bill does deal with two seizures, and, in my estimation, it deals with one concerning plants that had been seized by the Government and those privately operated. I am also led to believe that under the emergency, and if it is found to be the fact, I think we should have legislation for those plants which have been seized by the Government, and if the House deems it advisable to have legislation such as is contained in this conference report, I do not believe this is the place to do it at this time, because there should have been some previous legislation even though I may be opposed to it.

There is also a section contained in the bill that has to do with political contributions. I do say that if these people should be prohibited from making contributions in elections, why do we restrict these corporations and these labor organizations? It seems to me there are many unincorporated groups in this country who are doing just that very thing, and if we want to correct that, let us amend the Hatch Act.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERRITT. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. Is it not quite true that a man like Eugene Grace or John Pierpont Morgan could give $5,000,000, or more than a dollar for every member of the C. I. O., or similarly any other man, and there is no law to retard them whatsoever?

Mr. MERRITT. That is right.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERRITT. I yield.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I would like to make an observation with regard to section 8, particularly subsection 3, that while this entire bill is vicious, this section is particularly vicious, and in my opinion it is an indication of the hysteria which grips the Congress when we are discussing the actual provisions which threaten the basic liberties of every American citizen who will be affected by this legislation. That section alone would be ample justification, in my opinion, for the House to reject the entire bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERRITT. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Let us assume that this bill would not have been before the House at all were it not for the so-called coal strike, as our production now is unparalleled. Now, if we may assume that is the reason for the bill being brought in here, and I think it is a fair assumption, are we not then assuming that the coal operators are free from fault in the whole mess for the coal strike, and that the miners are not entitled to a raise in pay? In other words, by the passage of this bill we are deciding against the miners, which I do not think is fair.

Mr. MERRITT. I will say the original intention of this legislation was to deal with that strike. I do not have any sympathy for Mr. Lewis either.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do not like his way either of going at it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FOGARTY].

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this legislation. I was opposed to the bill; I am opposed to the conference report.

I want to have in the RECORD—for everyone to see—just what happened in the handling of this bill by these men who have been steadily crying their love for the American workingman and woman. These proponents of this legislation have constantly claimed they act solely in the best interests of the working people of the land—that they have no interest in antilabor legislation and that, in fact, this type of thing is not antilabor. Their claim is that they are moved solely by their desire to see justice done. They are the self-styled champions of fair play; yet there was never an opportunity for any person representing labor to have a voice in the deliberations on this bill. The hearings—so-called—were secret. They were held in star-chamber fashion and like a council of darkness the committee under the brilliant leadership of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] advised and counseled by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] rushed the bill out here and stuffed it down the throats of the Members of this House who asked only that they be given an opportunity to speak in behalf of the laboring class of the Nation.

They say they are fair—look at the record and see what opportunity was given to the opposition. If they are honest in their purpose—if they seek only honesty and justice—then why do they fear the voice of the opposition? This Nation is founded on the right of freemen to speak freely and voice their opinions on any subject. This bill, which is a veritable dagger in the heart of every man who labors for a week's pay, is a direct contravention of that fundamental right of every American. It is not merely an antilabor bill—it is an anti-American bill. Its handling here in what is supposed to be a House of Representative of all Americans, demonstrates what can be done to all American rights—when those rights run across the lines of the privileged.

Today affords a brilliant example of the fairness which has been shown by the handlers of this alleged legislation—the proponents of the measure needed, they claimed, 48 minutes to promote the hysteria and hypocrisy they felt necessary to get this bill passed. In their bounteous graciousness they gave the opposition—the men who dare speak here for all the factory workers, the shipbuilders, the construction gangs, who make and transport the arms of war to the men at the front—to the men who dare to speak for the laborers of the country, they gave 12 minutes. Think of it, 12 minutes to speak in opposition to the measure that rings the death knell for every labor organization in the country. This action today brands this bill as unfair, unjust, and un-American.

When this House passed the bill I do not believe two-thirds of those in this body knew what they were voting on when they voted for the passage of this bill.

Likewise I say, frankly, when you passed this bill last Friday, you stuck a dagger into the backs of all American men and women who work for a living in this country. Now when the conferees bring back this conference report, all they are doing is to thrust that dagger a little bit deeper into the backs of American labor, and as soon as this bill becomes a law, if it does become the law, those who are going to administer the law, now that they are given the opportunity, now that they have the dagger in the backs of the American people, they are just going to twist and turn and turn it until they crucify every American worker in his country.

Throughout the State I come from I am constantly asked about the antilabor forces in Congress. Since I am a Democrat, I am constantly asked about the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH], who has been, up to now, considered the leader of the antilabor forces. I am asked why it is that Democrats are willing to sacrifice the laboring men and women they know. But after today that situation is changed. The mantle of leadership in the antilabor crusade has been passed to the Republican Party. These forces of hate have a new champion. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS], a Republican, no doubt under the whip of the associations of manufacturers and industrialists, has swept into the fray and has seized the crown from the tired brow of the ex-champion. And at last there comes into the open this copartnership of all those forces who see in the repression of the working man the opportunity to advance their political fortunes among the ranks of the privileged few.

I am going to tell them now that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS] is a copartner with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] in attempting to do everything he can to break down the advance that labor has made during the past 10, 15, or 20 years.

This is not done to create unity. This is not going to build up the morale of the men and women who are working; this is going to do just the opposite. Every man and woman in industry, and every labor organization, knows what this bill means. It is going to throw a wedge between them and industry that can never be closed.

In the interest of fairness and honesty—not only to labor but to all Americans—I implore you—do not be stampeded into doing this thing which is all wrong. I beg of you, vote against this piece of un-American legislation.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SIKES].

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I strongly favor the adoption of this report. The ruthless and unpatriotic machinations of John L. Lewis and of other unprincipled labor leaders have done more to damage morale in this country than all the Axis efforts combined. And this destruction of morale does not stop at the borders of the United States. It is spreading to the men in the armed forces and to the people of our fellow democracies. And it is steadily sapping the good name of organized labor.

I find it incredible that a union made up of good Americans can be induced to strike against its own government in wartime. Yet John L. Lewis has called strikes against his Government, and he dares to give his Government a dead line in which to come to terms with him.

This man, and those who are blind enough to follow his example, says in effect: "You need not worry about the safety of your soldiers and sailors until June 20, but then look out for trouble if you haven't met my terms."

Lewis has been able to do what no labor leader in any other democracy on earth would dream of daring to do in wartime—put a gun at the head of his Government by abetting a strike in a vital industry. The immediate disruption of the domestic economy of our Nation and the imminent danger that our troops in the field will lack weapons and munitions are in prospect, and if there is an ounce of courage in the Congress and the administration, such a condition will not be tolerated.

We shall shortly know whether Mr. Lewis will rule the United States or whether we shall continue to have democratic government. Congress must make the choice, and it must be made now. The passage of this bill will stop Lewis and his kind, and they must be stopped.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, in November 1941 your House Committee on Labor attempted to write reasonable and workable legislation, to assist on the home front, as an effective and all-out aid to the war effort.

I remember that the representatives of many of the branches of organized labor said in effect to the acting chairman, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK], and myself and other members, that they would not aid in drafting corrective labor legislation but would oppose each and every proposal, no matter by whom it was made.

Such an attitude is a sad commentary on the leaders who should have generously given cooperation, rather than the dogmatic denial to those of us who sincerely desired their help.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the ill-advised resentment expressed today will turn to approving reflection on the measure that we soon will pass. I feel that rather than placing in the hands of Congress or the administration any lighted torch to burn out the rights of labor during the prosecution of this war, that we by passage of this conference report give an instrument to labor and management and government which will contribute to the winning of this conflict.

I feel firmly that the patriotic and productive working men and women of Amercia—and there is but a small percentage who do not fall in that category—will soberly realize in the future that Congress Members, with streams of strength and currents of courage in their legislative veins, put aside fear and foreboding and did that which was right in a period of our Nation's peril.

It was Oliver Wendell Holmes who said: "New occasions create new duties." Conscious as I am of the sincerity of my congressional colleagues in their opposition to this measure, we have, nevertheless, an occasion which demands a duty. The Congress of the United States regardless of intimidation, threat, or pressure, must exercise its obligation to the Nation at war.

Not only will the rank and file of our people approve this action, but you may be certain the armed forces on the agonizing fog-bound island of Attu; amidst the cruel and drifting mists of Kiska; in perilous Pacific waters; on the searing sands of Africa—all of them at a hundred military, naval, and air bases will commend us for a faithful discharge of congressional responsibility.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I believe the conferees on the part of the House should be complimented for having adopted a statesmanlike attitude in the consideration of this matter. I realize, as one who supported the House bill, that the conference report has taken some good features out of that bill; it has put into the bill some features that perhaps some of us did not agree with that came from the Senate bill; but the conferees on the whole have undertaken to maintain the position of the House and I think they have done as good a job as possible under the circumstances. Personally, I expect to support the conference report.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I am sorry; I cannot yield at the moment.

Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the interrogation of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] by the majority leader as to whether this bill, by reason of the changes in the language in the conference report, might in any way affect Executive orders. It seems to me quite clear that an Executive order issued under authority of law is itself a law, and therefore when this bill states that they shall comply with all laws, it seems to me quite clear that they must also comply with legally constituted Executive orders.

I want to say a word about the statement made by the gentleman from New York, who speaks the voice of the American Labor Party, as to the insertion in this bill of the language that this agency, the War Labor Board, must conform to the provisions of the National Labor Relations Act. The fact is that when I offered my amendment in the first instance that language was in the amendment; it was read in full to the House because someone objected to the unanimous-consent request that the reading be dispensed with. When I changed the amendment and offered it again, that language was still in there, and it was again read in full in the House and it was printed in the RECORD that night. Everybody had an opportunity to read it the next morning, and if they did not know it was in there it was their own fault. The Executive order did not change the National Labor Relations Act. Does the gentleman from New York intend to quarrel with me because I refer to the National Labor Relations Act? Does he contend that the War Labor Board should not be required to comply with that act, as well as every other act of Congress?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Not at this time. Why is that clause in there? It is in there because the very Executive order which created the War Labor Board contained the same language. You will find in Executive Order No. 9017, in the concluding paragraph of the order which was issued by the President on January 12, 1942, the following language:

> That nothing herein shall be construed as superseding or in conflict with the provisions of the Railway Labor Act, the National Labor Relations Act, the Fair Labor Standards Act—

And so forth. My inclusion of that language merely makes it conform to the Executive order which created the War Labor Board.

As to whether it cuts out the closed shop, I agree with the gentleman from New York. I do not see how the War Labor Board ever got any power to order any company to enter into an agreement which they did not agree to. I say now—and I have said this repeatedly—that maintenance of union orders of the War Labor Board are in conflict with the expressed provision of the National Labor Relations Act, and a direct violation of the clear provisions of that statute, and I think it clear, from the provision of the bill, that this House, by adopting the bill and the conference report, means to so instruct the War Labor Board.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. SASSCER].

Mr. SASSCER. Mr. Speaker, strikes have no place in war production. Pursuant to the determination of the American people to support their sons and friends on far-flung battle fronts, they will not tolerate them. In line with the no-strike policy, responsible labor leaders do not condone them.

Under the no-strike pledge of the responsible labor leaders and patriotic efforts of American labor, it is not disputed that our war production in guns, planes, munitions, ships, and other war equipment has been amazing and beyond all expectation. This is particularly true in my district, where the E pennant, a merit award for production, flies over practically every war industry—an evidence of loyalty and determination of free workmen in a free country.

American labor can be divided into two groups: The one, those who have kept the no-strike pledge, and who are giving their best; the other, those in plants or industry taken over by the Government following a strike in vital war production. In the latter classification is the coal strike. In the former, approximately 99 percent of the remaining war production.

When this bill came from the Senate to the House, it was directed and confined primarily to such cases as the coal strike in Government-operated plants. In the House committee, and later on the floor of the House and in the joint conference committee, section after section was added relating to general labor relations. Most of these sections do not relate to the coal controversy or strikes in Government-seized plants, but primarily affect the legislative gains of the former group of 99 percent who are keeping the no-strike promise and who are working faithfully and diligently for their Government and their industry in producing supplies of war.

High officials of the Army and Navy charged with the responsibility of the war production, and the supplying of our men on the front with adequate equipment, have advised against the enactment of the provisions of the sections which have been added to the bill. They state in substance that in its wide and drastic scope embracing relations generally and those who have kept the no-strike pledge, that it would complicate rather than expedite production. I feel that this bill is unwise in its drastic departure from strikes in Government-seized plants following violations of the no-strike pledge.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to read to the House a telegram just received from the American Farm Bureau Federation addressed to me:

HON. ANDREW J. MAY,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.:

We heartily approve the legislation you and the conference committee have presented to the Congress to deal with strikes and the abuses of labor organizations and representatives. This legislation has not come a moment too soon. We hope it will be overwhelmingly supported by Members of the House.

AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,
EDWARD A. O'NEAL, President.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to adoption of the conference report?

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker I am.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CELLER, of New York, moves to recommit the conference report to the committee of conference with instructions to the managers on the part of the House to delete from the conference agreement section 8, entitled "Notice of threatened interruptions in war production."

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, on that I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, am I not entitled to be heard on that?

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I was on my feet.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not debatable. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CELLER) there were—yeas 81, noes 155.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, on the adoption of the conference report I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Clerk called the roll; and there were—yeas 220, nays 130, answered "present" 1, not voting 80, as follows:

PROPERTY REQUIRED FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 235)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am submitting herewith to the Congress a report of operations for the period October 16, 1942, through April 15, 1943, under the act of October 16, 1941, as amended, which authorized the President to requisition and dispose of property required for national defense.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 11, 1943.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article concerning the nephew of a gentleman very prominent in connection with House affairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

(Mr. FORD asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

HANDLING OF FOOD CROPS

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, there has been quite a bit said recently with reference to the methods being used in the handling of food crops. I have been in touch over the long-distance phone yesterday afternoon and this morning with two small markets in my district. On these markets there are now piled up over 30,000 baskets of fresh beans for which there is no market. They are selling at less than $1 a bushel, less than they can be grown for. I wish someone who claims to know how to handle these commodities would get busy. The entire public needs food, yet there are 30,000 bushels going to waste, and the crops will be plowed under if something is not done.

A CHALLENGE TO THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, in No. 3, volume I, the June 1943 issue of Ammunition, the official publication, International Education Department, U. A. W., C. I. O., published by International Union, United Automobile, Aircraft and Agricultural Implement Workers of America, on page 25 appears an article entitled "Made in Washington."

It is not signed and the author is not disclosed. It is a vicious attempt to discredit Congress. Among other statements are the following:

> The United Automobile Workers, Congress of Industrial Organizations, rank and file made itself heard here last month. Delegates from eight Midwestern States came to tell Congress how the people back home felt about the shenanigans going on in Congress at a time when the people of the country are making every sacrifice in order to win the war. They also called on the various Government offices and told them the facts of life.
> Groups of Congressmen and Senators met collectively and individually with delegates from their States. The pressure on Congress was climaxed by a banquet at which 13 Congressmen from 5 States were guests of all the delegates. President R. J. Thomas and Secretary-Treasurer George F. Addes spoke. Vice President Richard T. Frankensteen acted as master of ceremonies.

Then, under the heading "Congressmen impressed" is the following:

> There is no doubt that the Congressmen were impressed. Technical assistance and information provided to the delegates by the Washington office, plus the first-hand information on prices and wages and manpower which the delegates brought with them, made it plain to the Congressmen that unions were a force to be reckoned with. The delegates were impressed with the need to counter reactionary pressure being put on Congress.

Then, in black-face type, was this statement:

> One Congressman, for example, told us off the record at the banquet that all Republican Congressmen had been promised $5,000 as a contribution to their next campaign if they voted for the Ruml plan.

That statement is a direct charge that a majority of the Republicans in Congress had been offered a bribe in return for a vote for the Ruml plan.

It is all very well to talk hush-hush, but when an organization like the C. I. O., with millions of dollars at its command, which has threatened to purge Congress, makes a statement which we know is false, it is time that the Members of the House call that organization to an account.

To me, by 1 of those present, has been given the names of 11 Congressmen who were present.

My suggestion is that the Speaker of this House appoint a special committee, consisting of three members; that that committee be given power to subpena witnesses; that it meet during the coming week, call before it each of the Congressmen who was present and learn what, if anything, was said at that banquet by anyone, which would serve as a justification for the paragraph in Ammunition which has just been quoted.

In addition to the Congressmen, the writer of the paragraph should be called and, under oath, be required to tell what justification he has for so outrageous, so false a charge.

All that such an investigation would cost would be the stenographer's fees and the witness fees of the C. I. O. writer. Less than $200 would do it.

Congress has been pushed around. It has been vilified. It has been slandered and libeled and, whatever may be our shortcomings, there is no excuse for a charge like the one made. Our duty to our constituents, our own self-respect, should move us to action without any delay.

The C. I. O., time and again, has challenged the ability, the intelligence, of Members of Congress. That it has the right to do. But neither the C. I. O. nor the A. F. of L., which recently announced that it intended to purge more than 200 Congressmen, has any right to, without foundation, question the integrity, the loyalty, or the patriotism of a Member of Congress.

The C. I. O. may be riding high, wide, and handsome. It may be the political ally of the New Deal. But, if it be within my power to prevent it, it will not get away with this, its last, attempt to destroy the confidence of the people in their Representatives.

Listen again to this statement:

> One Congressman, for example, told us off the record at the banquet that all Republican Congressmen had been promised $5,000 as a contribution to the next campaign if they voted for the Ruml plan.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes.

Mr. TABER. Did the gentleman get any such promise as that? I know that no one was bold enough to talk that way to me.

Mr. HOFFMAN. They did not even come to my office. I understand that at this banquet—I do not see the gentlemen on the Republican side who were there, but I understand that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MCMURRAY] was at the banquet. This article further says:

> The friends of labor in Congress, such as Congressman MCMURRAY, of Wisconsin, and Congressman LAFOLLETTE, of Indiana, were obviously pleased to have the rank and file of the delegates present.

I understand the gentleman from Wisconsin was down to this dinner where there were 13 Congressmen, and I would be glad to have him tell the House what he knows, if anything, about this promise to pay all Republican Congressmen who voted for the Ruml plan $5,000.

Mr. McMURRAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes.

Mr. McMURRAY. I attended the banquet as did three or four other Representatives from my own State, all of them Republicans, I believe, except myself, according to my memory. I did not hear the subject discussed at the banquet at all.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Then you do not know anything about it; you never heard of it?

Mr. McMURRAY. I want to say that I did not attend the Republican meeting when this offer was made.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HOFFMAN. No. The gentleman is just doing as he has so often done before, assuming that something that never existed did exist. You stated you did not attend the meeting where this offer was made. Where was such meeting ever held? Tell me that.

Mr. McMURRAY. If the gentleman will yield to me, I state again that I am not a Republican, and I did not attend.

Mr. HOFFMAN. We know the gentleman is not a Republican. Tell us where you did attend this meeting which was held. Where was the meeting held? Do you know, I ask you? Do you know of anyone who ever offered any Republican Congressman anything to vote either way on the Ruml plan?

Mr. McMURRAY. May I say that the gentleman is misinterpreting what I said. I said I did not know where such an offer was made, because I do not go to Republican meetings.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Do you intimate that the meeting was ever held? Have you any information? The gentleman, in view of his statement, ought to know. I ask him to answer that.

Mr. McMURRAY. The gentleman ought to know the answer to that.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I do not know what is in your mind. I am asking, four square, on a matter that touches the integrity of a large minority of the House. Do you know of any such meeting or any such offer ever being made to any Republican?

Mr. McMURRAY. I should like to say to the gentleman from Michigan that I am not interested in a personal quarrel about this. I have never made any statement about it. The gentleman asked me if I knew such an offer was made. I cannot know that unless I attended a meeting where it was made. I never attended any such meeting. I do not go to those meetings.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Did you make any statement of that import, that Republican Congressmen had been offered any sum for voting either way? I am asking the gentleman from Wisconsin. I know you are not under oath.

Mr. McMURRAY. The gentleman is asking me if I made the statement?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Made any statement of that kind—intimated that any Republican ever received any sort of an offer to vote one way or the other.

Mr. McMURRAY. If the gentleman is asking me if I have ever heard any such rumor, the answer is "yes."

Mr. HOFFMAN. From whom did you hear it?

Mr. TABER rose.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. McMURRAY] has intimated that there was such an offer made in the statement wherein he said that he did not know whether such a thing was done because he did not attend the Republican meeting. If he has misrepresented that situation before the House, it is about time we found out. He either ought to fish or cut bait. He evidently does not understand where he is.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. McMURRAY] has said he heard the rumor. Now I am asking him where he got the rumor? In view of the failure of the gentleman to answer the House should authorize a committee to call the Congressmen who were present at that banquet and the writer of that article and ascertain whether any such statement was made and if it was made call the maker and compel him to give the source of his information.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after all legislative business and other special orders on next Monday I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes. That being Flag Day my subject will be on the flag.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BENNETT] is recognized for 20 minutes.

THE CHINESE EXCLUSION ACT

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, of which I am a member, has had under consideration for the past month the question of whether Congress should repeal the Chinese exclusion laws, and at the same time permit the entry of Chinese into this country on a quota basis similar to that used for the entry of Europeans. Numerous witnesses favoring this legislation testified before our committee. On Monday of this week the committee favorably reported a bill which would repeal that part of the exclusion law which specifically excludes the Chinese but which would grant them no naturalization or quota privileges and hence leave them in substantially the same position as other Asiatics.

I attended all of the committee hearings upon this subject. I can say in all sincerity that I have been able to approach the problem with an open mind. I have no prejudice against the Chinese as a race and have nothing but admiration for the gallant and courageous fight they have made against a deadly enemy. Certainly every American respects and appreciates their national courage. I repeat that I have endeavored to look at this problem with all the fairness at my command and I have reached the conclusion that, no matter what basic considerations may be involved, this is not the time to change our immigration policy either with respect to the Chinese or any other people.

Upon that primary ground I am opposed to this legislation.

Putting the matter in simple language, these bills contemplate a complete reversal of a well-established immigration policy of sixty-some years' standing. That much is undisputed. It is also undisputed that the legislation necessarily requires Congress to make this decision in the midst of a war in which almost every nation on the face of the globe is engaged. It brings to Congress the direct issue of whether it is unwise under any circumstances to continue an exclusion policy with respect to one of our principal allies in time of war.

In my opinion, the implications growing out of these assumptions are inherently dangerous at the moment. Congress is asked by the sponsors of this legislation to pass it mainly on the following grounds:

First. It is a friendly gesture toward China which will cement our relations with them in time of mutual peril.

Second. That its passage will give Chinese morale a sort of psychological lift during a period when they are morally and physically under great stress, in fact almost near the breaking point if we are to believe the testimony presented to our committee.

Third. That failure to pass this legislation will somehow be the straw that broke the camel's back and that because of our failure China might make a separate peace with Japan.

Fourth. That the exclusion barrier and failure to provide quotas makes the Chinese doubt our friendship, and might even cause their withdrawal from the war.

Fifth. That China offers the greatest trade possibilities for this country in post-war economy and for that reason we should commence now to offer proof of our sincere friendship, in order to take advantage of trade opportunities following the war.

Sixth. That it will stop one phase of dangerous Japanese propaganda; that is, "Americans are unfriendly toward Chinese, otherwise they would admit them to citizenship."

Seventh. That putting China on a quota basis with other nations is fair and equitable and that it will only amount to a bagatelle since present quota restrictions would permit only approximately 107 Chinese to enter each year; that no one should quarrel with the admission of such an infinitely small number.

Eighth. That a combination of the foregoing reasons make this bill a vital war measure.

In my judgment, each of these contentions stands on very weak ground. It might be that passage of this legislation would be considered a friendly gesture by the people of China. But that in itself is not a conclusively convincing argument in its favor, when one views the matter realistically; because while it might give the Chinese great satisfaction at the moment it should also be remembered that the Chinese might consider it an expedient gesture on our part and resent the idea that, coming at this time, it has any significance in our basic relationships. The Chinese are smart enough to know that if we pass this legislation as a strategic wartime measure that we might very well repeal it after the war as a strategic peacetime measure. We had a great many witnesses before our committee who claimed to be able to speak for the feelings of 450,000,000 Chinese and who claimed to thoroughly understand their reaction to our exclusion law. And while their sincerity cannot be doubted, the wisdom of their conclusions is open to grave speculation.

Whether this particular legislation would push up Chinese morale or give it a psychological lift is a conclusion upon which one could speculate a great deal. A number of expert witnesses testified before our committee that the Chinese have been near the breaking point because of disease, lack of medicine, hunger, and inflation. I think every American appreciates the plight of the Chinese and would have everything done within our power to alleviate conditions,

No stone should be left unturned to give them increased material assistance at the earliest opportunity.

But it is admitted that this legislation would give them no material assistance. Its value is purely psychological and aesthetic and, Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult to appreciate and aesthetic things of life on an empty stomach. Therefore, the psychological value of this measure to the depressed and starving Chinese is a matter of so great a conjecture that I think any reasonable American should be afraid to hazard the action it is now proposed we take.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I think it pertinent to make the observation that although this bill is prefaced entirely upon our diplomatic relations with China it is strikingly significant that no one from our State Department indicated to our committee by their testimony how our Government officially regards this measure. Whether they regard it as important or necessary, would, it seems to me, be of great benefit to Congress in its disposition of this bill. Certainly every Member of Congress would give considerable weight to the opinions of those in direct charge of our foreign policy, in a matter of this kind. Whether by silence they approve or disapprove is a matter upon which we may only conjecture.

PROPAGANDA

Almost every witness before the committee favoring this legislation urged that it would stop the insidious propaganda of the Japs, to the effect that the United States is discriminating against Chinese. With all due respect to the judgment and sincerity of the people who advance this theory, it is pure poppycock and nothing else. You cannot eliminate enemy propaganda by legislation, no matter how good your intentions may be, because such propaganda is based, not upon facts but upon the distortion of facts. It feeds upon lies, not truth. It plays up national prejudices or sympathies, whichever best suits its advantage at the moment, and it is devastating in direct proportion to the willingness of people to swallow it. Nothing but the military power of the United Nations can effectively stop Japanese propaganda. And until the last vestige of the Axis military might has been crushed, its poisonous propaganda will continue in 10,000 different directions upon 10,000 different subjects, and no one this side of heaven can stop it. So upon whatever other grounds we wish to base the necessity for this legislation let us not call it a cure for Japanese propaganda.

An outstanding example of the results of attempting to secure the appreciation of the people of other nations through our generosity toward them in this war occurred in England recently. Last week the British Gallup poll asked the British people, "In your opinion, which country has so far made the greatest contribution toward winning the war, Russia, Britain, the United States, or China?" The vote: Russia, 50 percent; Britain, 42 percent; China, 5 percent; United States, 3 percent. Britain is an intelligent nation. Its people, as a class, are more intelligent than the Chinese. I think it is completely relevant to ask how the intelligent people of the British Isles could be so apathetic of the part the United States has played in this war. If British propaganda, or intelligence, can convince no more than 3 percent of its people that the United States has made the greatest contribution to the war effort, in the face of the fact that we have saved their lives when the Empire was on the brink of disaster, how do you expect the uneducated Chinese masses to react to a gesture such as this legislation proposes to make to them?

What about our own interests, Mr. Speaker? Should they not also be considered in this matter?

The United States is the most generous country in the world. Thoughout our history we have demonstrated this time after time by act and deed. At this very moment we are showering our natural resources on countries over the far parts of the earth—to such a degree in fact that when we have finished we will have spent on this war more than the combined belligerents on both sides of the conflict. And we are doing all this without final regard for our ability to carry the burden. Maybe China has not had her just share of this beneficence. I am not in a position to say, but certainly the Government and people of China well understand that we have our military might spread over the entire Pacific, with one purpose and only one purpose in view, to crush the military powers of Japan. Having accomplished this purpose, as eventually we shall, we will have proclaimed to China and to Chinamen the world over in uncontrovertible language our sincere affection for them, and our desire to see them freemen.

This result, gentlemen, is worth 10,000,000 gestures such as this legislation attempts to give. We would be on dangerous ground, indeed, if our relations with China were so tenuous that it required gesture legislation of this type to hold us together. Not one witness for these bills claimed that China had lost faith in us. And while they may be discouraged at the slowness of the procedure, they realize, as we do, the obstacles we confront.

In the hearings just concluded, apparently to magnify its importance, this legislation was constantly referred to as a war measure. If it is proper to so designate it, Mr. Speaker, then I assert it is a dangerous war measure. I say dangerous, because it deals superficially with a great and vital policy with respect to immigration. It settles nothing and is one of those bills which create more problems than it solves. It is an opening wedge for pressure groups. It places us in the position of dealing with this situation piecemeal. It jumps all the basic hurdles related to the solution of the problem and justifies its existence on the grounds of war expediency.

We have done too much in this war, Mr. Speaker, on the grounds of expediency; it is time we slowed up.

Every Member of Congress knows the difficult matters of immigration with which we must deal following the peace. There will be groups both within and without this country who would make us the dumping ground for homeless and penniless people of the more unfortunate nations all over the world. How we will react to this pressure will depend largely upon unforeseeable events. No one knows what condition this country will be in with respect to our own economy nor in respect to our association with other nations at the peace table. The solution of these and related problems will largely govern our attitude toward immigration.

Let us leave the matter rest until future events give us clearer vision. Let us deal with the problem in its entirety because it is one problem. Let us deal with it when the war is ended, when neither the sympathies nor the prejudices of war will warp our thoughts or influence our judgment. It is a peacetime problem and should be dealt with in peacetime.

I, for one, Mr. Speaker, believe it wholly unwise and inadvisable to consider this legislation in time of war, when the eyes and ears of the world will be focused upon its debate. Opposition to it on the floor of Congress can do our friendly relations with China infinitely more harm than its passage can do them good.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. The gentleman stressed the fact that there was no testimony from the State Department, and he gave me the impression at least that if the State Department had testified it might have influenced his judgment. Is that so?

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. Well, I would have given the testimony of the State Department, the policy makers of the State Department, serious consideration.

Mr. KENNEDY. If they had testified in favor of the bill, would the gentleman be in favor of it?

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. Not necessarily.

Mr. KENNEDY. Therefore, their testimony one way or the other would not have influenced your decision?

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. No, I do not say that. It might have influenced my decision, depending upon what it was, but I say it is significant that they have not offered any opinion on it.

Mr. KENNEDY. One further question, if the gentleman will yield. Is the gentleman prepared to state whether or not in his opinion there is any inequality in the law by its specific prohibition directed against the Chinese people as it exists at the present time?

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. I am not opposed to repealing the law which names the Chinese specifically, but I am opposed to putting the Chinese or any other nation not now on a quota basis, on a quota basis in time of war.

Mr. KENNEDY. The gentleman realizes that this has been the source of great propaganda throughout the world, especially among the Axis?

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. KENNEDY. The fact that we have specifically discriminated against the Chinese, by naming them in our statute.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. You cannot stop Japanese propaganda or Nazi propaganda by law, because it comes from 10,000 unfounded directions. It has no basis in truth or fact.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. The Japanese have been propagandizing to get this law repealed for the last 20 years, to my certain knowledge.

Mr. JUDD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. JUDD. I should like to ask a question in regard to the discussion of the gentleman on propaganda. The gentleman said that Japanese propaganda has no basis of truth or fact. Unfortunately the real trouble is that this propaganda is based on the truth. We would like to remove that foundation of truth, which makes their propaganda so dangerous. May I just give one illustration? Coming home from China in the summer of 1938, an English-speaking Japanese on the boat said to me, "Why does your country always send notes to Japan, condemning us for what we are doing in China? You understand it." I said, "What you are doing is in violation of your treaties and our treaties, and we believe in abiding by our treaties." He said, "My father is a purchasing agent of the Japanese Government. He has made three trips to America to get military supplies. I am on my first trip for the same purpose. We have not had the slightest difficulty in buying anywhere in America all the things we need to do this thing in China which you say you oppose. Now, if you were really opposed to what we are doing surely you would stop helping us, would you not?"

What could I answer? His argument was based on fact. We cannot stop Japan's propaganda, but we can stop the Chinese believing it. Japan can never make the Chinese believe it unless we refuse to remove from our statute books a discrimination which demonstrates to the Chinese that our deeds do not square with our words.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. I think you must admit that the effect of our action, if action were taken by Congress to repeal the Chinese immigration law and put them on a quota, would be changing a policy that we have had on our books for 60 years. Without saying whether it is right or wrong, the point is that in my judgment to change it in wartime is dangerous, because in wartime the sympathies or prejudices, whichever apply, are at their highest pitch, and men cannot think calmly and cooly as they should think when they are dealing with a vital problem of this kind.

Mr. JUDD. Will the gentleman answer this question: Did the committee ask the State Department for its approval, as far as you know?

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. I am only one member of the committee. I am not the chairman. All I know is that I attended all the hearings and I did not hear anyone from the State Department.

Mr. JUDD. Do you not think the State Department might have been open to criticism on the floor of this House if it had appeared there and testified for or against the bill? Would not Members of this House have argued and properly that the Executive was trying to invade the legislative function?

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. No; I do not think so. What does the gentleman think about this: Suppose this legislation were debated upon the floor of the House; I think the gentleman will agree there are a number of the Members here who are opposed to this legislation now. Suppose a bill were reported out to put them on a quota basis, and it was considered here and defeated.

What then would happen to what is referred to as the psychological effect on the Chinese. Does not the gentleman think it better to follow the old adage that it is far better to leave a sleeping dog lie?

Mr. JUDD. No; it would be far better to correct the condition; not do it just as a gesture, but put it on the basis of plain justice, not just expediency. First among the many reasons, we should do it because it is right. If a man or a nation does that which is right, and it has a good practical effect, can we say that we should not have done that which is right? Personally, I believe that only those things which are just and right will in the long run prove to have been also expedient.

There is no use to try to kid the Chinese. That cannot be done. The purpose of this bill is to try to correct an attitude on our part toward a nation with the oldest and one of the highest cultures and civilizations in the world, a nation on whose survival and friendship now our own life depends.

The gentleman said this was not the time to even consider such legislation.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, this is a most opportune time to do it. The Chinese have been holding the line for 6 years. When can there be a better time to deal with a situation that is of such tremendous importance? It is America's obligation to an ally that has been holding the line and to the lives of her own sons.

The gentleman referred to the contributions that we have made to this war. Does he think we have begun to make contributions that compare to what China has been making for the past 6 years? I believe history will record she saved our Nation by holding Japan, single-handed, until we finally woke up.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. Well, I cannot agree with that; that is a matter of opinion, but I would like to add that China is fighting the battle of China; we are fighting our battle and England is fighting hers. If China is saved, it will be through our fighting effort.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. Do I understand the gentleman as being opposed to changing our status quo, the immigration laws?

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. In time of war; yes.

Mr. CURTIS. You are opposed to reducing the total of the quotas, are you?

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. Oh, no. I do not believe that. I would favor closing all quotas during the war, all of them.

Mr. CURTIS. So would I, but I am for this bill.

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. What I meant was I am against opening up this problem by way of letting people into this country who are now excluded.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has consumed 20 minutes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding the adjournment of the House the Speaker be authorized to sign enrolled bill H. R. 2753, the defense-aid supplemental appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RUMORS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I say this not for the purpose of controversy, but a little earlier in the afternoon unfortunately the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]—and he had a perfect right to do so if he wanted to—dignified an article that appeared in some magazine about a rumor in relation to some Members of this House about getting a promise of a $5,000 campaign contribution to vote for the Ruml plan. A colloquy took place at the time between the gentleman from Michigan and the gentleman from Wisconsin, and I am not going into that. I do not question the right of the gentleman from Michigan or the gentleman from Wisconsin to make the remarks they did and I am not entering at all into the colloquy except for this purpose: That as a Member of the House and as the majority leader, I want to state that every one knows that any such rumor is completely without foundation at all. Every Member of this body votes as his conscience dictates. I may disagree with them, but I profoundly respect the motive which prompts them to cast their vote. Certainly the Members of the House are not accountable for rumors.

Rumors, like those referring to the WAAC's and the WAVES, I think were handled by several Members very adequately, but in my judgment the best thing is that no notice be given to some of them at all. This is one of those unfounded rumors that should have been ignored.

But as the majority leader I feel it is my duty and my obligation to say that there is absolutely no foundation at all for this rumor and nobody can get any satisfaction out of a rumor that is without foundation, and the less attention we pay to this particular rumor the quicker the rumor will die out.

THE CHINESE EXCLUSION ACT

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I have prepared no script to follow in discussing this question. The matter is so simple, so logical, that it requires no script. It requires only a little common sense. Let us be cold-blooded about the whole proposition.

In yesterday's RECORD, at page 5683, you will find an address on this question by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON]. I am more than ever convinced that any Member of this House after reading that address would have a pretty good picture of what the so-called Chinese Exclusion Act means to America. The trouble in our committee is that to a certain degree the Members try to set themselves up as judge, jury, bailiff, and warden. It has never been my policy to stifle any kind of important legislation. I do not want to assume that responsibility, nor do I think any member of any committee should undertake to keep important legislation which affects our whole country and our war efforts from coming to the floor of the House. I strongly believe that the problem involved in this issue is important enough to give every individual Member of this House a chance to consider it and to cast a vote on it—either for or against it. I feel sure, Mr. Speaker, that if the Members read the testimony, and it is going to be printed, they will be convinced beyond doubt that this exclusion law must be removed not only in order to do justice to our great ally China but to do the right thing for America. After hearing, or reading, the testimony of the outstanding witnesses who appeared before our committee in support of repeal of the Chinese exclusion laws, one can come to no conclusion other than that of removing all the restrictions against the Chinese people. The existence of this law is a great danger to our war effort. Why did my colleague not tell you about Admiral Yarnell who testified before our committee and who has been in service mostly with the Pacific Fleet for 50 years? He said that if you want to take a chance of prolonging this war and go on killing American boys just keep this exclusion law on the statute books. You do not have to put American boys over there to fight if you remove the exclusion against China and give China some military help and moral support. He did not quote the testimony of Pearl Buck and others who have lived in China for 20 or 25 years, who know the Chinese people and their rather bitter reaction to this exclusion law.

Mr. Speaker, at least 40 or 50 witnesses appeared before the committee representing every religious group and denomination, from every section of the country to beg and appeal for the repeal of restrictions against China, witnesses representing in my judgment, close to eighty or ninety millions of people, begging us to remove that stigma against China.

If we give China a quota of 107 and let that quota run for 50 years, at the end of that time we would have fewer Chinese here than we have Japs today. That is a pretty broad statement, but it will stand the test. Arguments were presented to us today and in the recent past by certain of my distinguished colleagues who intend to vote against this legislation on general principles. No argument could convince them that by allowing a quota it would not open the gap, that Chinese born in England—under the Gossett bill—could not be brought in under the English quota; Chinese born in France could not be brought in under the French quota. For as a result of our recommendations after a study of this question our plan proposes that 75 percent of this quota of 107 shall be given to Chinese born and resident in China and the remaining 25 percent of the quota to Chinese born and resident in other countries. In other words, not more than 107 could come in whether they were born in China, England, France, or some other part of the world. Let me say one thing more, Mr. Speaker: China does not care how small her quota is as long as the stigma against her is removed and she is put on a quota basis and her people who are permitted to enter under this quota are allowed to become naturalized like all other legally admitted aliens.

I hope all who are interested will read the hearings when they are printed. We have also printed a small pamphlet containing excerpts from Japanese propaganda broadcasts based on the Exclusion Act. Japan is telling China every day that the American people are just fooling them, and that they do not treat them with the same respect and consideration as they treat their other allies. They urge them to break away from the Americans. They try to show that Americans are just using their Chinese allies for the dirty work of fighting their enemies without even being willing to treat them on the same basis as they treat the Germans and Italians as far as their immigration and naturalization laws are concerned.

This constant propaganda upon a weary people can impair our cause in the Far East considerably.

Mr. JUDD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. JUDD. The gentleman has spoken of giving this quota to China. In the previous address it was claimed that we were altering or reversing the policy that we have followed for 60 years. Is it not true that giving China a quota is not a reversal of America's immigration policy, it is merely an extension of it, a perfection of the settled policy we have followed since 1924? The figure of 107 for China is arrived at by exactly the same formula as the figure of 65,000 for England is arrived at.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes, and that is based on the census of 1890.

May I say further that 30 or 40 years ago we had horse cars in my great city of New York. Times have changed. We have no more horse cars. At a time when some steamship companies and some manipulators were bringing in a lot of coolie labor it was necessary, and justly so, that immigration be restricted, but those days have gone. The 107 that you will get in this country under the quota must comply morally, physically, and financially with our laws and will therefore not be people who are likely to become a public charge.

Mr. JUDD. The gentleman believes that just because a certain medicine was the right treatment for a disease that a man had 40 years ago does not mean it is the medicine he shall use for every disease that may come along.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Certainly not.

Mr. JUDD. Especially when the disease is quite different from 40 years ago.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes. I say to the country and to the House, for God's sake, for our own protection, for our own safety, let us remove that unfair exclusion provision because I am afraid that this war may go on even after we destroy Mr. Mussolini and Mr. Hitler, and we will need the good will and friendship of the Chinese people.

Mr. KENNEDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KENNEDY. Much has been said about the conditions that led up to the original Exclusion Act. The gentleman referred to the fact that coolie labor was responsible for it. I believe the gentleman knows and recognizes the fact that these Chinese were brought here to develop the great West of our country. After the pioneering had been completed and there was no immediate use for them, they became a drug on the market and at that time this agitation started which brought about this Exclusion Act.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is true. Let me call your attention again to the fact that the committee had no bill before it at all last week when we took a vote. We had prepared what is known as a dummy print for our consideration and the very men who are opposed to a quota, remember that, the men who are opposed to a quota for China, whether it be 1 or 107 voted to remove the restrictions and all the exclusion laws but refused to consider a quota. In other words, it was simply a gesture.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS]?

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I had a special order for earlier in the day and I would ask the gentleman to wait a few minutes until I could have about 5 minutes.

Mr. CURTIS. I did not know the gentleman had an order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had a special order, but his name was called and he was not present. Without objection, the gentleman from Florida, may proceed for 5 minutes.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include an article on aviation and also another article from the Brotherhood of Trainmen.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SADOWSKI]?

There was no objection.

(Mr. BENNETT of Michigan asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks and to include letters and excerpts in connection with the milk-price situation in Florida.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN]?

There was no objection.

CHINESE EXCLUSION ACT

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, relative to the statements which were made recently concerning the repeal of our immigration laws, I feel it my duty as a member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization to ask the House to be cautious when propositions come in for the tearing down of our immigration laws. I hope that you will be cautious and give very, very careful consideration to any bill which may be brought in to tear down the immigration bars, particularly now and knowing what we will face immediately after the present crisis.

Mr. JUDD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. JUDD. Has anybody suggested in this bill tearing down the immigration bars?

Mr. GREEN. I am not familiar with the substance of the bill to which the gentleman refers, but I will say that any bill that you now pass to give quotas where quotas do not now exist will result in tearing down the bars of immigration which have been in effect in this country for many, many years.

Mr. JUDD. It does not increase in the least the total number of people who come into the country and it does not tear down the immigration bars.

Mr. GREEN. I have heard all kinds of statements before the committee and on the floor from gentlemen who desire to tear down our immigration barriers and I find that practically the same arguments obtain for all propositions. Did the gentleman not as a member of that committee find that to be true?

As to whether the bills in question let down existing immigration bars is a matter for each House Member to decide. The fact is that the proposals in the legislation repeal the Chinese Exclusion Act and give immigration entrance quotas into the United States of Chinese. The existing law is a bar against entrance of orientals and they do not have quotas. I do not understand how you could repeal this law and give quotas to orientals without eliminating at least this immigration barrier or bar.

I have a high regard for the Chinese as a great people and as a people who are most nobly, valorously, and courageously performing with America and America's other allies in this war crisis. Do you believe, however, that sentiment should be magnified and permitted to sweep us off our feet to such extent that our immigration laws should be scrapped? If immigration quotas are given to Chinese, then the next effort will be made by the friendly immigrationists to give quotas to India, Malaya, perhaps Japan, and in fact, all orientals. And I ask you this question, do you believe that America's economic and labor conditions after the existing war crisis will warrant a vast influx of orientals, or in fact, citizens of any other foreign country?

I predict that during the reaction and economic crisis which may come in this country as well as in all countries after the present war is over, we will then do well if we can properly provide for and give employment to our own American citizens. This is why I feel it my responsibility as a member of the committee to ask that the House membership give very cautious and deliberate consideration to proposals in the legislation which may soon be presented to the House for consideration.

MILK CEILING PRICE IN FLORIDA

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, again today I would call to your attention the imperativeness of increase in milk ceiling prices to the producers in the State of Florida. On the 24th of May I gave to you information indicating the seriousness of this situation, and today it is my purpose to supplement this.

As a result of lengthy and frequent conferences with O. P. A. officials, it developed that this agency felt without authority to give adequate increase in producers' ceiling prices. It was indicated that the responsibility and power for relief rested in the hands of Judge Fred M. Vinson, Director, Office of Economic Stabilization. With this information, on June 1 I sent the following communication to Judge Vinson:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., June 1, 1943.

Hon. FRED M. VINSON,
Director, Office of Economic Stabilization,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. VINSON: It is imperative that milk ceiling prices in Florida be raised immediately. Our dairymen are going out of business at an alarming rate. Our herds are being slaughtered for beef; production is decreasing and will continue to decrease as long as existing ceiling prices on milk are enforced. They and I have appealed repeatedly for the past 4 or 5 months to the Office of Price Administration officials, including the Administrator, but have not obtained results. I feel it necessary to bring this matter to your attention and to earnestly ask that you intercede and give relief.

An increase of 2 cents a quart is necessary, and such increase will keep the dairymen in production and will prevent further decrease in volume output. The Office of Price Administration officials apparently are entirely unable to understand or to appreciate this situation. They apparently have lost, entirely, sight of the producers' side of this question. They apparently think only of the consumer, and their short-sighted and misunderstanding policy is now shortening, in quantity daily the consumer.

I enclose copy of speech which I made on the House floor on May 24; also, communication just received by me from Mr. B. B. McArthur, president, Grade A Milk Producers, 769 Northwest Eighteenth Terrace, Miami, Fla. I receive scores of communications daily in which there is outlined the impossibility of continuance of production under prevailing ceiling prices.

A subsidy is not the answer. An increase in ceiling price is the answer and is imperative.

I shall appreciate hearing from you at your earliest convenience concerning this matter.

Sincerely yours,

LEX GREEN,
Member of Congress.

In reply to the above communication, on June 5, Judge Vinson sent me the following letter:

OFFICE OF ECONOMIC STABILIZATION,
Washington, D. C., June 5, 1943.

Hon. LEX GREEN,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR LEX: Thank you for your letter of June 1, 1943, with reference to milk prices in Florida.

As you doubtless know, my job is primarily to determine the economic policies and not to administer the details of each price regulation. Otherwise, it would not be possible for me to function without duplicating all the other agencies of the Government.

It does happen, however, that the Florida situation involves certain questions of policy which are illustrative of a condition that exists in other parts of the country as well. I now have the situation under study, and will promptly inform you of any action which is taken.

Sincerely yours,

FRED M. VINSON,
Director.

Subsequent conferences with O. P. A. officials have indicated that they are aware of the imperativeness of the situation but that very little relief may be anticipated. In the meantime, in Florida, the milk producers' situation is growing more critical every hour. During the last day or two I have been reliably advised that the large dairy herd of Mr. Oscar Blocker, in the vicinity of Jacksonville, Fla., has been disposed of. I am advised, also reliably, by long-distance telephone by Hon. Brady S. Johnston, vice president, Dinsmore Dairy Co., Jacksonville, Fla., that 1,500 gallons of milk in one importation shipment to Florida has been diverted, and have also been advised of spoiling of three carloads shipped into Florida recently. All of these things contribute to the ever-increasing scarcity of milk in Florida. In their desperation for relief Florida dairymen have appealed repeatedly to Atlanta and Washington offices of the O. P. A. for relief. Here is a communication sent by Mr. J. R. Goolsby of Miami, Fla., to the Atlanta O. P. A. office:

MIAMI, FLA., May 28, 1943.

JOSEPH J. SPENGLER,
Regional Price Executive,
Office of Price Administration,
Atlanta, Ga.:

My son fighting across the sea. Unless you give me a living price for dairy products he will return to a bankrupt home. Is this democracy?

J. R. GOOLSBY.

Here is a communication sent to me under date of June 6 by Dr. J. G. DuPuis, of Miami, and copy of his communication addressed to the Atlanta offices of the O. P. A.:

THE WHITE BELT DAIRY,
Miami, Fla., June 6, 1943.

Hon. LEX GREEN,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. GREEN: Your letter received with enclosure of letter from Mr. Prentiss Brown of the Office of Price Administration, also copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with various letters from dairymen of the State of Florida printed therein. I wish to express my appreciation again for your interest in behalf of the dairy industry of our State; and trust through your future energies and intelligent guidance that you will obtain enough cooperation in Congress to preserve the dairy industry before we as dairymen are broke financially and cannot operate, even though we would like to at this time, particularly as our country needs good food and plenty of it, as well as the starving hordes in foreign lands who are our allies and others, who are helpless.

It seems that the letter from Mr. Prentiss Brown to you has dumped everything on the Atlanta regional office of the Office of Price Administration for the discriminatory acts against the dairy industry; therefore, I am enclosing you copy of letter to Mr. William J. J. Smith, Survey and Analysis Section, Office of Price Administration office, Atlanta, for your information.

I would be glad if you would advise if there has been a law defining the Office of Price Administration, its scope and authority permitting its discrimination against one of the basic industries in our State, and it is my opinion that strict accountability should be immediately required of any individual in governmental offices who discriminate against any people or industry under the excuse of war measures. Please send me a copy of such a law, if there is one.

I shall be glad to furnish you any further information from this section of our State, provided you can use the same to advantage and bring relief to the dairymen of the State and particularly Dade and Broward Counties. With personal regards, I remain,

Yours very truly,

J. G. DUPUIS, M. D.

JUNE 5, 1943.

Mr. WILLIAM J. J. SMITH,
Survey and Analysis Section,
Office of Price Administration,
Atlanta, Ga.

DEAR MR. SMITH: I wish to refer to your letter of April 27, 1943, in which you stated, that your office was working as rapidly as possible to arrive at a satisfactory solution of the dairy problem in Florida.

We have had much correspondence with the Office of Price Administration Washington office, and the regional office at Atlanta, all giving promises of immediate relief of the disastrous situation facing the dairymen of Dade and Broward Counties, which was specifically set forth in a petition, with exhibits attached showing the tremendous increase in cost of production and distribution sent you on March 25, said petition being signed by all the dairymen in this section.

It is time that we had some action on this vital matter, as we are losing money every day we operate and it is just a matter of a short time until we will lose our business entirely

We are advised that your office has the authority to relieve this situation which is forcing the dairymen in this section and all other sections of Florida out of business. If it is the policy of your office to give just promises and no relief we would like to know it at this time, that we may try and salvage something from our life's earnings, as at the rate it is going now it is only a question of a short time until we will be forced out of business entirely.

It is our sincere desire to help the war effort in every way possible, and more particularly in the production and distribution of wholesome milk for the maintenance of health and public welfare of the citizens and servicemen in this community; however, unless we receive relief promptly in the form of an increase in price to consumers in proportion to the increases in cost of production and distribution, instead of promises, we will be forced completely out of business by this discrimination against the dairy industry. Please let me hear from you immediately if we are expected to pay our bills with promises of the Office of Price Administration.

Yours very truly,

WHITE BELT DAIRY,
J. G. DUPUIS, M. D.,
Owner.

I have here a communication from Mr. Brady S. Johnston, with resolution from the Duval County, Fla., U. S. D. A. War Board. This indicates the public concern which is felt with reference to this matter in Florida:

DINSMORE DAIRY CO.,
Jacksonville, Fla., June 8, 1943.

Hon. LEX GREEN,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR LEX: The Duval County United States Department of Agriculture War Board has furnished me with a copy of the attached resolution with the request that I forward it on to you.

Your continued efforts in behalf of the dairy industry is highly appreciated.

Sincerely,

BRADY S. JOHNSTON.

Whereas the production of milk in Duval County has gradually been decreasing for the past several months, dairy herds are being sold, cattle distributed to other areas, or in some cases slaughtered, and the supply of milk is rapidly decreasing while the capacity of production in this area is at present not being utilized. Improved permanent pastures that have been built at great costs are growing up in weeds; and

Whereas the producers of milk in this area, as well as distributors, are in a very demoralized state of mind because of the shortage of labor, and a very acute labor problem is faced by the milk producers because the greater part of dairy labor has been lost to war industries which pay much higher wages, and the present price of feed has practically doubled, the cost of dairy supplies increased tremendously, and a ceiling has been placed on the sale of dairy products which is inadequate to meet these increases; and

Whereas it is the responsibility of the United States Department of Agriculture War Board to have the milk-production goals for the county produced, and realizing that the goals are not being met because of the inability of the industry to pay competitive wage scales and increased feed and equipment costs: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Duval County United States Department of Agriculture War Board, That the Office of Price Administration, Director of Economic Stabilization, and Director of War Mobilization be advised of this situation and request that they seriously consider the facts presented and that they immediately take such steps as are necessary to prevent a further decrease in production of milk in this area, namely, an increased ceiling price thereon to partially absorb the additional increased cost in the production and distribution of milk.

The seriousness of this situation has challenged not only the attention but also the aggressive efforts of the Milk Commission of the State of Florida. Administrator Paul H. Ficht of this commission has been most diligent in his efforts, having in mind the justification and imperativeness of continuance in business after the duration of Florida dairymen, and also the present emergency of trying to meet present war demands in the Florida area. Under date of June 4, he sent to me a communication which gives pertinent information which you should have. It follows:

STATE OF FLORIDA MILK COMMISSION,
Jacksonville, Fla., June 4, 1943.

Hon. LEX GREEN,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. GREEN: The letter written by Mr. George J. Burke, Acting Administrator of Office of Price Administration, indicates a tendency to ridicule or break-down arguments presented by me in behalf of the Florida milk industry. In the first paragraph of his letter he made the statement "it is unfortunate that the trade journal should have created this misconception regarding the action of the Office of Price Administration." I wonder if Mr. Burke would care to publicly class the Jacksonville Journal, who first carried the article, as a trade journal creating a misconception, since the article above mentioned carried a Washington date line and in the third paragraph thereof all but quotes Office of Price Administration as the author.

In the second paragraph of Mr. Burke's letter he takes exception to my statement "that only failure has been a result of Federal control of milk in this country" by saying, "I do not think that this statement is an entirely reasonable interpretation of the conditions which arise from war economy." Mr. Burke fails to state that Florida's milk industry was geared to handle milk production in this State for both military and civilian population, and through lack of knowledge and understanding of our individual problems on the part of the Office of Price Administration, and by their failure to act upon the advice of those familiar with the Florida milk problems they have rendered Florida unable to cope with the present shortage of milk. By this same lack of understanding and unwillingness to accept advice from those who know the situation, they are well on the road to permanently crippling Florida's milk production, if not completely annihilating it. The term "war economy," as used by Mr. Burke, should have been used only as "Office of Price Administration economy" as it is certainly not the war which is the cause of the milk shortage. Mr. Burke is correct in stating that milk production during 1942 had exceeded all previous records, but please let me point out that where these records were exceeded, such as Minnesota, Wisconsin, Indiana, Illinois, etc., the dairy farmer is now making more profit, by their own admission, than they have ever made in their entire business experience. We, in Florida, have been attempting to purchase some of this milk to alleviate the shortage here and by so doing we have further congested the rail transportation facilities and added to the present shortage of milk coming from the above-mentioned areas which should be used for manufacture of powdered milk, cheese, etc. We are experiencing considerable difficulty in getting delivery of this milk in a usable condition since the summer months are now upon us. For example, only last week five cars of sour milk arrived in Jacksonville. I am wondering if these factors can be labeled "war economy."

In the third paragraph of Mr. Burke's letter he explained (without understanding) that although milk in Jacksonville and Miami, where dairies are going out of business, there are no higher prices in any section of the United States. Although this statement is not entirely correct, suppose we assume it to be so for analytical purposes. For instance, alfalfa normally purchased by the dairymen in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Indiana, Illinois, et cetera, at a figure between $10 and $15 per ton is purchased by the Florida dairymen at a figure between $45 and $50 a ton; while the same price ratio exists in all grain products used for high protein feeding purposes. Cows being milked in these high milk producing areas can be purchased by the dairy there one-third to one-half cheaper than they can be purchased in Florida. Florida farm labor, one time rated among the cheapest, is now rated among the highest; while their proficiency is considered to be only 60 percent of normal. The machinery necessary for the production, handling, processing, and distribution of milk when purchased in Florida is roughly 20 percent higher than in most any other area. This is due mainly to the exorbitant freight rates existing on this type of equipment. Everyone knows that an automobile purchased in Florida, in many instances, costs so much more that the prospective buyer can and does travel to the point of production to make his purchase, thereby driving the vehicle home himself, actually saving money, and at the same time enjoying a trip.

Mr. Burke stated "we should be glad to have factual details explaining how the Office of Price Administration's price ceilings have led to the conditions referred to by Mr. Ficht." Of course, we are all now aware of the fact that the factual information only becomes such when obtained as a result of an Office of Price Administration survey, and that information such as just given could never be accepted as factual information. Nevertheless, I cannot see how these existing conditions can be ignored and denied except to substantiate theories on Office of Price Administration war economy. As a matter of fact, the above differences in costs represent somewhere in the neighborhood of 70 percent over those enjoyed by areas on whom Office of Price Administration has obtained factual information. If the Florida dairymen enjoyed the same profit as those areas already herein mentioned, then milk here would sell for 30 cents or better per quart.

In the last paragraph of Mr. Burke's letter he states that an order is being prepared for the entire State of Florida and that it is not anticipated that this order will increase the general level of retail prices and "its primary purpose will be to establish a more uniform pattern of prices" by which he undoubtedly means that relief will not be given and that Office of Price Administration has again failed to understand and solve the milk problem in Florida. I am wondering if Mr. Burke will explain to your satisfaction why Florida is the last area to be considered in the adjustment of milk prices when it was undoubtedly from the onset the most critical of all areas from a fluid-milk standpoint.

Thanking you for your consideration and with very best wishes, I remain

Sincerely yours,

PAUL H. FICHT,
Administrator.

Mr. Speaker, I bring the above communications to your attention to emphasize the fact that this is not a matter of whim or passing interest but is a matter which vitally concerns the food security of the war and other personnel of Florida and, for that matter, the people of the entire country. It is not the intent of Congress that administrative agencies of the Government should either through technicalities or mal- or biased administration do injury to the American people. O. P. A.'s administration of ceiling price legislation as affects the milk producers of Florida is doing injury to the war effort and to America in general. It is forcing dairymen out of business; it is causing dairy herds to be slaughtered for beef; it is depriving soldiers, sailors, babies, and the ordinary citizens of Florida of necessary food. It is a mystery to me as to why the O. P. A. officials and/or Judge Vinson cannot heed the situation when they have presented to them actual facts as to the bankruptcy and going out of business of these dairymen. It is definite that they have been fully advised in the premises. It is definite that they do understand the plight in which these dairymen are situated. It is, in my opinion, definite that they have the power to increase milk producers' ceiling prices in Florida adequately to enable these men to continue in the production of this all-essential food.

Producers' milk ceiling price in Florida was frozen long ago, yet the price which they pay for dairy feed, equipment, and other elements going into production has regularly and consistently advanced. The price which they must pay for labor has necessarily increased. Employees in many instances have nothing to offer for sale and for aid to the war effort except their own labor. The laborer is entitled to his hire. It is just and proper that dairymen of our State have increased and paid more wages to their employees. In spite of these increases, many employees have left dairy service and gone into services which pay more. For this they are not to be censured. One is entitled to the right to seek and gain employment in such war service as may pay him more for his labor and enable him to better provide for his family, to buy War bonds, and to make himself and his services more strongly felt in the all-embracing and comprehensive war effort.

Now if O. P. A. can allow the feed sellers an increase on their sales price to dairymen, why does not the O. P. A. have sufficient wisdom to allow an increase in the sale price of milk to such an extent at least as to enable these Florida dairymen to continue production?

My colleagues, I urge that you join forces with us in Florida in an effort to exterminate such mis- and mal-administration of O. P. A. It is becoming all too apparent that we must resort to congressional remedy by taking away by act of Congress O. P. A.'s producers' price ceiling fixing powers. Their practices and policies in many instances, and particularly in the Florida milk case, are throttling, lessening, and destroying production. These practices are intensifying food shortages throughout the country and, while at the same time, food production increase is the need of America and the war effort. Your cooperation is urged.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COFFEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

THE CHINESE EXCLUSION ACT

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I heard the gentleman from Michigan speak with regard to the repeal of the Chinese exclusion laws. I respect the gentleman from Michigan. I believe he is speaking that which he believes. I must say that I disagree with him 100 percent.

This issue is one I have thought about and prayed about. I believe it is more far-reaching than any bill that has come before this Congress for a long, long time, perhaps since the declaration of war. Ordinarily I vote to restrict immigration. My theories on immigration do not coincide with those of some other Members of the House. I dare say I have voted contrary to the vote of the chairman of our committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN], more times than I have voted with him. I would vote now to restrict practically all immigration for a period of 5 or 10 years after the war, until we can see what it is all about and what the implications are, but I also believe it is important that we repeal the Chinese Exclusion Act.

I have just one request of the Members who have carried the ball on the floor in the years gone by for restriction of immigration. I hope they will read the testimony of all the witnesses and particularly that of Admiral Yarnell and several other military men before they commit themselves publicly. I think they will find they must go along with this bill.

I am the father of two little children. I cannot see it any other way than that the future is black if all of the yellow and brown men of Asia turn against us. I believe one of the most important things we have to do is to see to it that our war in the Pacific does not end up as a race war. I think this war is going to get more vicious and more barbarous as the months go on. I believe the news reports indicate that. We must hold China as our ally, not only now, but in all the years to come, but particularly right now.

For 5 long years the Chinese have resisted invasion. With disease, hunger, and military defeat staring them in the face day after day, the Japanese say to them, "Why are you people such saps? The United States is against you. There is not one of you that can lawfully enter the United States." They know that is true.

If China capitulates and joins Japan, all Asia will go with her. If I can remove or lessen that danger by voting to allow 105—and that is the correct number—Chinese to enter this country lawfully each year, I am going to do it.

I think this measure will save innumerable lives of our boys in the war in the Pacific. I am convinced of that. I respect the individual who has a different view, but as for me, I am willing to follow Admiral Yarnell and many others who have said that it will greatly strengthen the hand of China, it will enable their Government to hang on and carry on this war against Japan.

In view of some of the riffraff we have let into this country from Europe, I am not going by my vote to refuse to allow these 105 Chinese to enter this country, and thus give Japan a weapon that they can use so effectively against our greatest fighting ally in this war for our survival. After all, there is a limit to what people can stand. We found that out on Bataan and Corregidor. There is a limit to what human souls and human bodies can stand. We need to take this weapon away from Japan, not to help China, but to help the United States.

I sincerely hope that my colleagues on the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization who are opposed to this bill will review their position. I am not here to say that I want to stand on our position of the last 60 years. I am not here to say that Germans and Italians should be able to continue to come to this country. I know what some of them did who came here after the last war. Under our present quota system a quota can be had for Mussolini to come to this country—Mussolini, who ravished Ethiopia. That is our historical immigration policy. A quota can be had for Hitler. I am not for that. I am for restricting our immigration. If we cut the quotas down 90 percent, let the Chinese take their cut. But let us not bar them and let others come into our country.

Every witness who spoke for this bill who has visited China and who has an understanding of the problem has repeatedly stated that the Chinese understand and grant to the United States the right to stop all immigration if we do it for domestic reasons, because of our unemployment, for instance. If we restrict all immigration in order to provide employment for our own people, and shut the doors, the Chinese will not object, but they do object to our letting 153,000 other people come into this country every year and not one Chinese.

This issue is too closely tied to the war. It gives Japan too much of a weapon. I firmly believe that to oppose this bill is to flirt with the lives of thousands of our soldiers and with the future of our country. I am not going to vote to shut out 105 Chinese. I have confidence in this House. Anyone who says this is a wedge to lift the bars on all immigration insults the House and the American people. The American people will not stand for it. But the American people do want a fair deal for China and they want to save the lives of all the American boys possible. Admiral Yarnell, whose testimony is on page 2778 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, says that the enactment of this bill will save the lives of our boys.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, in line with this discussion, I point out something typical of what this means for the war effort alone. Time magazine, in a recent issue, published a reproduction of a pamphlet, which is typical propaganda, which the Japanese are using in the Orient. I think this House ought to know just what they are saying. That leaflet reads as follows, and I ask you gentlemen to pay particular attention to the last sentence:

America is China's ally. Americans say they love and admire the Chinese. But can you go to America, can you become citizens? No. American's don't want you. They just want you to do their fighting. Their Exclusion Act names you and says you are unfit for American citizenship. If Generalissimo Chiang really has influence in America, why has he not had this stigma erased from American law? There will be no such discrimination against you in the greater east Asia coprosperity sphere.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, at the conclusion of the legislative program, and any other special orders, I be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SENATE

SATURDAY, JUNE 12, 1943

(Legislative day of Monday, May 24, 1943)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou God of mercy, Thou art also the God of law. Through tragedy and tears the stern fact puts its relentless hand upon us that men do not gather grapes of thorns nor figs of thistles. In this golden season of seedtime and harvest as sowers go forth to sow, teach us anew the solemn lesson written in the very cells of our bodies and in the structure of the world, that as a man sows so shall the reaping be. In these National Halls where laws are enacted may we be very conscious of that one law that cannot be revoked, "He that soweth the wind shall reap the whirlwind; he that soweth destruction shall reap destruction." If we sow to the flesh we shall of the flesh reap corruption; if we sow to the spirit we shall of the spirit reap life everlasting. May we never imagine that the operation of that law is postponed to some far-off distant day. We confess with shame that what we reap today in bitterness, in starvation and slaughter of millions, in all the disruption of our common life, is the harvest of the selfish seed that we the nations of the world have sown.

Let the chastisements of Thy law be our teachers. Strip us of our boastful illusions. Open our eyes to the evils among us that we condemn in others. May we scatter seeds of thoughtful kindness, of generous good will, of universal justice, for our reaping by and by, so that, instead of the thorn with its wounding blade, shall come up the fir tree with its healing shade. Amen.

PETITIONS OF CITIZENS OF ORANGE COUNTY, FLA.—REGULATION OF THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

Mr. ANDREWS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Orange County, Fla., which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD without the signatures attached, as follows:

To the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States:

Whereas in the War Act of 1917, the Congress of the United States forbade the sale of any intoxicating drink, including beer, in any of the canteens of Army or Navy, or nearby camp areas; and

Whereas the Brewers' Digest for May 1941, because of beer being made available for Army camps, stated, "Here is the chance for brewers to cultivate a taste for beer in millions of young men who will eventually constitute the largest beer-consuming section of our population"; and

Whereas the drinking of beer creates a taste for alcohol and is a contributing factor in immoral conduct, which leads to venereal disease: Now therefore

We, the undersigned citizens of Orange County, Fla., do respectfully petition you to reenact legislation similar to that of 1917, and so give the young men of today the protection their fathers had in 1917. (Signatures omitted.)

STRIKES IN DEFENSE INDUSTRIES

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present and to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred a telegram which I have just received from Harvey C. Fremming, regional director, Congress of Industrial Organizations, Kansas City, Kans., urging the defeat of the Smith-Connally bill, which is today before the Senate.

THE COAL-STRIKE SITUATION

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to present and to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred a letter which I have received from the Board of County Commissioners of Douglas County, Kans., with its enclosure, and also another letter which I have received from C. B. Russell, mayor of the city of Lawrence, Kans., urging that immediate action be taken to settle the labor controversy in the coal industry in order that the maximum production of coal in this country may be immediately available.

There being no objection, the letters were received, ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senator,

MY DEAR SENATOR CAPPER: Enclosed please find a copy of a letter sent to the President of the United States by the Board of County Commissioners of Douglas County, Kans.

This letter expresses the feeling of the county board, and is urging that immediate action be taken to settle the labor controversy in the coal industry. We believe that delivering supplies to our armed forces and winning this war is the most important problem confronting the American citizen, and firmly oppose any move that will hinder production.

Respectfully yours,

GLENNA D. DAVIS,
Secretary to the Board of County Commissioners.

JUNE 7, 1943.

The PRESIDENT,
White House, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: The Board of County Commissioners of Douglas County, Kans., urges the President of the United States to take immediate decisive action, in line with the recommendation of the War Labor Board, to settle the labor controversy in the coal industry.

We believe that we express the almost unanimous sentiment in this community when we say that there must be no delay, by any individuals or groups, in the maximum production and delivery of war materials to our armed forces.

Respectfully yours,

L. H. GRIFFITH,
Chairman.
ED JOHNSON,
M. N. PENNY,
Board of County Commissioners, Douglas County, Kans.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,
Senate Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: The city of Lawrence, Kans., through its governing body has directed me to urge you to employ all necessary and lawful means at your command to restore the maximum production of coal in this country.

We believe that no group or leaders of any group should be permitted to jeopardize the production and transportation of war essentials and that the interests of the Nation are paramount to those of any particular industry.

Respectfully,

C. B. RUSSELL, Mayor.

THE GASOLINE AND PETROLEUM SITUATION IN NEW ENGLAND

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, on June 3 I addressed what I thought was a very courteous and reasonable letter to the Petroleum Administrator, Hon. Harold L. Ickes, regarding the gasoline crisis in the New England and Eastern States. Nine days have now gone by without my receiving a reply. I have always taken pains to pay careful attention to his requests which have been made to me as a member of various committees on which I have served, and recently I took a position favorable to a matter which he favored. I hope that by inserting this letter in the RECORD it may come to his attention and that I may receive a reply. I ask that the letter be printed in the RECORD, and I also ask that two editorials, one from the Worcester (Mass.) Gazette and the other from the Springfield Evening Union, be printed in the RECORD along with the letter.

There being no objection, the letter and editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
June 3, 1943.

Hon. HAROLD L. ICKES,
Petroleum Administrator for War,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. ADMINISTRATOR: Ever since the outbreak of war the eastern section of the country, and the New England States in particular, have been doing without a great many things upon which their normal daily life depended. The most conspicuous of these things are petroleum products in general and gasoline in particular.

The people of New England and Massachusetts are not only willing but eager to make any sacrifice which is caused by the winning of the war and which will lighten, if only for a moment, the burden borne by the fighting men. No one, consequently, begrudges the fact that gasoline which would normally be used by civilians in New England is now being used for airplanes and mechanized equipment in the combat areas.

To be deprived of gasoline because of bad planning or sectional favoritism is, as I am sure you will agree, another matter and one which I know you would not consciously sanction. It is in this regard that the duty is imposed on all of us to be sure that every deprivation of gasoline is due to the war effort and to the war effort alone.

In the many conferences which I have had with officials of your Administration, I have been told repeatedly that all available methods of transportation were now in full use bringing petroleum products from the source of supply to the East. In fact, official testimony is clear on the point that all available pipe lines, all available tank cars, and all available ships are in use. I am disposed to accept that statement.

I desire, however, to interrogate you on the matter of tank trucks. I am advised that there are hundreds of thousands of tank trucks in this country which are used throughout the United States to make local deliveries. It seems self-evident that if the rationing applied to the Eastern States were applied to the rest of the country, there would be a much smaller need for tank trucks in that part of the United States not now severely rationed. Of course, if it is the policy of the Government to maintain a business-as-usual gasoline situation in the rest of the United States, the existing supply of tank trucks must remain where they are.

I submit, however, that it is only fair to impose the same restrictions on the whole country as are now imposed on the eastern seaboard so as to make available tank trucks for supply for the East. The result would then be that the East would have a little more than it now has and the rest of the country would have a little less.

I know you agree that sectionalism has no place in a matter of this kind and hope that this proposition will appeal to your sense of justice. I await your reaction with interest.

Sincerely yours,

H. C. LODGE, Jr.

[From the Worcester (Mass.) Gazette of June 9, 1943]

LESS STUDY, MORE ACTION

The letter of Senator LODGE to Fuel Administrator Ickes sums up what the average eastern motorist thinks about gasoline rationing. Senator LODGE says large numbers of tank trucks cart gasoline from place to place in the West where motorists can drive pretty much as they please. He proposes that the West be placed under the same gasoline restrictions as the East, releasing some of those trucks for moving gasoline this way.

Meanwhile there is talk in Washington that pleasure driving may soon be banned in several Western States. But we have heard such talk before. Every time New England Members of Congress protest the injustice of the present arrangement, somebody in Washington hints that gasoline curtailment will be made uniform throughout the country. Plans are always being studied, but there it stops.

We hope Senator LODGE gets somewhere with his proposal. If he doesn't, and if the same old buck passing continues, with the same old talk of studying the situation, he and his New England colleagues should find a way to blow the lid off the whole unfair system. The East has been patient long enough under this bluffing.

[From the Springfield (Mass.) Evening Union of June 9, 1943]

"GAS" AND JUSTICE

The letter sent recently by Senator HENRY CABOT LODGE, to Harold L. Ickes, Petroleum Administrator for War, is so eminently fair and restrained that it should impel Mr. Ickes to pay some attention, even though Mr. LODGE happens to be a Republican, and from New England, and Mr. Ickes likes neither a Republican nor a New Englander.

However, Mr. LODGE does not plead for special consideration for the East, nor for New England. All he asks is that special consideration for the rest of the country be discontinued, and that Mr. Ickes quit treating the East as if it were not part of the United States.

Mr. LODGE points out that the people of New England are willing to sacrifice everything, in order that the fighting men may have what they need. He declares that we do not begrudge the fact that gasoline which would normally be used by civilians in New England is now being used in the warfare. But, he goes on to say: "To be deprived of gasoline because of bad planning or sectional favoritism is, as I am sure you will agree, another matter." Although Mr. LODGE agrees that something is being done to relieve the eastern seaboard of its gasoline scarcity, he believes there is vast room for improvement, and emphasizes that tank trucks now delivering gasoline in other parts of the country are not being used to help bring gasoline into New England.

"I submit," he says, "that it is only fair to impose the same restrictions on the whole country as are now imposed on the eastern seaboard so as to make available tank trucks for supply for the East. The result would then be that the East would have a little more than it now has and the rest of the country would have a little less." Mr. LODGE concludes his appeal to Mr. Ickes by saying he realizes that Mr. Ickes agrees that "sectionalism has no place in a matter of this kind."

Of course, it hasn't. But, from the very first, Mr. Ickes has given it a strong first place. The result is that there has not been equitable distribution of petroleum products; the East has received less than it should have received; the rest of the country more.

And that is neither justice nor good sense.

VICTORY POTATO SHOW

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, there has been a call by the President for production of food throughout the country. We need a great increase in food. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter I received from the St. Louis Agricultural Society of Washburn, Wis., indicating that they are to hold on September 18 what they call a potato V show. I believe any move to foster food production merits notice and approval.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

POTATO V SHOW,
ST. LOUIS AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY,
Washburn, Wis., June 9, 1943.

Hon. ALEXANDER WILEY,
United States Senator,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Enclosed is a handbill carrying details concerning our Victory potato show.

Our primary purpose is to stimulate Victory gardens and we are happy to say at this time we have received Nation-wide publicity in praise of our venture.

We should like to have a word of encouragement from you and we are even so bold as to ask you to give our show a boost on the Senate floor, if that would not be contrary to Senate rules.

Since the handbills were printed an additional prize of $25 has been included, coming from the National Catholic Rural Life Conference, of Des Moines, to be awarded to the family raising and preserving the most garden stuff, keeping in mind the relation of this year's production to past years in each instance, thereby inciting the regular gardeners to do more.

We have heard something of your very fine farm and we should like to have you enter our contest. You come from the real potato area of Wisconsin and a bushel of your potatoes might win.

The Madison Square Boys' Club of New York City has written us to the effect that they plan to enter in all divisions of the show. These boys are cultivating acres of potatoes this year as their share in the Nation's program of production.

With kindest personal regards, I am,
Yours for victory,
ELIZABETH HAWKES,
Director.

PREVENTION OF STRIKES IN DEFENSE INDUSTRIES—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 796) relating to the use and operation by the United States of certain plants in the interests of the national defense.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I ask that during the few remarks I shall make I may not be interrupted. I make the request because of the serious nature of my feelings when I rise to speak upon the subject before the Senate.

In respect to industry-labor relations there is in my thought, as there is in the thought of every other Senator present, and of every other loyal American citizen, that in wartime there can be but one union in America, and that the Union of the United States of America. Therefore I cannot and will not speak from the standpoint of one who is taking sides in a present-day dispute, or from the standpoint of one who has decided that there must be enacted some character of punitive legislation in order to overcome the failure on the part of certain persons, as evidenced by their actions, to realize that there is in wartime but one union, and that the Union of the United States of America.

I do not wish to pass judgment on anyone; I do not even wish to pass judgment upon the conference report; but I do wish to point out in all seriousness, that, if the conference report shall become law, there will be a serious break in what has been in the past one of the finest things about our industry and labor relations. The break will be that if the conference report shall become law we will move one step further away from the voluntary system for labor and the voluntary system for industry in our country.

Of course, I know that in making a statement of that kind I shall be answered with a question, How can there be any voluntary system of any kind when we are so tied up with prohibitory laws defining one action on the part of corporations and another action on the part of individuals? I know it will be said that labor alone has been unrestrained so far as law is concerned. But please remember that, in America's industry and labor relations, until the Supreme Court decision on the National Labor Relations Act, the Federal Government as an entity did not move into the labor field, that there were the restraints of the conflict between the jurisdiction of the States and the jurisdiction of the Nation.

Mr. President, let me call attention to the fact that when the National Labor Relations Act became law some of the ablest attorneys in the United States urged corporations and other employers of the United States not to obey the law; they went out of their way to stress that the law should be ignored, because the law was in their minds unconstitutional. We had the extremely interesting situation in our country of a group of lawyers actually taking themselves as seriously as the Supreme Court of the United States, and advising their clients to act in opposition to a law.

Mr. President, it is only since the national labor relations law was enacted that, as a Nation, we have been able to move into the labor field, and the progress which has been made since that time has been great beyond anyone's anticipation. I think every thoughtful person should realize that fact.

Another point which I should like to emphasize is that, due to our constitutional structure, of the 28 or 29 treaties entered into between the countries of the earth under the auspices of the International Labor Office, up to date the United States has been able to adhere to only seven or eight of the treaties, because of the theories entertained in our land in regard to jurisdiction, that the United States could not assume jurisdiction which belonged to the States.

Mr. President, aside from the reason I have mentioned, that such action is the taking of one step toward doing away with voluntary-ism in our country, I wish to state another reason why I shall oppose adoption of the conference report. I was a member of the industry-labor conference which the President of the United States called together immediately after Pearl Harbor in connection with which an agreement was entered into by the industrialists present and the labor representatives present that during the war there would be no strikes and no lock-outs, and that all disputes would be settled by peaceful means. I have said time and again that that was probably the most constructive action taken in the whole history of industry-labor relations in the United States. That action became a fundamental principle in connection with the new way of carrying on industry-labor relations in our country. The adoption of the conference report would destroy the efficacy of that agreement. It would bring the right to strike back again into the sphere of industrial relations, back into the sphere of action on the part of labor unions. That right, of course, has never been taken away. It is guaranteed in law. It cannot be taken away, because it is, as every laboring man knows, his only final resort in making an appeal to justice. It is his only resort to justice when everything else has been removed. But under the technique worked out in the conference report of permitting strikes in industries after a vote shall have been taken, there is reasserted the right to strike in such a way, and government itself invites labor leaders to break the sanctity of the no-strike agreement, which, it is true, some labor leaders have failed to recognize, but which was entered into by their representatives when the industry-labor conference met.

Mr. President, the step represented by adoption of the conference report is a dangerous one for the Congress of the United States to take. Some persons have said that the curbing of the right to strike by voluntary action, and the leaving of all disputes to peaceful settlement, was simply for the duration. What I shall now say has, I believe, no bearing upon the conference report, and it is hardly germane to my general remarks, but I wish to say that as the author of the no-strike motion in the conference to which I have referred, I deliberately left out of it any reference to the war and to the duration, because I am as much opposed to strikes as is anyone else on earth.

Strikes are uneconomic in their nature. They bring sadness to innocent people. They bring distress to the women and the children of the workers. Strikes are extremely ineffective even in the long run toward bringing about changes in industry-labor relations. They are very much more ineffective than the method of collective bargaining, which has been made use of by so many unions in dealing with their employers, by reason of which, for a generation or for two generations, there has not been resort to strike on the part of those who have availed themselves of collective bargaining. Labor has gone forward under that peaceful arrangement.

The peaceful method is always more constructive than the forceful method. That statement holds good as between nations as well as in industrial relations. We all know that after the war we must adjust our country first of all to peaceful relations. We must, after the war, count our loss in dead, our loss in wounded, our loss in missing. There is bloodletting even in industrial relations, as we know from our experience. The loss of life and the loss of property, in war as well as at times in industry-labor relations, are never regained, although a point contended for may have been won.

Mr. President, I hope I have said enough to convince my brethren in the Senate that it is with the deepest sincerity that I oppose the conference report. I oppose it because I have a fundamental belief in the institutions of our country, and that those institutions can best be enlarged and developed by peaceful action, by voluntary action, even if it does seem to take a longer time than might be taken if we were to follow the course which the adoption of the conference report would permit because, Mr. President, it provides for a right of review in the district courts, thus again opening up court actions. It may be denied that the whole field of industry-labor relations will be opened up again, but the adoption of the conference report would again open the courts to the field of industrial disputes. There would be endless litigation and innumerable questions remaining unsettled.

We all know that the processes of administrative law are slow enough. Let us not take a step backward and reopen the district courts of our country to industry-labor disputes, even to review actions.

Mr. President, I cannot help but repeat that I think it is a mistake for the Congress of the United States to turn its back upon a great forward-looking principle, and I cannot help but say that if we take the proposed action I am sure we will spread a spirit of ill feeling among the hundreds of thousands, yea, the millions of American working people, who are doing their utmost, not only to win the war, but to produce for our country itself, for never in the history of our country have so many persons been working, never in the history of our country has so much been produced, never in its history has there been such general satisfaction with the way our Government is being conducted, and never has there been such satisfaction with industry-labor relations.

Mr. President, there are, of course, exceptions to that in a country of 130,000,000 people. When its industry-labor relations were in a condition of flux, and there was an attempt to adjust from State control to Federal control, and the adjustment was made in a few years, there was unrest due to the change, and due to the war, and there was uncertainty. An attempt was made to adjust the 130,000,000 people of the country to the situation, as though they were all one man. The adjustment process has been a delicate one. There have been fluctuations in prices, and, sad to relate, Mr. President, there are in the United States some persons who do not believe that there should be simply one big union throughout the country during the war, namely, the Union of the United States of America. There are thousands in all walks of life, in industry, and naturally, in labor, who must be termed the "advantage-takers." There are those who sit back when it has come to a question of collective bargaining, feeling that if the situation would continue long enough the President would have to use his authority and take over a plant, and that then, of course, by taking it over, the judgment with respect to a controversy would be on the side of those who sit back. Such persons believed that then there would be confusion, and then there would be legislation, and, perhaps, they felt they would regain some of the advantages they had previously lost. That is a description of what may be true of some of our 130,000,000 people, not a description of any given case. There have been abuses, there have been racketeers, on both sides; but there are laws against racketeering. There has been dishonesty, but there are laws against dishonesty. We must not assume that all the racketeers and all the dishonesty are connected with our labor-industrial strife.

Therefore, Mr. President, I am constrained to vote against the conference report with respect to Senate bill 796. Fully recognizing the gravity of the labor dispute in the bituminous coal industry, I am very much opposed to having the Senate pass legislation which would drastically alter the whole governmental machinery for the handling of labor disputes.

Perhaps I have not been entirely fair in the preceding sentence. The Senator from Texas could chide me for uttering it. I know that the bill has been pending during two Congresses. I know there has been an honest effort to attempt to bring about an adjustment by law, and I know that I have been opposed to bringing about an adjustment by law. However, Mr. President, because of what has been in the hearts and souls of some of us and in the minds of certain newspaper writers, the strike in the coal mines has caused a stimulus which has produced emotional voting on the part of Members of Congress. I realize when I make that statement that probably I am criticizing myself; because if one Member of Congress votes emotionally, so might any other Member of Congress. I pray that the day may come when we all shall be reasonable, when we all shall be intellectual in that which we say and in the way we vote.

Mr. President, I think one of the most wicked of all things that have been done has been the attempt on the part of certain lobbyists in regard to this legislation to use their influence upon the minds and souls of Members of Congress, and their attempt to use threats upon Congressmen in regard to their votes on a particular measure. To follow such a course is not Americanism. While, of course, I realize that every one of my colleagues lives above that, if they did not live above it they would die of dizziness because they would be in such a whirl with themselves they would never be able to think straight.

The report goes on to say that these persons will be punished if they vote in a certain way. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, after deliberation, after pleading a cause, if I did not bring agreement to my side, I should be perfectly satisfied with the honesty of the votes of my colleagues. To be sure, I should not have changed my mind; in my mind I might say they were unwise, but I should never accuse any of them of being unpatriotic or disloyal or untrue to themselves.

Only sections 3, 4, 5, and 6 have any conceivable bearing on the mining situation. The bill recommended by the conferees is substantially the bill which passed the House of Representatives last week after hearings of only the most summary character. It contains substantially all the provisions which were characterized by the War Department, the Navy Department, the Maritime Commission, and the War Production Board—the agencies primarily responsible for the production of war materials—as tending to interfere with production and procurement, and to stimulate industrial unrest.

Mr. President, in the use of the preceding sentence I should be fair to myself and to my colleagues. We know that at the hearings held by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, certain representatives of the departments appeared and spoke in favor of the bill. We know that it has been charged that those representatives, in sending a letter at the last minute against the bill, probably were not convinced of the correctness of their stand in sending the letter. I say that out of fairness to everyone, because the letter was sent to the House of Representatives; and representatives of the War Department, the Navy Department, and the Maritime Commission did make the declaration about the bill, not about the conference report.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, did the Senator indicate that he did not want to be interrupted during the course of his remarks?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Yes, Mr. President; I asked that I not be interrupted.

Mr. President, the conference report also contains the same sections which the Government agencies that were intimately concerned with the maintenance of industrial peace testified would impair the effectiveness of existing machinery for the orderly settlement of labor disputes. We are asked to adopt this legislation not only in the face of the unanimous judgment of those agencies but against the background of wartime industrial relations in which the total of man-days lost because of labor disputes has been smaller than at any other time in our industrial history. I have a right to emphasize that point. I emphasize it because I believe that the voluntary agreement relative to industrial relations has in general been respected by both labor and industry.

As I have said, shortly after the declaration of war the President convened a conference of industry and labor, with a view to securing an agreement which would maintain uninterrupted production during the war. I participated in that conference as associate moderator. The conference report runs squarely counter to the national policy embodied in the voluntary and unconditional no-strike agreement which was the fruit of that conference, and which represents the cornerstone of our wartime industrial structure, and which, as I have said, I hope will represent the cornerstone of our peacetime industrial structure as well. When the House amendments to the Connally bill were reported from the House Committee on Military Affairs, objection was made to certain sections of the bill which, in effect, seemed to repudiate that agreement by legalizing strikes, provided that certain procedures with respect to a waiting period and a strike ballot were followed. Those sections have virtually been reincorporated in section 8 of the conference report. Although the language has been changed in some particulars, the statement of the House and Senate managers concedes that section 8 embodies substantially sections 2 and 3 of the House amendments. In other words, the proposed legislation seems to repudiate the President's statement of policy embodied in Executive Order 9107, proclaiming all strikes contrary to the public interest in time of war, and by implication would also appear to release the labor organizations from their no-strike pledge if the formalities set forth in section 8 (a) of the conference report are observed.

Mr. President, here I am reiterating the point I have made as to the seriousness of attempting to break down an agreement which in general is functioning and which in general is working well to the advantage of our country.

In place of the present unequivocal national policy against stoppage, the conferees have substituted a mere requirement of a notice and a waiting period of 30 days. After the 30-day period, the National Labor Relations Board would be directed to poll all employees involved in the dispute, to ascertain whether they would permit an interruption of war production. While the section provides penalties for failing to observe those formalities, there is no penalty or even an implied disapproval of a strike called after the waiting period. Moreover, there is neither penalty nor disapproval of strikes called after the majority of the employees have voted not to interrupt war production, nor is any penalty whatever provided against the strikers in cases in which no prior notice has been filed. In such cases, the only penalty—a civil suit for damages—would run against the representative who should have given the notice, but who failed to do so. In such an instance it would be difficult, if not impossible, to establish to the satisfaction of a jury that the representative should have known in advance that the stoppage was going to occur. This section is apparently based on the popular misconception that strikes would be universally eliminated if the rank and file were permitted to vote. It ignores the fact that the great bulk of interruptions which have occurred in wartime were wildcat strikes, instigated by rank-and-file workers against the wishes of responsible labor unions.

Mr. President, it should be said on my part that the labor leaders who have honestly stood by the pledge which their leaders made and who have worked faithfully to attempt to put down the "quickie," the sit-down strike, the quick walk-out, and the resort to irresponsible strikes, have worked with all the loyalty displayed on the part of other American citizens. They were sincere when they brought about the agreement, and I wish to testify to their sincerity. They have been sincere in attempting to see the agreement lived up to; and their sincerity needs commendation rather than condemnation. With the exception of the coal strike, I am informed that not a single strike which has occurred since the no-strike agreement has received the sanction or support of any leader of a national or international union affiliated with the A. F. of L. or the C. I. O.

Let me say a word for the independent unions, because we are interested in all of them. There was complaint on the part of the great independent unions that they were not represented in the industry-labor agreements. I went to the Secretary of Labor on their behalf and said, "Let us have representatives of some of the great independent labor unions." The problem which faced the Secretary of Labor was how to choose. It seemed impossible to choose one without giving offense to others. Representatives of the independent unions have come to my office, and we have talked things over. Every one of them has said, when he has left, "We are going to do our best to stand by that agreement, in spite of the fact that we think we were neglected and forgotten when the agreement was entered into."

In virtually every instance of stoppages, the War Labor Board has been able to get the workers to resume production promptly by calling upon the heads of the internationals to insist upon observance of the no-strike pledge. Let me invite the attention of the Senate to the way in which the War Labor Board has worked. It has accepted the theory and the action of the industry-labor conference to such an extent that it has refused to proceed with a case which has been referred to it until work has been resumed, even though the case is referred after a strike has been started. That great agency has tried to live up to the agreement voluntarily reached by industry and labor.

The conference bill would seem to foster these wildcat strikes, since any employee representative, even a shop steward or local official, could give the notice which would ultimately lead to a legal strike. Or, if the representative was uncertain of what the outcome of a strike vote might be, he could readily engineer a rank-and-file stoppage without any prior notice, and, as I have pointed out, in that case the only possible penalty under the bill would be a dubious suit for damages against the representative for not having given the notice when he should have. The strikers themselves would be immune from damages.

Finally, in the hands of unscrupulous union leaders the serving of notice could be resorted to in order to place pressure on the War Labor Board in even the most trivial disputes. Once such a notice has been given under the provisions of section 8 (2) the War Labor Board must act within 30 days. If it fails to do so, the National Labor Relations Board must forthwith conduct a poll. Since I am informed that there are more than a thousand dispute cases pending before the War Labor Board and its regional boards, and more than 25,000 cases involving proposed wage adjustments, many of them in the form of collective agreements, it can readily be seen that notices and strike ballots may be resorted to in hundreds of plants because of the mere physical impossibility of disposing of so heavy a docket within a 30-day period.

Inevitably, this would lead to so many break-downs in production that the Government would be compelled to take over the operation of scores of plants which could otherwise have adhered to schedules under the existing system.

Mr. President, there is no virtue, even in time of war, in making it necessary for the Government to step in and take over a plant. It is adding another task to an already harassed Government. In the last war chances were not taken in many places. I knew about the placement of troops at various strategic positions in industrial sections of the country, and I know of not a single case where that was not a mistake. It led to a type of unwise coercion which caused on the part of industry and on the part of labor a spirit of resentment in their hearts against the united action on the part of the American people.

Mr. President, we cannot win a war in a half-hearted way. We cannot win a battle with unhappy troops. We cannot bring about great production with unhappy labor. We cannot bring about cooperation in industry with unhappy and coerced industrial leaders. When we turn from the ordinary processes of voluntary action to forced action, we are asking men to assume an unnatural attitude.

It can be foreseen that the balloting will be preceded in many cases by extensive campaigning, thus arousing unrest and disturbing production in vital plants where industrial peace now exists. I am sure I do not have to tell any Senator that campaign periods bring about unrest and uncertainty. Balloting in a plant is a division of sides. There is argument and discussion. There is a complete let-up of the whole-hearted activity toward production.

While it would seem essential that any legislation proposing drastic changes in the present system should at least be clear and unmistakable in its intent, I also note that this section is very vaguely drafted. There is nothing to indicate whether or not the National Labor Relations Board is to conduct a ballot if the demands made by the strikers are illegal, for example, in protest over a wage ceiling or a decision of the War Labor Board itself. Moreover, the proposed strike might arise over an issue in contravention of the National Labor Relations Act, for example, an attempt of a union to secure a bargaining unit deemed inappropriate by the Board, or union recognition in the face of a contract with another union.

Mr. President, that statement is made entirely upon the theory of what might happen. We now have the facts. The Secretary of the Interior imposed a fine upon certain strikers. There have already been strikes against that fine. Whether the strikes are justified is not the question. My only point is that by Government control and coercive action in an attempt to use force in a legal way, we bring about a type of resentment which results in a return to the habit which is generations old, a habit which is bad, a habit which should be overcome, but a habit which, nevertheless, is with us and has been guaranteed in law. Please do not fail to recognize the fact that the strike medium has been recognized by the Congress of the United States as being a justifiable medium. The resort to strike, therefore, the employees can say is right, because the law is on their side. In moral, economic, and social issues, when people resort to a right in law, they do away with some of the finest things in our social life.

Although I have devoted considerable attention to section 8, this section is not the only portion of the bill which is defective so far as draftsmanship is concerned. For example, the provisions for the seizure and operation of mines and factories are not consistently drafted. Seemingly, the first proviso makes it clear that the President may take over not only plants in which an actual interruption of production by reason of a strike or lock-out has occurred, but also plants in which an interruption is threatened. Nevertheless, the language granting authority to the President is limited to an actual interruption. It is far from certain which of these conflicting provisions is controlling in a specific case.

Section 7, which gives statutory standing to the National War Labor Board, is also by no means free from ambiguity. Although reference is made to Executive Order 9017, under which the Board is now operating, it is not altogether certain whether all the provisions of this order or only some of them are to apply to the practices and procedure of the Board in the future. Similarly, the provisions of section 5 might conceivably involve some overlapping of jurisdiction among governmental agencies in the absence of clarifying language.

As it now stands, section 9, relating to political contributions, retains the same language as section 6 of the House amendment, although the provisions of that amendment received able criticism on the House floor by members of the Judiciary Committee acquainted with the provisions of the Hatch Act. Although the section on its face does not appear to discriminate against labor organizations, since it also forbids contributions by corporations, in reality it is directed primarily at labor groups, as was pointed out, since unincorporated societies such as the National Association of Manufacturers, as well as other business groups, are not affected by it.

Mr. President, in closing I wish to thank my fellow Senators for allowing me to proceed without interruption. I have tried to make a statement which will bear perusal, and one which I hope will justify my vote.

Moreover, Mr. President, I have tried to convince my brothers in the Senate of the fact that by the adoption of this measure we may change a habit of government, as well as a habit of procedure in our industrial labor relations. The change might actually prove fatal in wartime. Let us give credit where credit is due. Let us think of the 50,000,000 workers in the United States and realize the great work which they are doing. Let us think of our neighbors who are war workers, and thank them for the sacrifices they are making. Because of the action of one or two, Mr. President, let us not at this time cast a reflection upon the fine things which our Government, under its leadership, has been able to bring about in our industry-labor relations.

Mr. GUFFEY obtained the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GUFFEY. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. If the Senator from Utah does not object, I should like to ask him a question. I have listened with a great deal of interest to his remarks. I am sure all of us appreciate the earnestness with which the Senator from Utah approaches every question. However, I was greatly upset by the remarks of the Senator from Utah concerning the right of judicial review provided for in the conference report. Will the Senator point out to me what he means when he says that the conference report provides for judicial review, if I correctly understood him to that effect?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, if I used the words "judicial review" in a formal and legalistic way, I made a deduction which I was not justified in making. I noticed in reading the conference report that the district courts were mentioned, and that appeals could be made to the district courts. The point which I tried to make is that in setting up the administrative agencies, appeals from the decisions of those agencies have gone directly to the circuit court. So far as the initial legal procedure is concerned, that procedure has closed the majority of Federal courts in the country. The administrative courts have been recognized. I am fearful, Mr. President, that if we undertake to write into a law an invitation to make resort to a district court, we will repeat the everlasting irritations with which we are confronted at the present time.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Allow me to add a further word, and then I shall be through. We are talking about something which has not occurred. I hope and pray that my deductions are wrong, because I do not think any Senator wants to go back and start over again the type of litigation which took place in our country before the passage of the Norris-LaGuardia Act.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I feel greatly confused by the remarks of the Senator from Utah. It was my understanding that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] refused to sign the conference report because every word providing for judicial review or appeal was taken out of the bill. Am I not correct?

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to me so that I may make reply to the question of the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Senators must understand what I meant when I said what I did. I hope I am mistaken in what I said. I hope I am entirely mistaken; but when the words "district court" stand out in one's face, I cannot help but feel that resort to the district court on the part of labor may be had.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to me?

Mr. GUFFEY. For what purpose?

Mr. DANAHER. So that I may make reply to the question asked me by the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. GUFFEY. Is it to be a brief reply?

Mr. DANAHER. Yes.

Mr. GUFFEY. I do not wish to be interrupted by an all-day argument, but I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DANAHER. I appreciate the courtesy of the Senator from Pennsylvania. May I have the attention of the Senator from New Mexico who propounded the question?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator. I believe the confusion arose from the remarks of the Senator from Utah because he failed to discern that section 8, subsection (c), refers solely and simply to the duty which is required to be performed under subsection (a). It has no reference whatever to the War Labor Board. It has no reference whatever to any decision of the War Labor Board. It merely means that if anyone is required to perform a duty under subsection (c) of section 8, and willfully fails or refuses to perform that duty, any person who is injured because of that failure or refusal may bring an action in the district court to recover such damage as is attributable to the willful failure or refusal. Have I answered the question to the satisfaction of the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. HATCH. I am quite sure that what the Senator from Connecticut has stated is correct.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, may I add a word, if the Senator from Pennsylvania will yield?

Mr. GUFFEY. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER], and the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the sponsor of the bill, whether there is a unanimous opinion on the part of those three great lawyers that there will not be a reopening of the district courts to industry-labor disputes? If I can make that point, Mr. President, I shall be happy that I made the mistake in my judgment about the bill. I should like that point to be made so firmly and so strongly that no lawyer in the land who would like to take advantage of the situation created by the mere mention of the words "district court" will resort to the court in order to confuse our industry-labor relations.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah said he would like to have the unanimous opinion of the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Texas, and I think the Senator from Vermont may be included, if I may have the attention of the Senator from Vermont. I think I speak for the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Connecticut and also the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], although he is not present, when I say that there is no jurisdiction whatever conferred by this bill providing for resort to the United States district court, except the one mentioned by the Senator from Connecticut, which is merely the right to go there for a civil action for damages, and no jurisdiction whatever is given over labor disputes. Does that answer the Senator?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I thank the Senator for making that statement and I hope it will satisfy the lawyers of the country.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am sure it will.

Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania indulge me for 1 more minute?

Mr. GUFFEY. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. First, I want to make a brief comment on what the Senator from Utah said. The Senator from Utah is a distinguished member of the Committee on Military Affairs, and I am wondering why when we considered the draft bill he did not carry into its consideration the same views he has expressed here, that we could not afford to have an Army that was restless and could not be drafted. I wonder why it is that if we can draft an Army of eight or ten million men for war duty it is a crime to provide, as to workers in war factories which are making the arms for the men in the military forces, that after the Government takes over the factories the workers shall not strike. I am wondering also why the Senator concludes that the passage of a law which affects only those who strike or who violate or break a no-strike agreement is an offense and a reflection on all. This proposed act is no reflection on any laboring man who is doing his job. I realize that millions of them are loyal and patriotic. This proposed law is not intended for them. It is intended for the outlaw. We pass a law against theft, but that does not mean it is a reflection on me; I do not conclude that if a law is passed against stealing that is a reflection on me. It is not a reflection on anyone except a thief. Laws are passed against murder, but I do not become angry at the legislature and say "They reflected on me; they passed a law against murder." It is only a reflection on the man who commits the offense of homicide, or forgery, or any other crime.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. GUFFEY. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I was one of the sponsors of the Selective Service Act and, as the Senator knows, I had much to do with the conference report on the plant seizure provision in the military law on which the proposal of the Senator from Texas is built. There is a difference between drafting men for war purposes and drafting men for industry. I know the Senator realizes those differences. They are legal differences, but the greatest of all of them is that men for the Army are drafted into a disciplined organization. There is no way, even under the most acute type of regimentation tried in countries such as Germany and Italy, to draft labor into the same sort of disciplined organization. If it were not for the discipline, the malcontention in any army, of course, might bring disruption to it.

Mr. President, there is no difference of opinion between the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Texas about the right under the Selective Service Act to do certain things, and I am sufficiently well informed about the views of the Senator from Texas to know that he would hate to see the United States become an industrially and economically regimented country. We all stand against that with all our hearts and souls.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, this is a war bill; it only operates during the war; it only operates on war plants. There is no danger of permanent regimentation.

I thank the Senator from Pennsylvania for his usual generosity and kindness in yielding.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I wish to thank the brilliant and able Senator from Utah for the very thoughtful and constructive address he has made on the pending bill, and I wish to say to him that I am in entire accord and in sympathy with his views.

Mr. President, I desire now to address a few remarks to section 9 of the pending bill, the title of which is "Political Contributions by Labor Organizations." I do not see why we should especially pick on labor organizations, in view of the fact, as I think every Member of the Senate knows, that the Hatch Act and other corrupt-practices acts are being violated in every election. Why we especially have to name labor organizations at this particular time I am at a loss to understand.

I have in my hand a copy certified by the secretary of state of South Dakota of a document which gives the list of names and contributions and expenses filed by Walter H. Burke, acting treasurer, Republican State committee of that State for 1940.

In his report Mr. Burke includes expenses of $45,259.31 and contributions of $62,369.86. In other words, the receipts were $17,000 more than the expenditures.

I take it for granted—and I hope the Senator from South Dakota is listening—that the funds which were collected were turned over to the campaign of 1942, although I can find no evidence of any kind as to what disposition was made of the funds.

My attention was first attracted to this matter by an article published in a monthly journal in South Dakota, the name of which is South Dakota Today. It is published by the Democratic organization. A list of the contributions is given. I desire to read some of them. There is a little discrepancy between the filed list and the list as published in the paper, and possibly the Senator from South Dakota can later explain it.

Sarah Mellon Scaife, a daughter of R. B. Mellon, was credited with $4,000. Ailsa Mellon Bruce, a daughter of the late Andrew Mellon, $5,000. From one of the Mestas, $1,000, and he is listed as a Mellon contributor.

Then we go over to Delaware, where the du Ponts live, and find that in South Dakota Lammot du Pont contributed $4,000; Irénée du Pont, $2,500; Alfred P. Sloan—du Pont, $2,500; and Donald Brown, a du Pont contribution, $2,000. The Pews also gave $10,000.

The most interesting one on the list is Maxey Jarman, given in one paper as treasurer of the Tennessee Republican Committee and in the other report, treasurer, Nashville, Tenn., a contribution of $10,000. That is in clear violation of the law, and double the amount anyone is authorized to give, and especially if it is a corporation which made the contribution. If this was a contribution by a corporation, it was a clear violation of the law when the treasurer of the Republican Committee of South Dakota accepted that $10,000. There was also $10,000 contributed from the various McCormick groups of Chicago, $10,000 to $11,000.

I do not see why we should especially pick on labor, in view of these open and deliberate violations of the spirit and the letter of the law. We fixed the amount at $5,000, and then they gave jointly $10,000.

I should like to have in the RECORD a few paragraphs from the report of the Special Committee Investigating Presidential and Vice Presidential and Senatorial Campaign Expenditures for 1940. I ask to have printed in the RECORD that part of the special committee's report which appears on pages 143 to 147. I do not wish to take the time of the Senate this morning to read it.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, in that campaign the du Pont family contributed $186,780. In other words, those conducting the campaign were getting a family to make the contributions, in violation of the Corporate Corrupt Practices Act. I know the man who made the interpretation of the law for the chairman of the finance committee of the Republican campaign committee of 1940. He is a very brilliant and astute lawyer in Pittsburgh.

Then we find the Pitcairn family, which contributed $29,114.71. Ira C. Copley and his group gave $30,900. Mr. Copley, who was formerly a member of Congress, owns public utility interests west of Chicago, and now lives most of his time in California.

The Sloans, Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., and Mrs. Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., contributed $36,000.

Edgar Queeny, of the Monsanto Co., and his group, contributed a total of $42,375.

The Prentices gave $17,000.

I have not the time to pick up the list of the Mellons, but I have no doubt they held up their end. I have no total for the Pews in this report, but I am sure the Pew family contributed more than any other family at that time, because it is a well-known fact that Mr. Joe Pew has said frequently he would spend $1,000,000 any time to help defeat the present occupant of the White House.

Mr. President, recently our friend Mr. Spangler, chairman of the Republican National Committee, visited Philadelphia, and I wish to quote from an article written by Mr. Thomas P. O'Neil, one of the best-known political writers of Pennsylvania. He is accurate and forthright in all his statements. The article starts:

SPANGLER SEEKS FUNDS TO FIGHT FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT FOURTH TERM—GRAND OLD PARTY NATIONAL CHAIRMAN GUEST OF HONOR AT UNION LEAGUE

(By Thomas P. O'Neil)

President Roosevelt "is already running for a fourth term."

Republican National Chairman Harrison Earl Spangler made that declaration yesterday while here to put "the bite" on wealthy Pennsylvanians for $250,000 as the State's quota for national committee expenses.

I am glad to state, from a remark made by one of my colleagues in the Senate night before last, that he succeeded in raising the money. Whether he got it from Joe Grundy or Joe Pew I do not know, but he left Philadelphia with his subscriptions. I continue reading from the article.

"I am not for any candidate for President," said Spangler, "but I am against one—that politician from Dutchess County, N. Y., Franklin D. Roosevelt."

SAYS HE'S CANDIDATE NOW

"Do you think Roosevelt is a candidate?" he was asked.

"There is no question about it," the national chairman replied. "He is already running and the inner bunch of the New Deal crowd is spending a great deal of time promoting his fourth-term candidacy."

Spangler insisted there must be a differentiation between Roosevelt as President and as politician.

"As President," he said, "he is, of course, deserving of respect and support, but he hasn't any immunity as a politician running for office."

WILL BE HARD TO BEAT

Spangler was realistic enough to concede that Franklin Delano Roosevelt wouldn't be easy to beat.

"It will be a tremendous fight," he admitted.

But he thought Nation-wide reaction against a fourth term was running strong.

He said that a survey conducted by a national farm magazine, published in Des Moines, showed 59 percent of a circulation in excess of a million against a fourth term.

"A similar survey conducted in January 1940," he said, "showed only 28 percent against a third term."

SAYS RATIONING IS BUNGLED

Spangler agreed that the trend of the war may have a decisive bearing on the outcome of the 1944 Presidential election, but expressed the conviction that the Nation is ready to "return to American principles."

Asked if he thought rationing would have a favorable effect on the Republican vote, he said:

"Rationing as rationing will have no effect on the Republican vote, but the bungling administration of it will have a tremendous effect. The confusion and quarreling among those in charge of rationing indicate they don't know where they're going."

ATTENDED PRIVATE LUNCHEON

Spangler was interviewed at the Union League after he had been guest of honor at a luncheon behind closed doors, attended by Pennsylvania Republican leaders and a select group of multimillionaire business and industrial leaders.

The national chairman, said Gov. Edward Martin, who attended the luncheon, "is quite optimistic as to the Republican trend in Pennsylvania," and that his optimism is shared by National Committeeman G. Mason Owlett and State Chairman M. Harvey Taylor.

NO COMMENT ON WILLKIE

He had no comment to make on Wendell Willkie as the Republican candidate, but, in response to an inquiry, said that Gov. Thomas E. Dewey's friends are convinced that he meant it when he said that he wanted to finish the job for which he was elected.

Thus far, Spangler revealed, only one city, Detroit, has shown an interest in landing the next Republican national convention.

"I suppose we will hear from more cities before the National Committee meets to select a convention city next year," he said.

The Spangler luncheon was presided over by Orus J. Matthews, Republican State finance chairman.

In his address the national chairman urged Pennsylvanians to begin their campaign now, not to wait until next year.

SAMUEL NOT INVITED

Other speakers were Senator Albert W. Hawkes, of New Jersey; Governor Martin; and H. W. Prentiss, Lancaster industrialist and former president of the National Manufacturers' Association.

Guests included Joseph N. Pew, Jr.; former Senator Joseph R. Grundy; City Treasurer Edgar W. Baird, Jr.; Superior Court Judge Charles Edward Kenworthey; City Solicitor Robert M. Green; Walter H. Annenberg, publisher; as well as eastern county leaders.

Presence of Baird and Kenworthey was regarded as significant. They were Willkie leaders here in 1940. Baird is reported to be the Pew choice for mayor. Incidentally, Acting Mayor Bernard Samuel was not invited. Also among the missing was Republican City Chairman David W. Harris.

Mr. President, I ask that this certified report from South Dakota be included in my remarks, as well as a list of the contributions to the Republican campaign fund in 1942.

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NOTE.—The figures on the South Dakota campaign contributions were taken from the office of the Secretary of State of South Dakota filed there by Walter H. Burke, of Pierre, treasurer of the Republican State committee. The first public notice of these figures was given out in the little paper called South Dakota Today, a Democratic monthly published by the Democratic State committee at Mitchell; the editor is E. H. Bremer, who was secretary to Senator Berry when Berry was Governor. Former Governor Berry lives at Bellevedere.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GUFFEY. I yield.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. I have been very greatly interested in the so-called disclosures of the junior Senator from the great State of Pennsylvania. We in South Dakota were very happy, I will say to the Senator, to have friends in his wonderful State who were able to assist us in the campaign for the preservation of the American Government. I am not so much concerned with the amount of money which friends in Pennsylvania contributed to the Republican Party in South Dakota, but we are tremendously inspired that we have a government in this country which permits individual Americans to accumulate and make enough money so that they can give this sort of contribution to their friends throughout the country, because we do not have anyone in our party who has such a distinguished signature that we can sell autographed campaign books for $250 apiece to deserving Democrats.

Mr. GUFFEY. I should like to ask the Senator from South Dakota if he will inform me, through the treasurer of the State committee, at an early date, what happened to the $17,000 carried over at the end of the 1940 campaign. Was that expended in his behalf in the election of 1942? In the expense account of the Senator from South Dakota, as filed for 1942, it appears he received the total sum of $4,000, including $1,000 from Mabel Pew Perim and $1,000 from J. N. Pew, Jr. He expended $3,187.29, leaving a balance to his account of $812.71. I presume he is saving that for the election 6 years from now. I should like to know about the $17,000, what happened to it, who kept it, and when it was expended?

I cannot guarantee these reports. They were filed by the Republican State treasurer and certified to by the secretary of the Commonwealth, and countersigned by the treasurer of the State.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Mr. President, I am glad to answer the question of the Senator from Pennsylvania, but I want to call attention at this time to the fact that he has not disclosed the names of the contributors to the Democratic campaign fund in South Dakota for either of those years, or how much money they had. We have not a Federal Treasury to carry on our campaigns in that section. We have to raise the money from successful Pennsylvanians.

Mr. GUFFEY. I will say to the Senator from South Dakota that the same information is available to him in South Dakota with respect to Democratic campaign contributions and expenses, which was available to me with respect to the Republican campaign contributions and expenses. I am sure the Senator will find that there was carried over no balance of $17,000. I doubt if the Senator's opponent in that campaign had a total contribution of $17,000 to run his whole campaign.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. I do not know what contributions were made to him.

Mr. GUFFEY. That is something which is available to the Senator. He might obtain that information, and submit it for "the gayety of nations."

Mr. BUSHFIELD. But I notice that my opponent has been given a New Deal job in Omaha since I defeated him.

Mr. GUFFEY. Several Republicans, when defeated, were given jobs by their party. Mr. Hughes was made Secretary of State, and later on was appointed to the Supreme Court. Other defeated Republicans were given places of importance by Republican administrations. We can go clear back to Blaine for example, and find numerous examples from then onward. Some day I will give the Senator from South Dakota a list of deserving and worthy and competent "lame duck" Republicans who were rewarded.

I think a man who has served 4, 6, 8, or 10 years in the service of the Government particularly if he has been an elected official is much better qualified for a governmental position than a man who has never served his State or Nation. I have no objection to recognizing any one who is defeated. I was very sorry indeed to see Members of the Senate on the other side of the aisle, Members of the Republican Party, raise objections to some of their defeated opponents when their nominations came before the Senate for confirmation. I have no doubt the Senator from South Dakota will be like the other eight members of Leon Henderson's "electees" and will vote for the adoption of the conference report. All of the Henderson "electees," all nine of them on the Republican side, can thank Leon Henderson for their election; they owe it to no one else, plus the money sent to the Senator's State from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. If the Senator from Pennsylvania will stick around the Senate a little while he will discover how I shall vote on the conference report.

Mr. GUFFEY. I shall be here for the yea and nay vote.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. I am sure the Senator from Pennsylvania will also be glad to know how much money members of the Mellon family gave to the Pennsylvania Democratic campaign fund.

Mr. GUFFEY. Members of the Mellon family have never contributed to any of my campaigns. I have no personal association or political association with any member of the Mellon family, have not had in my long business career or in my life in Pittsburgh. Mr. Mellon answered that himself one time when I was accused of that very thing by the then Governor Gifford Pinchot, of Pennsylvania. I am glad the Senator from North Dakota brought it out here today. It gives me a chance to answer it again. I wish to say that if the conference report comes to a vote I shall vote as the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] has said he will vote, and if it is adopted I hope the President of the United States will veto the bill.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, in this discussion the fact was brought out by the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania that four or five thousand dollars was sent to North Dakota during the time that I was a candidate for office in North Dakota. I wish to tell the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania what became of that money and who received it. Out there in North Dakota we have a political gang made up of Democrats and Republicans, and I do not know which are the worst.

Mr. GUFFEY. Is the Senator speaking of South Dakota or North Dakota?

Mr. LANGER. I am speaking of North Dakota.

Mr. GUFFEY. I did not mention North Dakota. It did not come into this discussion at all. I never mentioned North Dakota. I spoke of South Dakota. If I did say North Dakota, it was a slip of the tongue. We had the evidence with respect to the corruption in North Dakota when the Senator's case was before the Privileges and Elections Committee and when the question of seating the Senator came up in the Senate. All the evidence with respect to that case has been received here, and I would not be surprised if today some Senators who voted in favor of seating the Senator would, if they had the opportunity, reconsider the vote they cast to seat him.

Mr. LANGER. If the Senator will remain in the Senate Chamber for 10 minutes, he will hear something. I have sent for some checks which I wish to show to the Senator and other Senators. I have received them, and I will show them to Senators now. I will show the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania, who talks about graft and corruption, who finances the campaigns for Democrats in North Dakota. I am now speaking of the year 1936. I have here a check made payable to Charles J. Vogel, treasurer, in the sum of $10. I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that Vogel was treasurer of the Democratic State party. The check is signed by Cleo Flugga, a poor postmaster, receiving about $100 a month.

Mr. GUFFEY. What is there illegal about a postmaster making a voluntary contribution?

Mr. LANGER. I will show the Senator.

Mr. GUFFEY. If the Senator can prove to me that that man was solicited, very well. Go ahead and prove it. Has the Senator a letter which shows that the man was solicited?

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I am making this speech.

Mr. GUFFEY. It is no violation of law to make a contribution.

Mr. LANGER. I do not yield to the Senator, Mr. President. I have the floor.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STEWART in the chair). The Senator will state it.

Mr. LUCAS. Senators engaged in a debate should conduct themselves in accordance with the rules of the Senate. I make the point of order against what is now going on. I think Senators should be at least 20 feet apart when they are engaged in such debate as this. [Laughter.]

Mr. GUFFEY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LANGER. I have no objection, Mr. President, to being 20 feet away from the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rules of the Senate require that Senators address the Chair if they wish to interrupt a speaker, or to ask questions. The Chair does not know whether the rules of the Senate can be interpreted to apply to the matter of the distance that Senators should be apart from each other when engaged in debate, but the rules of the Senate require that Senators address the Chair when desiring to interrupt a speaker.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I will show where the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] and his crowd got about $5,000,000.

Mind you, this check is dated July 1, on the first of the month; July 1, 1936, not the 10th or any other date. I will show the check to anyone who cares to see it, and the endorsement. It is an original check, not a photostatic copy, and is made payable to Charles J. Vogel, who is now United States district judge.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LANGER. I will not yield. I have another check, dated July 17, 1936, to S. J. Nagel, county chairman of the Democratic Party, La Moure County, N. Dak., $10, from that same poor postmaster, Cleo Flugga.

I will show Senators another check, dated the 31st of July 1936, payable to Charles J. Vogel, State treasurer, Democratic Party, for $5, signed by Cleo Flugga. I show Senators another check dated August 31 of that same year, payable to Charles J. Vogel, for $5, signed by Cleo Flugga.

Here is one dated October 1, 1936, payable to Charles J. Vogel, for $5, signed by Cleo Flugga.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I will not yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota refuses to yield.

Mr. LANGER. Here is one made in 1937, payable to S. J. Vogel, signed by the same poor postmaster, in Marion, N. Dak., a town of about 200 population. I will show a little later how poor this man was.

Here is another check dated January 1, 1938, payable to S. J. Nagel, county chairman of the Democratic Party, of La Moure County, for $10. All these checks are cashed in the banks, and I will gladly make them available to the distinguished Senator from Pennsylnia, or to any other Senator.

Now, Mr. President, along came the Jackson Day dinner. The party officials were not satisfied with getting $10 a month from this poor postmaster. They said, "We want $10 more for the Jackson Day dinner." He said, "I cannot afford it; I do not have the money. I can pay $5 now." So they said, "Well, give us a post-dated check for the other $5."

So we find that on January 15, 1938, this check for $5 was made payable to the Jackson Day Dinner Committee. Then the post-dated check was made out on February 15, for $5 more. It says, "Pay to the order of the treasurer of the Democratic National Committee," and it is endorsed by the Democratic National Committee—$5 taken from a poor, poor, little postmaster in North Dakota; and they said to him, "Either you pay, or we will get your job"—as I will prove in just a few minutes.

Then, on March 1 the check I now hold in my hand was made payable directly to the Democratic State Committee; and on the back of it will be found the endorsement of the Democratic State Committee of the State of North Dakota. Then, on April 15, the Members of the Senate will notice that the money was collected on either the 1st or the 15th of each month. Here and now before the Senate, I will tell the man who talks about any crookedness where this political money came from. I am glad he brought up the matter.

The check I now hold in my hand is made payable directly to the Democratic National Committee, and is endorsed by the Democratic National Committee. It says, "Pay to the order of the Bank of Manhattan and Trust Co., New York City"—$5 from that poor fellow. On May 2, another check was made out to Mr. Vogel, State treasurer of the Democratic Party, for $10; and on June 1, 1938, another check for $5 was made payable to Charles J. Vogel, treasurer, and was endorsed by him; and on July 1, another check was made payable to the Democratic State committee. The check is dated July 1, 1938, and is made payable to the director of the Democratic State committee. That check is for $5 more.

On August 1, 1938, another check was made out to Sam Nagel, chairman of the Democratic County Committee of La Moure County, N. Dak.; and on September 1, 1938, a check was made payable to Carl Willkie, assistant treasurer of the Democratic Committee of La Moure County, N. Dak.; and on the check is Mr. Willkie's endorsement.

Then, by November 3, on election day, this poor fellow got so tired and so confused that he did not know whether to make the checks payable to the Democratic National Committee or to the Democratic Party or to the Democratic State committee or to Mr. Nagel or to Vogel or to Mr. Willkie; so he simply made out the check to "La Moure County Democrat." It was endorsed by the First National Bank & Trust Co. of Minneapolis, Minn., and was cashed by the Security National Bank of Edgeley, N. Dak.

What happened to that postmaster? Well, he kept on paying until he felt he could not pay any more. So, one day, the great party about which the distinguished junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] is talking fired him; they appointed a man by the name of Anderson. So Mr. Flugga wrote me about it. I stood upon this floor and showed these checks at the very time when the two distinguished Senators from Wisconsin—both of them, both the senior Senator and the junior Senator—were fighting for a man named Burkhart, who was head of the American Legion down there, and who was being fired as postmaster.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I will not yield; I am sorry.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator was quite willing to yield a year or two ago.

Mr. LANGER. I am sorry.

Mr. President, at that time I got these checks, and I demanded an investigation. I submitted a resolution calling for an investigation. At that time I showed that we had gone to the Post Office Department and had estimated that if everyone in the United States contributed on the same basis as that on which Mr. Flugga contributed, the amount taken in by the Democratic organization was approximately $5,700,000 a year.

Mind you, Mr. President, I did my best to obtain that investigation. The resolution went to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. Up to the present time we have not been able to have that investigation made.

So, Mr. President, when I made that demand Mr. Flugga stayed in office until after the election. Then, about 6 weeks ago, the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] and myself each received a notice from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads saying that Mr. Anderson had been fired in place of Mr. Flugga; and up to the present time I have been able to keep Mr. Flugga in.

Mind you, they have had notice of these checks for over a year. If any Senator on the other side of the Chamber did not believe the checks were accurate and honest, did not believe that this man had actually contributed the money, all he would have had to do would have been to join me in a demand before that Senate committee for an investigation.

So, Mr. President, in view of the fact that the distinguished junior Senator from Pennsylvania has seen fit today to charge me with misdemeanors and crimes, I want to tell the Senate that I have more charity in my heart than he has. I am not going to charge him with being a crook; I am not going to charge him with not paying his income tax; I am not going to charge him with not doing a good job and an honest job when he was custodian of alien property for the State of Pennsylvania. I am not going to charge him with any of those things at all. I am simply going to say to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] that so far as my record is concerned I will match it against the record of any other Senator on this floor—and I include in that statement the Senator from Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I have been arrested or sued 15 times—15 times, I say to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania. That is a considerable number of times. In every single case, without exception, I demanded a jury of my peers to hear the evidence. I never sneaked into the Bureau of Internal Revenue and paid $436,000 in my life. I demanded a jury trial. Mr. President, a jury of 12 men heard all the evidence. The constitution of North Dakota provided for the selection of a jury to hear the evidence in the State case in which I was sued. The jury looked at the witnesses; the jury heard their sworn testimony. In every case the jury brought in a verdict of not guilty, except once; and before I conclude, I shall discuss that one case in detail with the distinguished junior Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. President, why was I sued and arrested so often? If the Senator from Pennsylvania is interested, let me point out that the first case was when I was a boy 23 years of age. I sued the Standard Oil Co. of Indiana, the Occidental Elevator Co.'s, the big lumber companies, and the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. I sued them for $1,250,000. I was a rather young fellow. I sued them in the county court. The case was tried before Judge Nuessle who is now on the supreme bench. He decided in favor of the elevator companies, but in my favor in the oil company case, the lumber company case, and the railroad company case.

Who was the lawyer on the other side? It was a man named Andrew Miller. Some years after the people had given him a thorough drubbing in a campaign for United States Senator he was appointed, on the recommendation of Harry M. Daugherty, to be United States Federal judge.

I appealed to the Supreme Court in the elevator company case and he appealed in the other three cases; and the supreme court of that State, in volume 32 of the North Dakota Reports—if the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania is interested—the court held that the railroad company, the Standard Oil Co., and the lumber company had to pay $1,250,000 in cash. They paid it.

Shortly after that I became attorney general of the State. In the meantime I had been sued two or three other times. As soon as a man fights a railroad or any of the big boys, they commence to make trouble for him almost immediately. They got one of the railroad lawyers to bring suit charging me with forgery. I demanded a prompt hearing and trial and was acquitted.

I was elected attorney general of the State a short time after that. Who, I ask the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania, was the first person I sued as attorney general of North Dakota? It was the great political boss, Alexander McKenzie, who sent two Democratic Senators to Washington.

I have before me a book written by Judge Wickersham, of Alaska, giving the record of McKenzie, who played with the Democratic Party. It was the same McKenzie who led the fight in North Dakota against Senator Bob La Follette, Sr., and against Hiram Johnson—the same old Alec McKenzie. I have in my hand a book written by Judge Wickersham, who had been appointed by Theodore Roosevelt to be the first judge in Alaska. This shows what kind of a man McKenzie was. It shows that before he went out there he found that there were quite a number of poor Swedes who were not citizens of this country but who had taken out their first papers. He conceived the idea of coming to Washington and having a law passed which would make it impossible for those Swedes to hold mining claims around Nome.

Mr. McKenzie succeeded in getting the kind of Federal judge he wanted appointed—a man by the name of Noyes, from Minneapolis. Then he went to the great State of Montana and got a United States prosecuting attorney. He then came to North Dakota and got a man named Stevens, a United States Commissioner. He loaded all of those precious gentlemen into a boat and started for Alaska.

He arrived in Alaska on the 21st day of July 1900. At first the judge did not even get off the boat. Mr. McKenzie got off and went to a law firm which was bringing some of the lawsuits to throw out the poor Swedes, and said, "If you will secretly take the United States district attorney into partnership with you, and give him a fourth of your fees, I will see that you win your cases." They agreed to it, as the sworn testimony shows. I have it here. I am sorry the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania has left the Chamber. I hope he will return soon.

Mr. McKenzie was not satisfied with that. He said, "I want to cut myself in for one-fourth of what you get as attorneys' fees in this firm." The sworn testimony showed that that was agreed to. Before McKenzie left the United States he had gone to the great State of Arizona and there organized a big mining company with $15,000,000 capital. So he had $15,000,000 in stock—and the record shows that he kept the greater part of it himself. He took the $15,000,000 in stock and proceeded to do business. In the dark of the night on the 22d day of July, 1 day after McKenzie got to Alaska, the judge, a tool of his, signed an order throwing out every single one of the poor Swedes who had only taken out their first papers. They were thrown out of their mines, and Mr. McKenzie was put in as receiver.

Some of those mines paid as much as $15,000 a day in gold. Mr. McKenzie apparently thought that he had the mines forever; and very likely he would have had them if it had not been for one man, a man by the name of Charles K. Lane, a fighter from California. Mr. Lane had had some lawyers imported from California; and when those lawyers appeared before Judge Noyes and asked him to issue a restraining order to keep Mr. McKenzie from acting as receiver the judge would not even talk with them.

One week went by; 2 weeks went by; and those lawyers went to San Francisco. There the circuit court of appeals, which had jurisdiction, issued an order and sent a United States marshal to Alaska to enforce it. When the United States marshal got to Alaska McKenzie refused to recognize him at all. When he demanded certain documents which McKenzie had in his safe-deposit box in the bank, McKenzie got into a fist fight with the United States marshal and refused to obey the court order. The result was that the circuit court of appeals in San Francisco cited Mr. McKenzie for contempt of court. He was tried before the court, found guilty, and sentenced to 1 year in jail.

That did not seem to bother Mr. McKenzie very much. Of course he went to jail, but he had some very strong, influential friends—some of them Democrats—in the United States Senate. They promptly went to William McKinley, who was then President of the United States. President McKinley went across the country to San Francisco, and there issued a pardon to Mr. McKenzie on the ground that Mr. McKenzie's health was very bad and that he might die within a very short time.

Mr. McKenzie came right back to North Dakota and began to take charge of the Republican and Democratic Parties of the State of North Dakota. He finagled around, without putting up any money, and got control of the Bismarck Water Co.

He wanted to make all the money he could possibly make, and he proceeded to give the people of Bismarck the rottenest kind of water. So it was not long before a typhoid epidemic arose. About that time, as I have said, I became attorney general, and I promptly brought suit against this great Democratic political boss, this man who had sent two Democratic Senators to Washington while he professed to be a Republican, this man who had been a receiver for the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. He resisted the suit, and the evidence will show that we brought in to Bismarck from Washington, D. C., from the office of Surgeon General Blue, who at that time was the Surgeon General of the United States, two sanitary engineers. These men came to North Dakota and they made a sworn report, to which they testified in court that that water furnished by this Democratic-Republican boss was not fit to be bathed in, much less to drink. Of course, when the testimony came before Judge Nuessle he promptly issued an order requiring them to build a filtration plant so the people in Bismarck, N. Dak., could have decent drinking water.

But, Mr. President, the people in Bismarck, N. Dak., are a very smart and intelligent people. They did not propose that a man who had been siphoning out typhoid germs should keep control of that plant if they could help it. So they held a meeting in which they said they wanted a municipal water plant in the city of Bismarck. As a result of the meeting an election was held. On one side was Alec McKenzie and Andrew Miller, whom he afterward made Federal judge. They were on one side of that fight and on the other side were the decent citizens of the city of Bismarck, N. Dak. We defeated them in that election 2 to 1, which gave us the power to build our own municipal water plant. The committee then went to Mr. McKenzie and the other men and said, "We would like to buy your plant. What will you take for it?" They said, "We want $860,000."

Practically all of that was water. Andrew Miller had an interest in it which, as I understand, he received in attorney's fees. C. B. Little, head of the First National Bank, had a $30,000 interest in it. The rest was all owned by Mr. McKenzie, and originally the plant was acquired for practically nothing by buying up some bonds in Baltimore, Md. He bought them for almost nothing. When they demanded $860,000 the Bismarck citizens went to Minneapolis and got in touch with some good engineers, who said that they could build that plant for $206,000, and possibly less. In any event we finally paid $206,000 and the citizens of Bismarck secured the water plant, and they still have it. As a matter of fact, it has been very, very successful.

Mr. President, I was frankly delighted in hearing the remark which the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] made about my record, because only a few days ago the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania voted for the confirmation of a man by the name of Chandler to be a Federal judge of the western district of Oklahoma. Senators can judge how much interest the Senator from Pennsylvania had in the type of man he wanted to be appointed to a Federal judgeship when it will be remembered that when the confirmation was being considered by the Senate I rose on the floor of the Senate and protested, and every Republican except one voted against the confirmation of Stephen Chandler to be Federal judge for the western district of Oklahoma.

Mr. President, I had intended never again mentioning Mr. Chandler's name. We voted upon his confirmation, and, so far as I was concerned, the matter was forgotten. However, in view of the fact that the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania has charge of the next senatorial campaign, I cannot do more than honestly state in further detail why every Republican Member of the Senate except one voted against Stephen A. Chandler for the Federal judgeship for the western district of Oklahoma.

Mr. President, when the appointment of Mr. Chandler originally was made I was not even a Member of the United States Senate. Seven months before the law creating that judgeship was signed by President Roosevelt, the F. B. I. had already been asked to make an investigation of Mr. Chandler. They made an investigation. Where do Senators suppose they first investigated? In Wall Street. The record shows they went to Wall Street and there they interviewed a man by the name of C. F. Urschel, the president of the Slick-Urschel Oil Co., of Oklahoma City. There is a letter in the file in Mr. Chandler's behalf from Mr. Urschel. In order to get a lot of good company around a bad man they went to a Methodist minister by the name of Dr. Farny Hutchinson. This Methodist minister sent out letters, one of them to Francis J. Kelley, the Catholic bishop of Oklahoma City and Tulsa. In that letter this Methodist minister stated that the law creating the position had already been passed, and that they were advocating the appointment of Mr. Chandler to the position. As a matter of fact, it was 7 months later before that job was ever created. So they went from man to man in Oklahoma City getting endorsements of Steve Chandler. But the record shows that Frank Murphy evidently refused to recommend him. Mr. Murphy was then attorney general. The record shows that Mat Maguire also did not recommend him. The record shows that Bob Jackson, now Justice of the Supreme Court, refused to have much of anything to do with the appointment. This judgeship was created in 1940. Nineteen hundred and forty and nineteen hundred and forty-one went by, and finally, in the latter part of 1942, the appointment of Stephen Chandler came before the Senate. A subcommittee was appointed, and at first it recommended favorably the confirmation of the appointment. However, later there was an investigation, at my request. That investigation showed—what? It showed that this man, for whose confirmation the distinguished junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] voted, one of the men whom he says was so deserving awhile ago when he talked with the distinguished Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD]—it showed that this man Chandler one night was in his law office with three other men. They left about 10 o'clock——

Mr. President, I said a few moments ago that I had intended never again to allude to this affair, and I would not have done so had it not been for what the junior Senator from Pennsylvania said. The record shows that 15 minutes after Chandler left his law office on the 7th day of January 1936, he came back, and that when he went into his office he locked the door. He had there a young girl stenographer who had stayed working on an emergency brief. He knew she was there, if some of the testimony in the record is to be believed. Mr. Chandler came in and locked the door. He took that little girl, 19 years of age, a girl without a father, a girl, mind you, who, as the very fullest investigation shows, was a splendid young girl, a girl who has no police record, a girl who goes to church regularly, a young lady who, even to this day, has a fine job, a girl about whom there is not even the remotest gossip. If a part of the record is to be believed, it shows that Mr. Chandler made an indecent proposal to her; that when she rejected him, he threw her on a couch, and when she resisted him he struck her; that finally, when she got up, after kicking him, he knocked her down; that when she got up the second time and wrestled with him again, he struck her again, and that the fight was so bitter and so intense that the telephone was torn from the wall of the office. When she got up he knocked her down again. When she finally got out of that room, she went home to her mother. She was there with her mother when, early the next morning, at half past 7, the mother called up Mr. Chandler's office, and in a few minutes after half past 7 in the morning Mr. Chandler's partner went over there—to do what? He was not there asking, as I did in my cases, to have that case tried before a jury of 12 men, Mr. President. The last place Mr. Chandler, the friend of the Senator from Pennsylvania, wanted to be was in a courtroom. He did not want to face a jury; he did not want to have any witnesses paraded there; he did not want any investigation to show what had taken place. He testified before the Senate Judiciary Committee that he was not drunk that night; he testified that he had not had a single drink; he testified that he knew what he was doing every minute of the time; but, Mr. President, Senator GUFFEY'S friend paid the sum of $3,000 to that girl. He made a settlement with her almost immediately and took a receipt in full.

Mr. President, what do you suppose was the defense of this man Chandler, Senator GUFFEY'S friend, whom he helped to put on the highest court in the State of Oklahoma? His defense was that this girl's lawyer was a crook and a scoundrel and a dope fiend, but when the investigation was made by the F. B. I., and by others, the record shows that that lawyer, Tim McCaffrey, up to at least 1936 was one of the best and most brilliant lawyers in the State of Oklahoma. It was not until Tim McCaffrey dared to take a case against the millionaire oil men and Chandler, and his partners, that he was called a crook. From the moment Tim McCaffrey took that lawsuit he became a marked man in Oklahoma. But the investigation discloses that he is honorable; that his word can be believed in a lawsuit, and the Assistant United States Attorney, John Breck, whom I never met and have never seen, testified that he was a good, honest lawyer, and that he would take his word for anything in a lawsuit. Yet with that record, and with the further record in the case of the girl he had assaulted, claiming that there was a rumor that Mr. Chandler had assaulted another girl before he assaulted her—and if he did God only knows how much he paid that girl—yet with that record the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] says that they only reward deserving Democrats. That is the reason, I assume the chief reason, why this man Chandler is now going to sit as a Federal judge in the western district of Oklahoma. When cases come before him for violating the Mann Act, is this expert going to sit in judgment? There are Indians in Oklahoma, thousands of them, and, as everyone knows, some of them are wards of the Government. There are also many Indians in other States. When an Indian girl is raped, the case against the culprit will be tried in a Federal court, presumably before Stephen Chandler, GUFFEY's friend and supporter.

As I said a few moments ago, Mr. President, I had not intended to revert to this Chandler matter, but, as will be recalled, I was the only Senator who submitted a minority report at first, although later some other Senators joined me. One day upon the Senate floor I was told that if I would make this speech against Mr. Chandler, the distinguished senior Senator from Oklahoma would read my record upon this floor, and that he would apologize to the people of Oklahoma and North Dakota and of the United States and to the Senate itself for ever having voted to seat me. In view of the fact that that invitation and that threat was made, of course, I made the speech, and I thought that I handled the matter in a very diplomatic, gentlemanly, and dignified way.

I never met Mr. Chandler until he was appointed judge. I have no animus toward him. I know only two or three or four people in Oklahoma, and I hold no animus against anyone in Oklahoma, and I did not care who got the position. But in view of what the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania said this morning, I want the Senate to have all the record, I want Senators to know everything about me. I would feel bad, indeed, if any other Senator on this floor felt the way the distinguished junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] apparently feels about me.

I have told about being tried for forgery and being acquitted. The next time I was arrested was in Minot, N. Dak. Minot, as the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] so well said during the hearings, 20 years ago was one of the toughest towns in North Dakota. It was so tough that my predecessor as attorney general did not dare go in there and clean up the town. Mr. Murphy, who was one of my attorneys here during the hearings, was the assistant to the attorney general, and Mr. Murphy is authority for the statement I have just made. If a man went to the town of Minot to clean up the town, he took his life in his hands, and no one knew it better than my predecessor. So I went to Minot in disguise. I investigated around there 3 weeks.

Mr. President, I am so glad to see the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania in the Chamber again. I know what I shall tell him will help him.

I was in Minot in disguise, and I found that the town was one large mess of vice. I had there with me helping me a Methodist minister, Rev. F. L. Watkins, the head of the State Enforcement League, and his deputy, Mr. A. W. Finwall. We rented three houses. We employed 40 Burns men, and then, because we knew of the great danger we were in, we employed 10 Thiel detective agents to watch the 40 Burns men, so we had 50 detectives there.

At the end of 3 weeks I found that there were 156 men and women to arrest. Honky-tonks, sporting houses, gambling places, places where people were smoking opium, were running wide open. The night before the raid, on the 7th of May 1917, I had a fake raid. I wanted to ascertain just how the word was flashed from one vice resort to another. We had a fake raid, and as soon as we entered one place every other place in town was closed. That made it necessary for me to take charge of the telephone company, before we could have the raid the succeeding night. So the next night, with the 50 detectives, with about 100 other citizens, whom I gathered in the office of R. A. Nestos, later Governor of North Dakota, and sworn in, I myself, with three men to help, took possession first of the telephone exchange. I put those men in charge, and they kept possession 54 minutes.

We arrested 156 people. The jails in the town of Minot were not big enough to hold them. We took the big fellows as we took the little one. We arrested the head of the Soo Railroad Co., a millionaire, for being party to shipping in 19 barrels of beer marked as "Malt." Out of the 156 arrested, we convicted 153, or they pleaded guilty.

Among others we arrested was the representative of the great institution in St. Paul, Minn., known as the Schmidt Brewing Co., which, I am informed and believe, indirectly, through some of its officers, for the last 15 years at least, has contributed to the party of the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY]. They had shipped in 19 barrels of beer, and marked it "malt."

They came into court and plead guilty, and what do Senators suppose Judge Amidon thought? He thought they should pay a fine of $9,700. That is what he thought, and he fined them $9,700 and some odd dollars, and they paid it.

The next day those fellows in Minot, 25 years ago, got out a warrant for me, to arrest me. They got out two warrants, as a matter of fact. They proceeded to serve them on me. They came down to Bismarck, N. Dak., and Lynn J. Frazier, who was Senator from North Dakota for 18 years, was at that time Governor. Governor Frazier promptly called out the militia to protect me. Senator Frazier—and you Senators all know what a fine, square official he was—issued a notice that if anyone, whether he was a public official or not, came within 20 feet of me, the National Guard was instructed to shoot to kill. So for weeks, morning, noon, and all night, members of the National Guard never left me.

Then one day I went over to Minot. I went there when no one was expecting me, and put up $2,000 bail for my first trial and $2,000 bail for my second trial. When the hearing came on, there were thousands of people there, and the prosecution had five of the best lawyers in North Dakota to prosecute me—five of them. When they got all through, I was acquitted on the first charge. Then they tried me on the second charge, and I was again acquitted. Again I suggest to the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], and I feel that he will agree with me, that whenever a man is accused of any crime, the thing to do is not to sneak into an internal revenue office or anywhere else and settle, but the thing to do is to face a jury of his peers, and show that he is honest.

So we had a second trial, and I was acquitted in that one. To show what the people of North Dakota thought about those trials and about those arrests, and about all the things which appeared in the newspapers, in the churches of nearly all the denominations resolutions were passed—and I have them in my office, if any Senator desires to see them—praising me for the raid, and repudiating the things which were said about me by some of the newspapers and by some individuals.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union did me the great honor, for which I have been everlastingly proud, and I am proud of it today, of electing me an honorary member of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the State of North Dakota. I do not know of any honor I treasure more, because as I have gone along in the years, when things sometimes have looked very, very dark for me, those women, over that period of 25 years, have been loyal friends of mine, and did not do what some other organizations did who, when I tendered my resignation to them, promptly accepted it.

As I have said, as attorney general I must have been a good one, because even the Fargo Forum, which was so anxious to have me thrown out of the Senate a while ago, said then that I would make a good Governor of North Dakota, and supported me one time without my requesting it to do so. At any rate I was elected attorney general. Of course some of the trials—and I was acquitted in every one of them—did not amount to much, but I apparently got along quite well until I was elected Governor of North Dakota in 1932. That election for Governor was a great time in my State. When I came to take office I found that the friends out there of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] these psuedo-Republicans and psuedo-Democrats, who as a matter of fact are neither or both, whichever suits their purpose, and are always against the common people—I found first of all that they were building a new capitol. They had not begun to build it yet, they had just signed the contract, and before a single shovelful of dirt was turned had paid the sum of $149,000 for architectural fees.

When I exposed that situation, this newspaper out there, which is a great friend of the Senator from Pennsylvania and which thinks as he thinks, said that I was crazy, and wrote an editorial entitled "LANGER Gone Berserk." That editorial was written in the month of October 1932. In the month of January 1933, when at my request an investigation was had before the legislature, it was discovered that those who were building the capitol had paid $149,000 to the architects.

Let us see what happened to the men who were building the capitol in Bismarck. Let me explain the difference between the way I treated them and the way the friends of the Senator from Pennsylvania treated them. They were building the capitol, and one day I discovered that there was some graft on the part of three men building it. We had a hearing before the legislature concerning it. I suspended those three men, and a few days later all three of them resigned. I had one of them arrested for taking a trip to New Orleans and filling in not only duplicate slips but triplicate slips, thus charging triple expenses for one trip. He came into court and pleaded guilty to that charge.

Mr. President, the man in charge of the building of the capitol was named Frank S. Hackett—Col. Frank Hackett—and I want the Senator from Pennsylvania to remember that name well. I discovered at the capitol before the contract was entered into that the old commission had gone to the American Federation of Labor and entered into a contract by the terms of which the men who belonged to the plasterers' union or the electricians' union or any other union were to receive a dollar or a dollar and a quarter an hour, but the unskilled laborers were not taken care of at all.

One morning when I went to the temporary office of the Governor I discovered 78 men standing around a little fire in a huddle. This was on a cold, cold drizzly day. That was about 7 o'clock in the morning. I called them into my office and asked them why so many of them were standing there freezing. They then told me for the first time that some of them had gotten up at 3 o'clock in the morning, had gone over there looking for work, from the company which had the contract, the Landorf-Bicknell Co., the millionaire concern in Chicago, and the only work they received was an hour at a time, and they were paid 30 cents an hour. One man, Ted Moen, of Bismarck, N. Dak., showed me his check—and he had reported for work every day for a week. This man with 5 little children received for his week's work the sum of 30 cents. I bought that check from him and I have that check in my office now, and will show it to any Senator who cares to see it. That man received 30 cents for 1 week's work. Those were the days of the depression, Mr. President.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a few minutes?

Mr. LANGER. I cannot yield, Mr. President. If I were going to yield to anyone I would yield tc the Senator from North Carolina, but I cannot.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota declines to yield.

Mr. LANGER. When I saw that check for 30 cents I took those 78 men into my office and drew up an agreement with them. That agreement provided that none of them would work upor the capitol building, and they would ask their friends not to work on it, and organized a strike. We said we would go to work just as soon as they would receive decent pay, just as soon as they would have an 8-hour day, so that if a citizen of North Dakota got up at 3 o'clock in the morning and went to the capitol building to work he would know he would receive at least 8 hours of work at decent pay. So the work was tied up on the capitol building for 1 week, for 2 weeks.

Then they took advantage of a clause in the contract which provided that unless the company went ahead and finished the work, the State could take it over. Then it was that Mr. Frank S. Hackett showed up. Mr. Hackett proceeded to tell me that those unions were no good anyhow. Before we got through with Mr. Hackett, after Hackett sent down to Chicago and brought up a car full of scabs and strikebreakers, when those scabs and Chicago gangsters tried to work on the State capitol, I called out the militia, with sharpened bayonets, to chase them down the hill and to load them on the car again. When Mr. Hackett found that we were not going to stand for any foolishness on the part of those millionaire contractors, Mr. Hackett resigned. He resigned after the Lundorff-Bicknell Co. made a contract to pay those workers 50 cents an hour for 8 hour's work a day, and a dollar and a half an hour for overtime, and double pay for Sunday work. He resigned. Where do you suppose he went, Mr. President? Why, he came right down to Washington. Whom did he go to see? Why, his old friend and pal, Jesse Jones—Jesse Jones, of Houston, Tex. Mr. Hackett thought he would like to make some easy money; and where, oh, where, could money be made any easier than by dealing with Jesse Jones, the bosom pal of the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY]?

Well, they had to use strategy. So, first of all, they tried to get a huge appropriation through the Senate, to build a new R. F. C. building. I forget how many millions of dollars they asked for; but, as I remember, it was $13,000,000 or $14,000,000. It may have been more. But the Senate did not see fit to appropriate that sum of money or to appropriate any other sum of money for an R. F. C. building. So Frank Hackett went back to Mr. Jones. I do not know whether Jesse Jones talked to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania. The junior Senator from Pennsylvania seemingly is an expert on finance; he is an expert as a custodian of alien property. He proved that in Pennsylvania. He knows the business from A to Z; and it may be that he was advising Mr. Hackett. But I do not know that, and I do not claim to know.

However, strangely enough, Mr. Hackett made a deal with Jesse Jones to build an R. F. C. building in the city of Washington. I do not know what it cost. The records will show. I understand it cost nearly $20,000,000. Mr. Hackett got a partner, and they borrowed the $19,000,000 or $20,000,000 from Jesse Jones. They constructed the building and leased it to the Government. They leased it at a sum sufficient so that in 20 years the building would be paid for in full.

That is not all, Mr. President; the junior Senator from Pennsylvania's friends hired Mr. Hackett and his partner to be custodians of the building, to take charge of the running of it, to watch it so that it did not run away; and for that, I understand, they were paid the sum of $100,000 more. The records are available. I do not know who owns this building today. Col. Frank S. Hackett is dead. I know he did not get to own our State capitol. I watched that. But my understanding is that the R. F. C. building in the city of Washington is not owned by the Government but is owned by Mr. Hackett and his partner—or, rather, by Mr. Hackett's heirs.

So, Mr. President, I submit to you and to the Senate that the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] should not talk about honesty and should not cast aspersions upon the junior Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. President, I desire to call attention to the fact that at the hearings held before the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, I was not required to go upon the witness stand. Perhaps, like someone else I know, I could have sneaked in the back door of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, when charged with crime, and could have paid. I did not do that, although I understand that a certain gentleman who resides in Pennsylvania did.

Instead of doing that, Mr. President, I insisted that I be sworn on the witness stand before the Committee on Privileges and Elections; and for 5 days every one of the 17 members of the committee, if they desired to do so, could ask me any questions about my life they wanted to ask. Let me say, in passing, that they did.

Mr. President, that committee had good lawyers. It had former United States Senator E. R. Burke—the Mr. Burke who now is the head of the Appalachian-Northern Coal Operators who are fighting the union men—the same Ed Burke. He was just like McKenzie: When he was in the Senate, he was a Democrat and was a close pal of the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY]; but after he was defeated in his campaign for re-election to the Senate, he changed overnight into a Republican, and registered as a Republican. So, Mr. President, it does not make any difference whether a man is a Republican or Democrat; if he is against the common people, he is against them, anyhow.

So that is the man the opposition chose—all the railroads and the grain interests about which I am going to tell the Senate in just a few minutes. Those railroads and grain interests looked all over the world to find someone to aid in having me thrown out of the Senate; and they picked former United States Senator E. R. Burke, the man who now is fighting the union miners, the poor fellows with large families—so poor, in fact, that, as one of the daily newspapers said the other day, the operators certainly should give them more than they are getting.

Mr. President, those railroad interests and grain elevator interests wanted to give Mr. Burke some help. I had a reputation in North Dakota of winning all the lawsuits I got mixed up with; so some of the big boys in North Dakota said, "Maybe Mr. Burke is not quite smart enough to get this fellow. We are going to give him some help."

Over in the State of Pennsylvania, the great State of Pennsylvania, from which the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] comes, there had been a great lawyer by the name of James Beck, at one time Solicitor General of the United States. So Mr. Burke said, "Well, I suppose I could use a little help." So they got Col. E. R. McGuire, the former partner of Mr. Beck, to help.

So, Mr. President, when I sat upon the witness stand in the Committee on Privileges and Elections, in addition to having there the 17 Senators who were members of the committee, there were also ex-Senator Burke and Colonel McGuire. But Mr. President, some fellow in North Dakota said, "We think you don't realize what a smooth, slick article this man LANGER is. You ought to get some more help. We will get you some more help."

So they conferred with a man who had been against me for United States Senator, and he said, "I know a man in Tennessee who would fill the bill. He is just the man you want, because he has had more of these contests than any other lawyer in the United States. He himself once ran for Senator in Tennessee, and he contested the election of one of the Senators"—the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART]. So they sent for Mr. H. C. Lowrie.

Those three lawyers got together in an office downtown to figure out how they could throw me out of the United States Senate. You Senators know the story. The distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] was chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The committee sent two men to North Dakota to investigate the case thoroughly. In order to get good men they looked around, and got a man by the name of Smith, who was an expert utility man. In my fights in North Dakota I had not only taken on all the railroads and all the grain exchanges, but I had also taken on all the utilities. I had been instrumental in reducing the rate for electricity at Bismarck, N. Dak., from 9 cents a kilowatt-hour to 1 cent a kilowatt-hour, and they were still getting too much. It may seem, offhand, that reducing the rate from 9 cents a kilowatt-hour to 1 cent a kilowatt-hour would not be fair; but the record shows that North Dakota was eminently fair to those gentlemen.

I had been in office a few days in 1933 when I sent for three men—an expert electrical engineer by the name of Rausch, from the agricultural college at Fargo; an expert from the University of North Dakota by the name of Irvin Lavine, who is so good that the friends of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] have hired him to help Pennsylvania. The third man was a graduate of the University of North Dakota, a Norwegian by the name of John Iverson.

They came to Bismarck and appeared before the industrial commission, on which A. J. Gronna, son of a former United States Senator, sat. Mr. Gronna was attorney general. A man by the name of John Husby was secretary of agriculture, and I was Governor.

We called in the representatives of the utility company, which was a branch of the Insull empire in Chicago, and said to them, "We believe you are charging too much for electricity." They said, "Oh, no; we are charging only a very reasonable price." They were charging 7 cents for electricity for the twine plant at the penitentiary, where we manufactured, roughly, 12,000,000 pounds of twine each year. The Bank of North Dakota and other institutions were interested.

We said to the representatives of the utility company, "These three men are going to make an investigation. They will make a report under oath. They will give you a copy of their report. Then we want the utility company to come before the industrial commission with its engineers and show us if the rate which they fix is too low."

At the end of 3 weeks those three experts made their report. They said that the public-utility company could make money if we paid it three-quarters of a cent a kilowatt-hour. We furnished that report to the company and set a day for hearing.

When that day came, instead of coming in with their engineers to show that that price was not right, they came in with a couple of lawyers and said they were going to get injunctions or restraining orders to prevent us from carrying out our threat not to pay more than three-quarters of a cent a kilowatt-hour.

The result was that I got in touch with the Pillsbury Engineering Co. in Minneapolis, and we started to build our own light plant for the State of North Dakota. When we had spent about $10,000, one day in came the manager of the Insull company, and he said, "If you will give us a contract for 1 cent a kilowatt-hour we will be glad to get the contract." So we gave it to them on two conditions: One was that they sign a 10-year contract with the State of North Dakota. I felt that I might not be Governor long, and that it would be a good thing to have the utility company tied up under a 10-year contract. The other condition was that they pay the $10,000 of expense to which the taxpayers of our State had been put.

The result was that the utility company put up a $10,000 Liberty bond with the State treasurer of North Dakota, and signed an agreement whereby, for 10 years, the State of North Dakota would get its electricity at 1 cent a kilowatt hour. The only place I have found where electricity is any cheaper is Tacoma, Wash., the home of my distinguished colleague the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE]. I do not pretend to know one-one-hundredth of what my distinguished colleague knows about electric power. Aside from Tacoma, I think the State of North Dakota gets the cheapest electricity in the United States, and it should, because all around Bismarck we have mines, and there is no reason why those mines, lying right next door to our State capitol, should not furnish electricity at 1 cent a kilowatt-hour.

As I say, the utilities were also interested. So we had 17 Senators, Mr. Burke, Mr. McGuire, and Mr. Lowrie. They asked me any questions they wished to ask. I was on the witness stand, under oath, for 5 days. If anything I said was not true, they could have arrested me for perjury. I think even my worst political enemies will say that some of my political enemies in North Dakota were not at all hesitant about coming forward with every bit of evidence they could possibly think of.

There was one very amusing feature of the case. The newspapers of North Dakota and the politicians opposed to me said, "There is a man by the name of Jim Malloy. He was very close to Governor LANGER for 8 years. He was his private secretary. He was associated with him morning, noon, and night." Before the committee my opponents even introduced a photograph which I had given Malloy, which I had inscribed "your loyal friend." They brought out the fact that I had been godfather to his little child. The politicians said, "If anybody in the world knows about BILL LANGER it is Jim Malloy." So, after 8 years of close association, if I had been guilty of what the junior Senator from Pennsylvania insinuated today, Mr. Malloy would have been only too glad to tell about it. If there had been one crooked deal, showing that I had received a single penny of money wrongfully, Mr. Malloy would have told about it on the witness stand. Anyone can look over that record in vain to find one charge on the part of Mr. Malloy that I personally ever wrongfully received a single penny that he himself knew anything about.

On the contrary, coming back to the two men who came to North Dakota, one of whom was Mr. Smith, the utility expert, as soon as they arrived in North Dakota they were met by Mr. Malloy, and Mr. Malloy proceeded to take charge of the investigation in North Dakota.

I did not care whom they went to see in North Dakota. So they went from one place to another. They would go up to a fellow and say, "Do you know anything about BILL LANGER?" The fellow would say, "No; don't know anything about him, personally, but my washerwoman's cousin told her cousin that John Jones' aunt told him that BILL LANGER stole money sometime some place." And they would promptly hunt up the washerwoman and her cousin. Altogether they were out there 3 months. They came back with 4,181 pages of testimony on long, legal cap paper—4,181 pages. It took my lawyer and myself 1 week to read it.

Whom did they go to? They went to every crook to whom my political enemies in North Dakota could direct them. They then looked up the record of every single lawsuit I had ever tried in my life—10,181 lawsuits. The only trouble is that those fellows did not know BILL LANGER. They thought I would be foolish enough to throw my files away. Fortunately I have every file of every lawsuit that I ever tried in any court of any kind. I have them all. So these investigators went back 30 years. They went to the place where I was born. They went to the church which I attended, and after making an appointment with the clergyman of that church they did not care to ask him any questions.

They had 10,181 cases. They searched and they searched and they searched, and I challenge the distinguished junior Senator from Pennsylvania to find in them any indication of dishonesty. I will give him a list of all of them. I will turn all the files over to him for his examination. I say again I am willing to place my record against that of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I rise to a point of personal privilege.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LANGER. I shall not yield the floor for 1 single minute. He can reply all he cares to when I shall have concluded.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I want to see the remarks of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. LANGER. I am perfectly willing to give him all the time he wants to answer me after I am through.

I repeat that I am willing to compare my record with that of the distinguished junior Senator from Pennsylvania, or anyone else on this floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota refuse to yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. LANGER. I refuse to yield.

Mr. GUFFEY. Very well. I will renew my point later.

Mr. LANGER. Of course, we had this hearing, and of those 10,181 cases they took only 6. That is what those 2 investigators found, just 6 cases.

If I had thrown my files away—some of those cases were 20 years of age—I would have been helpless.

Take, for example, a case like the August H. Wruck case in Bottineau County, in which it was said that I had committed perjury in the filing of an answer in a civil case. Mr. President, what were the facts? A man named August H. Wruck came to my office and gave me $15 to put him through bankruptcy. He was so poor that that was all that he could spare, and still keep on living. He could not even pay the $50 fee to the Government. I took his $15 and gave him a receipt for it. I then wrote to the clerk of that county 200 miles away that I wanted a list of his judgments. I had to have a list of his chattel mortgages. I paid for those lists. The records were furnished me, and I completed the bankruptcy papers. I sent them to Judge Miller's clerk of the court, Mr. Montgomery. That man was an aged man, over 80 years of age, and he took the papers and laid them by because, he said, this man had signed them "Jacob H. Ruck." He received the papers in January, and the record in my files shows that I did not receive any word from him until April, when he wrote me a letter in which he said, "I cannot file these papers because under the new law and the rules adopted Wruck must sign his second name in full."

He said, "But, in my opinion, you can just sign them up by writing out his middle name in full."

I got those papers back in April. In the month of February Mr. Wruck, my client, made a settlement with the receiver of the closed bank. In the meantime I filed an answer saying that I was putting this man through bankruptcy.

Mr. President, what did these investigators find, and what did the evidence disclose? Why, it showed that after I received that letter from Mr. Montgomery I not only paid back that $15, but I returned $18. That was the testimony of Mr. Wruck. And yet, mind you, Mr. President, upon this floor of the Senate it took hours to bring out the fact that a man had paid me $15 and I returned to him $18. The man was thoroughly satisfied. He had not complained; of course not. Besides that, I made out the papers for nothing, and got nothing for the work which I had done, nor did I become recompensed for the cost of a certified copy of the chattel abstract or the list of judgments.

I now refer to the matter wherein the United States Government hired me years ago to defend four Indians for murder down in Sioux County. Mind you, Mr. President, the United States Government hired me in that case. I was in the employ of the United States Government. The United States Government officials said that Indians in that county had been railroaded from time to time immemorial. They said, "We want a lawyer to go down there and see that these Indians are not railroaded. They are charged with murder. Their rights have been taken away. They have been sold cattle at a high price when they received second-grade scrubs. They have sold Indians calves when, as a matter of fact, other calves were substituted and under cover of darkness the little sucking calves were run back under the fence to their mothers." They said, "We want a lawyer who for once will protect the rights of those poor Indians."

I was not hired until the day before the trial. At half past 2 in the afternoon I received a telephone call, and it was 65 miles from where I lived to the place of the trial, and the railroad ran only 30 of them. I did not even have time to go home and get my pajamas or my toothbrush. All I could do was run for the train because the trial was set for 9 o'clock the next morning. I had 65 miles to travel in the dead of the winter. I got down as far as Cannon Ball, N. Dak., which was as far as the train could go, and then I hired an automobile. I got out 4 miles into the country and got stuck in the snow. I could not get through. I went to a farmer's home and hired four horses and a sled to take me down to my destination. I got into Fort Yates about 2:30 or 3 o'clock in the morning. After I was hired over the telephone the deputy sheriff said, "When you get down here you can see your clients, whatever time it may be." I said, "I am not coming unless I can see them." He said, "You can see them to prepare your trial." When I went over there the sheriff was gone. The deputy sheriff said, "Oh, no, you cannot see your clients." I said, "Where is the key?" The Indians were in the jail. He said, "The sheriff has it." I said, "Where is the sheriff?" He said, "He is out in the country." "Well," I said, "If that is true, the little wooden building over there, the jail, is a firetrap, and there are four Indians in it. And I will move to have the sheriff reprimanded for leaving his prisoners there where in case of fire the Indians might be roasted to death." The deputy then said "The key is over there in the sheriff's office." I asked him to get it for me. He would not do so; and so, of course, I broke down the door. I did what any other lawyer would do in view of the United States Government's injunction telling me to go there and protect the interests of those four Indians. I broke down the door of the office and broke open the desk and took the key. I did not break into the jail. It was claimed at the hearing that I was a jail breaker; the newspapers said I was a jail breaker. All I did was to break into the sheriff's office and get the key. I went in the jail; but the deputy sheriff was there all the time and he had charge of those men. I went in there and unlocked the cells and talked to my clients until morning, and put them back in jail, and locked the cells, and put the key back in the desk, and then was ready for trial the next day. I might add in passing that all four of those Indians were innocent; not one was guilty of murder; they were all acquitted when the jury passed on the cases. Yet that was brought up upon the floor of the United States Senate 20 years after it happened; and word goes out today and we hear the junior Senator from Pennsylvania saying there is something wrong with my character because I dared to go in there and defend those four Indians.

Let me take up another case. A woman came in who said I did not get her a divorce. The facts of that case were that that woman had been married to a man named Oster, but one day she left her husband and started living with another fellow without getting a divorce from her husband, and then she went back to her first husband. Then she met another fellow, Petersen, and she liked him pretty well, but her husband, strangely enough, objected. She went out 4 miles from Hazleton, 3 miles west and 1 mile south, and took her two children along with her, but her husband had made up his mind to resume relations with her. So he went off and borrowed a gun and put it in a corn shock close to the house; he waited a week with the gun in the corn shock, and, at the end of a week, he thought it was about time to go and kill the other fellow. So he goes there at about midnight, takes the gun out of the corn shock, goes into the garage and waits until 5:30 in the morning, sitting in the garage waiting for Mr. Petersen to come out of the house. At about half past 5 o'clock in the morning Mr. Petersen came out with a pail full of oats to feed the chickens, and when he got halfway between the house and the barn Mr. Oster took the gun and shot and killed him. That fellow was entitled to a defense; he was entitled to have a lawyer; he had a right to hire me. All I did in that case was to show that he was not guilty of premeditated murder, that he was not guilty of first-degree murder, but guilty of second-degree murder. The result was that my position was sustained by the jury.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McCLELLAN in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. LANGER. No. I am sorry. I should like to yield to the distinguished Senator from Texas if I could.

The result was that this lady was entitled to have a divorce because, under our statute, whenever a man is sent to a penitentiary, as a matter of right, the other party can get a divorce.

Mr. President, I drew up all the papers in that case. I went to Judge Fred Jansonious. He set the case for a hearing. I notified her by telephone; I notified her by registered letter. The day came. The judge and I sat in that courtroom on Saturday afternoon, when ordinarily no work is done on Saturday. We stayed there all afternoon. She never showed up. I then wrote a letter to her by registered mail—it is all in the evidence—and told her that I would get the divorce for her, anyway, but never again to fool the judge.

That is one charge that was brought in the Senate, that I failed to get that woman a divorce. Of course, manifestly I could not march out into the country, put a rope around the woman's neck, and drag her into the court and drag her upon the witness stand. I notified her, as the record shows, four times. The court set the case for Saturday afternoon, and the judge was there and said he would stay until 4 o'clock in the afternoon. Not only that, but it was a gratis case; I was doing it for nothing, doing it as a favor to her. That is another one of the cases which was brought out.

I will not go into 3 more just like it. They are all trivial cases, out of 10,181. If anyone is interested, I will get the files in my office, and shall be very glad and happy to show them. As I said a little while ago, I was sued or arrested 15 times, but I always had the case brought before a jury. I will give the Senate a typical lawsuit which was brought against me.

There was a fellow by the name of C. E. Hoover, living at Dawson, N. Dak., and this is one of the gravest charges brought against me on the floor of the Senate, the Hoover case. Mr. Hoover comes in and says to me, "I have been robbed of $11,000. I had a section of land"—this is his story—"about 6 miles north of Dawson, that I sold to Mr. and Mrs. Paul Kinev, two Bulgarians. I sold it to them and $11,000 was still owing me." He said, "In Dawson there are a couple of bankers, Mr. Rohr and Mr. Kooker. The Midland Life Insurance Co., of Minneapolis, came to Dawson selling life insurance. They appointed these two men as their agents to sell insurance. The deal was that they should keep 70 percent of the first premium, and the other 30 percent would be deposited in the bank. An agreement was made with the Midland Life Insurance Co., of Minneapolis, that the 30 percent would stay in the bank, no matter how much insurance was sold. That 30 percent stayed in the bank. In 2 or 3 years the 30 percent amounted to $11,000. So one day the insurance commissioner of the State of Minnesota called in the life insurance president and said, "Look here, banks are closing in North Dakota; you cannot carry that $11,000 as an asset. You have got to charge it off." So in 2 or 3 days up to North Dakota comes the president of the life insurance company. He goes to Mr. Rohr and Mr. Kooker, and says, "I have got to take out this $11,000." They said, "You cannot take it out; we cannot pay it. We have not got it." So the three of them got together and figured out that they would trade the $11,000 no-good deposit to this poor farmer, Charlie Hoover, for his $11,000 first mortgage. So they went to this poor farmer, residing in the north side of the town, and traded the $11,600 worthless bank account for a first farm mortgage of $11,000, and, to make it sweet, they said they would pay $600 cash. So they gave Hoover $600 cash and an $11,000 no-good account. The life-insurance officials promptly took the $11,000 mortgage to Minneapolis, and within 3 days they transferred it to an innocent holder for value. Of course, Mr. Hoover could not get a dollar on his $11,000 from the bank. He told me that story, and naturally, as would any other lawyer in the Senate, I felt that he had been shamefully treated.

He said he had consulted a lawyer, Ed. Kelly, of Minneapolis, and Knauf & Knauf, at Jamestown, N. Dak. Finally he said to me, "I will give you one-half if you can get it back." I said, "Under the statutes of this State you have to advance the filing fees and the actual costs. You can not give me half, but under the supreme court decision you can give me a sum in an amount equal to one-half." That is the statute. There may be a fine distinction, but it makes an awful lot of difference in law.

We made an agreement, and he went home and I went on to Minneapolis. I went to Dawson, made my investigation, and I conducted the lawsuit for him. It took me a little over 3 years to get the decision. I got a judgment for $11,000. Then the job was, how to collect it. The bank was broke, they had closed up. The life-insurance company had gone into the hands of a receiver. What they had left they had sold to the Midland Life Insurance Co., of St. Louis, Mo. Both the bankers were broke. So there I stood, with an $11,000 judgment.

I went to Minneapolis and St. Paul, and in Minnesota at that time there was a statute which provided that the stockholders had a double liability. I did not know how good it was, but I came home and wrote the former president of the company a letter. I told him just exactly what kind of a citizen he was. I got him very angry, just as I intended he should be when he got the letter. I got him so mad that he promptly wrote back to me that he was going to appeal the case; and he did appeal it. Just the moment he appealed it I made an application in court to require a bond to be put up. He got a Detroit company to put up a bond for $11,000. In a few weeks the supreme court affirmed the judgment, and I got a check for $11,000 from the bonding company. Of course, I had my agreement, and I took my half.

When Mr. Hoover came to cash his check, he went to the bank at Tappen to cash it, and the banker, who happened to be a deadly enemy of mine belonging to the other side of the fence, a part of this Democratic-Republican fusion they have set up out there—this banker promptly said, "You don't mean to say your lawyer charged you half of what you got?" He said, "He did." He said, "You ought to sue him." He said, "I have not any money to sue him with. I don't want to spend my half to sue him." So he said, "Some of the members of the Bankers' Association will pay for it. Go right ahead and sue him." So in a few days I was served with a summons and a complaint in a suit attempting to get the whole $5,000 back.

Well, I went into court, demanded a jury, and the first witness the other fellow called was myself; they put me on the stand for cross-examination. I might add that they had three lawyers, too, and they got good lawyers. One of the first questions they asked me was, "Have you any written contract with Mr. Hoover? Have you got any letters of Mr. Hoover saying you are to get half?" I said, "No; I have not."

So they went ahead and put in the testimony, and it took a week. When they got all through, of course, I put in my side of the case, and when I got on the witness stand my lawyer said, "Mr. LANGER, have you any written contract with Mr. Hoover to show you were to get half?"

I said, "Yes."

He said, "Have you any letters?"

I said, "Yes."

Promptly counsel on the other side jumped up and said, "You told us you did not have them."

I said, "I did not have them at the time you asked me. My lawyer had them. I turned them over to my counsel, who had them."

The contract was there for 50 percent, and the letters showed 50 percent. But it had taken about 10 days to try that case in its entirety, and that is typical of the kind of lawsuit they brought, just one lawsuit after another. They got a hired man to sue me; they got a crippled boy to sue me, knowing that every time they got a case all the money I had saved up would be spent in the lawsuit.

I was very much interested in the report of these two investigators when they brought in some affidavits. I think I will take that up a little later, however, because I want to go back to the one time when I was convicted, because the distinguished junior Senator from Pennsylvania apparently is very much interested in my record.

As I have said, I was Governor of the State. I found, when I became Governor on January 1, 1933, that some newspapers had whole solid pages of mortgage foreclosure advertisements, solid pages. I remember one paper over in Kidder County, published in Steele, had two pages of mortgage foreclosures. As a matter of fact, before I became Governor one-half of the land of Kidder County had been foreclosed on. Insurance companies in some instances, banks in some instances, the Federal land bank in other instances, had foreclosed on this property. So the first thing I was up against was the Federal Land Bank of St. Paul. They did not like the Supreme Court decision which held that the State of North Dakota had a first lien for hail taxes. We had also passed a law providing that there could not be any antideficiency judgments taken. The Federal land bank said that unless the State of North Dakota would change that law, they would not make any loans in North Dakota. We promptly said, "We do not care whether you make any loans in North Dakota or not." I might add that for all the years since 1932 the Federal land bank has not made one loan in North Dakota.

They tried to coerce the State. Time and again they have gone before every legislature in an attempt to get that law changed, to wipe out the antideficiency law, but out there in North Dakota the farmers said, "We don't want this Federal land bank at all if in order to get it we have to repeal the antideficiency judgment law."

The result was that I declared a moratorium. I simply said that if any sheriff went out to sell any farmer's farm I would remove that sheriff from office. That applied also to personal property.

One of the big chain stores had sold a washing machine to a woman who was making her living taking in washing. The price was $87.50. That woman had paid all that sum except $3.50. Yet they hired a lawyer, they drove out over 60 miles, and took that washing machine away from that poor woman for the $3.50. The State senator from that area, Oliver Balden, telephoned me about it. I sent that sheriff a telegram and told him that if he did not get that washing machine back before 8 o'clock, we would have a new sheriff the next day in Grand Forks County, and asked him to reply by telegram. At 7 o'clock I received a reply that the poor woman had the washing machine. She paid the $3.50 as soon as she possibly could, paid it in full.

As to this matter of land, there were farmers whose grandfathers had filed upon homesteads, their fathers had lived there, and they had lived there. At that time we had had 5 or 6 years of drought. There were fields in North Dakota 640 acres in extent, Mr. President, which were just as bare as is this table. There was not enough raised on them to feed a chicken, much less a cow. I remember that one time we gave $50,000 worth of hay to McKenzie County, and in order to be sure that those who distributed it were not squandering it, I, while Governor, disguised myself and went out in old clothes to see how the hay was being distributed. I came to the home of a farmer 4 miles south of Watford City, N. Dak., and there in the yard lay 45 chickens which had actually starved to death. That in a small measure goes to illustrate the want, misery and terrible condition in that part of the country. For 726 miles in 1 year along the Great Northern Railway not 1 car of grain was shipped. The railroads did not pay their taxes, the farmers did not pay their taxes, and the job was to run the government of North Dakota without any money coming in, especially in view of the fact that my predecessor, when he went out of office, left one-half million dollars in debts. I suppose he had had his troubles, too.

So, Mr. President, I declared a moratorium, and I might add that within 6 months the moratorium was copied, in some form or other, by every Governor in the United States of America, and I have no doubt that in the States of the Senators here who were Governors at that time that you copied that moratorium in some form or other. I know that Governor Lehman of New York copied it almost in toto. It saved some 50,000 farmers at least from foreclosure in North Dakota.

Of course, that moratorium made me some enemies. In addition to that, I had declared for an income tax. We had an income tax in North Dakota, but at very low rates. Just before I became Governor the railroads had initiated a measure, which was passed by vote of the people in 1932, cutting the valuation of the railroad properties to 50 percent for purposes of taxation.

The result was that North Dakota had to obtain money from some place, and the lower house of the legislature and I decided to have an income tax. That created many enemies. I had to call a special session of the legislature for that purpose. So it became necessary in North Dakota, with every newspaper against me except one and very few weeklies for me, for me to have at least one newspaper which we could send to the farmers of my State.

My grandfather, who had come to North Dakota at about the time of the Custer massacre had been in the beginning of that fight. The Northern Pacific Railroad and the Great Northern Railroad are the two large railroads in North Dakota. Any farmer who wanted to sell his grain found that he had to sell it to an elevator company, and the directors of the elevators were officials of the railroad companies, and had interlocking directorates.

The elevator companies would pay just exactly what they chose to pay the farmer for his grain. They would give the farmer 24 or 25 or 26 cents, or whatever they wanted to pay him, for his wheat. They robbed those farmers right and left, as they had robbed my grandfather and my father. So my father and some others built an elevator right off the railroad right-of-way. They went to court to mandamus the railroad to build a spur over to the elevator, but they were defeated in court. They could not get the spur built. Then they helped to organize a cooperative exchange called the Equity Cooperative Exchange in my home town of Casselton, and within a short time they had thousands upon thousands of members, and a man named John M. Anderson was manager and George Thiel was secretary of the cooperative exchange.

They went to Minneapolis to buy a membership on the exchange, but were refused a membership. The result was that an every bushel of grain handled an extra payment of one-half cent to 1 cent had to be made. In spite of that they handled millions of bushels of grain a year. The exchange was highly successful.

What happened? One day out of a clear sky the Fargo Forum, the leading daily newspaper in North Dakota, came out with a great headline, "Equity Exchange Insolvent." Of course, that was not true. The farmers who were members of the exchange went to court, and they finally landed down here in Washington before the Federal Trade Commission. They were helped here by Senator La Follette, father of the present Senator from Wisconsin, who appeared with them before the Federal Trade Commission. It took 6 years to obtain a decision, and at the end of those 6 years the Federal Trade Commission said that the Equity Exchange was absolutely solvent, that there was nothing wrong with it, nothing wrong with the way it did business, and it was shown that some newspapers and lawyers had received the sum of $50,000 from the Minneapolis Grain Exchange, and that the action against the Equity Exchange was brought deliberately to wreck it.

When I went to college in New York I discovered that in the State of New York the elevators at Buffalo were owned by the State of New York. It is not socialism in New York for New York State to own the elevators at Buffalo. It is not socialism in Seattle, Wash., for the city of Seattle to own the fish market. It is not socialism in Maine for a town to own a lumber yard. But when we out there in North Dakota tried to amend our constitution so that the State of North Dakota could spend $300,000 to build terminal elevators to help out the farmers, immediately the cry of socialism was raised. Yet in spite of it all we won by a vote of 3 to 1.

Under the constitution of our State, however, it was necessary to vote twice on the same subject, 2 years apart. It was said that the people could not be trusted, and that in a moment of passion they might vote one way and be sorry for it afterward. So it was said that they should vote twice on a question 2 years apart, at different elections. During the 2 years' interval some newspapers did everything they could to defeat the proposal, but the election took place 2 years later, in 1913, and by a vote of 4 to 1 the people of North Dakota approved the expenditure of that money for terminal elevators.

One would think that certainly the people of a great State, having gone to the polls twice and having said they wanted terminal elevators, should be entitled to have them. The Governor of the State at that time was the cousin of Mark Hanna, former Governor of Ohio. He is an honest, conservative businessman, a man who has been in Congress. Governor Hanna appointed a committee and that committee decided it would be bad business for North Dakota to spend $300,000 to build State-owned terminal elevators and give the farmers a decent price for their grain. When that committee made its report, 300 of us met at Bismarck with the legislature and we needed an adviser. Out of all the men in the United States we picked Robert La Follette, the man who had been Governor of Wisconsin, to be our adviser.

He came up to North Dakota and made speeches for us and talked to enormous crowds. When the vote of the people was turned down, we organized the Non-Partisan League. We said we did not care whether a man was a Republican or a Democrat; we did not care whether he was a Swede, or a Norwegian, or a German, or a Negro, or a Jew, or a Catholic, or Protestant; but we were going to get fair prices for our people; and, instead of having McKenzie, the man whom McKinley had pardoned, run the State, we would have that State run by the people of North Dakota themselves. The men who taught us that philosophy were Senator La Follette, and George S. Loftus, and A. C. Townley, and some other men out there within the borders of our State, or men whom we hired to come there and speak.

After we organized, on Lincoln's Birthday, in every precinct in North Dakota those people met. In those 2,260 precincts they elected delegates who, on Washington's Birthday, met in every county seat; and a week later they met at the State capital. If ever there was democracy functioning from the grass roots, it was in North Dakota, through the Non-Partisan League. We did not leave any chance for the grain exchanges, or the grain elevators, or the railroads, or the large banking interests from Chicago or elsewhere to control that convention. For 2 days those 300 or 400 delegates sat there discussing what was good for North Dakota. We adopted our platform. Then the time came to nominate candidates. No nominating speeches were allowed. Each of those delegates received a yellow slip of paper, and on that slip he could write as many names as he chose to write as his choice for Governor. Those names were written on a huge blackboard. Then each delegate was given a white slip of paper, and could vote for any one of those persons.

When those North Dakota farmers finished voting, they had chosen Lynn J. Frazier, as square as any man who ever sat in the Senate. They endorsed him on the Republican ticket for Governor of North Dakota. In the same way, they endorsed the full ticket. They would vote the first time; and the name of the man receiving the smallest vote would be rubbed off the blackboard; and then they would vote again, until only one name remained. It was in that way that I was endorsed for attorney general of North Dakota.

Then what happened? After we won by an overwhelming vote in the primary, and after we swamped the opposition in the fall, why, every Member of the Senate who knew Lynn J. Frazier when he was here, and who knows him now, and knows that he is a fine man and progressive, remembers that he was called all the names that John L. Lewis is being called today, and a whole lot of names worse than those. When he took over the coal mines at Wilton, N. Dak., after the attempt was deliberately made not to work the mines in North Dakota—Lynn J. Frazier stepped in with the militia and took over the mines—why, the names John L. Lewis is being called are not one, two, three, as compared to the names Lynn J. Frazier was called. One of the daily newspapers carried an article saying, "Why, those Senators, those legislators, whom the farmers elected are so ignorant"—those men who pay the taxes, those men who furnished the soldiers in the World War No. 1—"that hay and straw ought to be put on the floor of the Capitol so that those farmers would feel at home."

Yet, Mr. President, those farmers went into power and gave the State of North Dakota one of the best administrations it has ever had.

I am telling the Senate today, and especially the Senators who, during the last 2 or 3 days, have been talking about communism, that the best citizen in the State of North Dakota and, I believe, in the United States is a poor man who has been helped to own his own home. That is the policy which Senator Frazier and the rest of that administration adopted.

However, so bitter and so continuous was the fight against them, that, after Senator Frazier had been elected twice, believe it or not, they recalled him. They got 91,000 people to sign a recall petition; and, for the first time in the history of the United States, a Governor of a State was recalled. In the recall election, let me tell the junior Senator from Pennsylvania, the reactionary Democrats of North Dakota were just as ruthless to Lynn Frazier, just as contemptible, as any of the reactionary Republicans. The junior Senator from Pennsylvania talked today about Mellon contributing money for the election in South Dakota. Let me say that even in the last election in the State of North Dakota, the last time I ran for office, money was sent in by the two parties, just as the junior Senator from Pennsylvania charged in reference to South Dakota. But who got it? Not the Progressives. The money was spent against us; not a single penny of it was used for us.

So, as I say, it comes with ill grace to have the charge made upon the floor of the Senate—whether it be as to South Dakota or as to North Dakota—that any of that money was sent into the State with the idea tht it belonged to the Progressive faction of the Republican Party.

So, Mr. President, having gone back, and having given you a bird's-eye view of the Nonpartisan organization, I say that those big interests left undone nothing which they could think of doing to wreck the Nonpartisan League.

Why, when we called a mass meeting at St. Paul, Minn., to protest against World War No. 1, we looked around for outstanding speakers. We selected Senator Borah, of Idaho, and Senator La Follette, of Wisconsin. Some 20,000 persons were at the meeting in that vast auditorium. Senator Borah spoke first and then left. Senator La Follette spoke afterward. Yet, it was only by the skin of his teeth that Senator La Follette escaped from being thrown out of the Senate, because it was claimed that he had been disloyal and had said things at that meeting that he never said—things which the Associated Press quoted him as saying, and for which it afterward apologized. One of the happiest remembrances of my youth is that as a young man in my twenties, I wrote to Senator La Follette offering to testify before any Senate committee hearing that might be called.

So I came back, with that background, to North Dakota. I declared a moratorium. We had instituted a high income tax, one of the very highest rates in any State in the Union. I had issued an embargo to keep durum wheat from being shipped out of North Dakota at ruinous prices. The farmers could not get along with the prices they were getting. The price had gone up. The Democrats and opposition Republicans out there had got in touch with the New Deal—some of the friends of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY].

Strange as it may seem to Senators, although I was sick when my inauguration occurred, although I lay in the hospital for 6 weeks after the inauguration, although I was sworn in as Governor on a sick bed, almost as soon as I got out I discovered that because it so happened that I was the only Republican Governor elected that year, down in Washington I was selected as the boy to be whipped. The New Deal administration was going to make an example of the only Republican Governor elected in the entire United States. So whom do we find on the job? Harold Ickes.

First of all, I found my telephone tapped. Every conversation that I had was recorded. I found my office desk as Governor of the State broken into and the contents taken. The Gestapo at its worst in Germany was not any worse than what we had to face in North Dakota. Even my mail was intercepted.

Finally they sent 12 men to North Dakota to convict me, if they could, for violation of the income-tax law. That is always the last resort. "Get them on the income tax." For 2 weeks investigators sat down in St. Paul, going over my income-tax report. When the report was sent back to Washington they said, "We did not send enough, or the right kind of income-tax men to North Dakota." So before they got through they sent in the man who had convicted Al Capone in Chicago for violation of the income-tax law. They sent him to North Dakota to take charge of the income-tax investigation of the Governor of the State, who had committed no crime.

A large number of income-tax men—I think they had 42 of them—was divided into squads. They were sent out by automobile and by airplane. Two men were sent to 24 Produce Exchange,

New York, to the office of Frank Prina, who was handling the North Dakota flour for New York City. They walked in and went through his books.

On the same day another squad went to Wood & Sands in Boston, who were handling North Dakota flour for the Atlantic seaboard.

On the same day several men, under the direction of the man who convicted Al Capone, walked into the office of the Standard Oil Co. in Chicago. The Standard Oil Co. had sold us several million dollars' worth of oil and materials in connection with building highways. Those men wanted to see the books, and did.

On the same day they went into Chicago, Minneapolis, and Fargo, N. Dak. They went to every single broker who handled North Dakota bonds in any capacity whatsoever. They thought that because I, as Governor, had got the bonds up from 62 cents on the dollar to $1.18, I must have made some money somewhere. They were out looking for it. They could not imagine that I was honest.

When those forty-odd men reported back, they had nothing. After examining all those books in all those places they had nothing; but they said, "We must get this Governor." They had to get him, just as they tried to get Senator Borah, when they arrested Senator Borah in Idaho. Clarence Darrow was out there at the time of the Borah trial. They did not get him. When they could not get Borah, they arrested BURT WHEELER, our colleague—anything to discredit a progressive, whether he be a Republican or a Democrat. "If you cannot get Borah, get WHEELER. If you cannot get WHEELER, get Floyd Olson, of Minnesota." So they started their proceeding against Governor Olson, of Minnesota. When they could not convict Borah, or Wheeler, or Floyd Olson—they had not learned anything from all those things—they came to North Dakota to harass me.

They could find nothing that I had ever done that was a crime. I was not worrying, because I had not committed any crime. As I stated awhile ago, we needed a newspaper in North Dakota; so one Sunday, in the presence of a thousand people at Verona, N. Dak., I got up before the crowd and said, "The progressives are having a hard time with their newspapers. William Jennings Bryan could not keep his Commoner going. Senator LA FOLLETTE has had a tough time with the Progressive over in Wisconsin. I want to get a vote of you people as to whether you think we ought to organize a newspaper by having every person on the public pay roll who wishes to do so, spend 5 percent, 2 percent, 1 percent, or whatever he wants to spend. We will give him an equivalent amount of subscriptions to sell, so that he can get his money back."

There was no assessment on anybody. It was not a "2-percent club," such as that organized by Paul McNutt of Indiana. It gave a man or woman who wanted to help an opportunity to help and sell subscriptions to get his or her money back. There was nothing wrong about it then, and there is nothing wrong about it now, wherever it may be done. It is not an assessment.

They voted for it unanimously, including the Democrat who ran against the league on the opposition ticket.

In the collection of this money I contributed my share. I did not handle the funds. They went to the Republican State chairman, Oscar Erickson. In the collection of those funds six persons, not on relief, as the newspaper had said, but six persons working in the F. E. R. A., voluntarily contributed $178 in subscriptions. It so happened that the money of the highway department, wherever it was spent, was reimbursed by the Federal Government. The stenographers in the highway department received their money from the State. They received State warrants. Nevertheless the highway department was reimbursed by the Federal Government.

One day, out of a clear sky, Andy Miller, the Harry Daugherty judge, who was the tool of Alexander McKenzie, who had been in jail in San Francisco and pardoned by President McKinley, Andy Miller, who had been appointed Federal judge, the man whom I had helped defeat for United States Senator, the man against whom I campaigned all over the State of North Dakota, the man whom I had charged publicly with being a drunkard and having taken the Keely cure—during the time he was attorney general—this judge dismissed the regular grand jury. Ten days later he called a special grand jury. I heard that the special grand jury was there to indict me, and so I tried unsuccessfully to appear before the jury.

Within a short time the grand jury indicted nine of us. They indicted us for the newspaper deal which I have told about. They said we had interfered with and obstructed an act of Congress. We put up bail. In the meantime I was running for Governor again. The opening date of my campaign was set for the 17th day of May, when I was to give my opening speech of the campaign. However, Judge Miller decided that would be a good day to start my trial instead. So, though I had been advertised to appear in one place, nevertheless my trial opened at Bismarck.

There I learned how easy it is in a Federal court to convict an innocent man. Up to that time I do not suppose that in the whole State of North Dakota there had been a man who had had more experience in criminal law than I had had as a lawyer. I had had a fine law practice in the State, and it was almost all criminal work in which I specialized.

Before the trial started, I tried to obtain a change of venue, because the judge was prejudiced and my deadly political enemy; but three of the defendants would not sign it. Three men with whom I had never had any dealings, two of whom I had never spoken a word to in my life, were indicted with me for conspiracy. Those three men would not sign, and as all must sign to make an affidavit good, the result was that I had to go to trial before Judge Miller; and if the distinguished junior Senator from Pennsylvania gets any satisfaction from that, for God's sake let him have all the satisfaction he can get out of it.

We were to be tried on the 17th day of May. We had previously asked for a list of the jurors. Up to that time and since, in every trial in the Federal court, the names of the jurors have been available. But when I came up for trial not a single name was permitted to go out, either to the defense or to the public. We did not know what names were on the jury list until we sat down to try the case.

(At this point Mr. CONNALLY approached Mr. LANGER and conferred with him briefly.)

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I claim the floor.

Mr. LANGER. I am not yielding the floor. I decline to yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LUCAS. I claim the floor. The Senator from North Dakota yielded the floor when he quit speaking. I claim the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is overruled. The Senator from North Dakota has the floor.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I should like to yield, but I cannot. I am sorry.

Mr. President, I wish to make one thing clear. I like the Members of this body. I have a deep affection for many of them as I know they have for me. I have had fine treatment from Senators. Yet, when a charge is made like the one which has been made by the distinguished junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] all I can do is to get up and defend myself and my record.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. LANGER. I do not yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota declines to yield.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, when those 72 names were laid before my counsel and myself, when we could not get a change of venue because three defendants would not sign the affidavit, we found upon that list practically every personal enemy I had in the State of North Dakota. If ever a jury anywhere in the world was hand-picked, that jury was hand-picked. It did not do any good to protest. The trial proceeded.

Sitting on the jury—we picked the 12 best ones. They were all of the opposite political faith. Practically none of them came from the farm. They were hand-picked. After we finally concluded the selecting of the trial jury one member who tried me was a man who had just got through suing me as Governor under a so-called antiusury statute.

Another one of the 12 who was trying me was a man by the name of I. Hullet, who just a few weeks previously had been before the Public Securities Commission, of which I was ex officio president, on complaint of Representative BURDICK that his company had deprived the farmers of thousands of dollars because of the fact that the stock which was issued on crop-production loans had not been returned when the loans were paid. We had just taken action which provided that a part of his salary should be deducted each month, to be paid to the farmers who had made these loans. So we had this trial. It took a month. When the 17th day of June came I was convicted; but when I took the matter to the people in the election, and just 10 days after that conviction, the people of North Dakota, in spite of all that Senator GUFFEY may say today, the people of North Dakota, knowing the facts, having heard all about that trial day after day and day after day, nevertheless renominated me by an overwhelming vote.

Mr. President, there are one or two other things I desire to mention. Senators who were present at the time my case was under consideration will remember that there were three or four chief allegations. I am not going to go into all the details of them today, but I want to serve notice now that sometime when the junior Senator from Pennsylvania is here, as I see he has left the Chamber, I shall discuss those charges involving the so-called bond sales in North Dakota, the matter of lowering railroad taxes which was talked about, and the matter of the South Dakota judge.

I desire to make it plain that I have only the deepest affection for my colleagues in the Senate. I do not think any Senator here can say that I have treated one who voted against me any differently than one who voted for me. I believe when a man comes here he votes according to the dictates of his conscience, and that is the way I have voted. But I want to serve notice here and now that from today on at a time such as when the matter of the confirmation of Judge Chandler came up, or any other time, while I am a Member of this body when any Member of the Senate impeaches my honesty or integrity and I am here upon the floor of the Senate, that I am perfectly willing to have any Senator say anything he knows about me; I am perfectly willing to have him produce any record he has; because I say that here before you today stands an honest man, a man who made an honest record as attorney general and as Governor of his State, and in North Dakota time and time and time again I have gone into court and defied my enemies to bring in any record or witnesses showing anything else. Yet they came down here and by insinuation before a committee that could not by any stretch of the imagination be familiar with the facts, presented a lot of testimony, and sent the findings all over the United States before I had a chance to defend myself or get upon the witness stand here.

As I say, Mr. President, I have taken what may seem to some Members of this body to be a large amount of time, but I merely ask any of you, who has a wife and a family, and a record of which you are proud, if the junior Senator from Pennsylvania got up and made such charge as he made here this afternoon, would you not defend yourself and state the true facts?

I might add that in my State I offered to debate with the Governor of North Dakota in the last campaign upon these issues, and the Governor of North Dakota refused to accept.

No one regrets more than I do that the junior Senator from Pennsylvania saw fit to charge me as he did this afternoon. I want to make it clear once more than I can look any man in the eye and that my conscience is absolutely clear. Here in the Senate, so long as I am here, I expect to vote for the underdog; I expect to vote for the laboring man, and for the farmer, whenever I think they are right. I expect to vote to support Franklin Delano Roosevelt whenever I think he is right. I did not come here to become the tool of any Democratic machine or any Republican machine, or any wealthy reactionary group. I came here to represent the plain, common, ordinary people of the State of North Dakota and of the United States of America. And from that nothing on this earth shall deter me.

SPECIAL ASSISTANT, COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, as chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report favorably from that committee, without amendment, Senate Resolution 142, and ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 142) submitted by Mr. REYNOLDS on April 22, 1943, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That Resolution 247, agreed to June 15, 1942, authorizing the Committee on Military Affairs to employ, during the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1942, a special assistant to be paid at the rate of $3,300 per annum from the contingent fund of the Senate, hereby is continued in full force and effect during the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1943.

INVESTIGATION RELATING TO SUPPLY AND DISTRIBUTION OF HYDROELECTRIC POWER

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, also as chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report favorably from that committee, with an amendment, Senate Resolution 155, and ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, may we have an explanation?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, this is a resolution which was offered by the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND], who desires to have investigated certain power questions in the Southwest and West. I have conferred with one of the minority members of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY]. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS] is out of the city, and I was not able to reach the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE]. The resolution is satisfactory to the Senator from New Hampshire, is satisfactory to the majority of the committee, and is satisfactory to both majority and minority leaders.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Oregon has been notified of it, has he?

Mr. LUCAS. Yes. The resolution had been reported favorably without amendment from the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 155) submitted by Mr. MCFARLAND on June 4, 1943.

The amendment of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate was on page 2, line 19, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$5,000" and to insert "$3,000", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That a special committee of five Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation with respect to (1) the adequacy of the supply of hydroelectric power generated in Government plants, (2) whether such supply is properly allocated and distributed for war purposes and civilian uses, (3) whether the distribution of such supply is made under proper conditions and safeguards, (4) the relation between the generation of hydroelectric power at Government plants and irrigation, and (5) whether plans for future development of Government hydroelectric plants provide for full utilization of such facilities for both development of electric power and providing water for irrigation. The committee shall report to the Senate, as soon as practicable, the results of its study and investigation together with its recommendations, if any, for legislation.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate in the Seventy-eighth Congress, to employ such experts, and such clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $3,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I had desired to ask about the resolution. There is nothing on the face of the record indicating the character of inquiry the committee seeks to make. I am wondering whether the Senator from Illinois can advise us as to the particular aspect of power production in the West and Southwest the committee desires to inquire into. Is the Senator advised?

Mr. LUCAS. I am not particularly advised as to the details of this special investigation. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND] is not on the floor at present. All I know about it is that the Committee on Interstate Commerce unanimously reported the resolution favorably, and the Senator from Arizona talked to me about it, and I discussed it with the members of my committee, both the majority and minority, and the two leaders.

Mr. BONE. Did the committee make any kind of a report on the resolution, indicating what its desires were?

Mr. LUCAS. No; there was no written report.

Mr. BONE. I know that every generator is turning not only at full capacity but turning out overloads, and I was wondering what more might be expected. When a generator is turning out an overload it is like asking a dray horse which is hauling 3 tons and utilizing all its energy to haul 3½ tons. If the desire is to develop more power, I shall be delighted to see the committee take some action which would stimulate production and more generating equipment at Grand Coulee.

Mr. LUCAS. It may be that the scope of this resolution would include what the Senator has in mind. However, if the Senator desires to defer the resolution until the Senator from Arizona can arrive in the Chamber, I shall be glad to have that course followed.

Mr. BONE. No; I know the able Senator from Arizona, and know he is a man of the utmost integrity and honor, and that he would not suggest anything but what was proper. I presume that if the inquiry broadens beyond the scope of what the author has in mind, he will be very glad to hear from any of us interested in western power developments.

Mr. LUCAS. This is just another instance of a resolution reported favorably by a committee and coming to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate without any specific written report. It is impossible for our committee to know exactly what the testimony was before the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I have no objection if this matter can be disposed of promptly and without debate, but if it is going to bring on debate, I shall have to object.

Mr. LUCAS. I do not blame the Senator for objecting. He is entitled to object, and if it is going to bring on debate I, myself, shall withdraw the resolution, because the Senator has waited patiently all afternoon to get an important measure before the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. I understand the resolution has already been agreed to.

PREVENTION OF STRIKES IN DEFENSE INDUSTRIES—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 796) relating to the use and operation by the United States of certain plants in the interests of the national defense.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, with reference to the pending legislation, I wish to state to the Senate that I propose to vote for the report rendered by the conferees on Senate bill 796. In connection therewith, I wish to have printed in the RECORD at this point a clipping from one of the Washington newspapers entitled "Teamsters' Head Says Congress Snags Victory," with a Chicago, June 7, date line, to be followed by an article from the Washington Evening Star of June 7, from the pen of Mr. Frank R. Kent, in his column, The Great Game of Politics.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clipping and article are as follows:

TEAMSTERS' HEAD SAYS CONGRESS SNAGS VICTORY

CHICAGO, June 7.—Daniel J. Tobin, president of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, American Federation of Labor, believes that Congress is impeding the war effort and should adjourn for a year.

In reference to antistrike legislation, Tobin said:

"It would be well if that body adjourned for a year to give President Roosevelt and the people who toil a chance to win the war."

He charged that the isolationist press has disrupted the war effort by criticizing labor and the administration's conduct of the war.

[From the Washington Star of June 7, 1943]

LEWIS' DEFIANCE TRACED TO ROOSEVELT'S PROUNION ACTIONS AND SUPPRESSION OF ANTISTRIKE BILLS

(By Frank R. Kent)

The overwhelming bulk of the American people were solidly back of the President in his struggle to avert humiliating acknowledgment that John L. Lewis and his union miners were stronger than the United States Government. However drastic the steps he might have taken to end this threat to the Nation, he would have received full public support.

He simply had to achieve a surface victory. To flinch or yield publicly would have been unthinkable. He did neither and the Nation breathes easier. Nevertheless, it is clear that while Mr. Roosevelt won the form, Mr. Lewis has won the substance. The fruits of victory are the latter's.

When the final accounting is made, there is every reason to believe it will be found that Mr. Lewis has outmaneuvered, outbluffed, outfought Mr. Roosevelt and gained a large part of his original demands. This amounts to a national mortification. Already, with Roosevelt approval, concessions have been made to Mr. Lewis far greater than he expected to get.

Instead of emerging from this struggle a beaten man, he will emerge with greater strength and increased prestige.

GREAT COST

This is not pleasant reading for Americans, but the facts may as well be faced. Also, in this vital business of strikes, walk-outs, slow-downs, and other forms of labor trouble with which the country has been afflicted since long before the war began, it does seem that the stage has been reached where all save the most obtuse must perceive that, to use a slang phrase of the cities, the people have been "two timed" by the Roosevelt administration in a shameful and shocking way.

It is not possible accurately to compute the cost of this performance in men, money, and materials, but it has been very great.

The other day Mrs. Roosevelt, writing about the coal strike, said, "Perhaps, many of us have a share in the blame." This is a striking understatement. There is not space here to present full details of the record, but it ought to be enough to fix responsibility to recite a few irrefutable truths. The first s that the power which these labor leaders have—a power which enabled Mr. Lewis to defy the Government and wrest from it concessions that undermine its anti-inflation policies and menace the national economic health—was given them by the President himself. This is the big basic fact.

BUILT THEM UP

It is Mr. Roosevelt who built them up, contracted political alliances with them, permitted his name to be used in their membership drives, and accepted from them huge campaign contributions.

In addition, he forced through Congress a series of one-sided laws and appointed arbitration boards so loaded for labor that the employer is always wrong.

Much more could be added. For 10 years these labor leaders have been the most powerful figures in Washington, and their White House influence more potent than all others combined. What they asked for they got. What they opposed was killed—and always with Presidential support.

KILLED ANTISTRIKE BILL

Look at the legislative record of the last 2 years. Just before Pearl Harbor the Smith antistrike bills were passed by the House. Had these bills become law, there would have been no strikes, many millions of man-days would have been saved, and the war closer to being won. But, on the direct request of the President, they were smothered in the Senate Committee on Education and Labor.

More than a year ago the Connally antistrike bill, on the point of passage in the Senate, was removed from the calendar at the direct request of the President, who said that its passage would be "harmful to the war effort." Two months ago Senator BYRD, of Virginia, introduced a "work or fight" bill, applying to strikers in defense industries. Immediately various Government heads opposed the bill, saying it would be "bad for national morale." Finally, when the most recent coal strike occurred, the Connally-Smith bills were revived.

Then Mr. Roosevelt flatly contradicts his words by his deeds. Deploring strikes in his White House conferences and public statements, he simultaneously threw his whole weight, exerted through his department heads, against the passage of the bills to outlaw wartime strikes and regulate unions.

HOUSE APPROVES BILL

Despite the opposition of the Secretaries of Labor, of War, and Navy, all clearly White House inspired, the House on Friday passed the Connally-Smith bill by a vote of 231 to 141. But, against the President's will, it can hardly get through the Senate.

It is an astonishing state of affairs. Here is the President in the middle of a great war, condemning strikes and confronted with the tragic failure of his own policy of nonstrike agreements with labor leaders, refusing to permit Congress to enact antistrike legislation. If there is any way to reconcile that with reason, it has not been pointed out.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, in reference to my position upon the pending legislation, I wish at this time to request that there be printed at this point a press release, issued by me more than a year ago, to be exact, on March 23, 1942, which outlines my position relative to both labor and capital.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The press release is as follows:

"Outlaw strikes, suspend the 40-hour week, suspend the closed shop on war contracts, permit any American to work unmolested who desires to aid in the war program, regardless of whether or not he is affiliated with any labor organization, and place a 6-percent maximum ceiling on all war profits, all for the duration of the war," said United States Senator ROBERT R. REYNOLDS, chairman of the Senate Military Affairs Committee.

"We Americans should be thinking more in terms of giving and not so much in terms of getting insofar as our war production program is concerned. At this critical time when America is fighting for its very existence and when our Nation is imperilled from within as well as from without, I dislike very much to take issue with our President and Commander in Chief, and with Mrs. Frances Perkins, head of the Labor Department of our Government, who have stated that Congress should not take any action now in reference to the labor situation.

"Philip Murray, president of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, declared several days ago before a congressional committee that those who are advocating remedial labor legislation, such as I have suggested, are enemies of our Government. He referred to those who are advocating the passage of labor legislation as labor baiters. I disagree with Mr. Murray, because I do not believe that those thousands of signers of telegrams and letters which I have received from persons in North Carolina and elsewhere are enemies of America simply because they favor the passage of certain proposed labor legislation."

Senator REYNOLDS continued: "I am thoroughly convinced that our people are rapidly recognizing the fact that millions of Americans have not yet awakened to the realization that our country is engaged in a life and death struggle, the result of which will affect the very future of our country. The paramount need in America today is an unimpeded war production program. Maximum production is needed now, and this goal can only be attained by the complete abandonment of all selfish desires on the part of all financial or labor groups. We cannot reach our production peak if certain individuals and groups, financial and labor, insist on the status quo of operation prior to December 8, 1941.

"The time has arrived when it is necessary for every American, man and woman alike, young and old, to make every and all sacrifices at this grave time to insure for us an early and complete victory over our enemies.

"I have always been the friend of the laboring man. I believe in the right of labor to organize for its own protection and benefit. The laboring men of this country have certain rights, and I realize that these rights have not always been respected by capital. On the other hand, I am aware that labor must sacrifice along with all other American groups in a common effort to win this war. The winning of this war is our chief objective and we can win only by outstripping the axis powers in the matter of production of armaments and the sinews of war.

"Insofar as I am concerned I am now ready and willing to vote for legislation to outlaw strikes in defense industries, suspend the 40-hour week, ban overtime payments and prohibit double-time payments, outlaw the closed shop on war contracts, permit any American to work unmolested who desires to aid in the war program without becoming affiliated with any labor organization, and place a 6 percent maximum ceiling over all war profits for the duration—during the emergency.

"I favor any American citizen being permitted to work as many hours as he so desires without molestation regardless of whether he is a member of any labor organization or not. I am opposed to any further overtime or double-time pay for the period of the duration. I favor ending all strikes in defense industries for the duration.

"The millions of working Americans constituting the rank and file of labor organizations are as patriotic as any other group of American citizens. They themselves should not be subjected to the vicious criticism which has been heaped on their shoulders. The fault lies largely in the hands of many of their officials and representatives. I refer to labor agitators and those primarily interested in their own selfish attainments. In recognition of this fact, and in the interest of the American laboring men affiliated with our labor organizations, on April 7, 1941, I introduced in the Senate of the United States Senate Joint Resolution 64 entitled " 'Joint resolution to provide for the national defense by prohibiting labor organizations from employing certain persons as officers or agents:

" 'Whereas it is common knowledge that "fifth column" activities in various European countries contributed largely to their defeat; and

" 'Whereas such activities consisted in part of sabotage in key industries and propaganda disseminated among the workers of such industries; and

" 'Whereas such activities are now being carried on in this country and will gather more momentum in the future, thus undermining our national defense; and

" 'Whereas because of their key positions in our industrial mobilization plans, officers and agents of labor organizations should all be American citizens whose allegiance to their country is unquestioned and who can be depended upon to cooperate with the Government in stamping out such treacherous activities: Therefore be it

" 'Resolved, That any alien, any member of the Communist Party, any member of the Nazi Bund, any member of any Fascist organization, or any American who is deprived of his American citizenship by reason of his conviction of a felony, shall be prohibited from holding any office in or representing any labor union or organization.'

"Unfortunately, this legislation which I proposed for the benefit of the American laboring men who are members of labor organizations was never enacted into law.

"Now, let's get to capital which in many instances is equally at fault with labor in the matter of our all-out war-production efforts. Some of these giant corporations with contracts totaling hundreds of millions of dollars have made millions upon millions in profits as a result of the toil and sweat of our laborers. The millions in profits have been made right under the nose of the workingmen who produced them. Some of these profits have been so outrageous that one company became so conscience-stricken that its officers actually voluntarily turned back into the Treasury of the United States millions of dollars in profits it had made on one job alone. Is it any wonder that it appears to the American people that every one is trying to get all they can out of these war efforts, rather than putting all they possibly can into these efforts? Is it any wonder that the unions and the laboring men of this country should demand their just and proper proportion of these billions that are being expended, thus providing unconscionable profits and tremendous waste totaling billions as was revealed by the Truman committee of the United States Senate?

"If we are to regulate labor, then we must regulate industry by eliminating its war profits. I favor a limitation of 6 percent upon all war profits directly or indirectly wherever they may be found. It would be manifestly unfair to attempt to limit wages and overtime and not limit and control war profits. We do not want a repetition of 1917 and 1918, which produced thousands of war millionaires overnight. Capital and labor must share equally of the sacrifices necessary to win this great conflict so that they may better enjoy the sweets of victory when it is won."

Senator REYNOLDS concluded by saying: "I'm for fair treatment to be provided both labor and capital. I am ready and willing to vote for any legislation which in my honest opinion will aid our war production to attain its maximum and thus insure victory. I am ready to vote for any legislation which will bring to an end existing differences between certain groups in this country. * * * If labor is to sacrifice, then capital likewise must make sacrifices equally as great for the duration.

"While I stand behind the President and the administration 100 percent in the prosecution of this war, and shall strive to do my individual utmost part in the prosecution of that program, I shall feel free at any time to oppose these leaders on any question when I conscientiously feel that such opposition is for the best interests of the people of the Nation."

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a few minutes while I address it on the pending measure.

During 35 years of public service I have never knowingly uttered a word, cast a ballot, or performed an official act detrimental to the cause of labor or the interests of the laboring man. I have consistently through the years been the laboring man's friend, and I am glad to say he has been my friend.

I have always been in sympathy with the uphill and struggling fight the laboring man has made through the years to secure a fair and square deal for himself and his family because I believe the workman is worthy of his hire.

I believe in the right of collective bargaining. I believe in the organization of labor, because it is only through unions and organizations that the laboring man has been able to secure and protect his rights against the greed and oppression of those who would grow rich and fat through the laboring man's toil and sweat.

I believe in the inherent right to strike as a means to secure a just and square deal for the men and women who really produce the wealth of the country, for it is fundamentally true that a man who sweats and toils should be given his rightful share in the fruits of his labor to better the conditions of himself and his family.

We have before us today a bill that seeks to prohibit strikes, interferences, and stoppages during the progress of this world-wide war, because we are fighting for the freedom, liberty, welfare, happiness, yea, the very existence of every man, woman, boy, and girl in our country—fighting to make safe for all time to come the blessings of this great democratic Republic.

I do not like the pending bill, and I resent the inclusion of certain provisions in it. There are some provisions in the bill which have no connection whatsoever with the prevention of strikes, and add nothing to the success of the war effort. But I am going to vote for the bill, because 98 percent of the people I represent are demanding the passage of this bill or some bill that will prevent any man or woman or any organization of men and women from retarding or hampering the successful prosecution of the one great objective that is dear to every patriotic man and woman in the Nation—the winning of this war.

I have gotten my consent to vote for this bill, notwithstanding its many drastic and objectionable features, to which every laboring man has a right to object, because the bill contains an automatic repealing clause which provides that within 6 months after the close of the war the measure with its provisions will be wiped from the statutes of this Republic.

It is regrettable that a small handful of laborers under the leadership of stubborn, determined opposition makes it necessary to enact such drastic legislation, objectionable to the fourteen or fifteen million patriotic, sacrificing industrial laboring men and women of this country who have toiled, suffered, and sacrificed from the first day of this war to produce the greatest war machine of any nation of all times.

The people of this Republic owe a debt of gratitude to these fourteen or fifteen million men and women who have forgotten self and self-interest and contributed their all in producing tanks, planes, guns, ships, ammunition, food, and all other supplies to make possible the overthrow and the utter and ultimate defeat of the forces that would dominate, enslave, and control every human being in the world.

While this legislation or similar legislation may be a mistake at this time, the fathers and mothers whose sons and brothers and husbands and other loved ones are fighting and dying on all the battlefronts of the earth, sacrificing opportunities of life and even life itself for the salvation of our country and our American ideals of Government, demand its passage. Yet this is not, in my humble judgment, the solution of the troubles, strikes, and delays which now beset us. This I have contended from the very first.

I have realized from the very beginning of the war that the power, strength, preparation, and determination of our enemy were such as would require the patriotic cooperation of every man, woman, boy, and girl in the Nation to bring victory quickly and most certainly. Believing it would require the all-out effort of one and all, last year I introduced the first total mobilization bill in the Congress, and if the pending bill does not bring the results we are seeking, we will yet have to resort to total mobilization, placing every man, woman, boy, and girl, and all the money and resources of the Nation under the direction and positive control of the Government until the war is won and our enemies, with all their damnable theories of government, have been wiped from the face of the earth.

To my mind, there seems to be millions in this country yet who do not seem to realize the seriousness of the situation which confronts us. Of course, everyone wants to win the victory, but judging by their words and actions there are many who are doing nothing about it. With total mobilization all the resources of the Nation and every human being in it would be drafted and directed to the one great end, speedy winning of the war, thereby saving hundreds of lives of our precious boys.

Some persons are so silly as to think the war is practically won, when, as a matter of fact, we have barely gotten into it. We have a hard road ahead to travel. Our sacrifices of life and of means yet to be made are horrible to contemplate. We have just commenced to fight. Our enemies have grown stronger. They are better prepared. It is a fight to the finish. It is a battle to the death. The sooner every man and woman, boy, and girl in the Nation are made to know the job that lies ahead of us the sooner we can get the 100-percent cooperation of everyone.

If today we had total mobilization there would be no slackerism, strikes, stoppages, or delays, no labor shortage on the farms, no threatened shortage of feed and food on the home front, because none would be tolerated any more than strikes and stoppages are tolerated on the part of our brave soldier boys who are now fighting 24 hours a day, and many of whom are dying on all the battle fronts of the world.

I am ready to vote for this bill or any other bill that will enforce an all-out effort and sacrifice on the part of everyone until this war is won.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, the League of Nations Economic Committee made a survey entitled "World Economic Survey for 1934–35," and made a report, which appears in volume 2 of the economic and financial section, in which it developed its findings, country by country, but I wish to refer particularly to part of its comment on Germany. I quote a paragraph from that report:

> The regulation of economic activity of Germany proceeding rapidly—after the enactment of empowering legislation in July 1934—by the prescription of price controls, the rationing of raw materials and, on occasion, of foodstuffs, the compulsory cartelization of certain industries, the regulation of entry into the various industries and professions, the dismissal of young people and of those, including married women, holding more than one position, the shortening of hours and redistribution of employment, the regulation of profits, measures to control and coordinate economic undertakings and investments of all kinds, the encouragement of domestic substitutes for imported raw materials, prohibition of the opening of new retail establishments, banking reorganization, the registration of craftworkers, prescription of workbooks equivalent to industrial passports, and finally, on March 30, 1935, the expansion of the German labor front * * * for the control of production, trade, private finance, and all social and labor issues connected therewith. In a word, the whole economic activity of the country, in its labor, trading, production, and financial aspects, was placed under centralized, authoritative control and detailed regulation.

The series of events narrated by the Economic Committee reporting to the League of Nations cannot be without significance as we trace the development of recent events in our own country. Interestingly enough, Drucker, writing with reference to the subject in the End of Economic Man, said:

> The "Neoeconomic Society," however, is by no means immune from the effects of the interplay of economic forces, and it is indeed these forces that irresistibly push the totalitarian states into the road of military adventures and prepare their inevitable ultimate collapse.

Mr. President, we have before us a bill to which the attention of the minds of men has been drawn by virtue of forces and factors outside of and beyond the Congress. But, I fear, some have been so moved in anxiety to reach the situation, that there has been too great a tendency, it seems to me, to take any bill, only so long as we get a bill, in our effort to reach, and perhaps solve, the problem.

Whose problem is it? Did the Congress create it, Mr. President? Certainly not. But if the bill becomes law we most assuredly must relate it to every other law, to every other regulation, to every other Executive order outstanding and having the force and effect of law.

There is mention, in the quotation which I have just submitted, of industrial passports. In what respect, Mr. President, is there a difference between orders requiring such industrial passports and an order of the War Manpower Commission, itself set up under Executive order of the President, requiring a "certificate of availability," so-called before a man may leave a plant engaged in war production, and go to work in another, in a plant described by the War Manpower Commission as being within a critical labor area?

Mr. President and my colleagues, I ask you to try to relate your thinking to the all-over problem, not simply to that raised by the bill.

However, in our consideration of the immediate impact of the bill, I call to your attention section 8, appearing at page 5 of the report. If there be such a labor dispute in an industry, Mr. President, which might seriously threaten to interrupt war production—

> 1. The representative of the employees of a war contractor, shall give to the Secretary of Labor, the National War Labor Board, and the National Labor Relations Board, notice of any such labor dispute involving such contractor and employees, together with a statement of the issues giving rise thereto.

We must turn to section 2 in order to ascertain what is a war contractor. There, Mr. President, we find that a war contractor is one who has—

> 1. A contract with the United States entered into on behalf of the United States by an officer or employee of the Department of War, the Department of the Navy, or the United States Maritime Commission.

Or a contractor who has—

> 2. A contract with the United States entered into by the United States pursuant to an act entitled "An act to promote the defense of the United States."

Or, Mr. President—

> 3. A contract, whether or not with the United States, for the production, manufacture, construction, reconstruction, installation, maintenance, storage, repair, mining, or transportation of—

(A) any weapon, munition, aircraft, vessel, or boat;

(B) any building, structure, or facility;

(C) any machinery, tool, material, supply, article, or commodity; or

(D) any component material or part of or equipment for any article described in subparagraph (A), (B), or (C).

Mr. President, the war contract may pertain to—

The production, manufacture, construction, reconstruction, installation, maintenance, storage, repair, mining, or transportation of which by the contractor in question is found by the President as being contracted for in the prosecution of the war.

When the employees of such a war contractor are engaged in a dispute, and give notice to the agencies named, all such employees, having specified what the issues in the dispute are, must continue to work under the same terms and conditions for a period of 30 days. At the end of the 30-day period, they take a vote on whether they do or do not strike. If they vote not to strike, obviously they continue under the same terms and conditions which gave rise to the dispute of which they have given notice, and which led to the election. Mr. President, if they vote to strike, they walk out. There is an interruption of production. If there be an interruption of production, under section 3 of the proposed act, the President of the United States seizes that plant, provided the conditions mentioned in section 3 are met.

Then, Mr. President, if the President of the United States seizes the plant, under section 4 of the bill, all the conditions and terms of employment, regardless of their nature, no matter how grievous, which gave rise to the dispute in the first place, are frozen in statu quo.

So, Mr. President, the cycle is complete. One goes from section 8, around through section 3, from a grievance which led to a dispute in the first place, to where the men who complained of the grievance and who have given notice to the respective departments, wind up with the Government seizing the plant; and the conditions of employment are frozen.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURDOCK in the chair). Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. DANAHER. Yes; I am glad to yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Let me ask whether the Senator from Connecticut recognizes that, that condition having become fixed, thereupon another section of the bill goes into operation, and the War Labor Board can be appealed to to determine the issue upon which the condition was created.

Mr. DANAHER. The Senator from Vermont must know, I am sure, that I do realize there are other sections of the proposed act. But I am taking them up in the order of their incidence; and, obviously, I cannot discuss all of them at one time.

I have now taken a dispute through the stage of a strike vote down to the point where the United States Government has seized the plant—the point at which, by statute, we would freeze the very terms and conditions which gave rise to the dispute. At that point, Mr. President, section 5 has impact—section 5, on page 3 of the report. It provides that—

SEC. 5. When possession of any plant, mine, or facility has been or shall be hereafter taken under authority of section 9 of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, the Government agency operating such plant, mine, or facility, or a majority of the employees of such plant, mine, or facility or their representatives, may apply to the National War Labor Board for a change in wages or other terms or conditions of employment in such plant, mine, or facility.

Mr. President, a majority of the employees of the seized plant may join in such an application.

Upon receipt of that application, the Board may consider whether it will or will not grant the relief prayed for. If th Board decides against the employees, assuming for the moment that they have united through a majority in filing an application, they continue under the very same terms and conditions which led to the dispute in the first place. Mr. President, if the Board should grant an application of the operating agency of the Government—which may be the Navy Department or the War Department—whatever agency it may be—then, of course, more stringent terms or a measure of redress may be given. I think I should point out that at that the employer—the plant owner, the management—has no right to make any application whatever under section 5, just mentioned. So, from the time of the inception of the dispute, right on down through the cycle, and down through section 5 in the discussion, as I have submitted it, management has no voice whatever, and conversely, the employees find themselves bound at all times.

Mr. President, when the bill left the Senate, before the House acted, the Members of the Senate who believed that there should not be an interruption of production necessary for the effective prosecution of the war, had taken into account not only the possible seizure, which we would have authorized, but also, Mr. President, the fact that we would have authorized either management or the employees to seek redress of their grievances through the National War Labor Board. We would have authorized the Board to issue subpenas, and to bring the respective parties before it. We would have authorized the Board to decide the dispute. We would have authorized an appeal by either side. I say "appeal"; "a petition for review," perhaps, is more apropos. On a question of law only was the decision of the Board to be surveyed or reviewed; but, Mr. President, at least the right of review was preserved in the statute.

Now, Mr. President, for the first time in the history of American industrial relations between employer and employee, both employer and employee, so far as the statute is concerned, are being denied a right of access to the courts of the United States with reference to the subject matter of dispute.

Mr. President, I think it important to note that before section 8 is set in motion—that is, before the notice of the existence of the dispute is given; the notice which sets in motion the train of circumstances which results in the possible strike vote—there is one other applicable procedure, that in section 7. Section 7 is divided into several clauses—from (a) to (e), inclusive—and subsection (a) (1), particularly, would authorize the National War Labor Board itself to take jurisdiction whenever, on its own motion, it finds that the dispute has become so serious that it may lead to substantial interference with the war effort, or, Mr. President, whenever the Conciliation Service, meaning the United States Conciliation Service, certifies that the dispute is of such a nature.

But obviously, Mr. President, section 7 (a), subclauses (1) and (2), recourse to which is denied when the Government seizes the plant, are in conflict with the subsection (a) (2), section 8, which sets in motion the procedure resulting in the strike vote, but also continues existing conditions. Is not that a curious anomaly? Would anyone believe that a piece of legislation which had left the Senate in the form in which our bill was sent to the House could come out of conference this way?

Mr. President, I am not so sure that the need for legislation is so urgent that we must disregard all the fundamental precautions which have been set up in the statute law, and which have been subjected to decision by our courts, out of which a vast body of law has accumulated. Obviously, if it be the objective of the legislation to seize a plant where there is a strike, we did not need the bill at all, because the President has done that. He has done it on at least eight occasions. He has seized the plants, installed Government operating managers, and caused the plants to function. Therefore, Mr. President, if it were simply a case of validating past actions, the Senate bill most assuredly would have done so.

It seems to me that when our agents—for that is what our conferees are—met to consider the Senate bill which would have preserved the respective rights of all the parties and, at the same time, so far as the law can do, would have made for continuous and uninterrupted production of the plant, we would have been better advised to let the House conferees take this matter back for instructions, or ourselves report back to the Senate for additional consideration of the problem.

Mr. President, I have in my hand a clipping from the Evening Star of June 3. I wish to submit two situations narrated by the news stories there recounted:

DETROIT, June 3.—Production of Rolls-Royce aircraft engines and Packard marine engines at the plant of the Packard Motor Car Co. here was brought to a virtual standstill this morning by a walk-out of several thousand workers objecting to the upgrading of a few colored employees.

A company spokesman said the walk-out occurred on the midnight shift, affecting about 90 percent of the workers on that shift, and that many of these employees remained at plant gates and influenced the day shift to remain away from their jobs.

Incidentally, let me interrupt to remark that if this bill shall become law, at that point in a labor dispute where section 6 of the bill will have impact, any person guilty of influencing any day-shift worker to remain away from his job will be subject to paying a fine of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, in the interest of accuracy?

Mr. DANAHER. If the Government seizes the plant, of course.

Mr. HATCH. It makes a great deal of difference.

Mr. DANAHER. I said under section 6, as the Senator may recall. Let us make it perfectly clear. It is conceivable that some Senators may not have read the bill; but if Senators have not done so, let me say that section 6 does not have application until and unless the Government seizes a plant; and under the circumstances named in the statement of fact from which I read, if the Government should have seized the plant, the penalty impact would follow.

I resume reading:

"This was done," the spokesman said, "in spite of company, union, United States Air Corps, and United States Department of Labor pleas to carry out the Government's Executive order that there be no discrimination in the employment of workers in defense industries because of race, creed, color, or national origin."

He said that the dispute was not one between the company and the United Automobile Workers, Congress of Industrial Organizations, with which the company has a working contract.

There was no comment by officials of the United Automobile Workers, Congress of Industrial Organizations, Packard Local 190.

The dispatch says that the Packard Motor Car Co. is the owner of the plant. Under such a situation, with interruption of production due to a labor disturbance, under section 3 of the pending proposal the management loses its plant and the Government takes over and operates, and all those employees become subject to the criminal penalties of section 6. But there would remain no recourse thereafter to management—obviously a completely innocent party—even to petition for a redress of the situation which led to its plant being taken away from it. Meanwhile the employees are all bound. How are they bound? They are bound to accept whatever terms and conditions the War Labor Board orders for them. The War Labor Board thereafter issues such directions and such decisions as it chooses. Obviously, therefore, it interposes its will into the contract of labor between the employees and the management, which has been superseded by the Government agency. So the War Labor Board obviously is given what might be called an overright in every labor contract, in every plant which produces any article which may be useful in the war effort.

There is another item which is worthy of notice from the same newspaper:

ST. LOUIS, June 3.—Approximately 2,500 colored employees at 1 of 8 production units of the St. Louis ordnance plant struck today, refusing to work under white foremen, a spokesman for the United States Cartridge Co. said.

White foremen have supervised work in the unit since its formation in July 1942, but colored employees were selected this month for training as supervisors to replace them, the spokesman explained.

The colored workmen evidently are not organized, he said, and have selected no spokesman. "There is no one you can talk to. They just quit work and said they wouldn't continue under white foremen," he said.

The unit is the only one in the United States employing colored skilled and semi-skilled workers exclusively, he explained. The plant is owned by the Government and operated by the cartridge company.

The other seven units of the plant are not affected.

Mr. President, there is no definition in this proposal of what a labor disturbance is. There is no distinction drawn, by way of definition, as to whether the plant must be wholly engaged in war production, or whether the law would apply to a plant which is engaged to the extent of 20 percent in the production of an article useful in the war effort, and 80 percent in civilian production. In either case after seizure, or under section 8, all the employees will be bound, without redress other than what the War Labor Board chooses to give them, when a majority of the employees unite in an application claiming redress of the grievance; and then the Board may or may not act to their advantage.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. What did the Senator mean by the statement that the War Labor Board would have an overright?

Mr. DANAHER. I mean that if given terms and conditions of employment have created such a situation that a dispute has arisen and a vote has been taken, after which a strike has resulted, and the Government thereafter seizes the plant, the War Labor Board will fix all the terms and conditions on which that plant resumes or continues production; and obviously the employees are bound to take those terms and conditions, for if they strike they go to prison.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. With no right to appeal?

Mr. DANAHER. With no right to appeal except after conviction. Moreover, let me say to the Senator from Minnesota, they must have a majority of the employees before they can even file an application with the Board.

Again, as I assumed a few minutes ago, if only 20 percent of the employees are engaged in producing an article useful—that is the word in the act—"useful" in the war effort, and 80 percent otherwise, we find the Government stepping into what is essentially a civilian plant, if you choose. It is an interesting situation, is it not?

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I am anxious to have an expression of the views of the Senator from Connecticut on a question which arises from a reading of the conference report. It has to do with the term "war contract." Of course, the Army and the Navy are buying large quantitites of food, such as canned food and processed food of all kinds. They are buying vast quantities of clothes and materials of all kinds, because our defense organizations are now the largest buyers of these articles in the country. Is it the view of the Senator from Connecticut that this proposal would take in canning and food-processing organizations and every type of business, large and small, that is supplying defense operations with equipment and supplies?

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, allow me to say to the Senator from Washington that it applies whether the plant is large or small, no matter where it is, provided only that the plant is engaged in the production of—or is equipped for—it may not even be engaged in production—but if equipped for the manufacture, production, or mining of any articles or materials which may be required for the war effort or which may be useful in connection therewith.

I am reading from a sentence which appears eight lines down in section 3 on page 2 of the report.

So, actually this bill will apply to any plant so engaged, and it does apply to canneries. Yes.

Mr. BONE. The term "commodity" is usually a legalistic term applied to all materials except livestock. I believe that is probably the legal concept. So I take it from reading sections 2 and 3 together that we have here a picture of the application of the act to any sort of commodity which the Government might buy.

Mr. DANAHER. That is correct. There is no question about it, only so long as it is useful in connection with the war effort.

Allow me to point out further to the Senator from Washington that this particular section 3 is substantially—not exactly—but substantially the language which the Senate had previously employed, while section 2 was in the House bill. We just imported it over into this bill. As a matter of fact, there is no doubt that reconciliation of a few discrepancies, such as the Senator from Washington has referred to, may well have been made.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. HOLMAN. I realize that in drafting legislation under war conditions it is almost impossible to set up fair standards of equity, and so forth. But can the Senator tell me if there is any legislation which sets up a board of arbitration for the soldier on the battlefield, or in combat in the Navy, whereby he may appeal or ask for a change of orders in battle when his life is at stake? I think those of us at home who are called upon to produce for the men in the combat service must give up some of our liberties, as the men in the combat services are giving up their liberties.

Mr. DANAHER. There is no question about it. The Senator from Oregon is eminently correct, and every single thing to which he has referred could be and was being accomplished before any legislation along this line was proposed. There is no question about that. We have the National Labor Relations Board at this minute, which has jurisdiction over thousands of cases of disputes which have arisen under the National Labor Relations Act.

We have the National War Labor Board with hundreds of cases on which, as stated in a letter which was read by the Senator from Texas, it has acted since the President set it up by Executive order. If the bill should be torn up this minute there are media through which all involved, employers and employees, and others, might appeal for a redress of their grievances. As a matter of fact, under the bill which the Senate passed, everything which the Senator from Oregon said could and should, in my judgment, have been accomplished.

Mr. President, there is one other section which is interesting, and which I think we are pretty well agreed should never have been in the bill at all, and about which the Senator from New Mexico spoke a day or so ago. That is the section dealing with political contributions by labor organizations. What has been done by the House is to interpolate in the Federal Corrupt Practices Act the words "any labor organization." See section 9, please—

> It is unlawful for any national bank or any corporation organized by authority of any law of Congress to make a contribution in connection with any election to any political officer, or for any corporation whatever—

Shall apply equally to any labor organization.

Clearly, Mr. President, there has been omitted from that language any definition of offense against unincorporated associations of employers or managerial groups of whatever kind. I had already discussed this, and I think there is substantial accord on the point.

The Senator from Texas, and the Senator from New Mexico made reference a day or so ago to a future intention to do something about it by way of an amendment which would be wholly proper. Certainly it ought not to be in this proposed act without some amendment.

Mr. President, I wish to conclude in a minute or two, but first I wish to point out that S. 796 originally introduced in identically the same language in which it became the order of business here on or about May 3, was first offered by the Senator from Texas in November 1941. It reached the floor by a vote of 12 to 2 from the Committee on the Judiciary. At that time I was opposed to section 2 and section 3, and when later, Mr. President, which was about the 22d of April of this year, the matter came up on the calendar, I moved to strike out sections 2 and 3.

On May 3 the matter was brought up on motion of the Senator from Texas. At that time, Mr. President, we caused certain amendments to be made. For example, we required that the President shall find and proclaim the causes which lead to the seizure of a given plant. We struck out the words "or other cause." On the following day the Senator from Texas introduced a complete substitute for his original bill. That substitute, Mr. President, was debated. The references appear at page 3897 of the RECORD and the pages following. Finally, at page 3987, on May 5, 1943, the amendment which is now in substance section 7, was offered here on the floor. "In substance," I say, because, Mr. President, we had provided, as I have already said, for an appeal or review. We had also not carried over into S. 796 the reference to the National Labor Relations Board which appears in 7 (a) (2), but the House did. We struck out, on my motion, section 5 of the Connally substitute, which would have provided for injunctive relief through a court of equity.

Otherwise, Mr. President, the Senate bill which went to conference would have accomplished every single one of the objectives properly to be achieved in our effort to reach the situation which now confronts the country. To my mind, it is a matter of sincere regret that, as agents for the Senate, we could not have insisted that the Senate language be retained.

I have today extended my remarks from the original outline I submitted Thursday in explanation of the reasons why I refused to sign the conference report. I wanted my colleagues to know, with this more complete explanation, what the exact impact of this proposed act will be.

Mr. President, inadvertently I earlier failed to make my reference to the record as complete as I wished, in that I neglected to read from the Executive order of January 14, 1942, which set up the War Labor Board. I wish particularly to read subclause (c) of section 3:

> If not promptly settled by conciliation, the Secretary of Labor shall certify the dispute to the Board: Provided, however, That the Board, in its discretion, after consultation with the Secretary may take jurisdiction of the dispute on its own motion. After it takes jurisdiction, the Board shall finally determine the dispute, and for this purpose may use mediation, voluntary arbitration, or arbitration under rules established by the Board.

To summarize, we have reached the point, Mr. President, of giving statutory status to the National War Labor Board, with power to make a final decision with no review in the courts, and we will have a board over whose membership we have no voice and whose duties have not been prescribed by Congress. As the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] yesterday in a colloquy with me candidly and properly stated, the Board will still be subject to the Executive order of the President; having denied the right, as I pointed out, of management on the one side to appear before the Board and of employees to seek redress of their grievances, other than as I have indicated, since they have no alternative but to get certificates of availability, without which they cannot work, or else go back to work under conditions which they deplore and which led to the dispute, it follows that we have transferred essential, complete, final, and entire control over the destinies of labor in this country to the Executive. The basic problem remains unsolved.

I ask that the entire Executive order of January 14, 1942, be printed in full in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the Executive order was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXECUTIVE ORDER—ESTABLISHMENT OF THE NATIONAL WAR LABOR BOARD

Whereas by reason of the state of war declared to exist by joint resolutions of the Congress, approved December 8, 1941, and December 11, 1941, respectively (Public Laws Nos. 328, 331, 332, 77th Cong.), the national interest demands that there shall be no interruption of any work which contributes to the effective prosecution of the war; and

Whereas as a result of a conference of representatives of labor and industry which met at the call of the President on December 17, 1941, it has been agreed that for the duration of the war there shall be no strikes or lockouts, and that all labor disputes shall be settled by peaceful means, and that a National War Labor Board be established for the peaceful adjustment of such disputes:

Now, therefore, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and the statutes of the United States, it is hereby ordered:

1. There is hereby created in the Office for Emergency Management a National War Labor Board, hereinafter referred to as the Board. The Board shall be composed of 12 special commissioners to be appointed by the President. Four of the members shall be representative of the public; four shall be representative of employees; and four shall be representative of employers. The President shall designate the Chairman and Vice Chairman of the Board from the members representing the public. The President shall appoint four alternate members representative of employees and four representative of employers, to serve as Board members in the absence of regular members representative of their respective groups. Six members or alternate members of the Board, including not less than two members from each of the groups represented on the Board, shall constitute a quorum. A vacancy in the Board shall not impair the right of the remaining members to exercise all the powers of the Board.

2. This order does not apply to labor disputes for which procedures for adjustment or settlement are otherwise provided until those procedures have been exhausted.

3. The procedures for adjusting and settling labor disputes which might interrupt work which contributes to the effective prosecution of the war shall be as follows: (a) The parties shall first resort to direct negotiations or to the procedures provided in a collective-bargaining agreement (b) If not settled in this manner, the commissioners of conciliation of the Department of Labor shall be notified if they have not already intervened in the dispute. (c) If not promptly settled by conciliation, the Secretary of Labor shall certify the dispute to the Board, provided, however, that the Board in its discretion after consultation with the Secretary may take jurisdiction of the dispute on its own motion. After it takes jurisdiction, the Board shall finally determine the dispute, and for this purpose may use mediation, voluntary arbitration, or arbitration under rules established by the Board.

4. The Board shall have power to promulgate rules and regulations appropriate for the performance of its duties.

5. The members of the Board (including alternates) shall receive necessary traveling expenses, and, unless their compensation is otherwise prescribed by the President, shall receive in addition to traveling expenses $25 per diem for subsistence expense on such days as they are actually engaged in the performance of duties pursuant to this order. The Board is authorized to appoint and fix the compensation of its officers, examiners, mediators, umpires, and arbitrators; and the Chairman is authorized to appoint and fix the compensation of other necessary employees of the Board. The Board shall avail itself, insofar as practicable, of the services and facilities of the Office for Emergency Management and of other departments and agencies of the Government.

6. Upon the appointment of the Board and the designation of its Chairman, the National Defense Mediation Board established by Executive Order No. 8716[1] of March 19, 1941, shall cease to exist. All employees of the National Defense Mediation Board shall be transferred to the Board without acquiring by such transfer any change in grade or civil-service status. All records, papers, and property, and all unexpended funds and appropriations for the use and maintenance of the National Defense Mediation Board shall be transferred to the Board. All duties with respect to cases certified to the National Defense Mediation Board shall be assumed by the Board for discharge under the provisions of this order.

7. Nothing herein shall be construed as superseding or in conflict with the provisions of the Railway Labor Act (act of May 20, 1926, as amended, 44 Stat. 577; 48 Stat. 926, 1185; 49 Stat. 1169; 45 U. S. C. 151), the National Labor Relations Act (act of July 5, 1935, 49 Stat. 457; 29 U. S. C. 151 et seq.), the Fair Labor Standards Act (act of June 25, 1938, 52 Stat. 1060; 29 U. S. C. 201 et seq.), and the act to provide conditions for the purchase of supplies, etc., approved June 30, 1936 (49 Stat. 2036; 41 U. S. C., sec. 35-45), or the act amending the act of March 3, 1931, relating to the rate of wages for laborers and mechanics, approved August 30, 1935 (49 Stat. 1011; 40 U. S. C., sec. 276 et seq.).

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 12, 1942.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I intend to vote against the conference report for the reasons that have been presented by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER].

In my judgment, enacting such drastic legislation as is now proposed to prevent strikes during time of war in industries producing war materials is not justified without concurrent action in other phases of our economy. Instead of enacting this legislation, steps should be taken to remove conditions which have led to strikes that have occurred. I am not willing to indict as selfish and unpatriotic the working men and women of the Nation, however wrong they have been in striking.

The real reason for present conditions is that the workers of the country have consented to the stabilization of wages, but there has been no effective plan to bring prices back into line with wages. The workers of America have sons and brothers in the military service of our country on every battle front throughout the world. Their fellow workers and their brothers in the labor unions have spontaneously responded to the call to military service, and workers who have remained at home in our industries, with few exceptions, have conducted themselves with the full realization that they are soldiers of production. We must not overlook the fact that men and women in industries, as well as men and women in the military service, are also patriotically serving their country.

You ask why is it that here and there workers who are not selfish and unpatriotic have left their jobs—left them in the face of clear commands from Government agencies and even, in some cases, from their union officials, not to strike. It is not hard to find a satisfactory explanation for this extraordinary and confused condition.

The answer seems to me to be that our workers have in many instances been goaded to desperation by the sharp rise in the cost of living. They have left their jobs in some instances because they felt they could no longer stand being squeezed between their stabilized pay envelopes and the astronomical rise in the prices of commodities necessary to sustain life for themselves and their children. They appear to have become tired of talk and promises; and, in my opinion, the few strikes which have been taking place are due to the discontent growing out of our failure to take action. We are now about to take action against them, and to try to stop this growing discontent of labor, but we are taking no action to bring prices back into line with wages, or to stabilize other factors in our economy.

The rise in the cost of living for our workers, regardless of what statistics may show, has been tremendous. Of the three main family expenses—food, rent, and clothing—only rent has been stabilized. Cost of clothing has increased, taxes have become a real and increasingly burdensome hardship, and on all sides, cost of food has necessitated a substantial reduction in the diet that strengthens and sustains the workers and their families. This is the reason why there is restlessness today among some of our laboring people. They are seeking to obtain relief. To go on strike in wartime is reprehensible but to permit the price of living to increase for our workers without the imposition of equally heavy penalties and fines upon those who strike against the dinner pail and the meager comforts of our workers, is likewise reprehensible.

In approaching this problem we must realize that wages, prices, and profits are interrelated and must be considered as a whole. When we enact legislation, let us put a ceiling on prices and keep them at the level where they were before the war. Until we put a ceiling on prices and stabilize all phases of our economy at some fixed or predetermined level, we cannot, with clear conscience, put a ceiling on wages and penalties on those who strike.

If it is treasonable to strike in time of war, it is likewise treasonable to rob workers through extortionate prices or for industry to rob the public Treasury by exorbitant profits.

When we display toward black-market promoters and price manipulators the same vigor that Congress now proposes in dealing with labor, we will find the workers of the Nation as cooperative as any other group of citizens in helping to win the war.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, the pending bill has no doubt caused all Senators to feel very much disturbed, particularly because it seems that it voices more or less of a criticism of a large body of workers in the United States.

In my own State there are no miners; Delaware is not a mining State. If there are United Mine Workers in Delaware, I have not heard of them and have not heard from them.

Today I am concerned largely because the great number of workers believe that this measure is aimed at them. I know that the Senator from Texas says that it is only a war measure and that 6 months after hostilities cease it will no longer be effective. But the great body of union labor in the United States believes it is being aimed at them, and the great body of the union labor is not disloyal.

So far as John Lewis is concerned, I think too much has been made of him by commentators, by columnists, and by newspaper editorials. I think he has been given too much advertising. The people in my State have little or no patience with John Lewis. There is no doubt about that, and what I say is not intended to indicate in any way that I misunderstand the sentiment of the people of the United States with reference to Lewis, and the manner in which the strikes have been called.

When the bill came to the Senate, I, with many others, thought it was unnecessary to pass a bill authorizing the President to take charge of factories and plants in which strikes occur. In fact, many of us thought there was an implied criticism in the passage of such a measure. The President had already seized the mines, as he had the power to do. There were those who denied that he had the right. However, there are many in the ranks of union labor in the United States who are doing their part. I think that perhaps there is a tendency in America today to criticize a good deal anyway. Are we not even becoming a little critical of each other?

I remember when many of us, at least, even those who voted against it, felt the sting of criticism on Congress because of the so-called pension bill. I remember how unjust, unfair, and untrue most of the criticisms were. They were aimed directly at the legislative branch of the Government, and although the legislative branch of the Government has not been the only branch to be criticized, it seems to me that perhaps the pending bill, aimed partially at labor, as shown by the words of the bill itself, is an outcropping of the tendency to criticize each other.

It was not long before we found that the President was criticized, and that has not been such a terrible thing in the last few years. The President has not been criticized to the extent Congress has been in many instances, it appears to me, but recently I notice that the President has been criticized rather bitterly, the statement being he had sold out to or was afraid of John Lewis. That statement seems to have been peddled around rather generally.

Then after a while it became apparent that there was no connection between Mr. Roosevelt, as President, and the mine workers who were complaining because of their treatment. Then it was said that there was a secret understanding with Mr. Ickes, and that the miners were to get what they asked for anyway. That was generally passed around. Well, that did not seem to stick, and I saw by last night's newspaper that it was stated that the fine which is being imposed upon the miners is an improper method, and one which is likely to cause a great deal of difficulty. Even those who have been criticizing the President and Mr. Ickes now turn to criticism of Mr. Ickes because he is insisting upon a fine being imposed.

Mr. President, criticism of the President because of the labor situation is not the only criticism we have heard of him. We have heard his sons criticized. We have been told that they were not taking their part in the World War, that they were given special positions and special favors. A Member of another body—I have forgotten his name, and I did not try to remember it—made a statement of that sort in the House of Representatives, I believe. The statement was shown to be so unfair and untrue that it has not been followed up. At times other members of the President's family have been criticized.

Mr. President, it seems to me that Congress, the President, the manufacturing interests of the country, the agricultural interests, the labor interests, are all doing a great work in the war. I have watched vote after vote in this body, and I have seen those on the opposite side of the aisle and those on this side of the aisle join in the effort to make this a successful war. Whatever we may say in criticism, there is in the United States a working and determined American people who are writing history. They are writing the history of a great work being accomplished, of a great war being won.

When this war is over, and the record is written, the American people will not look to the criticisms which are made at this time; they will be forgotten; but the acts of the executive and the legislative branches of the Government, and of the loyal people who are making possible the winning of the war, from the soldiers to the civilian population, the sailors, the marines, and all others who are participating in the war, will be remembered as having accomplished something. The criticisms will be forgotten. The little, mean things being said now will be lost in oblivion, but the great accomplishments, as America marches on in its effort to prolong democracy in the world, to make it possible for civilization to continue, will not be forgotten, either by America or by those in other countries who are interested in the winning of the war by the forces of civilization.

That, Mr. President, is something which, it seems to me, we sometimes forget. We seem to think of this as being only a period of criticism. I do not think the present war is entirely peculiar in that respect. Some time ago an old friend of mine, a prominent Republican in my State, told me that it was his information that many leaders of the Republicans at the time of the Civil War were very critical of Mr. Lincoln, and at one time the feeling was so strong that they were almost ready to demand his abdication.

Mr. President, the American people have a right to criticize. In the Axis Nations the people do not have the right to criticize their governments. There is, as it seems to me, however, a tendency for us sometimes to overstate our criticism. A few days ago I heard a Member of Congress say that the President of the United States had sold the farmers down the river. I took the matter up with the Department of Commerce and I was furnished figures which are quite interesting to me, and I think there is no question as to their accuracy.

The national income from agriculture in the United States in the year 1932 was $2,354,000,000. In 1942 the income from agriculture was $15,480,000,000. The manufacturing interests in 1932 had an income of $6,227,000,000. In 1942 they had an income of $36,667,000,000. Incorporated business totals in 1932 showed a deficiency of $3,646,000,000. In 1942 there was shown on the positive side the sum of $7,600,000,000. Unincorporated business in 1932 showed an income of $4,849,000,000, and in 1942, $20,074,000,000.

There was a total national income in 1932, which was the year prior to the inauguration of the man who was supposed to have sold a portion of the American people down the river, of $39,912,000,000. In 1942 the total national income was $119,800,000,000.

Mr. President, there simply is no foundation for the statement that anyone has been sold down the river. But I wonder what the effect will be on our boys as they go into the various camps, as they go into foreign fields to fight the war, when they are told that everything is in confusion in America, that nothing is being run right. In fact, I do not know why anyone should buy Government bonds if the money is all being wasted. We are sometimes told that it is simply a case of the waste of the assets of the American people. But the American people do not believe it, because they oversubscribed the last issue of bonds, and they will oversubscribe the next.

Right now there is a problem facing us as to what shall be our attitude toward a particular branch of Americans, toward those who are members of union labor, but who are not members of an organization dominated by Mr. Lewis.

This week a committee of which I am a member had before it representatives of the American Federation of Labor and of the C. I. O. The American Federation of Labor representative was asked how many members there were in his organization. He said "We have 6,300,000 paying members." The representative of the C. I. O. was asked how many members his organization had. He told us the membership was approximately 5,000,000. That does not take into consideration other organizations not affiliated with or connected with the United Mine Workers.

Taking the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O., there are 11,300,000 men of the great industrial class of America, the great working class of America, people who are buying their homes. I know some will say that they are not saving their money. When I look at the total of deposits in the banks of America, as the deposits have gone higher than ever before in the history of the Nation, I know some persons are saving money. In one little bank with which I am particularly familiar, deposits have gone from perhaps $300,000 to in excess of $900,000. People are not throwing their money away. They are saving their money. They are putting it in the banks. The members of the various unions are among those who are saving their money. I do not know how many adults the membership of the two organizations I referred to represent, but I should think that since there are 11,300,000 members in those two organizations they must represent 30,000,000 adult persons. That is a tremendous force in America, not only from the standpoint of voting, but from the standpoint of the interest which they are taking in American institutions, from the standpoint of the men and women who are sending their sons into foreign fields, who are sending their sons to the various camps for training.

It may be said that this measure is not aimed at union labor. I look at the title to the bill.

The title was amended so as to read:

An act relating to the use and operation by the United States of certain plants, mines, and facilities in the prosecution of the war, and preventing strikes, lock-outs, and stoppages of production, and for other purposes.

What are the other purposes? What was the reason for adding that language?

Let me read section 9, which has been passed over rather lightly. I was sorry the Senator from Connecticut did not dwell on section 9 a little longer than he did. I read it:

SEC. 9. Section 313 of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act, 1925 (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 2, sec. 251), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 313. It is unlawful for any national bank, or any corporation organized by authority of any law of Congress"—

Why confine it to a law of Congress, I do not know. I read further—

"to make a contribution in connection with any election to any political officer, or for any corporation whatever"——

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURDOCK in the chair). Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. TUNNELL. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I merely wish to say—the language is not mine; I am not responsible for it; I am not for it particularly—that the language the Senator has just quoted is an exact quotation from the present Corrupt Practices Act, which has been on the statute books for many years.

Mr. TUNNELL. I understand; but that says nothing about labor unions.

Mr. HATCH. I know; but up to that point I am simply giving the Senator the historical information as to where the language came from.

Mr. TUNNELL. I thank the Senator. I realize the history of it; but I say that in bringing before us a finished product, a finished bill, I can see no excuse or reason for jumping from a bill which is intended to break up strikes in war manufacturing, to a political subject.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. TUNNELL. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Let me say to the Senator that the argument he is now making was made by the Senate conferees in the conference. We did not see the purpose in the language, either; but the conference was had between representatives of the two Houses of Congress, and the Senate conferees had to accept that language in order to get a report.

Let me repeat what I said yesterday—I do not know whether the Senator heard me—that I am preparing an amendment which will bring the employer groups into exactly the same category as the labor organizations.

Mr. TUNNEL. Mr President, the Senator does not believe the language as now contained in the bill is right, does he?

Mr. HATCH. I would not say it is not right.

Mr. TUNNELL. Then, why does the Senator want to amend it?

Mr. HATCH. I say I would not have put that provision in the bill, at all, if I had had my way.

Mr. TUNNELL. Why would the Senator change it, if it is right? Either it is right or it is not right.

Mr. HATCH. I certainly think that both the labor organizations and the employer groups should be placed on exactly the same footing and the same basis; and, with the aid of the Senator from Delaware, I hope we may yet accomplish that objective. We cannot do it all at once, I may say to the Senator.

Mr. TUNNELL. I understand that; but I do not believe in doing a wrong merely to correct it. That seems to be the situation in which the committee has placed the Senate. The committee has gone ahead and has insisted—or, at least, it has agreed; I will use that word—to the insertion of entirely foreign matter which cannot be excused on any theory on earth, except that it is a slap at labor unions.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TUNNELL. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I have read the report, and I have been curious about one provision contained in it. Perhaps the Senator from New Mexico can explain it for me.

Section 9 says:

> It is unlawful for any national bank—

As the Senator has suggested, that language is taken from the Corrupt Practices Act, I believe.

Mr. HATCH. That is correct.

Mr. BONE. Then the section employs this language:

> Or any corporation organized by authority of any law of Congress.

Mr. HATCH. That language also is from the Corrupt Practices Act.

Mr. BONE. Yes; but aside from some corporations with which we are familiar, corporations which have been under heavy criticism here—some of the special corporations set up to do certain governmental work—I think the Senator will agree with me that there are no other corporations organized under an act of Congress which amount to much. I think the late Senator Borah, and perhaps the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], following Senator Borah's activities, sought to have a Federal law of incorporation enacted.

What was the purpose of the committee in taking in those corporations; and what corporations did the committee have in mind when it said, "Or any corporation organized by authority of any law of Congress"? Can the Senator tell us what such corporations are?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware permit me to answer the Senator from Washington in that regard? If the Senator from Delaware will yield to me so that I may do so, I shall be glad to reply.

Mr. BONE. I am sorry to take so much of the time of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. TUNNELL. That is quite all right; I should like to hear the reply of the Senator from New Mexico, and I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The history of the language is that is was literally lifted from the Corrupt Practices Act. The language was contained in the House bill. It was adopted by the House of Representatives. It was placed in the bill in that body. As I say, the language was absolutely lifted from the Corrupt Practices Act; and labor organizations were added to it, as I understand. I ask the Senator if that is not correct.

Mr. BONE. Well, Mr. President, let us assume a corporation having the name—I select this name at random, and I may be in error in selecting such a name as a corporate name—the Electric Home and Farm Authority. Such a corporation might have been organized under the laws of the State of Delaware. Of course, I am taking merely a crude example. Let me ask whether it is the view of the committee that such Government corporations should be permitted to contribute to political campaigns?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Delaware will further yield, let me say that all corporations, whether organized under act of Congress, or otherwise, are prohibited from making political contributions.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, does the Senator know how effective that prohibition is?

Mr. HATCH. Certainly, I do.

Mr. BONE. The Senator does?

Mr. HATCH. Yes, and I should like to discuss it at length.

Mr. BONE. If the Senator wants to take an afternoon off, and entertain and amuse and titillate the Senate, I should like to have him take the time to explain to the Senate how much good that prohibition does. A bank cannot contribute to a political campaign; but it can contribute indirectly through its officers, and can find some way of getting the money into their hands. We have indulged in much "flapdoodle" in that connection. We think we are going to accomplish something directly, but we do not accomplish it either directly or indirectly. A man would have to be extremely dumb, I say to my friend, the Senator from New Mexico, if he were in a banking corporation, if he could not find a way to get some of the bank's "dough" into a political campaign. I have seen it done in my State. It is rather amusing to me, although I appreciate the honorable purposes of the gentlemen who wrote the language, and I have no quarrel with their purposes, and I say, as a lawyer—and the Senator is a good lawyer—that this provision is so much wasted energy on the part of Congress; because when the bank cannot make a contribution, it simply has one of the bank officials make it.

I remember that such a procedure was indulged in in a campaign with which I am familiar in the State of Washington. I think one bank was shown in the report as having had 22 of its officers make contributions—just one bank outfit—to the campaign of a candidate for the United States Senate.

We can write language such as this, and can flounder around in a tank of doubt and uncertainly until we begin to develop fins, but we are not going to settle any political issue by this sort of action.

Mr. President, the Senator still has not told me what sort of corporations he means to include in that language.

Mr. HATCH. I will tell the Senator, if the Senator from Delaware will forgive me for taking so much of his time.

Mr. BONE. Yes; I hope the Senator from Delaware will forgive us for taking so much of his time.

Mr. TUNNELL. Certainly; I am enjoying the discussion.

Mr. HATCH. I do not want to get into an argument about the provision. Certainly, I am not responsible for it.

Mr. BONE. No; but I desire information.

Mr. HATCH. I shall read the language; because, certainly, there seems to be some thought here that the language was confined to corporations organized under an act of Congress. I desire to explain the act; but if I may, I shall read the language:

> SEC. 313. It is unlawful for any national bank, or any corporation organized by authority of any law of Congress, to make a contribution in connection with any election to any political officer.

If it stopped right there, the criticism would be justified; but it does not stop there at all.

Mr. BONE. Let me say to the Senator that I am not criticizing; I am seeking information.

Mr. HATCH. Very well; but the language further says "or for any corporation whatever."

Mr. President, that language is about as broad as language can be; and I believe it answers fully the criticisms of both the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Washington.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, it may answer the criticism as to corporations——

Mr. HATCH. That is what I meant.

Mr. TUNNELL. That is what the Senator means, I take it.

Mr. HATCH. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. TUNNELL. But it does not answer the criticism I have. If, as the Senator from Washington has intimated, the language would have no effect, I should not say a word; I should sit down; but it is not going to be that way. This is a bill for a specific purpose, aimed at those who, we claim, are doing something inimical to the war effort; and we inject into it a prohibition against their exercising their rights as citizens. They may not contribute if they are a corporation.

Where was the committee's thought as to all unincorporated organizations? I do not know whether the Chamber of Commerce of the United States is a corporation. Perhaps it is and perhaps it is not. I do not know whether the Manufacturers Association is a corporation. Why is it omitted? Why are similar organizations omitted? Do they not contribute? Is it because such organizations do not contribute, or were they omitted purposely? I do not know; but I do know that every labor union man in the United States will take it for granted that they were omitted as a slap at him.

There are tremendous organizations which are not incorporated. I do not believe the Adams Express Co. ever was incorporated. It was one of the great organizations using common names, without having been incorporated under the laws of any State Are such organizations to be left free to contribute as they please? At whom was this provision aimed? I do not believe it was aimed at John Lewis. I do not know at what distinguished citizen it might have been aimed.

My mind runs back to a recollection of certain contributions made by labor organizations. It is possible that this is one of the things which have more purpose in them than appears on the surface.

I know that our friends on the committee from the Senate are shrewd. They are good lawyers. I think that they have paid too high a price. I think the House conferees have "put one over" on our friends. I think they "put one over" on union labor, because there is nothing against union labor as such. It is only against one particular branch; and I suspect that it is aimed at only a few in that branch.

There could be no more loyal citizens in this war effort than the members of the American Federation of Labor, the C. I. O., and other independent organizations. Why, in the midst of this war, must we, as a Congress, place on the statute books a deliberate attempt to alienate and separate that great body of from 30,000,000 to 35,000,000 good American citizens? Why is it done? Is it the purpose to place the workingman in America in a different position from that which he has always occupied? Are we going to make of the laboring man a separate class? We have done so in this bill. We cannot get around it. It is here.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] says that he will introduce a bill to correct the situation. One of those who have favored the bill is going to try to correct it. I think the time to correct it is before the damage is done. I see no immediate reason, aside from a political reason, for putting this particular provision in the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE obtained the floor.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for the purpose of putting a telegram into the RECORD? I do so by request.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. GUFFEY. I send to the desk a telegram, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the telegram will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

HARRISBURG, PA., June 12, 1943.

Senator GUFFEY,
Washington, D. C.:

Bethlehem Steel Co. Steelton plant, Steelton, Pa., on June 10, 1943, closed 2 blast furnaces, and the members of Local 1688 reported to work, they discovered that these 2 blast furnaces were closed down by the management of Bethlehem Steel. One employee asked why these 2 furnaces were closed down. They told them that was none of their darn business. Bethlehem Steel requested of these men to take other men's jobs regularly scheduled to work. The union grievance committee told management that this was not fair management of Bethlehem Steel. Company gave these men 5 minutes to get out of the plant. Before 5 minutes was up they had 25 company police to drive them out of plant. As soon as management of Bethleheem Steel Co. did this they reported to newspapers, accusing union of sabotage. I, as director of United Steel Workers of America, district 11, Congress of Industrial Organizations, believe this was a deliberate attempt by the Bethlehem Steel Co. to create public sentiment against organized labor, in view of the fact that the Connally bill is pending at Washington. Am prepared to bring a committee of workmen from this group to Washington to substantiate this claim. We are asking you to make known this telegram to the United States Senate.

GEO. MEDRICK,
District Director, United Steel Workers of America.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I realize that such a state of public opinion has been created in this country that it has become very unpopular to say a word in behalf of the men who toil. I realize also that so far as the votes on the conference report are concerned, nothing I could say could possibly have any effect upon the manner in which my colleagues intend to cast their votes.

It so happens that I have given a great deal of time to a study of the history of labor relations in the United States. It came about largely as a result of my membership on the Committee on Education and Labor, and because I was chairman of a subcommittee of that committee, the so-called civil-liberties committee.

Because of my knowledge of the history of labor relations in the United States, I feel that the Congress and the President, if he signs this bill, will have joined in committing a tragic mistake in the midst of war. Because I am firmly convinced that would be the inevitable result of the final enactment of this measure, I feel that I should place in the RECORD my reasons for my belief that it would be a catastrophic mistake.

We are acting as if this legislation were about to be placed upon the statute books in an intellectual vacuum. Such is not the case. The action which we take will affect the most complex and delicate of human relations, the relationship between employer and employee. It is as delicate, it is as complex, as are all the psychological motivations which go to make the human being complex. We are acting in this matter as though there had not been a long, a bitter, and, too often, a bloody struggle in this country to establish the hard-won fundamental democratic rights which labor now enjoys as a result of statutory enactment. We are acting upon insufficient grounds to justify the drastic step which we are asked to take.

In what I am now saying, I am speaking solely on that portion of the conference report which has to do with labor relations and labor disputes in plants which have not been taken over by the Federal Government.

Let me be utterly frank in this matter. I voted against the Connally bill as it passed the Senate because I feared the ultimate repercussions of comparatively mild action. However, if action at all is justified in this situation, Mr. President, it is justified solely, in my opinion, insofar as the plants are concerned which have been seized and are being operated by the Federal Government.

Unfortunately, the conference report does not stop there. It enters a field where men are being employed by private corporations. It is true that they are manufacturing products which are related to or are useful to the war efforts. Nevertheless, by this measure we seek to inject the plenary power of government into the delicate field of relationship between private employer and civilian employee.

Mr. President, the record made by labor since our entry into the war does not justify any such dangerous and drastic step. Labor's record of production in the war has not been exceeded in the history of the human race. There is a failure to realize that, month by month and year by year, we have been able to surpass every goal which has been set for the war-production effort. This result could only occur because men and women in this country have been working faithfully, long hours, and with excellent skill.

Time after time the Chairman of the War Production Board has announced that the goal for the past month for this type or that type of war product had been exceeded. In fact, combined cooperative, voluntary effort of management and employees in this country has been so prodigious that it has forced the Government to revise and to cut back contracts, because production has exceeded even the wildest estimates of the production men in the War Production Board. Yet, in the face of that record, in the face of the fact that those in the executive branch of the Government responsible for war production in this country have advised the Congress against the wisdom of enacting any such legislation as this, we are about to pass it.

The Secretary of the Navy, the Assistant Secretary of War, the Chairman of the Maritime Commission, the Chairman of the War Production Board, every member of the National Labor Relations Board, and the public members of the War Labor Board, all joined in a letter addressed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives urging Congress not to enact a bill which had been reported from the Military Affairs Committee of the House.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not wish to delay the Senator.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I know the Senator from Texas does not wish to do that.

Mr. CONNALLY. However, to be absolutely accurate, the objections which were urged were to sections 2 and 3 of the House bill, and not to the entire bill, because it was the contention that those provisions as originally written contained an invitation to strike. I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that the original Connally bill was approved by the committee, as will be shown by a printed copy of the hearings, which were held a year or more ago, copy of which I have here.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I was trying to indicate to the Senator that I am now urging rejection of the portion of the conference report which is not the original Connally bill—not the original Senate bill—but is that portion of the House bill which deviates from the principles and premise upon which the bill of the Senator from Texas was based, namely, that the Government would enact legislation governing situations in plants which it had taken over and was operating.

I say now we are asked to enter into this dangerous and delicate field of labor relations in such a way as to throw the weight and power of the Government on the side of the private employer and against his employees in plants which have not been taken over by the Government. I say that there is nothing in the production record of employees which would justify the action we are about to take.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, a few minutes ago the Senator from Wisconsin said very frankly that he had not voted for the Connally bill when it passed the Senate. I was one of those who voted for the Connally bill. I did so very cheerfully and enthusiastically, because I believed it was very necessary from the standpoint of the public welfare for the Congress to go as far as what was contained in the Connally bill. I think it was absolutely indefensible and unjustifiable for the Congress to go further than the Connally bill as it passed the Senate. That seemed to be the opinion of the overwhelming majority of the Senate. The House of Representatives proceeded to pass a bill based on an entirely different theory, not to insure production in time of emergency, but a bill essentially disposed to penalize labor and take away from it a great many of the advances which it had made over a long period of time.

Does the Senator from Wisconsin believe for a moment that any of the essential differences between the Connally bill as it passed the Senate and the conference report, embodying an entirely different theory of the House bill, would have been embodied in a vote of the Senate when this bill passed the Senate in the first place, or could it pass now except as being embodied in the conference report?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have no way of knowing what the outcome would have been. I will say that I think there would have been a great many more votes against the so-called Connally bill had it embodied the provisions which the conference report now embodies. But I was about to say, and I do not wish to be diverted from this point, for I believe it to be one of vital importance, that the responsible heads of all agencies and departments primarily responsible for seeing that the boys in the armed services, about whom we have heard so much, are adequately supplied with munitions of war—those who would be the first to be impeached if our men were to die because they had not been properly equipped and given a chance for their lives—those men have gone on record warning the Congress not to pass the legislation embodied in the portion of the conference report I am now discussing. I say to my colleagues that the essential provisions contained in the conference report do not materially differ from those sections of the so-called Smith bill as reported by the Military Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives, and against which these men responsible for war production have inveighed.

You are about to accept responsibility, my fellow colleagues, for disregarding the greatest production record ever made by laboring men and women in all the history of the world. You are about to act contrary to the advice of the men who are responsible for our war production effort if you enact this bill.

Mr. President, if I thought no ill effects would come from the enactment of the proposed legislation insofar as the war-production effort is concerned, perhaps my profound feeling of regret to see emasculated the advanced labor legislation of this country which has been won after so many years of bloody struggle and effort, would be one purely of personal concern. But if the action we are about to take tonight results in less production of planes, tanks, guns, and munitions of war, the responsibility will rest on just one group—it will rest squarely on the shoulders of the legislative arm of the Government. Such is the responsibility which you must take, my friends, if you vote for this measure; and all the hysteria, all the distortion of the true labor picture which has been presented by the press and over the radio, will not, in the last analysis, absolve you from that responsibility, for sooner or later the people of this country will know the truth.

The sponsors of the pending measure say that loyal labor should not feel that it is aimed at them. If, Mr. President, your father had been killed at Homestead, if your son had been murdered in Harlan County, Ky., if you had seen your wife and family go hungry in the effort to secure the rights guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States in the field of industrial relations, if you had participated in producing such an enormous quantity of war materials that those responsible for carrying forward the war program had had to cut it back, what other conclusion could you draw than that the Congress had acted against you?

Mr. President, I fear that this measure will not increase production. I fear that it will have a contrary result. I know that certain forces in this country—a powerful but recalcitrant minority of employers who have fought the national labor relations policy, by fair means and foul—are only hoping that the day may be hastened when armed force will be employed in order to bring about production in the United States. But I do not believe that forced labor, I do not believe that unwilling labor can and will produce as much as labor which is willing—labor which is voluntary.

In time of war there is no need to worry about our power. It is plenary; we can exercise it at any time we believe the use of totalitarian methods is necessary; but once we start down the road of force and compulsion, there is no turning back.

What will be your answer if, unfortunately, the fears which I have expressed concerning this measure should prove to be well founded? There is no other answer except the one which the Senator from Vermont is sponsoring—the draft of all the citizenship—and once you have adopted the Axis course, once you have drafted all the people in this country and forced them to work, what will be your answer if then they do not produce? The answer will be more force.

So, Mr. President, I say that the step we are about to take here this afternoon should not be taken lightly. For my own part, I do not believe that forced labor is as efficient, and I do not believe that labor under compulsion is as efficient, as free and voluntary labor. Yet, even in the Axis nations where government is not only all supreme, as it is in this Nation today, but is wielded by men who are utterly ruthless, there have been strikes. There have been stoppages.

A few days ago the Committee on Foreign Relations was enlightened by a Minister from a government whose citizens are under the occupation of the Nazis. Thousands upon thousands of young men, and older men, had been taken from their country into Germany, into the citadel of totalitarianism, and ruthless power, although those employees taken from their nation were under the absolute and uncontrolled power of the ruthless Nazi machine, they found ways by which to slow down their production, and yet ways in which they could not be caught.

So I say, Mr. President, without questioning the motives—for I never do so—without questioning the sincerity of purpose of all those who disagree with me here this afternoon, I fear my country, my Congress, the Senate of which I am a Member, is about to take a great and perhaps a fatal step, insofar as the successful conduct of war production is concerned.

If my attitude shall in the future be proved to be wrong, I shall be the first to confess it. I shall be the first to welcome an indication that I am wrong. If the record of production justified the action now proposed, if we are not getting sufficient war production, if we did not have enough war materials, and therefore we were forced to take this drastic step, I should not hesitate to take it. But I say, Mr. President, that an unbiased study of the war-production record and the testimony from those who know best and who are most intimately concerned with this problem show that we are not justified in taking the fatal step which is embodied in this conference report.

Mr. President, I do not believe that the totalitarian philosophy is sound. I believe that the people of this country who were reluctantly taken into war, have given the lie to the Nazi and the Fascist contention that democracy and voluntary cooperative effort under democratic leadership could not rise to the heights required in total war. So far as I am concerned, with no evidence presented to justify it, I refuse to give my acquiescence to the suggestion that democracy has failed.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I no more relish the experience of making comment upon this measure than I do the occasion that makes it necessary to consider the proposed legislation. It is well known to the Members of the Senate that this measure is now before the Senate upon a conference report which represents the agreement arrived at by the managers of the House and the Senate deliberating together upon legislation passed by the respective bodies, in the Senate the Connally bill, and in the House the Smith bill.

It also should be known to the public, Mr. President, that when Senators vote this day, or whenever they shall vote upon the conference report, they do not vote upon it by part but as a whole. They have therefore not the privilege of selecting one portion and retaining another which might be more agreeable to them. They have to support the whole conference report or to reject the whole report.

I think it is known to those who are upon the floor at the present time and to the leaders of the Senate upon both sides of the aisle that an overwhelming majority of the membership of this body is disposed to favor legislation of this general character, and that in all probability by a large majority the conference report will be adopted by the membership of the Senate voting upon the conference report.

Therefore, Mr. President, one has to make up one's mind as to whether he will support the conference report or whether he will oppose it, and by opposing it give to the American people and to the men in the armed services and the women who wear the uniforms of our country the impression that the Congress is either unwilling or afraid—and the latter is the accusation which will be hurled against us—to deal with any kind of labor abuse.

Mr. President, it is essential to the preservation of the processes of democracy that the instruments of democracy be regarded with integrity by the people, and if those instrumentalities allow themselves to be intimidated, if ever the members of the body politic place their political welfare against an obligation of public duty, the means of maintaining the processes of democracy are already corroded and there is justification for the charge of decadence against democracy itself.

Mr. President, the Congress has been indulgent with labor extremists almost to a fault, due to the reluctance that many of us had to transgress in a field where we preferred voluntary action to take place. In fact the Committee on Education and Labor of the Senate has been so indulgent as not only to be the subject of criticism but to cause the Senate itself to take away from that committee even jurisdiction over the subject of labor legislation, and I have been one of the ones responsible for and contributing to that attitude in that committee, Mr. President, and I say it without regret or apology.

Everyone knows that for some months the Committee on Education and Labor had been so indulgent in dealing with this subject that legislation of this character has originated in and been considered by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. Yet I think, Mr. President, that such a policy of indulgence has been a wise one up to this present time. I think that if one balances the good against the bad which has come out of that policy, the good will be found to predominate.

But, Mr. President, the time has come now for the Congress to indicate to the American people that it is capable of suppressing an incipient insurrection by a would-be dictator who cloaks himself under the guise of a leader of honorable labor, for every Member of this body knows that we would not be here on Saturday afternoon debating this legislation had it not been for the offense of John L. Lewis against the public interest and his defiance of the constituted authority of this country in time of war.

Mr. President, I am one of those who regard John L. Lewis as the most dangerous man in America, because he is able, he is plausible, he is colorful, he is utterly ruthless and unscrupulous, and as ambitious as Caesar ever was. That man is capable of immeasurable danger to the American Republic, Mr. President. There was but one occasion for his antagonism against the President of the United States, and that was the fact that the President was unwilling to be putty in his selfish and ambitious palm.

I made inquiry today of several persons with whom I came in contact as to what their understanding was about the so-called political contribution to the Democratic National Committee when the President was the nominee for President by the C. I. O., then headed by John L. Lewis—who gave it the only bad name it ever had. So that, in spite of the great virtue and character and unquestionable patriotism of its present president, one of the greatest of Americans, Philip Murray, that organization still has the odium of John L. Lewis' name to bear in my State and sections of the country, if not in others—I say I made inquiry, Mr. President, as to what the public opinion might be about that transaction. A great many persons, believing some of the columnists and the propagandists, said "Well, after all, Roosevelt is responsible for this man, because he has played along with John L. Lewis, and built him up, because he owed him a financial debt for the half million dollars he gave to his campaign fund."

Mr. President, I talked with several of those people. I said, "Do you understand that that was a loan, not a gift; and do you understand that every dollar and every penny of that money has been paid back?"

They said, "Frankly, I did not know that. I thought that was an outright donation by Mr. Lewis to the Democratic National Executive Committee, of which the President was the beneficiary."

When the President of the United States was elected with the aid of Mr. Lewis and his fine organization, knowing what subsequent events have proved about Mr. Lewis' character, I say Lewis expected to be the kitchen cabinet of this administration; he expected to be the power behind the scene, the uncrowned king of American policy.

The President of the United States—any President—does not need defense against such a belief. If he were worthy of the Presidency in the opinion of the American people, he would be above the suggestion of any such prostitution of his office or power.

But when the President did not elevate Mr. Lewis to such a place he incurred the undying enmity of an ambitious and disappointed man; and ever since that time, every dagger John L. Lewis could unsheath, every weapon he could uncover, every missile he could hurl at the person of the present President of the United States and his policy, John L. Lewis has thrown, regardless of the effect of that antagonism upon the welfare of his country.

Mr. President, that man went so far, in the elections of 1940, as to say that if the President of the United States then holding office were reelected by the democratic process by the American people—without soldiers at the ballot boxes, without any undemocratic coercion or intimidation that I know of upon the American people—he would resign the leadership of one of the great labor organizations of this country. That is a strange thing for a man to say: "If the present President of the United States is reelected, I will resign the leadership of this organization"—by implication admitting that the personal animosity would be so acute that he would either do a disservice to his organization by continuing in its leadership or to the country, perhaps, by continuing to exercise its power.

Mr. President, every Senator on this floor knows that John L. Lewis has been trying to steal the leadership of American labor from his worthier compatriots—and patriots—William Green and Philip Murray. Those men, day in and day out, have had to fight uprisings in their own ranks, uprisings perfectly natural in character, against the seductive persuasion of the ruthless and unscrupulous John L. Lewis.

Mr. President, human nature being what it is, laborers are just like all the rest of us. They like to get all they can for their labor. Naturally, they strive to do it—as do we all. But when Mr. Murray and Mr. Green were willing to jeopardize their own leadership in the public interest, when they had to put the strong hand of "No" before the claims of their own men and members—not John L. Lewis. He would not be willing to jeopardize his leadership in the public interest; no, he would come in and insidiously say to labor, led by those more honorable men, "Come with me, and I will get these increases for you, whatever may be their effect upon public policy or the prosecution of the war."

Mr. President, how far did he follow that course? To the point of open defiance of the constituted authority of his country, duly and regularly set up.

Mr. President, what about all the others who are amenable to the jurisdiction of the War Labor Board? Are they any less worthy in their claims, any less deserving in their aspirations? Are they any less entitled to any just award which may be bestowed upon them, or any injustice corrected? Of course not. I am speaking of the ranks of labor—not only the millions in the American Federation of Labor and in the Congress of Industrial Organizations, but all the millions in the railway brotherhoods and in the other magnificent labor organizations in this land of ours. They have submitted themselves in the proper way—in a patriotic way—to the constituted authority of their country. They may not be satisfied. They may yet be making their claims. They may be insistent in their aspirations; but that is consistent with American democracy, Mr. President. But they have not defied their Government in time of war. They have religiously kept their faith and pledge of no strikes to the President and to their fellow countrymen.

Mr. President, there are many farmers in this country who do not think they are getting all they should get for their products. There are many white-collar workers who are not satisfied with what they have obtained. All over this great land there are special groups that want more. But, Mr. President, they are not defying the Government. The members of the soldiery were getting only $30 a month. No doubt they would have liked to have had more. They got more by the action of this Congress, by the laudable efforts of the able senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] whom, I am sorry to say, I do not at present see in the Chamber so I can compliment him upon what he did for the soldiers. But, Mr. President, they did not strike for more. They did not say, "We will take our guns and go home."

No, Mr. President; they believed in the principle of democracy, which requires the democrat to abide by the decisions of duly constituted authority.

We on this floor, Mr. President, often have our individual desires defeated by the vote of our colleagues; yet how silly would be a Senator who resigned and said, "I will no longer participate in a body which goes contrary to my sentiments." We do not put a machine gun at the door and say, like the conquerors of old, "I will coerce this body until it submits." Many of us are lawyers or have been claimants in the courts. Because we lost our case, we did not resort to the jungle remedy of self-help, Mr. President. If a man had done that, we would not have modern civilization with all its refinements and all its strength.

So, Mr. President, that is the occasion for this legislation; and we all know it.

Some labor representatives are in the corridors of the Capitol today. Of course, they have a right to be here, but they do a disservice to the cause of labor in being here.

Let me explain why I say that, Mr. President. I hold in my hand just one typical letter on this subject from just a soldier. There is not a Senator on this floor, Mr. President, who has not received many similar letters. Here is what I see, Mr. President: An animosity growing so acute and so intense between the workers and the soldiers that, if allowed to continue unchecked, it jeopardizes the foundations of the Republic. For, Mr. President, I see coming the day, beyond even the war, when the soldiers will come home seeking the jobs they deserve. I can hear the evil and sinister whispers of the Fascists and the would-be dictators of America in their ears when they are unemployed and, perhaps, are suffering: "See over there? Do you see the factory? There is a closed shop there. Who are the fellows who are working? Why, the fellows who got $20 a day and who lived in luxury while you were in the grime of New Guinea or the Solomon Islands, in the Southwest Pacific, or mingling your blood with the dirt of another Flanders Fields."

If labor were organized to defend itself, it would not be unnatural to see the soldiers organized to defend their interests. Should there be not enough jobs for all and such bitter feelings as I have feared existed, then would come the danger of conflict and strife.

There are still many persons in America who would like to see trouble, and many who would be willing to agitate it, thinking that they would gain, upon the broken bodies of their fellow countrymen and our collapsed economy, the kind of power that Hitler has, which has come out of every age of chaos and confusion throughout the history of the world. That is not an illusion or a dream, Mr. President. Read the letters from soldiers and see how bitterly they feel about this subject.

I do not know whether there is any truth in what has been said to me by a citizen, to the effect that the Army and Navy have tried to encourage antagonism on the part of soldiers and sailors against labor. I have heard the charge made that bulletins are posted on the bulletin boards in the camps and around the naval stations, emphasizing all the strikes which occur, for the purpose of making the men angry and arousing their indignation against labor. I believe that to be unworthy of our armed forces. If it is true, it is a subject for proper investigation, reprimand, and punishment by the appropriate agencies of the Government. But, Mr. President, I cannot believe that the major part of this indignation does not originate from what the soldiers and sailors gather from contacts with their homes and from the common and public means of information and communication.

So, Mr. President, we have a situation in which the American people have turned their gaze upon the Congress, to learn whether or not every group and interest in America is subservient to the public interest in time of war. The proposed legislation which we have before us today confirms authority exercised numerous times by the President, to take over the factory or the facility of management. If we were considering a bill to affect only labor, and exempting management, I should certainly not favor it, and most Senators would not; but section 3 specifically confirms the power heretofore existing and confers a new power to take over any facility the operation of which by the Government may be essential to the prosecution of the war. In other parts of the conference report other provisions are made. For example, section 4 provides that the rules concerning the employment of the employees after possession is taken by the Government shall be the same as when the facility was taken over.

In section 5 authority is conferred for an application to the War Labor Board for a change in the terms of employment at Government-operated plants if the terms as they existed at the time of the transition are unsatisfactory to the employees.

Section 6 is the heart of the bill. Interference with governmental operation of plants is prohibited and made a penal offense. That was the Connally bill. I wish that were all of the conference report. I am sorry indeed that the House of Representatives chose to give rein to its indignation against labor—which I do not share, Mr. President—in matters extraneous to the prosecution of the war itself.

In section 6 it is made an offense for any person—

(1) To coerce, instigate, induce, conspire with, or encourage any person to interfere, by lock-out—

That covers employers—strike, slow-down, or other interruption, with the operation of such plant, mine, or facility, or (2) to aid any such lock-out, strike, slow-down, or other interruption interfering with the operation of such plant, mine, or facility by giving direction or guidance in the conduct of such interruption, or by providing funds for the conduct or direction thereof or for the payment of strike, unemployment, or other benefits to those participating therein.

In protection of the rights of individual workers—

No individual shall be deemed to have violated the provisions of this section by reason only of his having ceased work or having refused to continue to work or to accept employment.

Mr. President, when the Government operates a facility to produce essential materials for war is it a democratic right to encourage an interruption of work in that facility? That is what Lewis has done. I hope all labor will realize that laws against labor are like the laws against murder. They are aimed only against the offenders, and not the good, the loyal, the worthy, the honorable, and the faithful. Members of this body do not regard the law against murder as aimed at them; but were there no laws against murder homicide would become frequent in America. I am not offended because there is a law against murder, because I do not intend to violate it. I do not deem it a reflection upon me, or an accusation against me of designs upon the lives of my fellow men. Such laws are aimed at restraining and punishing the murderer and the gangster.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. TUNNELL. Would the Senator think a law was intended for him if a criminal statute stated that the Senator from Florida, if he should commit a murder, should be punished, and if the law said nothing about anyone else?

Mr. PEPPER. If a law were enacted which named one man, I would not regard it as of universal application, but if a law provides that anyone who commits a murder shall be subject to a certain penalty, I do not regard it as being restrictive legislation.

Mr. TUNNELL. But the proposed statute does not do that. It picks out labor unions and says that the commission by labor unions of certain acts shall constitute an offense when committed by labor unions, but not when committed by anyone else.

Mr. PEPPER. I do not know the offense to which the able Senator refers.

Mr. TUNNELL. I am speaking of section 9 of the bill.

Mr. PEPPER. I shall be very glad to come to that in a moment. As I understand, the Senator refers to the political-contribution section.

Mr. TUNNELL. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. As I stated a moment ago, I do not favor that section of the conference report. It ought not to be in the bill. It was an imposition on the Senate to put it in. It has nothing to do with the prosecution of the war. It is not essential to production in any sense of the word. It is entirely unrelated to the war, and I exceedingly regret that the conferees on the part of the Senate, under any circumstances, allowed that extraneous provision to be inserted in the bill.

Yet, Mr. President, reference in the same section is made to national banks. In the same section they are prohibited from making political contributions. In the same section corporations chartered under the laws of the United States are forbidden to make political contributions. I quote:

It is unlawful for any national bank—or any corporation—

And so forth. Any corporation is subject to the same penalty if it makes a political contribution. Therefore I do not think that the section refers only to labor organizations, when it includes other categories. However, let me say to the able Senator that it is extraneous to the subject of this legislation, the important object of which is to get on with production essential to the war. That section ought not to be in the bill. But if I had the choice, knowing that the Congress would accept or reject the measure in toto, of voting for the measure with that provision in it, subject to subsequent change—and I would join the Senator in its deletion by a bill—or voting against the whole conference report, I would vote for the conference report, in order to make clear that no one in America can defy the Government in time of war and not incur the prohibitions of the Nation's laws.

Mr. TUNNELL. Does this have anything to do with defying the Government in time of war?

Mr. PEPPER. Not this section. The Senator is absolutely correct with respect to this section.

Mr. TUNNELL. Is an unincorporated association prohibited from making political contributions, as are labor unions?

Mr. PEPPER. It is not. The Senator is absolutely correct in condemning that section of the conference report. The Senator from Delaware has not indicated how he will vote. He may feel so strongly against that particular section that he will vote against the whole conference report. I, too, feel strongly against that section, but I will not vote against the whole report because that particular section, odious as it is, is in there. Such is the peculiar parliamentary problem with which we are faced, Mr. President, in voting for or against the conference report.

Mr. President, I was saying that the heart of the bill is section 6. That is what I am voting for primarily. That is the Connally bill which the Senate passed. It provides that no one may interrupt war production after the Government takes over the facility.

There is another reason why I favor the Connally bill. I would not vote for a bill outlawing any kind of cessation of work. I would rather give the War Labor Board an opportunity to pass upon and consider such a matter first. I would rather give the Conciliation Service an opportunity to reconcile the differences between employer and employee, or between the Government and the employees before any law becomes effective. I would prefer that the President be given an opportunity to try to assuage the dissatisfaction of the complainants before the punishments of the law become operative. Section 6 applies only after a facility is taken over by the Government in order to assure the continued production of war materials.

Section 7, with regard to the functions and duties of the National War Labor Board, I also regard as extraneous to this subject. I wish it had not been included in the conference report. It is not essential to the maintenance of production of essential war materials. It protects all the rights which have previously been conferred by statute. For example, the rights of workers under the wage and hour law. I had a campaign in 1938 because I favored and would not retreat from the wage and hour law. Section 7, however, protects all rights conferred by the National Labor Relations Act and other acts upon the statute books of the Nation.

I also regard section 8 as extraneous to the conference report. Meritorious in certain respects, it is not essential to this legislation. I wish it had been left out of the conference report.

I have already referred to the section dealing with political contributions by the labor organizations. I agree with the able Senator from Delaware in what he said about that section of the act.

I invite attention to section 10, however:

TERMINATION OF ACT

SEC. 10. Except as to offenses committed prior to such date, the provisions of this act and the amendments made by this act shall cease to be effective at the end of 6 months following the termination of hostilities in the present war, as proclaimed by the President, or upon the date (prior to the date of such proclamation) of the passage of a concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress stating that such provisions and amendments shall cease to be effective.

Mr. President, this is war legislation, and not peace legislation. If the provisions in this bill are not appropriate to peace conditions, they should be, and they will be, repealed or appropriately altered by the Congress. Members of Congress can initiate legislation next Monday to strike out of this measure objectionable features which it now contains. I shall join with any Senator in deleting all except the heart of it, namely, section 6, which has to do with the maintenance of essential production for the prosecution of the war. That is what is important.

Yet, Mr. President, if word goes out from this august chamber tonight that the Senate rejected the conference report, American public opinion and the sentiment of those in the services will not make hair-splitting distinctions between section 6 and sections 7, 8, or 9. They will condemn Senators as being too much afraid of their political futures to dare to say, even to John L. Lewis, "Thou shalt not stab thy country in the back in time of war. Thou canst not lead any group of men into national disservice." Those will be the headlines, however distorted newspaper headlines usually are, which will break upon the consciousness of the American public tomorrow.

We have been told that the British have not found coercive legislation necessary. I believe that is correct. But, thank God, they have not had a John L. Lewis in Britain.

Mr. President, I am proud of the record of labor in America during this war, and I am particularly proud that in my own State of Florida there has not been a single strike in a war industry. That is a record which deserves the highest praise and commendation.

But can I say, because we have had that splendid record, that John L. Lewis can defy the American Government without violating any statute?

Mr. President, the American people would think there was not a vertebra in the backbone of any Senator who would say such a thing, or they would question his patriotism.

Mr. President, my only hope is that labor will realize that this is not a condemnation of labor. This bill is aimed exclusively and solely at John L. Lewis. It is not even aimed at those honorable men in the United Mine Workers of America. Their record has been magnificent and patriotic. However, Mr. President, they cannot escape the character of their leader. John L. Lewis has put them into opposition to the national interest. They have not lost so much time, but think of all the other groups, and the sentiments which have been stirred in them for selfishness by the example of John L. Lewis in his insurrection, which has probed into the very heart of the war effort.

Of course, we will be condemned whichever side we take in this controversy. As usual, partisans want people on their side exclusively. They do not want any rationalization of the issue. They do not want a man to serve only the public interest. They generally put a man down as being on the side of labor or being against labor; and, of course, all of us, whichever way we vote, will have one partisan group or the other denouncing us as strangling the processes of democracy, and trying to heap opprobrium rather than deserved commendation upon them.

Mr. President, I do not believe any other Senator will claim a more constant record in support of the interest and cause of labor than that of the junior Senator from Florida—myself. I said to a great labor convention in my State, "Gentlemen, labor is on the defensive. If you do not clean house the public will clean house for you." They did not invite my advice. They were gracious in the way they received it. I am no oracle, Mr. President, but I believe I am right about that. They talk about preserving the gains of labor. The only way that can be done, Mr. President, is by keeping national indignation against excessive abuses of labor's power from growing so mighty that it will overflow every effort to defend legitimate labor interests.

I am saying that a little more of John L. Lewis' conduct and there will be violence in the United States. A little more provocation and even we who are the friends of labor cannot save and safeguard labor's legitimate and proper gains.

Mr. President, I am giving labor some good advice as labor's friend. Quit charging these exorbitant fees for membership in the unions. Quit allowing certain members to abuse their power. Purge them, if you will. They do discredit to your splendid men, who are 999 and more out of 1,000 among the best of the Nation. But let Congress refuse moderate legislation, and the extremists will be here in our places, and the tide of their indignation will be such that none can stand against it.

We go into the next election, Mr. President, with this war going on, and with casualties multiplied more than a score of times, with rivers of America's blood flowing as it will in the next 20 months, and Members of Congress get up on the street corner, or at a public meeting, and try to explain the difference between section 6 and section 9, those present will howl and hiss them down. Then in our place will come labor baiters who may be the minions of a fascism, perhaps, that is against all democratic sentiment and interest.

This is one of those times when a little probing may save a dangerous operation later. That is why I am willing to take section 9. I am willing to take section 8, I am willing to take section 7, and others, in order to get section 6. We all know that if we will pass this law and John L. Lewis is properly handled, there will be no more labor legislation in the Congress, and there will be no more agitation for it. This bill is the best labor is going to be able to get, and we all know it. But deprive the people of this, and you will arouse such anger in the hearts of the American people, stimulated and encouraged by their sons in the service, that we will be back here in less than two more Saturday afternoons trying to find some bill we can pass.

Mr. President, as the title of the book written by Herbert Agar, from the great State of Kentucky, recently published, suggests, it is Time To Be Great. We may this afternoon not only be rendering a great service to our country, but I think we are rendering a great service to the cause of American labor. I am willing to face them when events are proved, with the record. Let time prove if that may not be so.

Therefore, Mr. President, because it is in time of war, with which nothing must interfere—and with an equal willingness to put all necessary restraints and prohibitions upon anyone who may obstruct the war—in order to preserve the gains labor has made, in order that those gallant men of the armed services who are today, tonight, upon the high seas, in the jungle, and upon the snow-clad mountain tops in the remote Aleutians, in order that those men who fly higher than the eagles ever soared, wherever they are, may know that in their Congress the processes of democracy still fearlessly operate, I shall support the conference report.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I have no desire to prolong the debate, although I am not one who shares the view that we should display incontinent haste in passing any piece of important legislation. What I am about to say has to do with a matter which may be somewhat collateral to the issue before the Senate, but I make bold to speak of it because I should like to have my colleagues think of it in advance of what is about to happen.

Some time ago, through the efforts of the Department of Justice, a concern was indicted for deliberately putting out defective communication cable which was to be used on battlefields. Let me assure my colleagues that I am not going to take much time; I merely wish to write this into the RECORD.

I am impelled to say what I am about to say because of the remarks of my good friend the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN], who referred to comparative sacrifices. I wish to draw this one comparison, and then I shall be through.

Businessmen in America in manufacturing cable to be used by soldiers on the battlefield deliberately, through their employees, permitted the Federal Government to become possessed of cable to be used in battle operations which would not transmit a message. That failure might be easily and readily translated into broken and battered bodies, dead boys, insane boys, unnecessary deaths, supreme tragedy in American homes, and Gold Star mothers and fathers. Every time I look at a soldier or a sailor in the galleries of the Senate Chamber, I think of that offense.

This cable, according to the Department of Justice, was required to possess certain electrical characteristics. It was supposed to have 2,200 megohms of resistance. By deliberately employing certain electronic devices the cable, which actually registered only 220 megohms of resistance, would test, when the Government inspectors were there, 2,200 megohms. But when it was used on the battlefield it would break down and fail to function.

The men who were guilty of this infamous act were indicted through the Department of Justice. According to the American press, they have now entered a plea of nolo contendere, which to the layman is a meaningless term. It is not a plea in confession and avoidance, as every lawyer knows. It amounts literally to throwing one's self on the mercy of the court. It is an admission that one is guilty of the charge in the complaint, and that he makes no defense in court.

I have talked to a great many soldiers and men who have had practical experience, as some Members of this body have had on the battlefield. If a boy in the uniform of his country, a soldier on the battlefield, should so manipulate a communications cable that it failed to deliver a message he would be taken summarily before a drumhead court martial, and would be shot to death.

There are soldiers in this body, and they are present today, and I wonder if any one of them would take issue with my statement. I look around the Senate now and I see several men who honorably served their country in its uniform. Is there a Senator in this Chamber who has had experience as a soldier on the battlefield who would take issue with the statement I have just made? I hear no reply.

I have before me a newspaper story according to which this firm says that it is technically guilty, but morally innocent.

Mr. President, I think in all the reading I have done—and I have done much of it in my lifetime—I have never seen a more peculiar expression. I wonder what would happen to a soldier who was taken before a drumhead court martial, a summary court martial, for manipulating on the battlefield a communications cable in such a way as to endanger the lives and probably cause the death of his comrades, and when he was brought before the court martial should say to the officers of the court, "Gentlemen, I am technically guilty, but I am morally innocent."

The case to which I have alluded is now in a Federal court, and the plea of nolo contendere is pending. That term, as I have indicated, is rather meaningless to the rank and file of people. I do not intend to prejudge this case, although I want to say that I shall view with a great deal of interest the ultimate decision of the court, because it will present to Americans this sort of a picture—and again I refer to the fact that discussion has been made on this floor about respective and comparative sacrifices. If these men are guilty of so manipulating a cable that its physical characteristics might result in the death of thousands of boys, and they are punishable by a fine or a short term of imprisonment, instead of being shot to death before a firing squad by the mandate of a drumhead court martial, the difference between the punishment, Senators, will be purely a geographical difference. The offense committed in a State of the Union here at home will be punishable by a fine, probably. Committed on the battlefield, where the offense is exactly the same, it would mean the death of a soldier boy.

Every time I look at a soldier in the galleries of the Senate I think of that, and I ask myself as a Member of this body why it is that a boy—he might be your boy, Senators—would be shot to death for the doing of a thing which a fellow in some State west of here can do with impunity and pay only a trifling fine, a fine which will be paid out of the treasury of a company with a large war contract, which reflects but loss of profit.

In the indictment and in the statement issued by the Department of Justice it is announced that the cable was cleverly manipulated, and deliberately and coldly manipulated—for, in the name of heaven, how could it be otherwise? Do Senators think any small-fry operator would manipulate it himself merely to be mean? If there is that sort of meanness, it can be asked just what should be done with it. In the report of the Department the statement is made that this cable is to be used for combat or communication purposes. That means on the battlefield. It uses the language, "by circumventing test and inspection requirements on Government contracts." It goes on further to say that this cable was "intended for combat service." That is not for service here in Washington, D. C.; it is for service on the battlefields where the blood is flowing, where American boys are being shot to death.

Mr. President, I am not one who is prepared to admit that some small fry, some little fellow, some inconspicuous employee, deliberately did this sort of thing. Such an assumption would do outrageous violence to all human experience. Is there a practical lawyer in this body who thinks an inconspicuous employee of a big firm would do such a thing merely for his own amusement? I do not want to be too mordant, but I have lived until I have some gray in my hair, and I think I know a few things, and I do not believe minor employees commit such an act simply because they find themselves in a frolicsome mood. They commit it because someone above suggests that they do so.

Where did the defendants obtain the instrument with which to cause a change from 220 megohms of resistance to a showing of 2,200 megohms resistance? Somebody supplied the instruments. The little fellow does not have such technical equipment. The Department of Justice said:

> This is one of the most reprehensible cases of defrauding the Government and endangering the lives of American soldiers and sailors ever to come to the attention of the Department of Justice.

The Attorney General goes on further to say:

> I can conceive of nothing more vicious or treacherous than deliberately supplying our armed forces with defective war material.

And this cable, Mr. President, was to be transported to our troops overseas! The head of the Department of Justice says:

> The department will push this case to a speedy conclusion.

I wonder what this "speedy conclusion" is to be? A gentle admonition of some sort, by a fine, which will readily be paid—a fine as a substitute for a drumhead court martial, and a body full of bullets? Mr. President, it would mean death for your boy in the Army if he did it. The offense then becomes a matter of geography, and not of morals. I think this incident presents one of the most astounding pictures I have ever seen. I doubt if in all American history we have ever seen more clearly presented a case where the punishment is a matter of geography rather than fundamental legal morality.

There are many good lawyers in this body. I do not want to take very much time; I am about through, but I wish some one of the good lawyers here would rise and explain to me why we should not visit the same punishment on a man at home for doing a thing which would invite death for the boy who did it on the battlefield. Your boy may be in the Army. Do you want your little lad to go forth on a battlefield and find that the very thing which might save his life has been manipulated by somebody at home for private profit? And the manipulator, instead of being punished by a summary court martial and being shot to death, is merely required to pay a small fine. Search your consciences, my brethren of the Senate, and find out just what sort of answer your consciences would make to you.

According to the indictment the conspiracy to circumvent Government requirements and specifications was very well carried out:

> The defendants secretly installed a transformer or circuit-breaker on insulation-resistance test equipment. It was commonly called a button box by those operating it. By secretly manipulating the button box during tests of wire and cable, company officials and inspectors were able to pass inferior or defective material which did not actually meet vigorous Government requirements of 2,200 megohms per 1,000 feet of field wire. By using this button box the galvanometer reading of the megohms of resistance could be raised as high as 10 times the actual resistance existing in the wire. Thus, wire actually having 220 megohms of resistance, by the use of the button box would test 2,200 megohms or more.

I care not, Mr. President, to go any further into this matter. I have occupied several minutes of the time of the Senate merely to call the case to its attention, and I was constrained to do so only because of the moral implications of this thing, only because I have consulted many soldiers, some of whom are in this body and are now facing me, and every one of whom has said the same thing. A boy who did such a thing on the battlefield would be executed by a firing squad. Now, when anyone is constrained to ask himself whether the sacrifices at home and on the battlefield are the same, he must, in finally achieving an answer which suits his own mind, his own judgment, and his own conscience, bring into the picture this consideration of geographical matters. You are guilty only of a little offense, which a court may lightly punish, if you do it in Podunk in the United States. If you do it in Tunis, you would be shot to death. If that is not a perversion of law, if that is not an outrage against the whole fabric of Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence, if that is not a reproach to any standard of decency you and I have ever heard of, I do not know where we shall find a better example of it.

Mr. President, as I speak now I am facing several men who went through battle experiences. I do not believe one of them would stand on this floor and say that a soldier who deliberately manipulated a communication cable, and thereby jeopardized the lives of his brother soldiers, would not be shot if he were caught at it. Therefore, I rise on this floor now to challenge the morality of our whole system of law which permits men to enter a little plea and to take a small fine or to be placed in jail for perhaps a day or two or a week or two or a month or a year, for doing the very thing which would cause the life of your boy or my boy in the armed services to be taken before a firing squad if he did such a thing where the fighting was going on.

What is the difference? In addition to defying us at home, Mr. President, they are infamous in defying our code.

I have written the Attorney General about this matter. I have his answer. I shall discuss it a little later, when the whole matter unfolds. But I think such a proceeding as I have discussed smells to heaven; it emits odors compared with which the odors of ancient Rome are as of the odors of Araby the Blest. If the Congress does not punish by more than a mere slap on the wrist anyone who has been guilty of doing such a thing—for doing that which, if done by your son or my son in the armed services, would result in his being taken before a firing squad and shot to death, provided what he did was done on the battlefield—I say that when death faces us we shall have to reproach ourselves for lack of courage. If my boy is shot for doing something which interferes with the successful prosecution and conclusion of the war, I want the men at home who interfere to suffer the same sort of punishment.

When we talk about drafting men, I wish to say, for the sake of history, since history is being written here, that I should be willing to draft property as well as men. I know of no moral right to draft our boys 100 percent, to take their bodies and to use up 100 percent of their bodies, unless we take 100 percent of the property of the country and use it up, if need be, and give back no more of it than we give back to the mothers and fathers of this country of the sound, healthy bodies of their boys. If there is any answer in the field of morality to any other theory, I do not know where it can be found.

The Government claims the right to take your son and to use 100 percent of his body; but if someone has a factory, we raise our hands in holy terror if it is suggested that the factory be taken. In God's name, Mr. President, is the factory worth more than the boy—when the boy is at the fighting front giving his life to support the right of the man to own the factory?

Some aspects of this matter are entirely too fundamental to escape our attention. They challenge our sense of fundamental decency and social morality. For one, I should be willing to take everything in the country to win this war; but the trouble is that up to this point we have taken only the bodies of our boys. When the time comes for a universal draft, I shall never in this body vote for such a draft unless property also is drafted. But there we face the decisions of our courts that we may not take the factory of a big fellow without due process of law and adequate compensation. Time after time on this floor I have risen to ask my colleagues what they thought of applying that theory to our boys? Neither the Government nor anyone else asks any questions when our boys are drafted. The Government drafts 100 percent of our boys' bodies; but if we attempt to draft the factory of the outfit that turned out that fake cable, see where we land—in the Supreme Court of the United States. Every lawyer in this body knows that to be so.

Mr. President, I have done what I intended to do in the beginning, and have taken even more time than I expected to take. I wanted to burn into the consciences of the Members of this body the thought that today in this country we probably will fine a man or perhaps imprison him for a few weeks' time for doing the thing for doing that which we would shoot to death the boys in the uniform who occasionally come into the galleries here to listen to our debates. That is an awful reproach to us; it is a reproach to high heaven itself.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I rise to speak very briefly in favor of the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. President, in peace we have decreed by legislation that poverty, hunger, and injustice are the concern of the Nation; that they involve the general welfare of the Nation.

In war, by enacting the pending legislation, we decree that the stoppage of production is the concern of the Nation. It takes no argument to demonstrate that. I shall not labor the obvious.

But, we are told, this measure will be a blow at labor, organized labor. I answer with the argument we have heard on this floor this afternoon, that certainly, those who abide by the agreement made by the leaders of labor with the President not to strike will not be affected or injured in the slightest by such legislation.

Mr. President, I do not pass upon the merits of the miners' contentions. Under the law, this being a Nation of law, they have their resort to constituted authority. I will say in passing that it is generally conceded that since John L. Lewis has become the head of the United Mine Workers he has achieved much good for them; their lot has been materially improved; but that fact does not justify a strike against the state, when the state is in danger or at war.

Mr. President, war is the great disarranger. Witness what the people suffer in Poland, Norway, Czechoslovakia, France, Denmark, Holland, Belgium—all the occupied countries. Witness also what the people in the Axis countries—Germany, Italy, and Japan—have had to submit to. All their rights are gone.

By passing this law we would protect our own rights.

Much has been said this afternoon of the danger in the post-war period of groups arising which would attempt to dominate the Nation. I agree with much that has been said in that connection.

Mr. President, our boys in the armed services are dedicating their all to their country. At home we want to make sure that we have the wherewithal to carry on. Strikes and stoppages of production challenge their right—our boys' right—to have the wherewithal; strikes and stoppages endanger the very life of America.

This is war. Ninety-nine percent of the members of labor do not need this law. A fraction of 1 percent do. Most of our citizens are law-abiding. But we have laws to enforce penalties against those who violate the law. The others of us want those laws.

Mr. President, I desire to say that in my humble opinion labor wants this law. I have had the most remarkable experience in my service in Congress. Heretofore, in the more than 4½ years that I have been here, when great issues have been before the Senate, I have received letters pertaining to them from the rank and file of all our people; but on the present issue practically all the letters I have received have been from the heads of unions who denounce such legislation—with this exception: The other letters I have received have come from the mothers and the wives of union men and from the boys in the armed services, all of whom are in favor of nonstrike legislation.

Today we heard that a Member of this body had received a report, made to him by his son, about how approximately 40,000 soldiers feel on this subject. I must say that their opinion does not determine my action in the matter. I have to weigh this matter solely in the interest of the public welfare.

Mr. President, if there is any place in the United States which calls for balanced thinking it is the Senate of the United States. There is no place here for emotionalism. This is the place for thinking things through.

My distinguished colleague stated that he feared the consequences if this legislation were enacted. I have no such fear if the legislation passes; but I do have a fear if this bill does not become law.

Many reasons have been given today on this floor in substantiation of the fear which has been expressed as to what would happen if the conference report were not adopted. I shall not repeat thos reasons. The country is awake to the situation; but, in spite of pressure for the passage of this bill, and in spite of the pressure of labor union heads, including William Green, who threatens to "get" any Member of Congress who votes for this bill, it is the primary purpose of every Member of the Senate to disregard such threats, as I know Senators will, and think this thing through.

To repeat, our boys in the services are dedicating their all to their country. At home we must make sure that they have the wherewithal to carry on. Strikes and stoppages of production challenge their right to have the wherewithal, and endanger the very life of America.

The letters and this information which I have indicate that labor wants this bill enacted into law. I have just returned from the State of Wisconsin. My information is substantiated by the Gallup poll, which has gone into union labor and other labor. Mr. President, that gives me a glow within. That gives me a faith in the substantiality, understanding, and loyalty of all Americans.

I am one of those who do not fear the next election. Of course, the office of Senator has its fine features; but the people will decree whether any Member of Congress shall or shall not return. That causes no fear in me. There is always plenty to do as long as one has health and life.

Mr. President, I do not believe that the leaders who have written represent the heart and core of American labor. I have been a workingman. I have worked at many manual jobs in days gone by. I have been a lumberjack and a painter of houses. I have sold books, peddled papers, sold insurance, driven express wagons, worked as a cub reporter, and clerked in stores. All of this was before I became a practicing attorney. If I turn the hands of the clock back, and in my mind put myself in any one of those jobs, if I assume that my country is at war, I put myself in the identical position in which millions of men in this country are today. I ask myself, "Would I strike against the Government?" The answer is, "No." That is the answer of 99 percent of the workers of this country. They are loyal Americans. To those who threaten I say, advisedly, that "if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch."

I felt that the right of review, as we passed the bill in the Senate, might have remained in the bill; but the conferees on the part of both Houses thought otherwise. We must realize that this bill is only a war measure. Judging from the past, labor certainly has no grounds to doubt that justice will be done by this Government. All America has been labor conscious. Some of its leaders are doing a disservice to the great majority of American laboring men.

We are charged with knowledge of the danger to our country from shut-downs. There is much that we cannot reveal on the floor of the Senate. Our country's welfare must be our first concern, and we must manifest the same courage in the defense of the home front as our boys manifest on the battlefront. There is nothing in this bill which brands organized labor as disloyal. More than 99 percent of labor has proved its loyalty. Labor's sons, to the number of more than 1,000,000, are in the armed services of our country. Their mothers have written to me on this subject. It is those sons, and the fathers of those sons, who have voted in the recent poll in favor of outlawing strikes. No one questions the fact that the 99 percent have performed a miracle. I have heard the job admirably described by my colleague [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. Yes; a miracle has been performed. Why? Because, when Pearl Harbor came and went, the something called cooperation entered into the heart, mind, and soul of America—not only labor, but management; not only management, but the farmer. We all "went to town," except a very small percentage. That was the time for this Government to define a definite labor policy, but that was not done. From month to month the bills lay in committees, and as a result we face the present condition. Had we done the thing that should have been done after Pearl Harbor, we would not face this crisis today. We would not have our boys, by the tens of millions, in and out of the service, questioning why we hesitate to do the obvious thing, the necessary thing, the patriotic thing, the loyal thing.

To repeat, we are charged with knowledge of the danger to our country in shut-downs. There is much that I cannot reveal. Our country's welfare must come first. We must manifest the same courage in the defense of the home front that our boys manifest on the battle front. There is nothing in the bill which brands organized labor as disloyal. I question no Senator's vote on this measure. Every Senator must decide how he will vote. This is a critical period in the life of our country. Let each Senator's conscience be his guide. Let him fear neither God, man, nor the devil when he decides how he will vote; and under no circumstances let him fear the men who would falsely lead organized labor in this country.

It is easy to make loose and impassioned appeals; but there is only one issue, and that issue is, Are strikes justifiable in time of war in war plants? Let me repeat that: Are strikes justifiable in time of war in war plants? If we answer that question in the affirmative, then I assume we would say that strikes do not impair the national safety. Mr. President, when this war is over it will be revealed that shut-downs have cost American lives. I need not say what that will mean when the boys come back. I am only hoping and praying to God that there will be no more shut-downs causing losses to our boys in the service.

When we enacted the Selective Service Act we inducted the sterling youth of our Nation into the armed services without their consent. Their pay, as compared with that of the average laborer, is considerably less. We know that the losses in the American armed forces so far have been in excess of 65,000 in wounded, prisoners, and killed. Our boys are offering their lives in the defense of their country and in the defense of the rights and liberties of our people, including—and I say this advisedly—the rights achieved by labor. In my humble opinion the enactment of this bill would protect the acquired rights of labor.

If Congress should fail to enact the bill, what would happen? We would have the Austin-Wadsworth bill in our laps within a week. If because of strikes we do not get the supplies to our boys there will be more lives lost. We want no more Bataans and Corregidors where our men failed because they did not have the wherewithal to defend themselves. I know that labor does not want any more Bataans or Corregidors. What we need in this country is a little of the old-fashioned spirit of cooperation.

I digress here briefly to tell of an incident of the last war. In France, in the last war when our boys were defending a line, over yonder was another line which was held by the Germans. A regiment or battalion of our boys were looked after by a priest, one who worked with them, one who lived with them, one who succored them, and as they were dying he administered the Last Sacrament. He was one who went out in rain or sunshine and cared for the wounded. Then one day, Mr. President, as he was in between the lines looking after the wounded he "got his." The boys carried him back of the lines. As he lay dying, with the boys he loved around him, he whispered in Latin "Co-operari." His last words were "Co-operari."

Mr. President, there are those in this country who do not understand the meaning of that word. They have built themselves up by creating class hatred, divisions, and groups. That is what I do not want to see in the post-war period. That is the way Hitler won his big battle. Divide and conquer was his technique. It was true not only in Germany, but after he had Germany under his thumb he applied his technique to the world.

Mr. President, labor in this country has done the most tremendous job in all history in the way of cooperation. So have the farmers and businessmen—all Americans. But there is 1 percent which has not, and that 1 percent is the element which has thrown the dynamite into this picture, and is creating prejudice and misunderstanding toward labor. This measure would wipe that out. It would make that 1 percent innocuous. It would put that 1 percent where it belongs, especially during the time of war.

Mr. President, I repeat we want no more Bataans or Corregidors, where our men will not have the necessary materials of war. We want more Midways, more Tunisias, more Attus, and more Pantellerias, where our boys had what was necessary. At all these places the boys had food, weapons, and matériel, but at Bataan and Corregidor they did not have them.

Mr. President, who is the true friend of labor? I ask that question advisedly. I will tell you. He is the man who generally himself has labored and who appreciates the problems of labor. He is one who believes in labor's rights to collective bargaining, a living wage, reasonable hours, the right to unionize, the right to strike, except in wartime, and against the Government. He is one who believes in improving the working conditions of the laborer. The true friend of labor is he who dares to speak out and tell labor it should know that during wartime strikes, sit-downs, and slow-downs are un-American. He is one who condemns racketeering in labor as well as racketeering in management. The true friend of labor is one who does not hesitate to call a spade a spade.

Mr. President, labor does not want any man in the Congress of the United States to be a representative of a segment of society. Labor wants each Member of Congress to represent the whole commonwealth, the whole group. When he decides how to vote, labor wants him to make his decision on the basis of what is best for the general welfare.

I believe that a great many persons in this country misunderstand labor. Labor is not dumb. It is not in favor of extortion or racketeering. That is done only when a bad man comes into a position of authority. Labor wants to clean its own house. I speak advisedly about that. Frankly, many who have talked to me want an opportunity to clean up conditions. I say that it is our duty to give them a chance to see that they do the job themselves. But we are at war. The safety of the whole country is at stake. Its safety, its liberties, and its values are at stake. No, we cannot hesitate. Mr. President, I agree with the statement which has been made that 99 percent and more of the labor element of the country is patriotic, loyal, and dependable. But there are always termites. We need to get rid of the termites. Labor knows that its own blood, sons, and daughters, are engaged in this war. Not so long ago I saw some 12,000 of our boys embark on 1 ship. They were the sons of the rich, the poor, the sons of the miners—all representing their respective States of the Nation. I saw girls walk up and enter that ship. They were nurses. If we were to take a poll of the group—and I took a poll of some of them—we would find out how they feel on this subject.

Mr. President, labor, Senators, and Representatives in Congress belong to the same union, as was stated on the floor by the distinguished Senator from Utah. It is the Federal Union. It is the Republic. Most of us because of the fact we were born in this country received a certificate of citizenship, a union card in the Federal Union. Heretofore most of us never did anything in the nature of sacrifice or service for the country. We have been living in God's country. Now that our country is in trouble we are awakening to the fact that these freedoms of ours did not just come about like Topsy; they did not just happen. It took centuries and centuries, as well as the sacrifice on the part of countless thousands of human beings to bring about the Republic. We know now that eternal vigilance is not only the price of liberty but that it is the price of maintaining and retaining liberty. Labor knows that, and every laboring man in America is telling us to do what our conscience tells us to do for our country. The Republic first. The cause of America is greater than any group or segment thereof. When we benefit the whole, we benefit the segment.

May we all be able to say:

My Country,
Emblem of man's mastery,
Symbol of man's accomplishments,
Leader of nations.
To that great goal, where all men shall be free—
Free of hatred, of group strife.

To thee, my Country,
We of this generation
Pledge we will transmit
Unmarred to our children
The freedom and democracy we have received.

A. W.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I have never entertained a thought that was not what I believed to be for the good of my adopted country, and I shall always approach every question and every subject matter I have to consider from that particular point of view.

I had expected to speak at length on the conference report today, but the hour is late, and there are other Senators who desire to speak, and I shall make my remarks as brief as possible. I hope they will occupy not more than 5 minutes.

Mr. President, the conference report which we are now considering is one of the utmost importance and one the ramifications of which will have a profound effect not only upon labor relations in America during the present emergency—and probably beyond—but also upon the American system of free enterprise and every other aspect of the economic life of our Nation.

The distinguished and able junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER], a member of the conference committee, who did not sign the report, has discussed the matter in some detail on the floor of the Senate during the last 2 days. I was deeply impressed by his description of the broad and dangerous grants of power which the report contains. The able Senator from Connecticut has made it clear that the powers and procedures embodied in this report stand as a constant and unnecessary threat to the American economic system of free enterprise—the system which has made and kept us the most powerful and progressive of all nations.

Mr. President, I was in Germany in 1928, the guest of the labor organizations of that country, After traveling through Germany with the labor representatives of practically every industrial unit of any importance in Germany, I recall very clearly they said they were sorry American workmen were not all members of trade-unions. They said every man in every important industrial job in Germany was a member of a union. I was informed that they could go to the Reichstag in the morning, and in the evening a proposal they were espousing would have been passed, Hindenburg would sign it, and it would be a law.

I recall very vividly what I said to my informant, namely, "Who is coming after Hindenburg?" No one had ever heard of Hitler. We also know that as to legislation relating to labor, the employing class are very busy seeking to set labor in its place, and Hitler came along and did the job for them.

Mr. President, shortly after we became engaged in the present conflict, I addressed, at one of the principal industrial works in the city of Pittsburgh, a group of the most productive and skilled workmen in America.

At that time, prices had begun to rise; the cost of living was going up; labor was growing restless under the pressure of prevailing economic tendencies. I stated at that time that no labor issue, no industrial grievance, and no employment problem should, for the duration of the war, be seized upon as a reason for stopping work—even for a split second. I made it clear then that, in my opinion, every industrial dispute should be settled by mediation, conciliation, or arbitration. My sentiment in regard to this matter has not changed, and I reiterate it on the floor of the Senate.

I also wish to say that I am one of those who for 10 years have advocated strongly that there must be no strikes against the Government, and I continue to hold that opinion to this very day.

After I made my statement in Pittsburgh, organized labor later came forward with its "no strike" pledge—a pledge which the recognized leaders of labor have, with but one exception, firmly and honorably adhered to. Labor has shown great respect for law and order. It has cooperated to its full capacity in the various undertakings of our Government. It has assumed and discharged its responsibility as American citizens in a worthy and commendable way.

Mr. President, in connection with references to work stoppages, let me state what the Director of Conciliation of the Department of Labor informed me on this subject. He said that the time lost because of all work stoppages, from Pearl Harbor to the 1st of May 1943, had amounted to only five one-hundredths of 1 percent of the time worked in industry. That record speaks for itself.

Mr. President, on the farm, in the factories, in the mines, and in the mills, the American workman has achieved records of production which amaze the world—records of production which have made inexorably clear that the United Nations will achieve the final victory in the great military struggle in which we are now engaged.

Mr. President, it is my belief that the American workman is entitled to a more worthy consideration than the pending report would accord him. This instrument will achieve nothing in the way of increased production, and it will achieve nothing in the way of further cooperation in the war effort. The rank and file of the American people cherish above all things individual right and freedom of enterprise. When rights are undermined or destroyed, initiative and incentive are blunted, and productive effort lags.

Mr. President, it is my sincere belief that the bill before us would contribute nothing to the security and protection of America or its people. I shall, therefore, vote to reject the conference report.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, I rise not to make a speech but to ask a question of some member of the conference committee about a matter which is not yet clear to me.

When the Connally bill passed the Senate it contained, at the end of the section which defined the powers of the National War Labor Board, which is section 6 in the bill, the following language:

> The decision of the Board, including particularly its interpretation of the provisions of said Emergency Flood Control Act of 1942, and said act of October 2, 1942, shall be final, except as it may be subject to review by the court on questions of law.

That was adopted by the Senate. I understand that the conferees receded from that language, and I should like to ask some member of the committee what is the effect of such action?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, it is growing late, and I regret that the Senator has withheld his question until now.

Mr. GREEN. I may say in reply that I have been trying in vain to obtain the floor through most of the day.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will respond so far as I am able to do so. There was no provision whatever in the House bill on the subject. It is true that the Senate bill did contain that clause, which was really a limitation to questions of law. The conferees struck out that provision on the ground that this was a summary measure, it was a wartime measure, it was an emergency measure. They did not care to invite appeals to the courts, and delays, which in the case of the National Labor Relations Act have averaged 232 days from the time the Board took jurisdiction with respect to cases until they were finally decided in the courts.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. GREEN. I think I have the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. I hope the Senator from Rhode Island will yield.

Mr. GREEN. I shall be glad to yield, but I think the Senator should ask the one who has the floor to yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I do not care to inquire.

Mr. CONNALLY. I hope the lateness of the hour will not in any wise ruffle any feelings or sensibilities as between the Senator from Rhode Island on the one hand the Senator from Vermont on the other.

Mr. President, a letter was received from the War Labor Board pointing out that out of 746 cases decided by the Board, only in 1 case was it sought to go to the courts, and in that case the appeal was dismissed. The Board inveighed against that invitation to resort to the courts, and said that their decisions would be impeded, as well as their usefulness as a board impaired.

Mr. President, on any great fundamental question the Constitution protects the owner, and if a taking over by the President should do any injury to a man's property, the constitutional provision that no one's property shall be taken without due compensation would apply and he could, in the ordinary course, assert his rights and maintain them. That is the view of the conferees.

Mr. GREEN. So far as I can make out the provision is unconstitutional, but it is expedient.

Mr. CONNALLY. No, I do not think it is unconstitutional.

Mr. GREEN. The Senator just said that it might violate the Constitution.

Mr. CONNALLY. No, I said that if the Board in the exercise of its powers should exceed its authority and do something to a man's property which was not legal and constitutional, he could go into the court and secure damages and redress.

Mr. GREEN. The provision which was voted by the Senate secures to the parties in interest their constitutional right of appeal to the court, and its elimination is equivalent to denying them that right, so far as the law can deny it. I, of course, agree that the law cannot deny it, but the law becomes unconstitutional then.

Mr. CONNALLY. If that is the Senator's view, of course, he will be governed by it.

Mr. GREEN. I wanted to find out the view of the conferees, because that is a dilemma which I thought they must have considered.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have undertaken to give the Senator the views of the conferees as best I can.

Mr. GREEN. Did they regard the War Labor Board as a sort of tribunal?

Mr. CONNALLY. The War Labor Board was created merely by Executive order. It had no legal sanction so far as Congress was concerned.

Mr. GREEN. No; but the enactment of this measure would make it legal.

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. GREEN. It would make it a court.

Mr. CONNALLY. No; I would not quite say that.

Mr. GREEN. A tribunal then?

Mr. CONNALLY. It has no power to enforce its decisions, except as it is afforded aid by the provisions of this measure. The Board decides the questions.

Mr. GREEN. And its decision is final.

Mr. CONNALLY. It has no marshal, it has no enforcing machinery, and even in case of subpenaing witnesses, if the witnesses fail to respond, the Board must revert to a district court for aid in bringing witnesses before it.

Mr. GREEN. But this measure would seek to make the Board's decisions final as to law as well as fact.

Mr. CONNALLY. So far as the Board is concerned, they are, but no individual is required to work under this provision if he wants to quit.

Mr. GREEN. I understand that. The law applies to groups of men, not to individuals.

It seems to me, Mr. President, from the explanation given, that there is grave doubt as to the constitutionality of this part of the measure, which goes to the essence of the whole measure.

Mr. CONNALLY. We provide that if one part falls the rest shall remain.

Mr. GREEN. If an essential part of the law is unconstitutional, that relating to the powers of the War Labor Board, for instance, there would not be much left of the act.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, it is my desire to speak briefly on the question before the Senate, and I do not approach it as a matter of labor or anti-labor legislation, but rather on the question of whether it is needed legislation, needed here in a time of war, the serious war in which our country is engaged. I had hoped, as I know many Members of this body had hoped, that there would not be need for legislation of this type. But in candor, the events of the last few months have shown to us that strikes have occurred, and we have no reason to believe that they will not again occur in essential industries in this country.

The bill is not all that I would ask in a measure of this nature. In particular, I am impressed with the point which is made by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER.] I think that there should be a right of appeal from the War Labor Board to the courts. That is the usual course as of right in this country. But I am advised, and I believe correctly so, that that matter was dealt with in conference, and that to take this bill back to conference will not change it. So it must be the best that we can do in the situation.

The primary purpose of the bill, as I understand it, is to prevent strikes in time of war. The most widespread strike of recent months has been in the coal industry. That strike affected very much the State which sent me to this body, and I feel that in the closing hours of this discussion I should state that in fairness we cannot charge or blame the individual miners of this country for the strikes which have occurred in that industry. Before Senators attach any blame to the miner they must realize his situation and condition.

In order to work in the coal mines of this country the miner must be a member of a certain union. If he loses membership in that union through his disobedience of those in control of his union, he loses his job, his work, and his family goes hungry. He cannot get work at another mine. It cannot be denied that that situation has deprived him of that liberty which we talk of as the free-born right of an American citizen. I do not believe that the individual miners want to strike or to quit their work when their country is fighting for existence. They are a patriotic body of men. They are just as patriotic as any Americans in this land. They love their country. They have sent their children into this war. But when the order comes to the miner to strike he finds himself in the position of either obeying it or losing his job and seeing his family go hungry.

Only a few years ago, down in the mining sections, there was a somewhat different situation. Then the miner was the victim of the employer. There was a time, a very few years ago, when the miner could not get work if he belonged to a union. He was required to sign a contract that he would not join a union. That was wrong, Mr. President; that was a violation of the miner's personal right and of his personal liberty.

Today the situation has changed in a strange way. But the miner is not free. While he has received benefits from his union, yet he is absolutely vassal to the organization to which he must belong in order to work and to support his family. I do not believe it can be denied that the charge can well be laid at the doorstep of the present administration that brought about that situation, that, instead of creating for the miner his freedom to join his union, and to control and direct it according to his own feelings, that for partisan political reasons, he was placed in the hands and under the domination of his union officials. He has no freedom.

Mr. President, the mining people are intelligent people and when this bill is understood by the miner—and it will be, in time; I know that because of my faith in him—he will understand and will know that this measure will permit him to act in his own right.

So far as wages are concerned, so far as the miner's pay is concerned, let me say that the miner is entitled to just as fair a wage as any other man in the country. He is entitled to pay equal to that of any other man working today in any industry in this country. I shall stand for that regardless of formula. But that does not mean that the Government of our people will permit strikes in time of war to stop the processes of waging war.

This measure provides against the making of contributions for any political purpose. The present law prevents the corporate employer from making contributions for that purpose. I do not think the miner will object very gravely to a law that protects him by putting safeguards around the funds that are taken from him as dues.

I have been very much interested in the amendment proposed to be offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH]. In that amendment he would prohibit organizations of every kind, employers and otherwise, from making contributions for political purposes. I hope such a law is enacted. I hope the Senator's amendment is presented on the floor of the Senate and that it is agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REVERCOMB. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Let me say that I shall do my best to see that that issue is presented.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I thank the Senator; and I hope the amendment is presented here and adopted, so that we shall let the country know that the Senate is fair in its attitude regarding this proposition. So that we shall be able to deny any assertion that we are attempting to wrong the laboring man of America. For my part I intend to do whatever is right for America and then I can wrong no man who loves America.

We are not endeavoring to wrong anyone; but in time of war we are not going to permit any group, whoever its members may be—whether they are bankers or whether they come from any industry whatsoever—to interfere with the effort of this country in waging and winning this war.

Mr. President, another right which this measure will give the miner—another freedom of American citizenship—will be that for the first time he will be permitted to vote—and to vote as he chooses—on the question of whether he wants to strike. He is entitled to that right. It has not been given to him. I know that in some of the sections of my State the district officers of the miner's union are appointed for him, and some of them come from other States. When the miner knows what this pending legislation really means, I do not believe he will feel that he is being discriminated against.

Oh, Mr. President, we cannot permit groups of people, whoever they may be, to dominate or to frighten this body which is charged with the work of governing the country. I think it has been well said that there is only one great Union, and that is the Union of the American people.

We have our churches and our lodges and our associations and our unions. Our people have the right to join them, and I hope that right will always be preserved. But when any group, under any name, rises up to interfere with the welfare of this country, particularly when our country is engaged in a serious war, steps must be taken by this body to safeguard our country's welfare, or else we shall be derelict in performing our duty.

I cannot entertain the fear which has been expressed by the able senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who thinks there may be a great walking out of work by American workmen. If so, God help America. If the people of this country, or any substantial number of them will stop their work voluntarily at a time when we have sent millions of our young men from their homes and from the paths of peace to the battlefields and to their deaths, God help us, Mr. President if we quit here.

I have no fear of the need for pressure on men to make them work or to carry on in the name of our country. I say that this legislation will give to the American workman the protection I believe he wants; it will guarantee his freedom to act. I say also that at this time I believe this legislation is necessary in order to meet the need that faces our country.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I rise to discuss very briefly the subject now under consideration by the Senate. Some of my colleagues have, in good faith and with the best of purposes, taken many minutes, some of them several hours, to discuss the subject. In my opinion, the issue which is to be decided by the vote which is soon to be had can be stated in a very small compass, and it is my purpose to take only a short time in stating it.

Mr. President, there is only one issue. During the early sixties, the Nation decided the question whether the Nation or groups should prevail. At this time, that is the issue before the Senate. We are either for the Nation or for one particular group.

It so happens that the group involved in the issue at the moment is a group in which I have always been interested, and in which I intend to continue to be interested. But, so far as I am concerned, as between that particular group, or any other group, and the welfare of the Nation, there is only one decision to be made. I say that with a full understanding that the particular group which the pending legislation is supposed to affect has a right of complaint. I feel that the entire accumulation of complaints against anything wrong that labor may have done in the past is now being directed against one particular group of labor—the coal miners. I feel that the coal miners have the right to complain. I feel that the ones who employ them are taking advantage of the situation. Nevertheless, for the sake of the Nation itself, interruption of production cannot be permitted to continue. The Nation should be first, must be first, and shall be first.

As a friend of labor and as a friend of this particular group, which is an underpaid labor group, my only objection to the conference report and to the bill is that while, in order to save the Govenment, we are striking—and possibly justly—at the ones who need our help the most, at the ones who actually need a little more wages. Yet we are not hitting the racketeer. We are not hitting the man who charges workers $50 to join a union and get a job on a Government project. We are not hitting at the real racketeer of the labor groups. We are hitting the miner. But we cannot have two governments in this country. We are either for the Nation or for groups, and we must be for the Nation.

However, I hope that the coal operators and big industrialists will not think that the Senate is so innocent that it does not understand what is going on. The difficulty in the war has been that everyone wants to do his utmost for the country so long as there is a share of the profits for him. We fail to realize that the only way we can win the war is by sacrifice. Now, through law, we are undertaking to make the miner and the laborer sacrifice. Let us not forget that the man who is making a profit out of the war effort needs a little attention also. We should all sacrifice. If the rich man and the poor man make the supreme sacrifice on the battle front, it is only proper that there should be a sacrifice of profits, whether they be profits of labor or of industrialists.

I intend to vote for the conference report because I think it is in the interest of the Nation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. CONNALLY obtained the floor.

Mr. LANGER rose.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from North Dakota whether he desires to speak.

Mr. LANGER. I should like to speak for about 5 minutes.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator will be that brief, I have no disposition to restrain him.

Mr. LANGER. Five minutes is all I shall need. I have not previously spoken on the report.

Mr. President, first of all let me say that I have the deepest affection for the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], and I am sorry I cannot agree with him on this particular conference report. I feel obliged to follow the reasoning of the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS].

I invite the attention of the Senate to the plight of the farmers 6 or 7 months ago. Everything that is being said against the coal miner was then being said against the farmer. We saw editorials in the newspapers crucifying the farmer. We saw page advertisements calling the attention of the people of the country to the contention that the farmer is greedy and unpatriotic. We saw editorials which told how the farmer was raising meat for which he received 5, 6, or 7 cents a pound, and that the same meat was costing the people of Washington 40, 50, 60, or 70 cents a pound. We were told that the farmer was a profiteer. If at that time that question had come to a vote, we would have found, on the part of scores of persons, the same feeling that is being manifested against the coal miners today.

Mr. President, as I view it, there are just two classes of people who are going to pay the war debt. One is the farmer, the man who digs wealth out of the soil. The other is the coal miner, who goes down into the bowels of the earth. I believe that their interests are absolutely identical.

What I object to, Mr. President, is that everybody is not bearing the burden equally. The junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] said that everyone was bearing the burden equally. The record shows that that is not true. I hold in my hand a record from Moody's Manual of Investments. It shows, for example, that in 1939, before income and excess-profits taxes, the United States Steel Corporation made $54,102,000; but in 1942, after income and excess-profits taxes, it made $101,252,000. I have a list of corporations. Let us take a coal company, the Glen Alden Coal Co. In 1939, before income and excess-profits taxes, it made $352,000. In 1942, after income and excess-profits taxes, it made $4,919,000.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the table of statistics which I have be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Reported net income before and after taxes,[1] 1939–42

(Thousands of dollars)

Name of corporation	Before income and excess-profits taxes				After income and excess-profits taxes
	1939	1940	1941	1942	1939	1940	1941	1942

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that, proud as we are of this country, eulogizing it as we have been—and I have heard many eulogies on the floor of the Senate—the fact remains that we nevertheless find that the poor people, the undernourished, underfed, and underclothed one-third, are still with us. The farmers of North Dakota are unable to obtain labor. Why? Because the Congress and the administration have not done their duty. Farm boys and hired help have been taken from the farms and paid $15, $20, $25, or $30 a day in war plants, leaving the farmer destitute of help. I assume the same thing is true in the coal fields.

The coal miners—without the aid of their sons, 75,000 of whom are in the Army and scores of whom, able-bodied men, used to mine coal—produced more coal this year than was ever produced in any previous year in the history of the country.

So, to return to a discussion of our country, which the junior Senator from New Mexico eulogized so eloquently, I say to the Senate that everything is not well. I say that the common man and the common woman are not receiving a square deal. Only yesterday I read the record pertaining to two camps. After reading it I received the record from the Office of Defense Health and Welfare Services, and it revealed the startling fact that 3,200,000 persons in the United States are afflicted with syphilis at the present time.

With reference to the Government's program against prostitution, it was disclosed that 1,200,000 men and women war workers must take time off from their work to receive treatment for syphilis and gonorrhea. The figures are from the records of the Government itself, from its official statistics. I asked yesterday where those people came from. The record shows that they come partly from the coal-mining districts and that they left there because they did not have enough to eat and wear.

Mr. President, in conclusion I wish to say that when the fight was being made in the Senate against the farmers, I defended Mr. Goss, I defended Mr. O'Neal, and I defended Mr. Patton. I said they were good, loyal, true American citizens, anxious to help in the war effort. I say today that the head of the C. I. O., Mr. Murray; the head of the A. F. of L., Mr. Green; and the head of the United Mine Workers of America, John L. Lewis, in spite of all that may have been said about them, in my judgment—take it for what it may be worth—are patriotic citizens, each of whom is just as anxious to fight and battle for the United States as is the head of any one of the corporations that are making enormous war profits.

Mr. CONNALLY subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD just preceding the roll call a letter from the National War Labor Board concerning the pending conference report.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL WAR LABOR BOARD,
Washington, D. C., June 9, 1943.

Hon. FREDERICK VAN NUYS,
Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR VAN NUYS: My attention has been drawn to a newspaper statement this morning that the Senate and House conferees have agreed to restore to S. 796 a provision for court review of orders of the National War Labor Board. Such a provision was contained in the original Connally bill but was omitted from the House bill in its final form. It is the hope of our Board that the conferees may see fit to eliminate the provision upon which agreement was reached yesterday. I trust that you will not consider it presumptuous on my part if I state to you very simply the reasons which have led our Board to this conclusion and which we presented informally to Chairman MAY of the House Military Affairs Committee at the time the bill was first under consideration by his committee.

It is the unanimous opinion of the industry, public, and labor members of the War Labor Board that if the Board's proceedings are to terminate in court, its utility will be seriously impaired. We are authorized by the Secretaries of War and Navy to state on their behalf that the delay consequent on judicial review of the Board's decisions would substantially and seriously impair the production of munitions of war.

The Board's procedure is very informal. When a dispute is certified it is referred to a tripartite panel composed of three persons representing respectively labor, industry, and the public. Local hearings are held before the panel at which the parties are invited to submit relevant evidence, oral or written. The hearings are most informal; stenographic transcripts are not taken; and settlement agreements frequently result from the very freedom of discussion engendered by the informality of the procedure. At the conclusion of the hearing the panel prepares a report on the facts and recommendations relating to the matters in dispute. Copies of the report and recommendations are furnished the parties, who are given opportunity to submit to the full Board their comments. In some cases an oral hearing before the full Board or a tripartite division of the Board is had.

Since the recent enlargement of the Board's duties, 12 regional boards have been set up with the same tripartite composition and governed by the same procedure. The decisions of the regional boards are subject to appeal by either party to the National Board in Washington.

A sampling of nearly 100 decisions of the National Labor Relations Board reveals that the average length of time between the filing of a petition in the circuit court of appeals and that court's decision has been approximately 232 days.

We believe that similar delays would gravely prejudice the effectiveness of the War Labor Board, which up to now has been able to dispose of the disputes certified to it with reasonable dispatch, and to keep the peace in the meantime. In the 16 months of its existence the Board has handled 736 labor disputes involving some 3,000,000 workers. In only 6 cases has the Board found it necessary to report to the President its inability to obtain compliance with its orders. In only 1 case has a party sought court review of a Board order. In that case the complaint was dismissed.

This record of compliance indicates that no legal change in the status of the Board's orders is necessary. These orders are in reality mere declarations of the equities of each industrial dispute, as determined by a tripartite body in which industry, labor, and the public share equal responsibility; and the appeal of the Board is to the moral obligation of employers and workers to abide by the no-strike, no-lock-out agreement and in conformance therewith to carry out the directives of the tribunal created under that agreement by the Commander in Chief.

Since the bill does not, as we understand it, permit the Board to seek enforcement of its orders in the court, the Board's orders are to remain, as we think they should remain, without specific legal sanctions. This being the case, it would seem to us inconsistent to extend to losing parties the privilege of delaying the outcome by taking the case into court for review. Limitation of the review to questions of law would not solve the difficulty. Questions of law could be conjured up in nearly every case. Every sentence of the act of Congress could be called into question. Findings of fact could be challenged on the alleged ground that the Board had abused its discretion, which is a legal question. Finally, it must be remembered that the Board is entrusted by Executive orders and regulations, issued under the act of October 2, 1942, with the entire execution of the national wage stabilization policy. The vast majority of the Board's dispute cases involve wage issues, in addition to which the Board is receiving over 2,500 cases per week of voluntary applications for approval of proposed wage adjustments. In all of these cases, the decisions of the Board on wage issues, if disappointing to one party or another, could be taken into the court on the ground that the decisions were in conflict with some provision of the act of October 2, 1942, or of the Executive orders and regulations thereunder.

This danger would be particularly acute in the dispute cases in which feeling runs high and in which the delays resulting from court review would do severe harm to the cause of industrial peace.

For all of these reasons, we respectfully submit that for the duration of the war it would be in the best interests of the country to permit the War Labor Board to function as it has in the past 16 months, without the right to apply to the courts for legal sanctions and without being subject to court review of its decisions.

If the conferees should wish any further information or advice from us or should wish any representative of the Board to appear before the conferees, we shall be only too happy to respond.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM H. DAVIS,
Chairman, National War Labor Board.

SENATE

MONDAY, JUNE 14, 1943

(Legislative day of Monday, May 24, 1943)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock noon, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father God, we come this day in the spirit of solemn dedication as in the name of the Lord our God we set up the starry banner of our Nation's life. We gratefully remember that its folds are woven of a thousand strands of memory, of affection, and of hope; that in it are the recollections of a glorious past and of immortal deeds. As it floats in the free breeze of heaven it speaks to us of an awful sense of divine destiny as our Nation now plays its part as he prepared instrument of Thy providence in all the earth. That we may be more worthy of that manifest destiny in the molding of a new world, we make a new covenant sealed in the patriot blood of the past and in the blood of today. May no attitude, word, or deed of ours stain its white or shame its red, betray its blue or dim its stars. We humbly pray that wherever it waves it may be to all men the emblem of freedom, equality, brotherhood, and justice; that wherever it is carried it may bring hope to the downtrodden, emancipation to the shackled, and doom to the thralldom of tyrants.

To Thee, Author of Liberty, we pledge, as the emblem of our heart's devotion moves forward toward the goal of a free world with the flags of other nations who cherish liberty more than life, that we will nobly live for it and if need be bravely die for it:

"What matters death if freedom be not dead?
No flags are fair if freedom's flag be furled.
Who fights for freedom goes with joyful tread
To meet the force of hell against him hurled,
And has for cap'ain Him whose thorn-wreathed head
Smiles from the cross upon a conquered world."

Amen.

On request of Mr. HILL, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Saturday, June 12, 1943, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

PETITION

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Rosalia, Kans., praying for the enactment of Senate bill 860, relating to the sale of alcoholic liquors to the members of the land and naval forces of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

NATIONAL REPRESENTATION FOR PEOPLE OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—PETITION

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I present and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, with the signatures, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, a petition signed by officers of twoscore District of Columbia organizations, including many of the principal business, labor, civic, educational, and social groups, supporting Senate Joint Resolution 33, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States granting a new power to the Congress with respect to the people of the District of Columbia. Under this new power the Congress, by subsequent legislation, would be able to provide voting representation for the people of the District of Columbia in the Congress and among the electors of President and Vice President.

Regarding this identical resolution, Representative HATTON W. SUMNERS, of Texas, stated on the floor of the House of Representatives on June 10:

I see no good objection to this proposed constitutional amendment from any angle. To the people who feel that the Federal Government should never surrender the power to govern the District of Columbia this proposed amendment should not be objectionable, for there is no surrender of that power proposed. If the amendment should be adopted and Congress should act under the grant of power conferred, Congress would retain the power to modify or even repeal the whole thing if the governmental arrangement inaugurated should not work. This proposed amendment will be merely an enabling provision granting power to the Congress to give to the American citizens living in the District of Columbia such rights to participate in the National Government as in the judgment of Congress would not interfere with the Federal interest.

The Washington Evening Star, referring to the remarks of Judge SUMNERS in connection with presenting a similar petition to the House, had this to say editorially in its issue of June 11, 1943:

We are fighting this war to preserve, with other things, the principle that "Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed." Washington men are fighting with the armed forces on fronts all over the world. But they are the only Americans in uniform denied the full rights of American citizenship, and this denial springs from the accidental fact of their birth or residence in the Capital of the United States.

As Mr. SUMNERS points out, the restoration to Washingtonians of the birthright of every American would involve no loss, to Congress, of its exclusive control over the seat of government. That control, it would seem, would be made more secure, rather than weakened, if the Government which exercises it practiced here at home what it preaches abroad. Continued failure to admit to full citizenship the Americans who live in the Nation's Capital is a cloud on our title to the claim of being a free democracy. It should be removed.

I am wholeheartedly in sympathy with this effort on the part of the citizens of the District of Columbia to obtain the right of suffrage and voting representation in the councils of our Nation. They are justly entitled as intelligent, worthy Americans to possess these fundamental rights—neither reason nor excuse can be offered to justify further delay in righting a great wrong.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD with the signatures attached, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

Your petitioners, the Citizens' Joint Committee on National Representation for the District of Columbia, and the presidents of its constituent and cooperating organizations, whose names are subscribed below, hereby reaffirm the principles proclaimed by the founders of our Republic that "Taxation without representation is tyranny"; that "Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed"; and in order that "Government of the people, by the people, and for the people" may become an accomplished fact for all the people of the United States, respectfully represent:

That the over one-half million totally disfranchised and unrepresented citizens of the United States resident in the District of Columbia, obey national laws, outnumber the residents of each of 12 States, and pay more national taxes than each of 22 of the States.

That over two decades ago, when they outnumbered only six States, they supplied to the Army and Navy of the United States a larger number of men than any one of seven of the States, and oversubscribed their quotas of all wartime funds.

That again in the present war for the preservation of the principles of democracy and civilization as against despotism and barbarism thousands of these voteless and unrepresented Americans of the District of Columbia are now by voluntary enrollment and by draft serving in the armed forces of our country.

That these, your fellow Americans, now have no voice in their National Government which requires them to fight, to bleed, and perhaps to die.

That as a fundamental right they are as justly entitled, as are other Americans, to voting representation in the Congress and among the electors of President and Vice President.

That the only sound reason which can be offered for any departure, in the case of the District of Columbia, from the fundamental American concepts of representative government is for protection of the national interest in the Nation's seat of government and then only to the extent required for such effective protection.

That this protection of the national interest—coupled with recognition of the interest and rights of the people of the District—is provided in our proposed constitutional amendment which confirms in Congress continuing control of District representation so that both the Nation's and the District's interests may always be equitably protected.

We, therefore, respectfully petition the adoption of House Joint Resolution 81 and the identical Senate Joint Resolution 33, which propose an amendment to the Constitution of the United States empowering Congress to grant the above-sought relief to the citizens of the United States resident in the District of Columbia.

THE PROPOSED AMENDMENT

"The Congress shall have power to provide that there shall be in the Congress and among the electors of President and Vice President Members elected by the people of the District constituting the seat of government of the United States, in such numbers and with such powers as the Congress shall determine. All legislation hereunder shall be subject to amendment and repeal."

AMENDMENT TO INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

R. 2719) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

At the proper place, insert the following: "Upper Missouri project, Montana, Canyon Ferry Dam and Power Plant, $500,000."

NOTICE OF MOTION TO SUSPEND THE RULE—APPROPRIATIONS FOR DEPARTMENTS OF STATE, JUSTICE, AND COMMERCE: AMENDMENT

Mr. McCARRAN submitted the following notice in writing:

In accordance with rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that it is my intention to move to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. Mr. McCARRAN also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 2397, the Departments of State, Justice, and Commerce appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

(For text of amendment referred to, see the foregoing notice.)

Mr. NYE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 158), which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation of the facts surrounding the contract or deal whereby the Standard Oil Co. of California was granted certain possessions and advantages in the Elk Hills, Calif., oil reserves by the United States Navy and/or other agencies of the Federal Government.

The committee shall report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the result of its investigation together with its recommendations.

ROLL-BACK AND SUBSIDY PROGRAM

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I am receiving numerous telegrams and letters from farmers and livestock men, as well as from food distributors, protesting against the roll-back and subsidy program being put into effect by the Office of Price Administration.

As I have stated before, on the floor of the Senate and in protest to Hon. Prentiss Brown, head of the O. P. A., I believe the proposed subsidy as a substitute for prices covering costs of production for foodstuffs will not work. So far from halting inflation, it will increase the pressure of two inflationary forces. In the first place, by cheapening the cost of food it will increase the surplus spending power. In the second place, it will have a strong tendency to strangle production.

Increased purchasing power and decreased supplies both work for inflation, not against inflation. For the Federal Treasury to be drawn upon to the extent of two or three billion dollars a year to feed people in a period when the national income is around $140,000,000,000 a year, double what it was a few years ago, I say simply does not make sense.

I ask unanimous consent that two telegrams which I have received be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BUCKLIN, KANS., June 7, 1943.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER:

Stockmen here request me wire you their vigorous opposition to roll-back and subsidy program on beef; if put into operation plan is sure to curtail production, as farmers now complaining of too much domination of their production efforts. Give us the open market and we will produce to the limit of our ability.

E. A. STEPHENSON.

KIOWA, KANS., June 6, 1943.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned cattlemen of Barber County, Kans., wish to express to you our vigorous opposition to any plan to set up roll-back prices and subsidies to processors, wholesalers, and retailers of meat. We believe such a program cannot help resulting in decreased production at a time when increased production is essential. It will also result in more black markets and in general cause a confused and chaotic condition in the livestock industry. We strongly urge you to oppose any such prgram as being dangerous, vicious, and altogether unnecessary.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. TARVER, Mr. CANNON of Missouri, Mr. SHEPPARD, Mr. WENE, Mr. LAMBERTSON, Mr. DIRKSEN, and Mr. PLUMLEY were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 136) making appropriations for advances to States for certain Federal grants for the first quarter of the fiscal year 1944, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 163. An act to amend section 511 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, relating to ship construction reserve funds, and for other purposes; and

S. 796. An act relating to the use and operation by the United States of certain plants, mines, and facilities in the prosecution of the war, and preventing strikes, lockouts, and stoppages of production, and for other purposes.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 136) making appropriations for advances to States for certain Federal grants for the first quarter of the fiscal year 1944, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on today, June 14, 1943, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 163. A bill to amend section 511 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, relating to ship construction reserve funds, and for other purposes; and

S. 796. A bill relating to the use and operation by the United States of certain plants, mines, and facilities in the prosecution of the war, and preventing strikes, lock-outs, and stoppages of production, and for other purposes.

CONFIRMATION BY THE SENATE OF CERTAIN GOVERNMENTAL EMPLOYEES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 575) to provide that officers in the executive branch of the Government who receive compensation at a rate in excess of $4,500 a year shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, in the manner provided by the Constitution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] in the nature of a substitute, on which the yeas and nays have already been ordered.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and my colleague, the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], I offer an amendment to the substitute.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment to the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the amendment of Mr. O'MAHONEY, on page 4, after line 8, it is proposed to insert a new subdivision, as follows:

(f) The provisions of the act shall not be applicable in the case of any office or position in the Tennessee Valley Authority except the members of the board of directors.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, my colleague, the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], and I offer this amendment to the O'Mahoney substitute because it is not absolutely clear what effect the adoption of the substitute would have on the Tennessee Valley Authority, and the selection and employment of its personnel.

The O'Mahoney amendment purports to be an amendment limiting confirmation to those offices and positions which are policy making. However, the O'Mahoney amendment specifically exempts from its provisions, as I understand, employees appointed under the civil-service law, employees of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and employees of the Executive Office of the President.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I think the matter should be made clear, if the Senator is under any misapprehension, and I am not quite certain from what he says whether that is the case or not. The pending amendment does not exempt civil-service employees as such. The purpose of the clause in section 3 (a), to which the Senator refers, is to make unnecessary the confirmation of employees in the civil service who in the past have acquired a competitive status, and who occupy positions of responsibility, with policy-making authority.

Mr. HILL. As I understand, the O'Mahoney amendment would not apply to civil-service employees who are now in the civil service.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is correct.

Mr. HILL. But the O'Mahoney amendment does not make the same provision for the Tennessee Valley Authority employees, as I read the amendment. There is nothing in it which would make the same provision for the Tennessee Valley Authority the amendment makes for the civil-service employees.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. What reason is there for making an exception of a particular group or a particular corporation? The O'Mahoney amendment provides that the Senate shall confirm the heads, assistant heads, and head attorneys, of the several departments and agencies, including members of the boards of directors and officers of Government-owned corporations. It occurs to me that if we began to except one group because it is a technical group, we would gradually have to make all kinds of exceptions. What about the Bonneville administration, for instance, and many others?

Mr. HILL. It is my understanding that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] has an amendment to take care of the Bonneville administration.

I think where there are two sets of employees who certainly should be exempted, one the civil-service employees, whom the O'Mahoney amendment, as I understand, definitely takes care of, and the other the T. V. A. and Bonneville employees.

Mr. President, whatever might be the construction of the language of the O'Mahoney amendment, there can be no question that if the amendment shall be voted down and the bill as reported by the committee shall become law, the Tennessee Valley Authority employees will have no exemption whatever under the bill as reported by the committee, the McKellar bill.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. STEWART. How many employees of the Tennessee Valley Authority would be affected by the McKellar bill as it now stands?

Mr. HILL. About 397, as of today.

Mr. STEWART. Approximately 400?

Mr. HILL. That is correct.

Mr. STEWART. Out of a total of how many employees?

Mr. HILL. At the present time, of course, there are a great many employees, because the Tennessee Valley Authority is in process of constructing a large number of dams. It has six dams still under construction. The employees today may be numbered in the thousands; but, of course, that takes in every class of employee. There are approximately 400 Tennessee Valley Authority employees who are primarily engineers, chemists, agronomists, foresters, scientists, who would be affected by the original bill, and I think perhaps also by the O'Mahoney amendment.

Mr. STEWART. Are there 33,000 employees under the Tennessee Valley Authority at the present time? Does the Senator know the figure?

Mr. HILL. I should say that at the present time there are about that many employees. But let me say to the Senator that I do not think the fact that there are 33,000 employees has any bearing on the question that there are only 400 affected by the bill, because many of the 33,000 employees may be temporary employees. Most of the 33,000, of course, will cease to be in the employment of the Tennessee Valley Authority as soon as the 6 dams to which I have referred have been completed. But the 400 employees who are affected by the bill, and I think perhaps by the O'Mahoney amendment, are, as I have stated, men who really have nothing to do with the determination of policies. They are scientists, engineers, chemists, agronomists, and foresters. They do not determine the policies of the Tennessee Vallay Authority. Under the law, the policies of the Tennessee Valley Authority are determined by the Tennessee Valley Board, and under the basic act the members of the Board are subject to confirmation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Under the Senator's own definition of these employees, how does he bring them under the O'Mahoney amendment, which confines itself to policy-making officials?

Mr. HILL. I do not think they would come under the O'Mahoney amendment. Yet, if the Senator has had the opportunity or the time, with the tremendous pressure under which I know he has been working, to read the letter regarding the O'Mahoney amendment, which was addressed by the Civil Service Commission to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], he must realize that the Civil Service Commission at least feels that the O'Mahoney amendment is subject to a good many different interpretations. It is not nearly so clear as perhaps it might be. If the Senator will read the letter of the Civil Service Commission, I think he will reach the conclusion that no one can know now exactly what the O'Mahoney amendment might or might not affect.

I will say to the Senator, since the question has arisen, that between the O'Mahoney amendment and the bill itself, I strongly favor the O'Mahoney amendment, because the O'Mahoney amendment, whatever its language may be, however indefinite or uncertain it may be, purports to limit confirmations to policy-making officials.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Every time the Senator has referred to the 400 men in the T. V. A., he has emphasized the fact that they have nothing whatever to do with the making of policies.

Mr. HILL. That is correct.

Mr. VANDENBERG. So I think they would fall outside the O'Mahoney amendment.

Mr. HILL. But the author of the amendment himself, in drawing it, has placed in it a specific exemption with respect to civil service employees, a specific exemption with respect to the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and a specific exemption with respect to employees in the Executive Office of the President. The author himself has placed in the amendment those specific exemptions, so as to make certain that the employees in question shall fall without the operation of the measure. I am now asking the Senate to make certain with respect to the T. V. A. employees that they shall be placed in the exempted group along with civil service employees, the employees in the F. B. I., and in the Executive Office of the President.

Mr. VANDENBERG. There is a particular reason why the F. B. I. should be outside the purview of the measure.

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Where is there an analogous reason for T. V. A. to be outside?

Mr. HILL. I have risen to try to show that just as the civil service employees—and I mention them because I think they are more analogous to the T. V. A. than the F. B. I.—are outside the purview and should be outside the purview of the measure, so should the T. V. A. employees be outside its operation and purview.

To put these employees under the provisions of the bill would, in my opinion, be unfair to them. It would be unfair because they came into the employment of the Tennessee Valley Authority under a merit system which was set up by the Tennessee Valley Authority, and specifically authorized in the basic act which Congress passed creating the Tennessee Valley Authority. It would unquestionably do violence to the basic act to place them within the purview of the proposed legislation.

Let me say to the Senate that I happened to be a member of the House Committee on Military Affairs when the T. V. A. Act was considered by that committee. I was afterward on the conference committee when the conference finally approved the act. We had in the conference committee a problem such as had never before been presented, certainly not in its entirety, to any committee of Congress. We were setting up something new and different; we were setting up a corporation which would be a Government corporation but which would operate in a field and in a manner much similar to a private corporation. It was necessary to give to this corporation a flexibility and an initiative such as that enjoyed largely by private corporations.

One of the arguments used in the debate against the bill, was with respect to personnel. It was urged that it would be impossible to set up any kind of Government corporation and have its personnel selected and employed entirely free of politics or any political consideration.

In creating this corporation the Congress really engaged in a great experiment, which would determine, and which has determined, whether the Federal Government can establish a Government corporation or Government agency and have it entirely free from any politics, or entirely free from any political considerations, certainly so far as the employment of its personnel is concerned. The Congress wrote into the basic act, section 6. That section specifically provided that all appointments in the Tennessee Valley Authority should be made solely and entirely on merit and efficiency, and stated:

> No political test or qualification shall be permitted or given consideration, but all such appointments and promotions shall be given and made on the basis of merit and efficiency.

Then Congress went a step further and placed this provision in the act:

> Any member of said Board who is found by the President of the United States to be guilty of a violation of this section shall be removed from office by the President of the United States, and any appointee of said Board who is found by the Board to be guilty of a violation of this section shall be removed from office by said Board.

As I have said, there were doubting Thomases, and I must admit that I myself sometimes wondered whether we could create a Government corporation and have it operate entirely free of any politics, of any political consideration in the matter of the appointment of its employees. The record will show that the board of directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority have carried out the provision of the law, both in spirit and absolutely to the letter, and there has been no political consideration, no favoritism, no nepotism, none of those things which we see creeping into Government organizations of all kinds, whether it be a Federal organization or State or municipal or county organization; none of those things have been permitted to enter into the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. None of the things, in other words, that inspired the McKellar bill.

Mr. HILL. That is exactly correct. I wish to make a personal reference. As the Senator knows, there are some 13 counties in Alabama in the Tennessee Valley area. If I have ever had any say, or if any other Senator, or any Member of Congress, or any politician in the Government or out of the Government has had any say in the naming of a single appointee of the Tennessee Valley Authority, I certainly have never heard of such a case. Appointments in the Tennessee Valley have been entirely free of any political consideration or any political test whatever.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wish to ask the Senator if it is not a fact that qualified persons who have made impartial studies of the personnel system of the Tennessee Valley Authority are unanimous in placing it at the top or at least very high on the list of personnel systems in the United States?

Mr. HILL. The Senator is exactly correct.

Mr. President, I do not wish to take too much of the time of the Senate, but in that connection I will say that I have before me a copy of a letter which was written to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] by Dr. George E. Axtelle, who is professor at Northwestern University. I wish to read merely an excerpt from this letter, because I think the letter, coming from this Northwestern University professor, a man who in a way is far removed from the Tennessee Valley Authority, who could have no personal interests or personal predilections or prejudices one way or the other, confirms clearly what the Senator from Wisconsin has brought out. Professor Axtelle wrote:

> Two years ago I took a seminar group to the Tennessee Valley Authority for 5 weeks of intensive study of it. We not only studied the internal structure, operation, and policies of the Tennessee Valley Authority, we interviewed the people of the Valley, businessmen, professional men, farmers, and workers. Almost without exception these people were enthusiastic not only about the Tennessee Valley Authority but about its personnel. This in spite of the fact that many of the employees were "foreigners."

By the word "foreigners" he meant that they did not come from Tennessee or Alabama, but came from other States, a professor of chemistry, for instance, from Ann Arbor, Mich., perhaps one came from Maine and another from Massachusetts, and so on. I wish to comment a little later, with respect to why this great Agency, which belongs to all the people, which has been financed by all the people, should in the matter of selecting its employees have no particular responsibility to any one State, even though the State be my State of Alabama.

Professor Axtelle proceeds:

> The seminar were unanimous in their very high evaluation of the personnel. We found them almost uniformly competent, tactful, and devoted to the general welfare of the people of the Valley.
>
> This is no accident. As we studied the personnel policy of the Tennessee Valley Authority we were profoundly impressed. I believe that students of personnel administration would generally agree that the personnel policy and program of the Tennessee Valley Authority represents a high-water mark in personnel selection and management. The Tennessee Valley Authority has been exceptionally successful in mobilizing the initiative, imagination, resourcefulness, and enthusiasm of its employees. There seems an almost complete absence of mediocrity and time serving.

There are no political hacks, I will say to the Senate, in the employment of the T. V. A.

Instead—

Says D. Axtelle:

> there was general devotion to public welfare.
>
> It would be a tragedy if this brilliant success in the selection and management of public personnel were destroyed or enfeebled. Before Congress alters this policy it should conduct a careful investigation of their personnel policy and program.
> If this American Government is to serve the needs of a complex society it must be staffed by superior people and these people should be so organized that they are impelled to give of their best efforts and finest enthusiasm.

The experiment which Congres made in the act of 1933 has proved itself, I say to the Senate, beyond the highest hopes, beyond the fondest expectations, of the Members of Congress at that time. It was an experiment to set up an agency with thousands of employees and have them employed without any reference to politics or political considerations or favoritism in any way, and it is a fine commentary that they rendered the service and have exhibited the morale and esprit de corps to which Dr. Axtelle testifies in his letter.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield in order to permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HILL. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Entirely aside from the question of the integrity of the appointees—let us concede that—there might be another question—namely, whether the T. V. A. might be overstaffed with those very excellent people. Is there any point at which Congress has any check whatever on the power of the T. V. A. to staff itself?

Mr. HILL. Congress has two definite checks. The T. V. A. comes to Congress each year and appears before the Appropriations Committee for its appropriations. That is check No. 1. Check No. 2 is that the members of the board of the Tennessee Valley Authority—who, of course, are the ones in whom Congress has vested the power to name employees and to administer the act—are confirmed by the Senate. So Congress has those two very definite checks.

My colleague the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and I are asking the Senate to do for the T. V. A. exactly what the substitute amendment would do for civil-service employees. I think an examination will show that, so far as politics are concerned, the civil service has nothing like the almost perfect record the T. V. A. has, for, frankly, we know that politics does enter into the civil service. Under the civil-service law a selection is made of one of three eligibles; and we know—and no one disputes the fact—that in making selection as between the three, politics often enters into the question.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield to my friend.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me ask whether the same rule as to politics which applies to T. V. A. employees also applies to the members of the Board or the members of the Authority.

Mr. HILL. I should certainly say so; because the act specifically provides that if any member of the Board is found by the President of the United States to be guilty of a violation of section 6—the section prohibiting politics—the President shall remove him.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know about the employees; as to them I cannot say. But as to one member of the Board, I think the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART] can furnish some very enlightening information as to his entry into politics.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I should like the Senator to permit me to make my speech, and then he can speak.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to ask the Senator if it is not true that Mr. Lilienthal went all over the State, during the campaign of the junior Senator from Tennessee, and made many speeches, the substance of which was—well, I recall one in which the particular statement was made that the T. V. A. had won a battle on the Washington front, and that it was then necessary to win a battle on the home front.

I shall ask the Senator——

Mr. HILL. Just one moment, please, Mr. President; I have the floor. I desire to show the Senator every courtesy; but the Senator can make his own speech in his own time.

Mr McKELLAR. I am not making a speech; I am asking a question.

Mr. HILL. Yes; but the Senator is asking the question of another Member of the Senate; and I have not yielded for any such purpose.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, I shall be very glad to answer the question.

Mr. HILL. I shall yield to the junior Senator from Tennessee, of course. I want to make my own speech in my own way, and then the Senator can make his own speech in his own way. But, of course, I shall yield to the junior Senator from Tennessee if he wants me to yield to him.

However, let me say to the Senator from Tennessee that there seems to be no doubt that a speech which Mr. Lilienthal made was construed by the junior Senator from Tennessee to be against his candidacy and against him. I think that is true; is it not?

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HILL. Yes; I yield.

Mr. STEWART. I think I should make an explanatory statement. It was in the very heat of the campaign before the August election of last year when the statament referred to appeared in, I think, one of the Chattanooga newspapers. The statement was credited to Mr. Lilienthal. He was reported as having stated the day before, at Knoxville, in a speech he made there, words in substance to this effect: "We have recently won a victory on the Washington front, and I warn the people of the Valley against losing"—or "not winning"—"a victory on the Tennessee front"—words to that effect.

I took that to mean, coming as it did, and in view of the fact that I was constantly being told that Mr. Lilienthal was endeavoring to turn the T. V. A. against me, that he was undertaking to arouse the people of the Valley against me in that campaign. I so stated at Chattanooga, and my statement was carried in the newspapers published on that day. I said that I accepted his challenge. He never replied to that; no explanation of any kind or character was ever made. So far as I was advised, he simply continued his work against me in my campaign.

He probably should have been called to account under the Hatch Act.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I simply wish to say that the original act itself provides penalties for such conduct as that indulged in by Mr. Lilienthal. I ask the Senator from Alabama if the passage of the pending bill with an amendment exempting the Tennessee Valley Authority from its provisions would change that situation in the slightest.

Mr. HILL. The passage of the bill with such an amendment would not make the slightest change in that situation.

Let me say here that Mr. Lilienthal has subsequently told me that he did not have the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART] in mind, and did not intend to inject himself in one way or the other in the candidacy of the junior Senator from Tennessee. However, even if for the sake of argument we admit that when Mr. Lilienthal made the speech he had in mind the candidacy of the junior Senator from Tennessee, the inclusion of the engineers, chemists, and scientists of the Tennessee Valley Authority in the group of persons to whom the provisions of the bill would apply would have nothing to do with that, and the passage of the bill would not affect the situation, in one way or the other, so far as Mr. Lilienthal is concerned, because under the basic act Mr. Lilienthal has to be confirmed. He has already been confirmed twice; and, as I understand, his term expires within the next 24 months. If he is to be reappointed he will have to be confirmed again.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to say that I defied anyone at that time—and I do yet, so far as that is concerned—to put his finger on one thing that I have ever done which was against the interests of the Tennessee Valley Authority. To the contrary, in everything I have done, both in my official life and in my life prior to the time when I had any official capacity which I could use to be helpful to the Tennessee Valley Authority, I have been an advocate of the Tennessee Valley Authority and of the causes for which it stood. It is one of the great organizations which our Government has at this time. It has done valuable work in that section of the country; it has done valuable work for the entire country. I am proud of it, and I am proud of the personnel of the T. V. A. The only quarrel I have is not with T. V. A., but with some of those who are among the managers of the Authority who desire to use the powers of their office for political purposes, a thing which they have no right to do. The only criticism I have ever made in that connection has been of some of the managers of T. V. A., and not of T. V. A. itself. As I say, I have always openly and publicly done all I could to support it, and will continue to do so. I will not support any measure which to my mind would do any injury to that great Authority.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, as I have said, whatever might have been in Mr. Lilienthal's mind when he made the speech——

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for one more word?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator has been very courteous and patient.

When this bill was introduced at the last session, I had no thought of its effect on T. V. A. in any sense. It did not occur to me that anyone in the employ of the T. V. A. would be affected. It did not occur to me that 396 out of 36,000 employees would be affected. That is not the thing that has drawn me toward this bill. It is the contemptible treatment I have received at the hands of some of the bureaucrats in Washington that has drawn me toward the bill.

Let me tell of one occurrence. I will not give the names unless it becomes necessary.

Months ago a man came to my office——

Mr. HILL. Was this man representing the T. V. A.?

Mr. STEWART. No.

Mr. HILL. Then he had nothing to do with it.

Mr. STEWART. I am telling the Senator my reasons for supporting the bill. The bureaucratic mistreatment of Members of Congress is what brought the bill about. That is the thing that ought to cause its passage.

A man representing some manufacturing industries in Tennessee came to my office and told me that he had gone to one of the bureaus in Washington, and that he had been met at the door by the bureaucrat with whom he had an appointment, and was immediately asked, "Have you been up on the Hill? Have you seen your Senator or Representative?" The man said, "No; I have not seen them." He was about to add, "I am going to call on one of them in a few moments after I see you, because I have an appointment with him," but he did not say that, because the next words that came from the mouth of the bureaucrat were, "It is to your advantage that you do not call on them, because we do not take orders from the Hill.

The fact is that it hurts your case if you undertake to put pressure on us through them."

I have seen things like that happen more than once. That is why I am for the bill. We ought to be ashamed of ourselves for not having exercised to a greater degree the authority and control given us by the Constitution.

I can get along with people as well as anyone else can. I thought we were all working for the same cause; yet in times such as these I am told by a bureaucrat to keep my nose out of affairs in which I am as much interested as he is, and in which I have as much concern as he has. That is one of the reasons why this bill ought to pass. It would retain in the Senate a control which would at least put the fear of God into the hearts of some of the "big Ikes"—as we call them down in the country—in the bureaus.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I do not approve any high-handed methods, or any such dictatorial conduct as the Senator from Tennessee has mentioned, any more than he does. However, I do not think this bill is the way to cure that situation. In the first place, if we were to adopt this bill as a cure, I think the cure would be much worse than any evil which may exist. In the second place, as the Senator has said, the official of whom he has complained was not in the Tennessee Valley Authority, and therefore the story which he told was not really germane to the amendment which I have offered. So far as any difference between the Senator and the Chairman of the Tennessee Valley Authority is concerned, as I have stated, the bill would not affect the chairman or any member of the Board, because they are all subject to confirmation under the basic act creating the T. V. A.

Mr. STEWART. Every contact I have ever had with the T. V. A. has been perfectly fine. I have had no contacts with the Chairman since my political experience last year. Prior to that time I got along all right with him.

Mr. HILL. I am glad to hear the Senator say that all his contacts with the T. V. A. have been fine. Certainly that has been my experience with the T. V. A. I have found employees of the T. V. A. to be uniformly courteous, considerate, helpful, and cooperative in every way. I am delighted that the Senator from Tennessee has found them exactly as I have found them.

The report of the committee on the bill says that the committee wishes to emphasize that the bill would lay no withering touch on the civil service. My colleague [Mr. BANKHEAD] and I are asking the Senate not to let the bill lay any withering touch on the merit system of the Tennessee Valley Authority or those employed under the merit system.

As I have stated, about 400 Tennessee Valley Authority employees—engineers, chemists, and scientists of all kinds—would be affected by the bill. As I stated earlier, I do not think that this great national agency, set up by the Federal Government, representing all the people and financed by money from all the taxpayers, should have its employees under a sense of responsibility to any one State, even though that State should be my own State of Alabama.

Not only does the Tennessee Valley Authority have jurisdiction over the entire watershed of the Tennessee River, which encompasses the whole or parts of seven States, but action by officials of the Tennessee Valley Authority, particularly in the matter of the control and regulation of the waters, often has a far-reaching effect on the waters in the Ohio region, and the waters of the lower Mississippi. Two or three years ago Cairo, Ill., was saved from a devastating flood by the way the engineers of the Tennessee Valley Authority operated their dams and controlled and held back the water. If those waters are controlled only with the Tennessee Valley in mind, it may mean floods in the Ohio Valley or on the lower Mississippi.

This great national agency was created for all the people and with the money of all the people. No employee of that agency should be put in a position where he would have a sense of obligation, real or fancied, to any one of the 48 States in the Union; the employees of the T. V. A. should be responsible to all the people.

The employees of the Tennessee Valley Authority are employed under the merit system. They come from all sections of the country. As I recall, there is not a State in the Union which is not represented by one or more employees on the rolls of the Tennessee Valley Authority. They came there feeling that they had met the test and the requirements of the merit system of the Tennessee Valley Authority; that they had won their jobs on their merit and ability. Up to date they have kept their jobs because of their efficiency and the service they have rendered the Tennessee Valley Authority and the people of the country. Is it fair to them now peremptorily, by act of Congress, to discharge them as of June 30? Is it fair to say to them, "You will be discharged, and unless you can be reappointed and confirmed by the Senate on the 30th of September you will go out"? Why discharge them? What test are they supposed to meet? They have already met the test of merit, ability, efficiency, and devoted and loyal public service. What test is now desired of them? What must they do in order to be reappointed? Whom must they see? With whom must they talk? What must they do? They are already in their jobs. They obtained them on their merit and ability. Why throw them out now? Must they meet some kind of political test? Is that the idea? Is that the thought? Is it fair to those 400 men who came from States all the way from Delaware to California for the Congress now to throw them out, admitting that they have done a good job? Do they stand in default? Have they failed to render the service for which they were employed? Is there a private corporation in the country which, if it had a faithful, loyal, able, and efficient employee, would proceed to throw him out without some good reason affecting the efficiency of the organization?

There are approximately 228 engineers in the employ of the T. V. A. who would be affected by the enactment of this bill. They have done a wonderful job. They have inaugurated and are successfully carrying to a conclusion the greatest engineering undertaking in all the history of the world. They have built 12 great dams in the Tennessee Valley; and 1 huge coal plant. They are now in the process of construction of 6 additional dams. They have expended between $600,000,000 and $700,000,000, and there has been not one word, not one breath of question in connection with the honesty, integrity, or devoted service of those men. In the construction of 2 of the great dams the engineers have broken 2 world records, and they have set a new record in the matter of costs and economy. They have constantly reduced the cost of construction of those dams until a new record has been established.

To illustrate: When they started, the cost of designs for the dams was about 5 percent of the total cost. Now, due to the ability, efficiency, and devotion of the engineers in the Tennessee Valley Authority, the cost has been reduced from 5 percent to six-tenths of 1 percent.

Today one of the most serious problems facing the country is the problem of manpower, the compelling need of manpower, and the shortage of manpower in so many places. The engineers of the Tennessee Valley Authority have reduced the accident rate to such an extent that the accident frequency rate of the Tennessee Valley Authority is 60 percent below the average rate for similar construction elsewhere. They have reduced the accident severity rate until it is only half the average for similar construction work throughout the country.

As the Senator from Tennessee has said, some 33,000 men are employed by the T. V. A. We have had labor troubles throughout the country. We have had stoppages of work, absenteeism, and other problems growing out of the present situation; but not one single hour has been lost from work by employees of the Tennessee Valley Authority because of strikes or other labor difficulties.

Three or four years ago a special committee of Congress, headed by a distinguished former Member of this body, Senator Donahey of Ohio, made its report following a most painstaking and thorough investigation of the Tennessee Valley Authority. The report stated that the Authority had set a new record as well as a notable example in the way it had handled its labor relations. Speed records were broken, economy records were broken, and labor records were broken, because of the efficiency, ability, and devotion of the T. V. A. engineers. The Congress of the United States is now asked to throw them out of their jobs.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I am glad to yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator has made a very able appeal in regard to the employees themselves, but I am thinking about the Tennessee Valley Authority itself.

Mr. HILL. I am coming to that question. The subject of the Tennessee Valley Authority is next on my agenda.

I spoke about the Tennessee Valley Authority being largely a great experiment. The Government had entered a field which had never been entered by our Government before. We hear much today about bureaus and bureaucrats. We have heard about them on the floor today since I started my speech. We have a great Federal agency, the Tennessee Valley Authority, which points the way, and shows the road away from bureaucracy and bureaucrats.

Instead of the Tennessee Valley Authority being located in Washington, with many employees in Washington determining many policies and establishing many rules and regulations to be enforced upon the people in the States and counties, the Tennessee Valley Authority is a "grass roots" organization. It is an organization of the people, by the people, and for the people in the Tennessee Valley. Its headquarters are at Knoxville, Tenn., in the heart of the valley. When it started its great multipurpose program including many things, from the construction of dams to the rebuilding of soil in the Tennessee Valley, instead of proceeding as a bureau might have been expected to proceed, by bringing in thousands of employees to carry forward its program and impose it and the will of the Authority on the local people, the Tennessee Valley Authority joined hands with the local people and said to them in effect, "We want the democratic process to work. We want local responsibility; we want local cooperation; we want, so far as possible, the people in the valley themselves to do the job. We want them, so far as possible, to put up all the money they can and thereby relieve the Federal Treasury of as much burden as possible. We want them to shape the policies, and to give direction and guidance to this great program."

When it came to the question of power, the T. V. A. did not go into the cities and towns in the Tennessee Valley, buy up the local distribution systems, and send a great number of T. V. A. employees there to operate them.

What did it do? It said, "We will not buy these local systems. We want the people themselves, the local municipalities, to buy, own, and operate their own electric systems instead of having it done for them." So throughout the Tennessee Valley today the Tennessee Valley Authority is not operating distribution systems. Those systems are being operated by the local people through their own officers and chosen representatives. It is the same with the farmers in their cooperative associations and R. E. A. lines. The T. V. A. did not set up the organizations and then say to the farmer, "You must do business with us according to our plans, according to our rules and regulations or else you will not get any power."

The T. V. A. encouraged and made possible and certain that the cooperative associations would be locally owned, locally controlled, and locally operated. As my colleague, the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], coauthor of this amendment with me, knows, if the Tennessee Valley Authority had wanted to become a bureaucratic organization and to follow the rules of bureaucracy, when it came to this agricultural program it would have hired a lot of engineers and so-called farm experts, and sent them forth to carry on this great agricultural program for the fertilization and rebuilding of our soil; but, instead of following that policy, the T. V. A. joined hands with the Extension Service. Largely because of acts of Congress and because of Federal appropriations, as the Senate knows, in every agricultural county in Alabama and in other States there are local county agents under the Extension Service, and so the T. V. A. joined hands with the county agents, through the Extension Service, and let the county agents carry on the work. The county agents are named by the local county boards; they are exactly what their name implies, county agents, servants of the people of the county, chosen and elected by the people of the county. So the T. V. A. made use of the county agents. It did not hire a lot of employees of its own.

I shall not take time now to tell the story of what has been done in the matter of refertilization and the building of soil, and what the able scientists working on phosphate have done. The new phosphate fertilizer contains plant food as high as 65 percent; and, working with the county agents, the T. V. A., with this new plant food which was devised by the T. V. A. chemists, have raised from 30 to 60 percent the production of food which now we must have for the winning of the war. They have increased beef production, dairying production, vegetables, food of all kinds, the kind of food of which we have feared we would have a shortage, and as to which, even now, there is a serious threat of a shortage. That is what they did. They went forth, utilized the local county agents, and put on this great program which has increased by between 30 and 60 percent food production on some 42,000 farms.

Yet those chemists, those scientists, who have dedicated their lives to existence in the cloistered walls of a laboratory, without any acclaim, without any publicity, with few persons having any real knowledge of the work they are doing—those men who have devised a new phosphate which has brought about greatly increased production, providing a greater supply of food for our war effort, under this bill would be fired on June 30, this month, and unless they can meet some kind of tests other than merit, other than efficiency, other than devoted service by the 30th day of September they would be out of their jobs.

At Muscle Shoals there is a great plant making ammonia and nitrogen, which goes into the bombs which our boys are today carrying over Italy and Germany, the islands of the Mediterranean, and the islands of the Southwest Pacific. As we know, every missile whether it be a bomb or a shell or a grenade, must have nitrogen, and these chemists, these scientists of the T. V. A., who are making this nitrogen for our boys, not only to save their lives but to carry the war to the enemy, are to be told, although they have done and are doing a wonderful job, that they will be "fired" on the 30th day of this month.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I do not desire to interrupt the Senator unduly, but will he yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LUCAS in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I was interested in the questions propounded by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] a while ago as to whether these men would actually be covered by the O'Mahoney amendment, about which we are not certain at all, about which there is much doubt and confusion, and that such confusion would affect these men. I wish to ask the Senator, under the amendment reported by the committee and which is now pending, there would be no doubt at all, would there, about any one of these men who received more than $4,500 a year?

Mr. HILL. No, I will say to the Senator there may be some doubt about the O'Mahoney substitute, but there can be no more doubt about this bill in its operations than there is of the fact of the light of day is now coming through the glass roof of the Senate chamber.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield to my friend from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator has said time and time again that these men are to be fired. There are 400 of them under the O'Mahoney amendment and there are a few more under the committee amendment. I want to ask him, if they are men such as he has described, has he the slightest doubt that such men would be approved by the Senate of the United States if their nominations should come before it? They would not be discharged; their names would simply come to the Senate, and if they are the kind of men the Senator has described, of course, their nominations would be confirmed by the Senate. But why should they be treated differently than all other employees of the Government?

Mr. HILL. As I have stated time and again I am asking the same treatment for them as is accorded civil-service employees. These men have given loyal and devoted service, and certainly it is to be hoped that they would be confirmed by the Senate; but, in the light of their record and the light of what they have done, why should they have this kind of threat over their heads? Why should there be cast on their records a doubt that there is something wrong with them, so that their appointments will have to be confirmed?

Mr. McKELLAR. I merely wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that they would not be fired, as he has repeated so often.

Mr. HILL. They have already met the test of efficiency, of merit, of devotion, of ability, of loyal service; but, under the proposed law, unless they meet some other kind of test, I do not know what the test may be—they will go out of office not later than the 30th of September.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

Mr HILL. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. I was going to suggest, in line with what the Senator is saying, it is proposed that they must secure new appointments or they are to be fired.

Mr. HILL. Their present appointments terminate by operation of law under this bill, if enacted.

Mr. HATCH. Yes, under the bill their present appointments would terminate.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I have spoken of the ammonia plant of the T V. A. Do you realize, Senators, what the T. V. A. means to the war effort which we are all striving to further? The proposal is not to take action with reference to an agency that functions merely in normal peacetimes. The Tennessee Valley Authority today is a great war agency. Today 80 percent of all the power generated by the Tennessee Valley Authority is going into war production. Not many days ago the head of the Strategic Materials Division of the War Production Board made this statement about the Tennessee Valley Authority:

> When I came to Washington I could not see the Tennessee Valley Authority with a telescope; today, in all fairness, I must say that we could not have our war program but for the Tennessee Valley Authority.

They are producing, as I have said, nitrogen for explosives and shells of all kinds; they are producing phosphate not only for agriculture but for incendiary shells and bombs, and for tracer bullets. Whence has the aluminum come which has gone into the production of the more than 100,000 airplanes which have been built? Whence has the aluminum come which went into the airplanes which a few days ago bombed the island of Pantelleria without the loss of a single ground soldier? Practically all our aluminum has come either from the Alcoa plant of the Aluminum Co. of America, or the Reynolds Metals Co. plant, which are in the Tennessee Valley and which get their power from the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Are we to step in now and say to the engineers and scientists who are providing this aluminum: "You will go out of your jobs on the 30th of June. Unless you can get a reappointment you will be out for good on the 30th of September."

The plants of the Tennessee Valley Authority are making chemical ingredients of all kinds. For instance, there is calcium carbide, one of the most essential ingredients in the manufacture of synthetic rubber. For months we have been discussing the production of synthetic rubber. Why has it not been produced? Why has not something been done about it? Something is being done about it by the Tennessee Valley Authority today. They are producing calcium carbide, which is a necessary ingredient. Yet we are asked to say to the scientists, the chemists, the men who are doing that work, and doing a splendid job, "We are going to fire you on the 30th of June, and if you cannot get reappointments, you are going to be fired for good on the 30th of September."

A few days ago the ammonia plant, producing nitrogen, was awarded the Army and Navy E. A representative of the War Department, Col. A. Robert Ginsburgh, went to the Tennessee Valley with that award. He is military aide to the Under Secretary of War, Judge Patterson. Judge Patterson, as we know, has the prime responsibility for production so far as the War Department is concerned. This is what Colonel Ginsburgh said to those men, those scientists, those chemists, at that ammonia plant, who would be fired under the pending bill:

> I was here 2 years ago. Today some of the old landmarks are left, but the place has changed so completely that you'd hardly recognize it. It is amazing what you people have done here. In so many instances during the present emergency the Army has had to have new plants erected, starting from the ground up But in this case, we had a plant with an established organization that needed only to be expanded.
> At least one of your plants is turning out 50 percent more volume than it did at the time of Pearl Harbor. Another is operating at 20 percent above the designed capacity—
> Twenty percent above the designed capacity.
> And a third is 10 percent above. Such records are achieved neither by the weak nor the faint-hearted. They are made only by strong, loyal soldiers of production—the arm behind the Army. Some of the stuff used on the fronts is trademarked "Muscle Shoals." You sweat plenty to get it to the troops and you have every right to stick out your chests. Your ammonium nitrate is going into high explosives for General Eisenhower's expeditionary force and MacArthur's men in the Pacific. Because machinery whirls and whines here at Muscle Shoals, another shell whirls and whines into the Nazi lines in Tunisia. Because you ring the production bell here in Alabama, another bomb rings the bell in Bizerte.

Mr. President, that is the record of the chemists and scientists at the ammonia nitrate plant at Muscle Shoals. Is there anything about that record which indicates that those men should, by operation of law, be dismissed on the 30th of this month?

Have Senators stopped to think what effect the enactment of the pending bill would have on the morale of those men?

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. TUNNELL. I am asking for information whether, as a practical proposition, the things the Senator describes would take effect if the bill were passed and the amendment he is offering were rejected.

Mr. HILL. What I have stated would be the effect if the amendment the senior Senator from Alabama and I have offered were rejected and the bill were passed.

Mr. TUNNELL. If the Senator's amendment should be rejected and the O'Mahoney amendment should be agreed to, does the Senator think there would be a doubt about the effect?

Mr. HILL. Yes, I do. To be perfectly candid with the Senator, I am not sure about the O'Mahoney amendment. I shall certainly support it. The amendment the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and I have offered is an amendment to the O'Mahoney substitute, and I very much hope our amendment will be agreed to. I think it should be agreed to.

Mr. TUNNELL. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I spoke about the phosphate production at Muscle Shoals. Some of that phosphate is being sent to England. One shipload of phosphate takes the place of seven shiploads of foodstuffs. In other words, sending one shipload of phosphate obviates the necessity of sending seven shiploads of food.

What is there about the Tennessee Valley Authority, what has it done, what has it failed to do, that should prompt the Senate now to do violence to its fundamental act, to do violence to the whole concept of the Tennessee Valley Authority? Why should we change it? From all sides, including the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART], come words of praise for the magnificent work the Tennessee Valley Authority has done. From the lips of the junior Senator from Tennessee come words which, so far as the employees are concerned, with the exception of those at the top, testify that there has been nothing but the finest kind of understanding, and courtesy, and cooperation.

Why should we change it now? We started on a great experiment, to see if we could set up an agency with its personnel based on merit and efficiency, and the experiment has proved successful beyond our highest hopes. Why should we change now? What dictates a change?

Mr. President, if our amendment shall be rejected, and if the O'Mahoney substitute shall be rejected, there are few Senators on this floor who do not know that the Senate in time of war will have wasted time even in considering the pending bill, because it will not pass, it cannot pass.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Speaking of that situation, I am wondering what would be said on the floor of the Senate if some of our great war industries, for example, the Glenn Martin plant in Baltimore, making airplanes, or the Kaiser shipyard, should suddenly serve notice on their top men, the men responsible for their entire war program, "Unless you get new appointments from the president and unless those appointments are confirmed by our board of directors you will be fired automatically on June 30 of this year." What would Senators say about that?

Mr. HILL. I am sure the Senator knows what Senators would say, and the Senator knows that whoever attempted to do the firing would be himself fired promptly by the board of directors, or by whoever was responsible. Is not that true?

Mr. HATCH. Should the Congress of the United States be less jealous of our own industries than we require of private industry?

Mr. HILL. We not only should not be less jealous, we should be more jealous, because the Congress of the United States has the eyes of the Nation upon it more fully and completely than any single private industry, or all private industry. The people of the United States have a right to look to the Congress for their leadership and guidance, and they do look to it, and we are asked to set an example which, if followed through the whole war effort, through all the war industries and all the war production, would mean strangling and paralyzing and destroying the war effort.

I shall not take the time now to dwell upon the employees of the Tennessee Valley Authority, thinking of them not as individuals, but thinking of them as exceedingly important factors in the war effort. I shall not dwell upon the effect the enactment of the pending bill would have upon their morale, upon their esprit de corps. What is there about the measure in its present form which, if it shall be passed, would justify anyone giving of his best efforts? What is there in it to inspire anyone to give the best that is in him to his work, On the other hand, knowing human nature as we do, would not the effect of the passage of the bill be absolutely to the contrary? Would not the employees feel that their devoted and loyal service had not been appreciated, that they were now, without rhyme or reason, being impeded and embarrassed in their work, and perhaps thrown out of their jobs? Would not that of itself paralyze their every effort? would not that freeze their very spirit?

No, Mr. President, the bill in its present form should never be passed by the Senate. The Senate has an opportunity now to do something worth while, to do something constructive, something statesmanlike. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] when he sat down to write his amendment had the very thought in mind, the very thought that the Senate might do something statesmanlike; that it might make a constructive contribution to our Government; that it might take its place, and have its say, and assert its authority in the matter of the selection of policy-making officials. We have that opportunity now. Let us make the bill a bill which does all that. Let the Senate assert its authority in the matter of the selection of policy-making officials. No one can quarrel with that. With such a provision in the bill, when the Senate shall pass it, it will have rendered a service to itself and to the country. Let us, however, not pass a bill which some feel smacks of pie, pap, and patronage.

Mr. President, I wish to read a short letter which the bill brings to mind, from Thomas Jefferson to James Madison.

POPLAR FOREST, November 29, 1820.

DEAR SIR: The enclosed letter from our ancient friend Tenche Coxe, came unfortunately to Monticello after I left it, and has had a dilatory passage to this place, where I received it yesterday, and obey its injunction of immediate transmission to you. We should have recognized the style even without a signature, and although so written as to be much of its indecipherable. This is a sample of the effects we may expect from the late mischievous law vacating every 4 years nearly all the executive offices of the Government. It saps the constitutional and salutary functions of the President, and introduces a principle of intrigue and corruption, which will soon leaven the mass, not only of Senators, but of citizens. It is more baneful than the attempt which failed in the beginning of the Government, to make all officers irremovable but with the consent of the Senate. This places, every 4 years, all appointments under their power, and even obliges them to act on every one nomination. It will keep in constant excitement all the hungry cormorants for office, render them, as well as those in place, sycophants to their Senators, engage these in eternal intrigue to turn out one and put in another, in cabals to swap work; and make of them what all executive directories become, mere sinks of corruption and faction. Thus must have been one of the midnight signatures of the President, when he had not the time to consider, or even to read the law; and the more fatal as being irrepealable but with the consent of the Senate, which will never be obtained.

Shades of that bill of 1820 hang today over the Senate of the United States. We built up our civil service; then we went one step further and launched the great experiment of the merit system of the Tennessee Valley Authority. That experiment has proved to be successful. Instead of going forward with a merit system, with that system, based on efficiency and ability, it is proposed now to turn back to legislation of the character so strongly condemned by Thomas Jefferson.

Let this bill pass as it was reported by the committee, and the House of Representatives, in its wisdom, and even more, in its desire to maintain the equality of the two Houses, in its desire to make certain that both branches shall be coequal, will never in the world permit the bill to pass.

The President of the United States has already declared in a letter that the bill in its present form raises all kinds of objections, so far as he is concerned, and has practically said in the letter that he would never sign the bill.

As I have said, the Senate has an opportunity now to do something constructive, something worthy of the best traditions and the best work of the Senate. Let the Senate make this measure a bill such as the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] has in mind, a bill applying only to policy-making officers, and then we shall have some chance to have the bill pass in the House, we shall have a chance to have the bill signed by the President into law, and at least Senators will have the consciousness of knowing that they have not gone back into the old, obsolete, and unclean system of pie and pap and patronage, but, on the contrary, have made a contribution to the work of the Senate, and a contribution to our institutions and to the cause of good government.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I inquire whether any other Senator has expressed a desire to speak on the O'Mahoney amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that so far as he knows no Senator desires to speak at this time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I desire to make a few remarks.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to say a few words also.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield to me for a few moments?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I rise to modify the pending amendment in the following particulars: On page 1, line 5, strike out "June 30" and insert "December 31." On page 2, line 3, to strike out "September 30, 1943" and insert "March 31, 1944." On page 2, line 5, strike out "June 30" and insert "December 31."

The reason for the modifications I now make in the amendment is that the original bill was introduced in January, early in the session, and at that time there was fully 6 months' time within which to make the bill effective, if it should pass. So the dates I have just mentioned—June 30, 1943, and September 30, 1943—were fixed as of that time.

It now being the 14th of June, obviously it will be impossible to have the bill, if enacted, operate within those dates. I merely propose these formal changes in order that there may be 6 months within which to have the bill become effective.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, at the proper time I shall say to the Senator that I expected to offer the same changes of dates the Senator has offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will advise the Senator from Wyoming that the yeas and nays have been ordered on the amendment; therefore, unanimous consent would be required in order to have the changes he has proposed made.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, under those circumstances, perhaps I should suggest the absence of a quorum before making the unanimous-consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The parliamentarian advises the Chair that it is unnecessary to do so.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the amendment modified by the purely formal amendments I have just proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming? The Chair hears none; and, without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I ask that at this point in the RECORD the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming be printed in full, with the changes which have just been made at his suggestion, in order that the RECORD will show precisely what the Senate is to vote on.

I should make the same suggestion relative to the original proposal of the Senator from Tennessee, but I assume he will do so himself.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes. Mr. President, I have no objection to the request of the Senator from Washington.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Washington is agreed to; and the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming as modified will be printed in full at this point in the RECORD.

The amendment of Mr. O'MAHONEY, as modified, is as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That (1) any person hereafter appointed or promoted to any civilian office to which this section applies shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and (2) no person shall hold any such office after December 31, 1943, unless he shall have been so appointed: Provided, That any person now holding any such office, who was not so appointed, may continue to hold such office until his successor is appointed and qualified or until March 31, 1944, whichever is earlier, if a nomination for an appointment to such office has been submitted to the Senate prior to December 31, 1943.

"SEC. 2. Except as provided in section 3, the following persons in or under the executive branch of the Government of the United States (including Government-owned corporations) shall be deemed to be officers of the United States and the provisions of the first section of this act shall apply to the office held by each of them:

"(a) The heads, assistant heads, and head attorneys of the several departments and agencies of the Government (including members of the boards of directors and officers of Government-owned corporations).

"(b) The heads of bureaus, divisions, or other units representing the first subdivision of any such department or agency.

"(c) The heads and assistant heads of regional, area, or State offices of such departments or agencies.

"(d) All persons whose duties include responsibility for final action in connection with the preparation and promulgation of rules, regulations, or orders made or issued under authority of any act of Congress or any Executive order.

"(e) All persons whose duties include responsibility for determining the policies to be followed in administering the functions of any department, agency, or subdivision thereof as defined in paragraphs (a), (b), and (c) of this section.

"SEC. 3. The provisions of the first section of this act shall not be applicable, except in cases where confirmation by the Senate is otherwise required by law—

"(a) In the case of (1) any person appointed or promoted in accordance with provisions of the civil-service laws and rules, as a result of which appointment or promotion and satisfactory service during a probationary period he acquired a classified (competitive) civil-service status; (2) any person who acquired a classified (competitive) civil-service status as in clause (1) and who, having left the service, has been or may be reinstated with restoration of such status; and (3) any person who, subsequent to appointment, acquired a classified status by action of the President or the Civil Service Commission, pursuant to act of Congress or Executive order; or

"(b) In the case of any civilian office or position held by any person on leave of absence or furlough from such office or position and in active service in the military or naval forces of the United States; or

"(c) In any case in which a person is restored to or reinstated in an office or position in accordance with the provisions of any act of Congress providing that he shall be restored to or reinstated in such office or position upon completion of active service in the military or naval forces of the United States; or

"(d) In the case of any office or position in the Federal Bureau of Investigation in the Department of Justice; or

"(e) In the case of any person whose compensation is paid from the appropriation for the White House Office in the Executive Office of the President."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to provide that certain civilian officers in the executive branch of the Government who are appointed without regard to the civil-service laws shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to say a few words with reference to the O'Mahoney amendment. When it is realized that I began to work for the Tennessee Valley in the early part of 1916, by introducing the first amendment to the bill to improve it in the way in which it has been improved, and in view of the innumerable fights I have had on the floor of the Senate to obtain appropriations with which to have the dams built, I take it that no one will think that I was ever more interested in any other institution set up by the Government than I have been in the Tennessee Valley Authority. The truth of the matter is that I have spent the greater part of my official life—the last 27 years—in working on it. My efforts began in 1916 and have continued to the present day. All the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] has said about the good the T. V. A. has done and is doing is not only endorsed by me, but I could say a great deal more about it than he has said; because it is a part of my life, it is a part of my being, it is a part of my career, it is a matter in which I have always taken the greatest pride. I have taken a pride in my work, in the same way. Innumerable Senators have fought me here in my efforts in its behalf, and at times it did not look as if the Tennessee Valley Authority would become the great institution which the money of the Federal Government has made it. All the progress made has been brought about as the result of the actions of the Committee on Appropriations, and it was in that committee that the appropriation of the money was recommended for the purpose of developing the work.

The great speech which the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], my good friend, who is one of the grandest men in the Senate, has made today has been in behalf of 400 employees out of 33,000. He has said that all 400 are men of the greatest ability, the greatest scientific knowledge, the greatest industry, the greatest honor and integrity. Certainly, if they are the kind of men he has in mind—and I am sure he must be correct; I rely upon his judgment, because I do not know so much about the men to whom he has referred—and if what he has said is correct, all those men will be confirmed by the Senate; they will not be turned out, at all. However, why should any particular organization want to prevent confirmation by the Senate of such employees as the Senator from Alabama has described? We are passing this bill as to all other bureaus and agencies. Why should we make the Tennessee Valley Authority an exception?

In the pride I have for the Tennessee Valley Authority, if I were the chairman of the Authority I should want every one of those employees to come before the Senate for confirmation. I should not object to having all 400 of them confirmed. Why should they be excepted? If we except this agency, we shall have to except the Bonneville Dam, located in the State of my good friend, the Senator from Washington, and the other dams located in that section, and we shall have to except the Colorado Dam. They are all doing valuable work in the war effort, and we should have to except all of them, alike. I can see reason for excepting the Federal Bureau of Investigation, because it is doing work of the most highly confidential nature. But I do not know why we should expect 400 employees of only one of the 100 or 200 bureaus or whatever the number may be—we do not know the exact number—operating under the Federal Government.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am further perplexed, because the Senator from Alabama has said that none of the 400 are policy-making officials. Therefore I do not see how they would come under the provisions of the O'Mahoney amendment anyway.

Mr. McKELLAR. Neither do I.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. HILL. Regardless of what may be said about the O'Mahoney amendment—and the Senator from New Mexico, a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, has very great doubt as to what would be its effect—there can be no question that those employees would come under the provisions of the original bill as reported by the committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I myself am rather bewildered. As I understand the matter, a few minutes ago the Senator from Alabama said he was in favor of the O'Mahoney amendment, and would vote for it.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I said that, as between the two, I certainly would prefer the amendment. However, unquestionably, the last thing I want is the Senator's bill. I say that to the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then I am getting rid of a part of my bewilderment.

I understand that the Senator from New Mexico expressed himself in the committee, as I think he does here, as opposed not only to the O'Mahoney amendment, but to any bill on the subject, and that he was opposed to any bill which was before the Committee on the Judiciary. Although he was in the minority in that committee, nevertheless, I am quite sure he is going to oppose the bill in any form.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. In view of the fact that the Senator has expressed himself relative to my attitude in the committee—and I did say I was opposed to the original bill, and would vote against it when the time came to vote on the floor of the Senate, and I gave my reasons as best I could—let me point out that when the Senator from Wyoming attempted to define policy-making officials, I said, and I repeat, that if the operations of the bill are to be restricted to policy-making officials, I shall be glad to join in such a bill; and I attempted as best I could to help the Senator from Wyoming work out a measure which would apply to policy-making officials.

When that substitute was offered in the committee I voted for it, because I thought it was a vast improvement. Then, when the $4,500 provision was put back into it, I voted against it. Today I shall vote first for the T. V. A. amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL]. I shall vote for the substitute offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY]; but if those amendments are defeated and the bill comes to a vote on the committee report, I shall vote against it, and I hope it will be defeated.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLLAR. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. According to the last statement made by the able Senator from Alabama, it seems to me that his amendment should be withheld until the O'Mahoney amendment is out of the way, and his amendment should be offered to the original text. I can understand how it might have some application there.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. HILL. In view of the doubt about what the effect of the O'Mahoney substitute would be, we felt that we should offer our amendment to the O'Mahoney substitute, so that there could be no doubt. Then, if the O'Mahoney substitute is voted down, of course, as the Senator says, our amendment should be offered to the bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to have the Senator from Alabama understand that I am voting against his amendment to the O'Mahoney substitute, because I do not think the O'Mahoney substitute requires any exceptions. However, if the O'Mahoney substitute should fail, then I will concede a point in the argument in respect to the text of the bill.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I have just consulted the parliamentarian. I am advised that if the O'Mahoney substitute were adopted, the parliamentary situation would be such that it could not be amended. That is why the Senator from Alabama is offering his amendment now.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. HILL. With all deference to the Senator from Michigan—and I am very anxious to have him vote for the T. V. A. amendment—let me say that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], who is a member of the Judiciary Committee, gave a great deal of thought and study to the question of the T. V. A., and whether or not the amendment ought to be offered to the O'Mahoney substitute. It was his opinion that there was so much doubt about the O'Mahoney substitute that the amendment ought to be offered to the O'Mahoney substitute. If the Senator from Michigan feels that the T. V. A. would not come in under the O'Mahoney substitute anyway, what could be the harm in adopting the T. V. A. amendment to the O'Mahoney substitute?

Mr. VANDENBERG. The harm is that we set out upon a series of exceptions and exemptions, and heaven only knows where the end ought to be.

Mr. HILL. There are other exceptions already.

Mr. VANDENBERG. For particular reasons in each case.

Mr. HILL. If the Senator will read the letter of the Civil Service Commission commenting on the O'Mahoney substitute, I think he will be persuaded that there is a good deal of doubt about the O'Mahoney substitute, as to exactly what it means, and how it might be interpreted or construed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if other Senators have finished, I will proceed for a few moments. I rose merely for the purpose of saying that I yield to no man in upholding the Tennessee Valley Authority, for which I have done the principal work of my legislative life. It so happened that I was a member of the Appropriations Committee during the period when all the dams were built, with the exception of the Wilson Dam, and I helped arrange for the Wilson Dam. After the most vigorous fights I ever had in this body, I succeeded in obtaining amendments, sometimes by a majority of one or two, and sometimes after a tie vote and reconsideration two or three times. If anyone is interested in that great organization, I am.

I cannot see why anyone in the T. V. A. should want to be excused from the provisions of a law dealing with bureaucracy. Only 400 employees of the T. V. A. would be affected, and the Senator from Alabama says that every one of them is worthy. I have never known the Senate to turn down a worthy employee. I have been a Member of the Senate for 27 years, and I have never known a worthy employee to be turned down.

The Senator from Alabama talks about manpower. There are approximately 135,000,000 people in this country. Only 400 employees of the T. V. A. would be affected by the Senator's amendment. Important as those 400 employees are, I do not think they would greatly affect the manpower situation.

One thing further, and then I am through. I do not think this amendment ought to be adopted, or that any other amendment ought to be adopted, for the reason that they would merely weaken the bill. The O'Mahoney substitute is exactly the same as the committee amendment, except that it would exempt 15,000 or 20,000 persons who otherwise would be subject to the law.

But that is no the principal thing. The principal thing is that would leave to the bureaus the decision of the question as to who is a policy-making official. That is my objection to the O'Mahoney substitute. I would not object to it otherwise, if it were specific. It is not specific. It would leave to the bureaus themselves the decision as to who are policy-making officials, and the decision would be final.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. As I understand the Senator's contention, it is that the O'Mahoney substitute offers uncertainty in the place of the certainty of the committee amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is exactly correct. It would leave to the bureaucrats themselves the decision as to who are policy-making officers and who are not.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If that interpretation be correct, I do not see why the Senator from Alabama is worrying, because I think the T. V. A. would exempt all its employees forthwith.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think it would.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I do not think the T. V. A. would have such authority under the O'Mahoney substitute, with all respect to my friend from Michigan.

Mr. McKELLAR. If it did not have authority under that provision, under the present head of the T. V. A. it would find it in the T. V. A. Act.

With respect to the contention that the T. V. A. employees would be fired by the 30th of June, there is nothing in that argument.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. As a member of the Appropriations Committee, I have had occasion to notice with what zeal the Senator from Tennessee has worked for the Tennessee Valley Authority. He has been the heart, spirit, and soul of the T. V. A. legislatively. The dams and reservoirs which have been built have been constructed for the most part because of the earnest advocacy of the Senator from Tennessee. It is my recollection that in his advocacy of many of those projects he was opposed by those in charge of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. OVERTON. He had to fight his way against their opposition.

It has occurred to me that the reason for this amendment is possibly that those in charge of the Tennessee Valley Authority have come to regard it as the forty-ninth State of the Union. I have understood—I may be erroneously informed—that they are preparing to have a flag of their own to wave over the Tennessee Valley Authority, just as each State has a flag, or some emblem of its own, to set it apart from other agencies of the Government. I am wondering whether that is possibly the attitude of those in charge. They seem to think that the Tennessee Valley Authority should be placed beyond any congressional control, and should be regarded as the forty-ninth State of the Union.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is my understanding of the attitude of Mr. Lilienthal, the present leader of the Tennessee Valley Authority. That is his view. That is my objection to him, because that is not my view.

Mr. OVERTON. That is not the Senator's view at all.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as my good friend from Louisiana has just stated, at my request and earnest insistence the Senate has voted for various appropriations for the Tennessee Valley Authority. The contests for such appropriations have all come before the Appropriations Committee. As the Senator knows, with respect to every single one of them I have had to fight. Usually when I have been successful it has been by a majority of one or two. I distinctly recall that at one time there was a tie vote. I think the Senator will agree that no one ever worked harder, longer, or more persistently concerning any matter of government than I have worked to have these dams built. We have built them.

After the Senate has been good enough to me to allow the expenditure of this vast amount of money in my vicinity for what I believe to be one of the greatest projects ever conceived by man, I, as a Senator, would be ungrateful to my colleagues if I did not tell the truth, and stand for the right in regard to the Tennessee Valley Authority, just as I would try to tell the truth and stand for the right in every action of mine in this body.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. I wish to corroborate the statement of the Senator from Tennessee. I have been closely associated with him on the Appropriations Committee and I know of the great work which he has done.

I wish to make a further statement. I am sure the Senator from Tennessee would not oppose an amendment to any bill which would be in the interest of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Mr. McKELLAR. Never in the world.

Mr. OVERTON. I am sure the Senator is correct in the position he takes, and I am sure the proposed exception cannot be defended upon principle. The only reason for making an exception in this bill is that some of those in authority in the Tennessee Valley have come to regard it as something which should be set apart as a forty-ninth State of the Union, and not be subject to any congressional control.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I thank the Senator with all my heart.

I wish to say that if the 400 employees whom the Senator from Alabama has so eloquently described here today are the kind of men he says they are, their appointments are just as certain of being confirmed by this body as that the sun rises in the east and sets in the west. Those employees will not be taken advantage of, and I hope no Senator will vote because he wishes to save one of those 400 employees. To my mind it is an exceedingly trivial matter, and, as I have already said, if I were the head of the Tennessee Valley Authority I would ask the Congress to pass a bill of this kind. I feel about it exactly as I felt the other day when talking to the distinguished head of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. He was objecting to a bill which gave the General Accounting Office the right to examine his books. He said he himself had had the books examined, and he employed the best men he could find to examine them. I said, "Mr. Jones, if I were in your place I would welcome examination of my books by another department of Government. You may have the best examiners in the world, but the law is that your books should be examined by the General Accounting Office. If I were you I would follow the law."

I think the same way about the pending measure. There is no one who can say more for the Tennessee Valley Authority than I can, because I have been saying it not here lately, to help some person, but I have been saying it for 27 years as earnestly, as faithfully, as honestly, and as vigorously as I knew how. But having said it, and having gotten my colleagues in the Senate to help me build these great dams which have been a wonderful help to our Government in the present time of need, and having stood up for the T. V. A. over the protest of some who are now criticizing me because of my advocacy of the pending bill, I am not going to be ungrateful to Senators for what they have done. They have helped me in a wonderful manner. Whenever I think a measure is just and fair to the T. V. A. I shall, so long as there is life in my body, vote for it even though it may not be popular in my State to do so. I shall vote for what I believe to be honest, fair, and just. I can hold my hand to high heaven and declare that I do not think this agency should be treated any different than any of the other agencies of Government merely because it operates in my State, or merely because it is popular in my State.

Mr. O'MAHONEY obtained the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I should be very glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Chair for his intercession in my behalf, but I wanted the floor in my own right for about 5 minutes, let me say to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I rose to discuss the pending amendment and the amendment suggested by the Senator from Alabama. I should like to conclude my remarks inasmuch as I do not intend to take very much time.

Mr. DANAHER. Very well, Mr. President; I shall bide my proper time.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I address myself now to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] in the belief that as presented to the amendment offered by the minority of the Committee on the Judiciary it does not belong on the amendment. In the second place, I see no reason why policy-making officials of T. V. A. or any other Government corporation or agency should be excluded from the confirmatory power of the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there for a moment?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator's amendment to his own amendment is brought about by the fact that this bill was passed on by the Judiciary Committee, as I recall, about 4 or 5 months ago, and at that time June 30 and September 1, I believe, were considered proper dates. The amendment the Senator is now offering is merely to extend the time further to December and March is it not?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. No. I will say to the Senator that those formal amendments have already been approved. I am now addressing myself to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the theory of the minority, as I previously stated a week or so ago, is a perfectly simple one. We believe that the great objective of the Judiciary Committee in bringing about senatorial confirmation of policy-making officials would be defeated by making this power extend to persons above a certain salary grade. The reason for this belief lies in the fact that throughout the country opinion has been built up that to extend the power of confirmation to all persons receiving salaries in excess of $4,500 would be merely to engage in a patronage grab; and the measure was so criticized throughout the country. It would also involve unnecessary labor upon the part of the Senate and its committees, because it would require the Senate to give consideration to appointees who had no power whatsoever to change the policy of the Government, who were merely employees in the narrow meaning of that word, appointed and selected merely to carry out policies framed by other persons. So the minority, rejecting the salary standard, sought to define policy-making positions. Those functions were incorporated, therefore, in the amendment which is now before the Senate. To what extent, the question then arises, do the officers and employees of the Tennessee Valley Authority exercise policy-making power within the definitions of the pending bill? I wish to say to the Senator from Alabama that in my belief an examination of the definitions will show that most of the persons about whom he is concerned are not covered, and that those who are covered should be covered.

If the Senator will direct his attention to section 2 of the pending amendment—and by that I mean the minority amendment—he will find that the definition of policy-making power begins on page 2, in line 12, and the minority recommends that persons who come within the definition of section 2 should be confirmed. Who are they?

(a) The heads, assistant heads, and head attorneys of the several departments and agencies of the Government (including members of the boards of directors and officers of Government-owned corporations).

Let us apply that now to the T. V. A. Who are the heads and assistant heads? They are the members of the Tennessee Valley Board, and they are already appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. So no question arises there.

The next official is the head attorney. Is there any reason in logic, or in policy, or in principle, why the head attorney of this vast Government corporation should not submit to confirmation by the Senate? Is there any reason why, when the head attorney is to be selected, his name and qualifications should not be passed upon by the Senate of the United States?

It is only necessary to recall the description of the power and the effectiveness of the T. V. A. to realize that an officer of a Government corporation who exercises the powers which are vested in the head attorney should present himself at the bar of public opinion here in the Senate.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TUNNELL in the chair). Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. BONE. There is much persuasiveness in one aspect of the Senator's argument, although I am not certain that an attorney, or even a head attorney, would necessarily be a maker of policy. The general counsel of an organization generally does what he is directed to do by the board, or the chief executive. I merely make that suggestion because I served as counsel for public bodies, and I bore the title of general counsel, and I know I did what I was instructed to do by the board.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I venture to say, knowing the Senator from Washington as I know him, that on many occasions he told his board what to instruct him, he outlined the instructions which were afterward placed upon him. That really is the experience of most general counsels.

Mr. BONE. Answering, I would say to my able colleague that if I were called upon to tell a board what it might do and still remain within the four corners of the law and the constitution of the State, I would naturally make answer.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

Mr. BONE. I confess that any board is quite likely to call its general counsel and confer and consult with him, even on questions of policy.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Of course.

Mr. BONE. And to the extent that his influence might be persuasive, he would have a good deal to say. That would be particularly true in cases in which the board itself was not made up of lawyers, and they would want to be absolutely sure they were pursuing the right sort of legal policy.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I think the Senator and I agree about the methods which are followed, both in public and in private corporations. In view of what I have stated, I see no reason why, under paragraph (a), T. V. A. should be excluded.

Paragraph (b) provides:

The heads of bureaus, divisions, or other units representing the first subdivision of any such department or agency.

There again we find a definition which might extend to some of the officers of the T. V. A., but only to the heads of bureaus, if there are bureaus within the T. V. A., the heads of divisions, or units representing the first subdivision. Obviously, under that definition not many persons would be covered.

Now let us go to paragraph (c):

The heads and assistant heads of regional, area, or State offices of such departments or agencies.

If I understand the organization of T. V. A., it does not now have any such offices, but the time may come when T. V. A. would want to do what is provided. T. V. A. has undertaken valuable and constructive scientific investigations of material and natural resources all through the United States, particularly in the West. It is conceivable that, under the broad powers which the T. V. A. has, it might undertake some day to establish plants in States far beyond the watershed of the Tennessee River, and in such case I see no reason why such officers, exercising such powers, should not be presented to the Senate for review.

Mr. BONE. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BONE. There is such a vast field to be covered that I realize it is difficult to be definitive to a degree which would satisfy everyone, but out of curiosity I wonder whether it is the Senator's view that his substitute would cover such officials as the heads of operation under O. P. A. and W. P. B. in the various States.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Precisely, and that was the reason why that definition was written, in order to reach organizations of that kind, which are exercising a substantial power of government over the people of the State of Washington, the State of New Mexico, the State of Alabama, and elsewhere throughout the Union.

Mr. BONE. But theoretically the officers to whom I have referred were supposed to be enforcing regulations, and not establishing major policies. Does that leave them in a twilight zone, or are they identified with sufficient clearness and distinguished in the bill as to bring them within the statute, as it would be in case the Senator's amendment was agreed to?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I think so. I think the language I have just read brings them definitely within the scope of the amendment, and would require their confirmation.

As the Senator has said, it was recognized that in some instances a State head would be doing nothing but enforcing a regulation written in Washington; but there have been so many experiences of State appointees being sent into States with which they had no acquaintance, to enforce regulations over populations of which they knew nothing, that it was the belief of the drafters that the power of confirmation should extend to them.

Mr. President, the definition in paragraph (c) is one which does not bother the T. V. A., however, unless it should go into regional operations beyond the Tennessee River Valley.

Now I will ask the Senator from Alabama if he will be good enough to look at paragraph (d) of section 2. Here we come to—

All persons whose duties include responsibility for final action in connection with the preparation and promulgation of rules, regulations, or orders made or issued under authority of any act of Congress or any Executive order.

The final authority of the T. V. A. rests with the Board, so T. V. A. would not be bothered there.

The next and final definition is:

(e) All persons whose duties include responsibility for determining the policies to be followed in administering the functions of any department, agency, or subdivision thereof as defined in paragraphs (a), (b), and (c) of this section.

There again we are dealing solely with responsibility.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. In reference to the sections to which the Senator has referred, I should like to call his attention, and the attention of the Senate, to the comment of the Civil Service Commission as to those sections. The distinguished Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] sent both the original bill and the O'Mahoney substitute to the Civil Service Commission, and they wrote a letter of comment on those measures. In this letter, signed by Harry D. Mitchell, the President of the Commission, President Mitchell stated:

Serious question may, however, arise as to the extent of subsection (d). Probably the most reasonable construction of that subsection would be that only persons who have final authority to promulgate regulations are "persons whose duties include the determination of provisions to be included in rules." In most cases, this would be only the head of the agency involved, who would already be included in subsection (a).

The language of subsection (e), however, is still indefinite, and, given its broadest application, could be held to include any person who participates in any capacity in any conference which is held for the purpose of determining policy.

It can be seen from the foregoing analysis that the enactment of this bill as proposed in either the majority or minority reports would lead to thoroughgoing administrative confusion insofar as determining whether or not specific positions were subject to the provision of senatorial confirmation.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I will say to the Senator that the letter from which he has just read does not apply to the amendment offered by the minority of the Committee on the Judiciary. The letter was written before the amendment had been perfected by the minority.

Mr. HATCH. I may say to the Senator from Alabama that the amendment to which the Civil Service Commission refers, was the substitute proposal, as it was adopted by the committee.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is correct.

Mr. HATCH. Since that time, in fact since the measure came to the floor, the Senator from Wyoming has prepared a new amendment.

Mr. HILL. Does not the O'Mahoney amendment embody much of what was in the proposal to which the letter refers?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. HILL. As I read the O'Mahoney amendment and the substitute proposal, the language is very much the same.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes, but if the Senator will permit me to say so, he is basing his judgment concerning the pending amendment on language which has been abandoned.

Mr. HILL. But a considerable portion of the language has not been abandoned. A considerable portion of it appears in the O'Mahoney amendment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. No; the criticism which the Civil Service Commission voiced in its letter, in my judgment, no longer applies. I will say to the Senator from Alabama that the language was revised after conference with the President of the Civil Service Commission, for the purpose of obviating some of the more material criticism which the Civil Service Commission embodied in that letter.

Mr. HILL. I will say, if I may, and if I am in error I should like to have the Senator from New Mexico correct me, that it is the view of the Senator from New Mexico, who has given much study and thought to the matter, that the change of language did not obviate much of the confusion and much of the uncertainty over exactly what the language does mean. Is that correct?

Mr. HATCH. That is entirely correct.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I do not know that it is necessary for me to occupy the the time of the Senate to any greater length. I merely wish to point out, however, that we are dealing now primarily in this bill with a question of power and the use of power. I do not mean electric energy, I mean public power, the authority in departments of the Government, and in Government agencies, and in Government corporations, to exercise public authority over the lives of the people of the United States.

When the Tennessee Valley Authority was created it was granted vast authority, and it operates almost without supervision by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I do not think the Senator is altogether warranted in that statement. If he will examine the hearings held before the Appropriations Committees, and more particularly the House Appropriations Committee, he will see how thoroughly the House Appropriations Committee has gone into the operations and the expenditures of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I know that examination is made annually with respect to appropriations. As a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee I have participated in some of these examinations. I am merely pointing out that so far as this bill is concerned, we are not dealing with T. V. A. as an individual organization. We are dealing with the whole broad problem of what powers shall be exercised over the people of the United States by Government-created corporations. We have only to read the record to know that the corporations extend into almost every avenue of economic activity. We know that the Board of Economic Warfare, for example, today has the power, under an Executive order, to direct the R. F. C. to organize a corporation—a most extraordinary thing.

Every lawyer knows that the history of the creation of corporations is based upon the sound principle that the power to create a corporation is derived solely from the people; that corporations could not be created except by act of the legislature or act of the Congress. Finally, some years ago, because of the great complexity of the preparation for war, the R. F. C. was authorized by law to issue charters to corporations—an almost unheard-of procedure. But now the Board of Economic Warfare, which has no statutory existence at all, has the authority to require the R. F. C. to create corporations.

The point, Mr. President, is simply that, unless in one way or another such corporations are brought before the Congress of the United States, insofar as their policies are concerned, great danger of the loss of the power of the people to regulate their affairs will arise.

My amendment represents a very moderate proposal, that so far as policy-making officials of these corporations are concerned, their names shall be presented to the Senate for examination. It is a salutary method, Mr. President. It means that all these corporations, knowing that the names of the nominees will pass in review before the Senate of the United States, will exercise the greatest care in selecting persons to exercise these tremendous powers which the Congress is giving away.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I did not want to interrupt the Senator in his present thought, but there was another point I wished to make certain and clear concerning his amendment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to add a word further. In 1937 the President of the United States sent to the Congress with his approval, the Report of the President's Committee on Administrative Management. It was a monumental work dealing with the whole problem of administrative management and its personnel. In this report I am reading from page 45, where we find this recommendation by the President's committee:

Our recommendations on Federal corporations may be summarized as follows:

1. Business corporations should be placed under special supervisory agencies to be set up in appropriate departments of the Government to give continuous and careful scrutiny to their affairs. These agencies should be provided with the special equipment and staff necessary to supervise competently the particular field in which the corporations operate.

2. Each Government corporation should be placed under a supervisory agency in an appropriate department.

And so on. I shall not read all the recommendations. I cite them merely to show that the fundamental necessity of maintaining popular control over these tremendous agencies exercising public power is so great that Congress should not hesitate, and it should not set the precedent which is proposed by the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], of excluding Government corporations from the operation of this bill if it should become a law. If we do not set that precedent T. V. A. will not be injured; because, as already has been demonstrated, only a comparatively few persons in the T. V. A. would come within the definition of a policy-making official.

The Senator from Alabama himself said that some 400 persons would be affected. I am sure that when he made that statement he was thinking of the salary standard of $4,500.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. HILL. Let me say that the Senator is correct; the number stated was based on the $4,500 salary standard.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. So, Mr. President, I say that the Senator's amendment is relevant to the bill, but not at all relevant to the pending amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. While the Senator is still on his feet, I desire to make a brief statement, because I know he has very carefully drafted the provision with respect to section 3. The question has previously been propounded to him; and at this time I desire to make the point that under section 3 any person, regardless of salary, who now is employed by the Government in any capacity, under the civil-service laws, would not be required to be confirmed unless he was required to be confirmed by some other act.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Exactly. The purpose of the exception was to obviate the necessity of reviewing the selection of persons, even those in policy-making positions, within these definitions if they already had been selected by a system in which the Congress had acquiesced.

Mr. HATCH. Yes; and the civil-service law is such a system.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Exactly. The effect of that exception is that if the bill becomes law it will operate in the future; it will not be retroactive.

The Senator from Alabama said to me on one occasion that if persons employed under the civil-service law to which the Senator from New Mexico has just referred, should be exempted, why should not T. V. A. employees be exempted? The answer to that question is that when the T. V. A. was set up, special care was taken to exempt the T. V. A. from the civil-service law. Language was definitely written in the act providing that the board, in exercising its vast powers, should make its appointments without regard to the civil-service laws. To me, that is merely another argument why policy-making officials as defined in the amendment should be submitted to scrutiny by the Senate.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I desire to add just a word or two along the line on which the Senator from Wyoming has been speaking, and also along the line on which the Senator from Tennessee has spoken more than once, to the effect that he wanted the employees of the Tennessee Valley Authority placed on exactly the same basis as that of other employees of the Federal Government; he wanted to have Senate confirmation of all employees of the Tennessee Valley Authority whose activities and duties correspond to those of employees in other branches of the Government who are required to be confirmed.

Mr. President, the bill itself makes an exception. The terms of both the proposed substitute and the original bill do set the Tennessee Valley Authority apart as something separate, and treat his employees in a way different from the way in which other employees of the Federal Government are treated. The Senator from Wyoming and myself have just been discussing the fact that under the terms of section 3 of the bill all civil service employees, that is, all persons employed under our so-called merit system, regardless of whether they come within the definitions of the act or are policy-making officials, so long as they are employed on the basis of a system of merit, do not come within the terms of the bill. Engineers, technicians, and experts in all the other agencies of Government regardless of the salary they receive, if employed under a system of merit which has congressional approval, as has been said, are not required to be confirmed.

However, under either proposal, is that situation true in the case of the Tennessee Valley Authority? It is not. The Tennessee Valley Authority does have a merit system. It has a merit system which it did not set up alone, voluntarily, but which is set up under the authority and direction of the Congress of the United States.

Under its merit system, the 300 or 400 employees—whatever the number may be—have been chosen in accordance with the system authorized and directed by the Congress of the United States. Would it not be fair to give to that congressional merit system the same credit and weigh we give to the so-called civil service system? Does one have any superiority over the other? I imagine one does; I imagine that by investigation it would be found that the merit system of the Tennessee Valley Authority is far superior to the general civil service system.

The Senator from Alabama made that point very clear in his remarks earlier today; and the reports of every independent investigation which has been made have clearly demonstrated that fact. In the report I filed separately, I have included a statement by Professor White, who went to Tennessee and investigated the situation for the Donahey committee. He reported that he found the system of merit working well. He pointed out some defects in the system, but they are defects which also are found in our general civil service law.

Mr. President, I do not live in the region which is affected by the Tennessee Valley Authority. In the committee I raised this question simply because I could not understand why, after 10 years of successful operation, the Congress should, without investigation, without hearing the testimony of a single witness, without calling a single official of the Tennessee Valley Authority before it, completely reverse its entire policy of more than 10 years. That was my sole reason for raising the question in the committee about the Tennessee Valley Authority. I do not know a great deal about it, but my general experience teaches me that a system which has worked successfully for 10 years should be continued unless there is some grave and important reason for changing it.

I attended every meeting of the committee. I read every word of testimony spoken before the subcommittee. So far as I am able to determine, not a single, solitary reason has been advanced for discontinuing the present merit system of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and for making its employees—whatever the number may be—subject to Senate confirmation, except the sole and only reason which has been given, having to do with a speech which Mr. Lilienthal made in the last campaign—a speech for which, if he made it, he should be condemned, of course, for he had no business engaging in politics at all; and I condemn him for doing so just as strongly as the Senator from Tennessee condemned him.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. STEWART. Substantially the same bill was introduced last year before Mr. Lilienthal made the speech, and I was just as strong for it then as I am now. So far as I am concerned, I have been for the bill all along; and Mr. Lilienthal's speech has had no effect except to make me more anxious than ever to have the bill passed.

Mr. HATCH. I will say to the junior Senator from Tennessee and also the senior Senator from Tennessee that I appreciate what they have both said about the Tennessee Valley Authority, and the splendid support which has been given to that Authority by both of them. Nevertheless, the inescapable fact remains that if this bill is enacted into law, that entire system, which has worked successfully, will be changed, and some three or four hundred T. V. A. employees—or perhaps more, in the light of the definitions—will be brought before the Senate for confirmation.

I do not intend to argue the other points which have already been argued; but I wished to point out as definitely and clearly as possible that an exception is being made—an exception against the Tennessee Valley Authority.

PREVENTION OF STRIKES IN DEFENSE INDUSTRIES

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, because of the lateness of the hour Saturday evening, I was unwilling to detain Senators further with a reference or two which, it seems to me, the facts require.

It will be recalled that after the yea-and-nay vote Saturday night on the conference report on Senate bill 796, most of the Senators who had been patiently waiting for the vote to be reached lost no time in moving toward the doors. I cannot say that I blame them.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] then obtained the floor and asked unanimous consent—and I quote his exact words, as submitted to me by the official reporters—to insert in the RECORD just preceding the roll call a letter from the War Labor Board on the conference report.

That fact does not appear at page 5883 of the daily RECORD. Quite the contrary, the RECORD shows the following:

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD a letter from the National War Labor Board concerning the pending conference report.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 5884 of the daily RECORD the Presiding Officer is caused to say, after the point marking the conclusion of the letter:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. CONNALLY and other Senators asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Then follows a detailed account of the yea-and-nay vote.

I wish to have the RECORD show positively that the letter to which I have referred was not before the Senate in advance of the time of the vote. It is important, particularly for the reason, Mr. President, that some students, some historians, some lawyers, and conceivably some judges some day may have to pass on the effect of Senate bill 796. It is important, therefore, that the legislative history correctly indicates that the Senate did not have before it the letter from the War Labor Board before the Senate voted.

One of the reasons, of course, is that Senators were led to say that adoption of the conference report in the form in which it was before us has a certain statutory effect, and gives certain legal status to whatever decisions the War Labor Board may render pursuant to the authority granted by that statute.

In its letter the War Labor Board says:

Since the bill does not, as we understand it, permit the Board to seek enforcement of its orders in the court, the Board's orders are to remain, as we think they should remain, without specific legal sanctions.

That is quite an important point, Mr. President, bearing on the Board's own understanding of the extent of the authority conferred upon it by Senate bill 796, and the weight and effect to be given its orders or decisions ultimately to be handed down pursuant to law.

Another thing which it seems to me may be properly stated is this: There was some intimation on the floor of the Senate that the conferees had not agreed with reference to some appeal provision. I think no one—at least no one other than through the purest inadvertence—would have meant the record so to stand. In the Washington Post for June 9, on the front page, there is a column headed:

War Labor Board rulings may be put up to courts. Way now open to contest some important decrees.

The article is written by Robert C. Albright. I read:

House and Senate antistrike bill conferees yesterday voted to open decisions of the War Labor Board to limited court review and specified that all rulings must conform to the National Labor Relations Act.

The unexpected conference action raised the possibility of extended litigation before the United States Court of Appeals for the District on some of the Board findings and opened to court challenge War Labor Board closed-shop and maintenance-of-membership orders.

I end the quotation, and turn to page 5883 of the daily RECORD. I quote specifically from the War Labor Board's letter of June 9, addressed to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], chairman of the Judiciary Committee:

NATIONAL WAR LABOR BOARD,
Washington, D. C., June 9, 1943.

Hon. FREDERICK VAN NUYS,
Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR VAN NUYS: My attention has been drawn to a newspaper statement this morning that the Senate and House conferees have agreed to restore to S. 796 a provision for court review of orders of the National War Labor Board. Such a provision was contained in the original Connally bill but was omitted from the House bill in its final form. It is the hope of our Board that the conferees may see fit to eliminate the provision upon which agreement was reached yesterday. I trust that you will not consider it presumptuous on my part if I state to you very simply the reasons which have led our Board to this conclusion and which we presented informally to Chairman MAY of the House Military Affairs Committee at the time the bill was first under consideration by his committee.

I end the quotation there, but to point out that the letter was signed by Mr. William H. Davis, Chairman of the National War Labor Board.

Reverting to the article which appeared in the Washington Post for June 9, I find on page 14, in a continued portion of the article previously identified, the following:

Except for yesterday's action opening War Labor Board rulings to court appeal, the bill now stands in substantially the form desired by the administration, and Senate managers were reluctant to make further charge. In its present form the bill provides a powerful deterrent against resumption of the mine strike by imposing jail sentences and fines on instigators and abettors of strike against the Government.

Although the House last week refused to ban maintenance of union orders by the War Labor Board, another provision of the bill was interpreted by Representative HOWARD SMITH (Democrat) of Virginia, chief author of the House bill, as having the same effect.

Those points are of interest, Mr. President, if we turn to an Associated Press dispatch which appeared in the Washington Post for June 6:

The reports that the White House is backing antistrike legislation, coming from authoritative but unquotable sources, said War Mobilization Director James F. Byrnes had urged congressional leaders to speed passage of the Connally-Smith bill.

This measure provides for fines and imprisonment of persons aiding or instigating a strike in a Government-operated war facility. It also would give statutory authority to the War Labor Board, and it was said this latter provision was the one in which Byrnes had displayed greatest interest.

The Washington Star for Sunday, June 6, 1943, carried on its front page a paragraph relating to the same subject. It reads as follows:

The reports that the White House is backing antistrike legislation, coming from authoritative, but unquotable sources, said War Mobilization Director James F. Byrnes had urged congressional leaders to speed final passage of the Connally-Smith bill, which has passed both the House and the Senate in different forms.

Mr. Byrnes was represented as indicating that several major provisions of the bill as it passed the House Friday would be acceptable to the administration. His interest in obtaining quick enacement was said to stem from a desire to clothe the War Labor Board with additional authority to deal with the coal wage dispute.

In view of the fact that no report is sent to us by a department downtown on pending legislation until and unless the Bureau of the Budget has acted upon it, as we all know, and in view of the further fact that the War Labor Board, particularly, created as it was under Executive order, was peculiarly performing an executive function, it follows that, just as the newspaper reports antedating the event and just as the fact after the event of June 9 clearly indicate, the letter of the War Labor Board was representing to the Congress and to the conferees the position of the administration with reference to the measure.

That letter, Mr. President, was read to the conferees on Wednesday last. Whatever action had been taken with reference to an appeal or review of action by the War Labor Board on a previous day was thereupon rescinded. Efforts were made to try to have an appeal provision refer only to those cases in which plant seizure actually had occurred. Those efforts were defeated.

Mr. President, I wanted the RECORD clearly to show that the letter to which I earlier referred was not before the Senate during the debate, was not ordered to be printed in the RECORD before the vote, and appeared only after the roll call had been concluded, and under the circumstances as I have now narrated them.

Briefly, in conclusion, Mr. President, I wish to point out that in the Star of Monday, June 7, 1943, reference was made to a broadcast on the previous evening by Mr. William L. Batt, who is vice chairman of the War Production Board, and who was particularly charged with the duty of industrial production in the war effort.

Describing the efforts and total results at times as fantastic, Mr. Batt proceeded, in the course of his broadcast over the Blue Network on June 6, 1943, to make the following statement:

It's simply that "we builded better than we knew." In other words, our great war plant today is producing at a rate much faster than even the foremost engineers dreamed possible a year ago; so much faster that the figures sound like something out of Buck Rogers. American ingenuity hit upon short cuts in an already streamlined industrial set-up. Not only did we gear our war machine to a pitch much higher than Hitler figured, we did better than even we thought we could.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON WAR PROBLEMS

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, on June 11, 1943, there appeared in the Washington Post an article by Ernest Lindley, entitled "Congress and Parliament."

In the New York Times of Sunday, June 13, 1943, there appeared an article by Turner Catledge entitled "Byrnes Ought to End Inquiry Epidemic."

In the New York Times of Friday, June 11, 1943, there appeared an editorial entitled "Liaison With Congress."

Mr. President, the editorial and the articles to which I have referred deal with the question of simplifying the relationships between Congress and the executive branch of the Government. They indicate that there is a feeling down town that the war effort is being hampered by a confusion, and probably a lack of understanding and a meeting of the minds between the legislative branch of the Government and the executive branch. I shall not dwell long upon the subject at the present time, but I ask unanimous consent that following my remarks there be printed in the body of the RECORD the editorial and the newspaper articles to which I have referred.

Mr. President I also ask unanimous consent that there be printed immediately thereafter a copy of Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 1, which I first submitted to the Senate in October of last year, and which I resubmitted during the early days of the present session of Congress. Hearings have been held on the resolution by a subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs. No opposition was presented at the hearings. The resolution provides—and I assume this is what Mr. Byrnes has in mind—for the creation of a bipartisan congressional committee, selected by the Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives. I think it is extremely important that such a committee be appointed. I think it is equally important, Mr. President, that if there be such a committee, it be a bipartisan committee.

So I ask unanimous consent that the resolution to which I have referred, on which the Committee on Military Affairs has yet to report, be printed in the RECORD following the articles and editorial to which I have referred.

There being no objection, the matters referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONGRESS AND PARLIAMENT

In the conduct of the war, Mr. Churchill's formal authority under the British system is less than Mr. Roosevelt's under our system. The President is, by the Constitution, the Commander in Chief of the armed forces. The corresponding responsibility in Britain is vested in the war cabinet, which like the whole cabinet of which it is a part, is responsible to the House of Commons. Mr. Churchill and his cabinet can be overthrown at any moment by the House of Commons.

But in practice Mr. Churchill has advantages which Mr. Roosevelt lacks. He heads a coalition government. Partisan politics has been suspended. The cabinet can get what it wants from Parliament when it wants it whether it be new taxes or greater power to regulate and control the domestic economy. Moreover, Parliament is well-informed about the general conduct of the war. In addition to the excellent reports of Mr. Churchill and the regular questioning of cabinet members, it has had now and then a secret session at which Mr. Churchill or Mr. Eden or some other spokesman for the cabinet enlightened it as to matters which could not be frankly discussed in public.

Mr. Churchill was not indulging in persiflage when he said, at the conclusion of his most recent speech, that the House of Commons has "proved itself a foundation and an instrument for the waging of successful war and for the safety of the state, never surpassed in modern or ancient times." On the record thus far made, that statement cannot be regarded as an exaggeration.

Our system has not worked so well. This is partly because of its structure which, whatever its advantages, does not tend to promote effective responsible government. But undoubtedly it would work better than it does if the legislative and executive branches earnestly set about improving the machinery for their collaboration.

Our Congress, as a whole, is not well informed. The committee system results in many Members being well informed about special phases of the Government's affairs, but not in the general education of Congress. Indeed, the committee system, like other forms of specialization, often produces lopsided thinking. Moreover, it must regretfully be recorded, some Members do not proceed as true seekers after fact. Partisan politics is their profession. They would rather make a headline with an accusation which may be poorly founded than be known for intelligent and judicial appraisal. Besides, so many of them are busy running errands for their constituents that they don't have much time to find out what is going on in the world outside their own bailiwicks.

The committee system is needed. Congress could not function without it. But it has not been effectively adjusted to the needs of the war. A great deal of the time of responsible administrators is consumed in appearing before committees with overlapping jurisdictions, and in addition, Congress has permitted the whole system to be seriously abused by countenancing the creation of special committees headed by Members with personal axes to grind. The Cox investigation of the Federal Communications Commission is a notorious example.

As Mr. Byrnes revealed, he is trying to work out arrangements with congressional leaders to avoid the waste of time and inevitable misunderstandings due to the examination of Government officials piecemeal by committees with competing or overlapping interests. He is making his own office a clearinghouse for major congressional inquiries and complaints. At the same time he has set out to try to make the Office of War Mobilization the Office which will really settle differences between Government agencies and establish harmonious policies.

It is plain from these actions that Mr. Byrnes does not regard Office of War Mobilization as just "another layer of administration." He proposes to perform the task to which he was commissioned. To succeed he must have, of course, not only the intelligent and considerate aid of Congress, but the full support of the President.

Since Pearl Harbor, the President has devoted a major part of his time to military and diplomatic aspects of the war. He has progressively delegated authority over domestic affairs. But the creation of Office of War Mobilization is the clearest-cut action he has taken toward clearing his desk of problems to which he cannot give the attention required for correct decisions without interfering with the most efficient discharge of his supreme duties as Commander in Chief.

The steps Mr. Byrnes proposes are in the direction of improving our governmental system as an instrument for waging war. If successful, they will enable the President to concentrate on the big war problems almost to the extent that Mr. Churchill is free to concentrate on them. But they will require a more patriotic form of partisanship than has been so widely in evidence in Congress during the last year and a half.

WASHINGTON, June 12.—In asking each House of Congress to designate a single committee through which all controversies growing out of the conduct of the war might be channeled to the executive branch of the Federal Government, the War Mobilization Director, James F. Byrnes, struck consciously and deliberately at one of the critical problems in Washington—the epidemic of congressional investigations.

Following the same loose system which it authorized inquiries in peacetime, Congress, through the House and Senate, already has instituted no less than 30 separate investigations devoted in whole or in part to the war effort, and resolutions are pending in the two Houses which would authorize at least 20 more.

From the beginning of the preparedness drive in the spring of 1940 to the present time, key defense officials have spent literally hundreds of hours before the various investigating committees. Often they were giving duplicate testimony. Thousands of additional hours have been spent in preparing testimony and keeping records in anticipation of further appearances.

CALLS ON NELSON STRESSED

Donald M. Nelson, Chairman of the War Production Board, for instance, has been called to the Capitol 37 times since late 1941. He has appeared before 15 separate committees and subcommittees, for an average of 1 to 3½ hours at the sitting.

Comparable records have been made by Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson, Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox, General George C. Marshall, Chief of Staff of the Army; Robert P. Patterson, Under Secretary of War; James V. Forrestal, Under Secretary of the Navy; Paul V. McNutt, Chairman of the Manpower Commission, and William M. Jeffers, Rubber Director, and others.

Mr. Byrnes is too devoted to the congressional process, and too realistic a politician, to have made a frontal attack on the multiplicity of war inquiries. He exhibited a fear, however, that the whole investigative process was getting out of hand and approaching the point where it might injure rather than help the war effort.

Mr. Byrnes's point of view is shared by an increasing number of congressional leaders.

COMPLAINS ON INVESTIGATIONS

Even as the War Mobilization Director was making his proposal for a single committee contact, Representative BAYARD CLARK, Democrat of North Carolina, was complaining to the House that the investigating committees had grown so numerous that a committee should be established to investigate the investigators.

The Military Affairs Committee of the House now has about five subcommittees in operation. One of these has heard 72 witnesses and taken more than 1,000 pages of testimony on four bills covering manpower and labor. Some half dozen other committees in the two Houses are conducting inquiries on the same subject.

In addition to those made by the regular service committees, separate investigations are conducted by the subcommittees of the two appropriations committees, ostensibly to determine the amount of money to be expended for the various activities in the Army and Navy and their components.

The Capitol chieftains fear considerable difficulty, however, if the single committee system is instituted. In attempting it they hazard a head-on collision with one of the most powerful forces in Congress—jealousy over prerogatives. Furthermore, there are forces outside of Congress, including a substantial part of the press, which undoubtedly will resist any move that has the remotest appearance of an effort to cover up.

Current congressional inquiries are directed at almost every phase of the war effort at home or abroad. The regular service committees—the Military Affairs and Naval Affairs Committees in each House—maintain general jurisdiction over legislation relating to the armed services. The Senate Military Affairs Committee, for instance, has had as many as nine subcommittees at one time going into various phases of military activities.

Resolutions pending in the two Houses call for numerous separate inquiries into such matters as lend-lease, reasons for closing domestic gold mines, food supply and manpower, civilian air transport service for war purposes, post-war unemployment, reoccupation and reconstruction, propaganda distributed by the United States Government, the status of Negroes in the armed forces, and the Office of War Information.

The only official purpose of a congressional investigation is to further legislation. Through the process Congress, theoretically, simply seeks information on which it might legislate more intelligently and judiciously. For that reason the courts have been very reluctant to interfere when committees have gone beyond the ordinary rules of evidence or have even jailed recalcitrant witnesses for contempt.

Congressional leaders realize, however, that the official basis has often been stretched near to the breaking point. In the inquiries now in progress one can detect reasons running all the way from high public purpose to a quest for personal prestige, and personal retaliation, and the desire of certain Members to take a trip.

LIAISON WITH CONGRESS

Director Byrnes has asked each House of Congress to designate a committee to work with the executive branch. This is one of the most encouraging announcements to come out of Washington since our entrance into the war. Mr. Byrnes' action will accomplish several purposes. It will enable Congress to offer its suggestions and criticisms to the Executive in private. This should mitigate misunderstandings, minimize public bickering, and increase congressional influence. The tendency of not only the present but of nearly any administration is to be slow in rectifying a policy criticized in public. Such a rectification, it is apt to fear, will be regarded as a public admission of previous error. It is therefore commonly much easier to secure corrections of all but major policies by private advice. If the private advice is not taken, there is nothing to prevent Congress from then making it public.

To provide such a mutually accepted medium for recommendations should also tend to raise the value of the recommendations themselves. When Congressmen make criticisms in public they are too often tempted to make the criticisms that seem likely to gain them applause or votes rather than the kind most helpful to the Executive.

This is not all that Mr. Byrnes' move can achieve. He has asked each House of Congress to designate a single committee on the conduct of the war to work with the Executive. For this purpose he has suggested the special committee of which Mr. TRUMAN is chairman in the Senate, and he plans to confer with Speaker RAYBURN regarding the House committee. This procedure, as Mr. Byrnes declares, should reduce the number of congressional investigations, save the time of Government officials, and prevent needless duplication of effort. He might have added that a single committee speaking for each House, or, better, a single joint committee, would also have more power and influence than a number of competing committees.

Mr. Byrnes in his present executive capacity may help to do more for Congress than it has so far seemed able to do for itself. The reform he suggests in this respect ought to be only the beginning of more extensive reforms in internal organization to provide Congress with a unified and coherent leadership.

This is not the only constructive step that Mr. Byrnes announced on Wednesday. Another was the appointment to his personal staff of Bernard M. Baruch, Chairman of the War Industries Board in the last war. This appointment assures Mr. Byrnes of experienced, shrewd, and courageous counsel.

[S. Con. Res. 1, 78th Cong., 1st sess.]

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there is hereby created a joint congressional committee to be known as the Joint Committee on War Problems (hereinafter referred to as the "joint committee"), and to be composed of six Members of the Senate to be selected by the Senate and six Members of the House of Representatives to be selected by the House of Representatives Not more than three of the members of the joint committee selected by the Senate, and not more than three of the members of the joint committee selected by the House of Representatives, shall be from the same political party. The joint committee shall select a chairman from among its members. A vacancy in the membership of the joint committee shall not affect the power of the remaining members to execute the functions of the joint committee, and shall be filled in the same manner as the original selection.

SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the joint committee to make a special study and investigation of the problems arising out of the war under existing and future acts of Congress; to confer with the President and with the various departments and agencies of the Government from time to time, with respect to such problems; to consult with other committees of both branches of the Congress, and to report to the Congress from time to time, together with such recommendations with respect to legislation as it deems advisable.

SEC. 3. For the purposes of this concurrent resolution, the joint committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-eighth and succeeding Congresses, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the joint committee, which shall not exceed $, shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the joint committee.

CONFIRMATION BY THE SENATE OF CERTAIN GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 575) to provide that officers in the executive branch of the Government who receive compensation at a rate in excess of $4,500 a year shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, in the manner provided by the Constitution.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I shall not take much time. I realize, especially from the fact that few Senators have been on the floor during the discussion of the pending measure, that many of them have made up their minds how they will vote, one way or the other.

Generally speaking, I am not opposed to the effort to bring about confirmation of appointments by the Senate. So far as I recall, I have voted for all the bills and amendments to that end which have come before the Senate during the past 10 years while I have been a Member of the Senate. The pending measure, however, presents a different situation.

I am opposed to this program if it includes the T. V. A. My colleague and I have offered an amendment to exclude the T. V. A. My reason for taking that position is that I am exceedingly anxious to keep the T. V. A. from being drawn into politics. It is a most useful service, as is conceded on all sides. It has given a satisfactory administration. Its employees have been of a high order. I do not know whether or not they are all splendid men; the truth is, I do not know more than two or three of them; and when I say the T. V. A. has given satisfactory service, I speak from a knowledge of its reputation and of the general understanding of the people of the Tennessee Valley who have had contact with it. I have no personal interest in this amendment. If there is a single employee of the T. V. A. who was appointed on my recommendation, I do not know who he is, and I am quite sure there is none, for I have recommended none directly since the organization was created.

There are reasons why it is not necessary to upset a satisfactory situation which has prevailed since the organization of the T. V. A. I have been directly associated with the movement in the Congress to develop the T. V. A. As is well known, I am a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, which has had jurisdiction from the beginning of all legislation, except appropriations, relating to the T. V. A. I was a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry when the original bill was reported, and from the beginning I have supported the T. V. A., and supported appropriations for it.

I am sure that my good friend, the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], is justified in his statement that he has done more than any other man to bring about the present high state of development on the Tennessee River. As a member of the Appropriations Committee, I have cooperated with him and supported him.

One problem we have got to deal with today is the difficulty that so many Senators have in separating in their viewpoints the interest of the senior Senator from Tennessee when it comes to excluding from the pending measure the confirmation of T. V. A. officers and employees. All members of the Senate appreciate the services and ability of the Senator from Tennessee. They recognize his splendid, outstanding public service, his conscientious effort wherever the public interest is involved, and they know of his long continued and active effort to develop the T. V. A. So, as a result, it comes about when he sponsors a bill along another line, involving confirmation by the Senate of Federal employees, and the T. V. A. is injected, there is, I realize, a natural inclination on the part of his friends here and Members who admire and respect him, to go along with him if they themselves do not have definite views. I myself probably might do the same thing if there were not other controlling reasons.

Mr. President, the T. V. A. has operated from the beginning under statutory, mandatory regulations which prevented the injection of politics of any sort into the selection of its employees. As has been stated here from time to time, the merit system has prevailed. I desire to read into the RECORD section 6 of the original T. V. A. act. It has been in the law all the time and the Authority has been administered under that requirement. Section 6 reads:

> In the appointment of officials and the selection of employees for said Corporation, and in the promotion of any such employees or officials, no political test or qualification shall be permitted or given consideration, but all such appointments and promotions shall be given and made on the basis of merit and efficiency. Any member of said Board who is found by the President of the United States—

Note the words "Any member of such Board"— > who is found by the President of the United States to be guilty of a violation of this section shall be removed from office by the President of the United States, and any appointee of said Board who is found by the Board to be guilty of a violation of this section shall be removed from office by said Board.

So strict, Mr. President, are the requirements of that section, and so extreme a penalty is provided against any member of the Board who is influenced in any way by political considerations in the appointment of officers and officials, that it early became known that the T. V. A. would consider no recommendations from politicians or public officers. As a result, I made no recommendations, and I doubt if the Senator from Tennessee ever made a recommendation. He has not been interested, I know, from the standpoint of patronage in the personal selection of employees.

Mr. McKELLAR. Not in the slightest.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am sure he took the same course the others of us took who are familiar with this organization.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. While that is true, that has not been the practice of the Chairman of the Tennessee Valley Authority. I do not know whether the Senator was present this morning, and heard my colleague [Mr. STEWART] speak of the violation of the act the Senator from Alabama has just read by the Chairman of the Authority. Was the Senator here then?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I heard his statement, and I very greatly regret if what was stated occurred. I heard, likewise, the statement of my colleague from the head of the Board that he did not make a speech opposing the election of the junior Senator from Tennessee; but, whether he did or not, he is not an employee; he is already subject to confirmation by the Senate.

The point I am making is that working for the organization are numerous employees who are selected from all over this country. As has been brought out in the debate, evidently under the merit system and merit program, with the elimination of political influences, there has been built up a successful administration of the T. V. A. Why now risk bringing about a change in that situation? What would be the result if the employees of the T. V. A. were certainly included in the requirement of confirmation? Mr. President, there are many implications growing out of such a situation. Four hundred men, probably none of them knowing the present President of the United States, hereafter are not to be appointed by the members of the Board of the T. V. A. but by the President of the United States. When that is done, of course, there is an element of politics injected into it. It is perfectly apparent that when 400 good jobs are thrown open to be filled by the President there will be applications for those places; that endorsements, along the usual line in filling Government offices, will be followed, and that with a multiplicity of applications which may be made, the President will in due course, I assume, as a matter of human nature, as a man experienced in politics, find perhaps some new places in the organization for personal appointments.

Whether he should do so or not, a great multitude of officeholders would be turned loose seeking appointments. And what is the next step? They have to come before the Senate; they probably have to have someone who is known here vouch for them. There are probably men under the Authority from every State in the Union, and they would have to take the matter of their confirmation up with their own Senators, and in that way seek political influence or political activity in this body, which would be extensive and widespread.

Naturally, Mr. President, activities of that sort tend to draw into the political equation the filling of the appointments and the confirmation of the appointees. Most of those men are not policy-making officials in the ordinary sense.

There is an additional reason why the T. V. A. should not be brought into this appointment and confirmation program. The T. V. A. is a great business organization; it has no political activities; it has no policy-making programs except to carry out those declared in the act, and they have been carried out to very general satisfaction, as we have heard from all sources.

Why take the chance of changing that situation, and working in here and there outside influences, outside factors, which have not heretofore been necessary to deal with? Everything has been running smoothly, the program has been satisfactory. All who know about it approve it. We are pleased with it, and want it continued on the basis on which it has been operating.

In the Tennessee Valley, regardless of politics, the program has the approval of the people, and the effort to bring under the confirmation power of the Senate the engineers and architects and accountants and others connected with T. V. A. is bitterly resisted by the people, at least those in the Tennessee Valley in my State; and the Tennessee Valley extends from the northeast corner to the northwest corner of the State, all the way across the State, comprising one of the largest congressional districts, in population, in the State. I think it might be safely said that the opposition to changing the order of things there, and to the possibility of drawing T. V. A. into politics, is practically unanimous.

I have not heard a word from any citizen in the whole Tennessee Valley in favor of the proposed program, but, on the contrary, countless letters, by the hundreds, possibly by the thousands, have come to me in opposition to any program such as that proposed, which would have a tendency to indicate that the T. V. A. is to be made a political organization.

The T. V. A. is different from all the other agencies of the Government; indeed it is so different that I submit it is unwise, it is risky, it is unnecessary to make a change. There is no evil to be corrected, and I submit that the amendment excluding the T. V. A. would not hurt the bill and would not cause any harm. No injury would result from its adoption, but, on the other hand, it is possible that there might be great injury if it were not agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, in view of all that has been said about the amendment and about the bill in connection with the T. V. A., I wish to say a few words. At the outset, I desire to state that I am very sorry there has been any effort to inject a fight involving T. V. A. into the discussion of the pending bill. It does not belong here at all.

A bill in substance and effect about the same as the pending bill was introduced during the last session of Congress, as I recall, and, as I stated in a colloquy this morning with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], I was in favor of such a measure at that time, with absolutely no thought that it might affect even one employee of T. V. A. I was for it because of certain things I had seen and heard of having taken place in some of the bureaus in Washington, concerning the attitude chiefly of the so-called bureaucrats toward the Members of both Houses of Congress.

I understand there are about 33,000 employees of T. V. A. at the present time, and that there will be actually less than 400 affected by the pending bill, those with salary limitations of $4,500, as it stands now. That is merely incidental, so far as I am concerned. I had no thought of it affecting T. V. A., any more than I had any thought of it affecting any other particular or special or singled-out department of the Government.

The fact that the bill happens to affect a few employees of T. V. A. should not at all prevent the enactment of the bill. The fact that it affects certain employees of the Authority should not, so far as I know, affect their reemployment. I know of no reason why it should. So far as I am concerned, I am not interested in any of the employees of the T. V. A. being affected by the bill one way or the other and, so far as I know, each and every one of them affected might very well and properly be reemployed.

It was pointed out by the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] that, by reason of a provision in the bill which would make the law take effect on the 30th of June, those holding on that date the positions they now occupy, unless reappointed before the 30th of September of this year, would be without employment. That should not affect the reappointment of the men under the T. V. A. It should not affect their reemployment if they are capable and qualified, and meet the requirements of the merit system of the Authority. And that is perfectly satisfactory to me. I have no candidate for any position among the employees of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and I have not any in mind. I have received the very kindest of treatment, I should like to repeat, at the hands of the Authority, in every instance in which I have undertaken to do business with them. I should have no hesitancy in calling upon them today or tomorrow for any kind of business I might desire to transact in connection with the Government.

The Tennessee Valley Authority is a wonderful organization. It has done great good for my section and for the entire country. I should be glad to support measures providing for similar authorities in other sections, so that the other citizens of the United States might profit and benefit as we have.

Mr. President, I do not know whether or not the applicable provision of the Constitution has been read in exact words, but I should like to have it appear here, and therefore I shall repeat the provision on which the pending bill is based. Under section 2 of article II, in defining the powers of the President of the United States, the second paragraph of the section provides:

> He shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to * * * appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law. But the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, or in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments.

The Constitution does not provide any particular formula which the Congress shall follow when enacting such a law. It provides that Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers in the President of the United States. That is exactly what the pending bill does. It vests in the President of the United States the appointment of all inferior officers whose salaries are $4,500 or more.

I see no reason why a salary limitation should not be as good a criterion to follow as any other. I think in fact that in this case it represents probably the only solution we could arrive at that would cover the situation as it should be covered.

In the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] he undertakes to make only policy-making officials subject to confirmation by the Senate. That would probably result in considerable argument and debate as to just who are policy-making officials. In fact, I think a good demonstration of that occurred on the floor during the Senator's discussion of his own amendment, when he was interrupted by the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], who said he did not believe that attorneys or lawyers representing certain departments of the Government are policy-making officials, whereupon the Senator from Wyoming challenged him and said that they often are policy-making officials, in fact, he said that in most cases they are. That brought about a debate, or discussion, or argument on the question.

There can, however, be no argument with respect to the salary limitation, because if a man draws more than $4,500 a year he comes within the provisions of this measure. The adoption of that provision simply will mean that the President of the United States will appoint a man, instead of the head of a department appointing him, or a court of law appointing him.

So, Mr. President, I can see no harm in transferring this power of appointment from the head of a department to the President of the United States. It will not otherwise change the merit system of the Tennessee Valley Authority. No doubt the President of the United States would call upon the head of the Authority for recommendations before making appointments which would be sent to the Senate of the United States for confirmation.

Mr. President, it has been improperly stated on occasions that Members of the Senate who favor passage of the bill are interested in it because of patronage considerations. Nothing could be further from the truth. The provision of the Constitution on which the bill is based provides that the President shall make appointments by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Senate has no power of appointment. Unless the President makes the appointment and sends it to the Senate, the office would remain vacant regardless of what it might be. The Senate has no power of appointment. The Senate has merely the power and authority to give its advice and its consent to the appointment made by the President of the United States.

Mr. President, I am sorry the T. V. A. has been injected into consideration of the measure. I repeat that it is a great organization, and is doing much good, and has weathered many a storm. I am giving it my support just as I have always done, and I expect to continue to give it my full and wholehearted support. The passage of the pending bill could not affect its efficiency in any sense of the word. Those who hold office under the T. V. A., those who might be affected, incidentally, by the passage of the bill, might very well be reappointed, so far as I am informed.

Mr. President, that is all I care to say on this subject at this time.

Mr. McKELLAR. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

So Mr. O'MAHONEY's amendment in the nature of a substitute was rejected.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to further amendment. If there be no further amendments to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

Mr. McKELLAR, Mr. McNARY, and other Senators asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, Senators desire to speak on the bill. I was on my feet seeking recognition when the Chair announced that the bill had been read the third time.

Mr. President, there appeared recently in a New York newspaper an article with reference to my activities in the matter of securing O. P. A. appointments. A copy of the article, which I have before me, and from which I intend to quote, appeared in the New York Times of Friday, June 4. A similar article was published in nearly all the other New York newspapers.

The article was prompted by a letter of resignation submitted to the head of the O. P. A. for the New York State area by a man named Russell H. Potter. Mr. Potter was resigning, and in the letter of resignation he took opportunity to pay his respects to me. Among other things he said in the letter of resignation that—

> I could not fulfill my duties sincerely knowing that the Office of Price Administration is under the thumbs of political bosses Ed Flynn, Frank Kelly, Mike Kennedy, and Senator Mead and others.

Mr. President, I have no objection to his putting me in good company; but I never did like to be called a political boss.

Mr. President, I accepted this gratuitous insult without public utterance until now because it came from a man who was leaving the service—perhaps unwillingly—and who was paying his compliments to all those whom he may have disliked for one reason or another. I never knew the man. I did not know that he was working for the O. P. A., nor did I know that he was going to resign from the O. P. A. I had no objection to his being in the employ of the O. P. A., although it occurs to me that it would be better for the O. P. A. to employ New York men to administer the affairs of the New York office. Therefore, the only complaint which came to my office concerning this man—and it applies to his predecessor as well—was that while he was the district director for New York City, he lived in another State. If I were to suggest another objection it would be that he did not try to take a qualifying civil-service examination open to others in the city of New York.

Mr. President, I never knew his successor. I did not know, until I was later informed, that he was being drafted for the position. I certainly had nothing to do with his employment. I took it upon myself to inquire whether or not he met the standards which I thought should be the minimum standards applying to a position of this character. I learned that he was, and is, a resident of New York City, that he was a former employee of the Government, and that because of such former employment he was well qualified, so far as the merit system was concerned, to fill the position. When those two standards are met, I, as one of the sponsors of the merit system as it applies to the O. P. A., have no further interest in the matter.

Mr. President, in that masterpiece of literature in which he mentioned my name, he went on to say that in my own city there was considerable difficulty because none of the applicants recommended by me were acceptable to the Civil Service Commission. For his edification and enlightenment, allow me to say that none of the applicants recommended by me was unacceptable to the Civil Service Commission, because under the method approved by the previous O. P. A. administration, an applicant could never get to the Civil Service Commission unless he were acceptable to the O. P. A. The applicant was interviewed. How he came to be an applicant I never knew. After his interview, if he was found agreeable to the interviewer or the appointing authority, he was appointed. After he was appointed, the qualifications for the job, which may or may not have had some relation to his own qualities, were established; and lo and behold, in many instances—in almost every instance—he was qualified, and from then on held the position. The system was to select the man first and qualify him later.

Mr. President, as one of those who voted for the merit system, not only as it applies to O. P. A., but to W. P. B., the War Manpower positions, and the Smaller War Plants Corporation, I felt that the civil service should be respected, and that everyone within the community in which the vacancy existed or in which the appointment was to be made, should be given the opportunity to which every American citizen is entitled, namely, to try an open public competitive examination. I registered objection to a number of appointments, but I never initiated any. Men were appointed to Government agencies and given deferment from the draft. Some of them are still holding office, and I object to them. Men who lived in other States were appointed to positions in my city, as well as in some other cities in my State. Perhaps citizens in my State were sent into other States to administer local or district positions, and I thought that was not in keeping with the spirit or the letter of the law.

Mr. President, all this is a thing of the past. Perhaps as a result of my own efforts, the cooperation of the present O. P. A. administration, and the assistance of the Civil Service Commission, for the first time in O. P. A. history a civil service examination was advertised in the press of my city to fill a vacancy there in the O. P. A. All those who desired to try that examination were invited to do so. So far as the war agencies are concerned, I believe that the vacancies should be filled in the manner prescribed by law and now recommended by the Civil Service Commission. They should be open to all eligibles, regardless of their political affiliations. In this war all the people are enlisted; and positions in the emergency agencies, which are calling upon us all to make the fullest possible sacrifice, should be open to all patriotic citizens.

I have before me a clipping from the Buffalo Evening News of within the last 2 weeks. From it I quote the following:

> An open competitive examination for the $6,500-a-year directorship of the Buffalo Office of Price Administration office will be held by the United States Civil Service Commission as the method of filling the post now held by William F. Denny in an acting capacity. Applications are available in room 207 of the Post Office Building, and should be sent or taken there in person on or before Monday next.

That is what I voted for, not only in this instance, but in connection with every bill which has been brought before the Senate since the emergency began. I voted for the merit system in the matter of appointments to the War Manpower Commission. I regret that I am now called upon to take any part in the selection or confirmation of officers of that Commission whose salaries are in excess of $4,500. It has caused endless delay in many instances. It has not resulted in the same degree of efficiency which might otherwise have existed.

Mr. President, I wanted to make my attitude clear, and I hope I have done so. I find no fault with newspapers that have quoted from the letter of this dissatisfied employee who has resigned and who gratuitously made an erroneous reference to me.

I wish to state further, Mr. President, that my record as an advocate of the merit system in the House of Representatives over a period of 20 years, and my record as a member of the Civil Service Committee and the Post Office and Post Roads Committee of the Senate since 1938, gives the lie to the charge that I am interested in political patronage, and particularly as it applies to personnel in the war agencies of the Government.

Mr. President, perhaps there was some excuse for the method adopted under the administration of the previous O. P. A. Administrator. He was called upon by the Congress, because of the serious situation which confronted the country, to fill the positions in his organization and to fill them rapidly. He sought to secure from the Civil Service Commission appointees to fill them in the manner I have just described.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I shall be glad to yield if the Senator will allow me to finish this thought. But now, Mr. President, since the initial organization of this agency all vacancies should be filled by giving the local folk the right to try an examination. Now I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I am wondering how, in the first place, the O. P. A. secured the services of Russell H. Potter. Can the Senator tell me?

Mr. MEAD. I am sorry that I cannot. I knew nothing of the man until I read the letter, and, on inquiry at the Civil Service Commission, I was told that he did not try a civil-service examination. I was informed, furthermore, that he was not a resident of my State, and so I could not see how he could properly fill the position of district director in the city of New York.

Mr. LUCAS. I understand from reading the article that his home was in Connecticut, and that he was not a resident of the State of New York.

Mr. MEAD. I understand that to be true, and his predecessor was a resident of some other State. Mr. President, I think, in the interest of efficient administration, the director in charge of the Philadelphia office ought not to live in Boston or Atlanta, and that the director of the New York office, by the same token, ought to live in the city of New York. I have no objection to the regional director having to do with a number of States living in any one of the States outside the State of New York, but I held, from the beginning, that appointees to local O. P. A. offices, as in the case of the postmaster of a town, should be selected from the area over which they would administer O. P. A. affairs.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. MALONEY. I rise merely because attention has been called to the fact that Mr. Russell Potter is a resident of the State of Connecticut. I do not recall having heretofore heard of Mr. Potter; I do not know him, and, of course, I was not responsible for his appointment or the appointment of anyone else in O. P. A.; but I have made inquiry within the past few days from the O. P. A. administrator in my home State concerning Mr. Potter, and I am told he is a man of excellent reputation.

Mr. MEAD. As I said in the beginning, I did not know anything about him; I had no objection to him whatever; and if he had remained there he would have done so without any word from me. My objection was general, namely, that there should be held an examination, open to everyone eligible to take the examination, and, as a matter of good policy, I held and still hold, that if he is administering the affairs of a local district he ought to live within the confines of the district; and if he is a good man, as I think perhaps he is, if the O. P. A. required his services in the State in which he lived or in a regional office covering many States, that would have been all right with me; but it occurs to me that in the case of an office which has to do only with the people in the city of New York, the people in the city of Brooklyn, or the people in the city of Albany, then an examination ought to be confined to those who reside in the particular areas.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further, it is certain that the head of an agency in Washington has to go to someone to obtain information regarding a man who is to be placed in an important position of this kind. Mr. Henderson did not know every individual whom he appointed in the various districts throughout the United States, but when he made the original appointments he had to obtain information from some source; he could not appoint a man blindly, so to speak. It seems rather strange to me that, in the estimation of some people, it is almost a crime for an appointing officer to confer with a United States Senator or someone else high in the political life of the Nation in an effort to ascertain whether a man has the proper qualifications to fill a certain job.

So far as I am concerned, when it comes to recommending a man for a position of this kind I will take my chances with a Republican or a Democratic politician as readily as I will with the head of some financial or industrial institution or college group. It is certain that someone had to recommend in the first instance, and it would be interesting to know who that someone was. Yet because the junior Senator from New York is interested in obtaining the appointment, regardless of political affiliations, of someone from his State, he is criticized by the resident of another State. In my judgment, this is certainly unfair to the junior Senator from New York.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I appreciate the statement which has just been made by my distinguished colleague from Illinois, and while I believe that every Senator in this Chamber could make a splendid contribution if called upon in instances similar to this, I am of the opinion that the burdens, the duties, and the responsibilities of our office in the war emergency are such that, in most instances, we would like to be relieved of passing on such appointments. It is my opinion, Mr. President, that O. P. A. started out with a great job ahead of them; they had an immense responsibility, and it was too much, in my judgment, for that agency to put into effect the powers and the authority conferred upon them by the Congress, and at the same time to devote a large amount of time to the job of recruiting personnel. Many years ago the Congress of the United States created by law a recruiting agency to do the work that the O. P. A. themselves tried to do, and that recruiting agency, as a result of years of experience, and the employment of talented experts along civil-service lines, could, and would, have done a better job if given the opportunity to do so.

Mr. President, I am very pleased to report to the Senate that the present Office of Price Administration, both in the Nation and in my State, is entirely agreeable to the plan which was adopted recently by the Civil Service Commission—that is, whenever a vacancy occurs or a new post is to be filled the people who live within the confines of the region or district or office will be invited publicly to participate in an examination, and an appointment will be made from the first three eligibles on the list.

Certainly, with the Senate working almost constantly throughout the year, with countless important war tasks before us, requiring every minute of our time and attention, I could not possibly take over, nor would I desire to do so, the added responsibility of selecting or recommending political appointments. For that reason, over a period of years, I have supported, without deviation, legislation conferring upon the recruiting agencies of the Government the authority and the power and the responsibility of doing this work.

I wish to commend the present O. P. A. and the Civil Service Commission for working out this new plan of action, which conforms, in its spirit and letter, with the law as prescribed by the Congress. If the O. P. A. and the other emergency agencies of the Government had adhered to this system from the very beginning, probably the pending bill would not be before the Senate this afternoon.

I wish to make the record clear. I have been a friend and an advocate of the merit system for a period of over 25 years. I have been associated with legislation having to do with the expansion of the civil service to as great an extent, perhaps, as has any other Senator in this Chamber, if not to a greater extent. Insofar as the emergency agencies are concerned, particularly the O. P. A., I have sought and finally secured a standard plan of examination which will in my judgment eliminate, so far as the future is concerned, the complaints of the past.

I believe the O. P. A. merits and commands the support of the Congress of the United States, because it has a very remarkable and important task to perform. It needs our help if it is to stem the rising tide of inflation, and to its credit be it said, it is doing a fairly good job. But it needs and will continue to need our help, and one way in which we can give it our assistance is by rejecting the bill before the Senate this afternoon.

Mr. President, with reference to the bill, one of the reasons being advanced in its support is that it would serve as a checkrein upon the abuse of authority by officials of the executive branch of the Government. I wonder if it would. I do not deny the existence of abuses of authority in the executive branch of the Government or minimize their seriousness. There is, however, no short cut to the proper handling of this problem. It can be dealt with only as a result of the most careful kind of study which will result in sound legislation in the field of administrative law being enacted by the Congress of the United States. Just how much can be done in this direction in the middle of a war I do not know. But certainly the appropriate committees of the Congress should be giving constant thought and attention to this all-important problem, and so I hope the pending bill will be referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I am glad to yield.

Mr. HATCH. I said to the Senator some days ago, and also today, that probably I would make such a motion as that to which he now refers, but in the light of the votes which have just been taken, I doubt whether it would serve any good purpose to move to refer the bill to the Committee on Civil Service at this time.

Mr. MEAD. I fear that I am in agreement with the Senator. I wish to commend him for his efforts in furthering and expanding the civil service since he has been a Member of this body.

Certainly, Mr. President, the appropriate reference of the pending measure would do no harm. It would, in my judgment, result in great benefit and in improvement of the measure.

To allege that we can solve the problem by requiring the Senate to confirm the appointments of tens of thousands of officeholders, many of whom would have absolutely nothing to do with the formulation of policy, is, to my mind, ridiculous. The notion that an officer who has been confirmed by the Senate will not abuse his authority is an interesting one. I feel sure, however, that there is not a Member of this body who cannot think of instances where, in his judgment, persons appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate have abused their authority.

A third reason advanced in behalf of the enactment of the bill is that it would help to hold down the number of employees on the Government pay roll. In that connection, the Civil Service Committee has made a noteworthy contribution, one which has been made in no other instance that I know of since the beginning of the emergency. As a result of legislation emanating from the Civil Service Committee of the Senate, surveys are being conducted of every governmental agency in existence, both by the Civil Service Commission and by the Director of the Budget, and in many instances—in fact, in almost every instance—personnel are being furloughed or reduced or transferred to other agencies, and increased efficiency and economy of operation are resulting.

I feel, however, that in the case of the Postal Service the recommended cut is too severe, and will have to be modified. I merely mention the work of the Civil Service Committee in this instance to show that they have made the contribution which its sponsors aim to make as a result of favorable action on the pending bill, and favorable action on the bill will be disappointing to its friends. That I prophesy now.

As I have just stated, the third reason advanced by those who are supporting the pending measure is that it would result in a reduction of personnel. In my judgment, that is an erroneous conclusion. The connection between the pending bill and the number of persons on the Federal pay roll is a very difficult one to figure out. It is predicated on the theory, I assume, that the following of the process suggested would result in more capable administrators being placed in Government jobs. The selection of persons for administrative positions who are competent administrators is one of the most difficult tasks in the whole realm of government. All of us will admit that the executive branch in a good many instances has failed in its efforts to put competent administrative people in administrative jobs. That is true of every administration. It is true because of an inherent weakness in human nature. But how could the enactment of Senate bill 575 improve this situation? Would the Senate committees to which these tens of thousands of nominations would be referred have resources available for making careful investigation into the administrative competence of the nominees?

Would they have a field service to investigate and examine them? Would these committees be able to assure themselves of the fact that persons whose names were presented to them were devoid entirely of the "big shot" complex which holds that the importance of the individual is in direct proportion to the size of the organization which he administers?

Just to state these questions serves to answer them. We know that it could not be done, and it is not going to be done.

Ours is the responsibility for making sure of the fact that, by legislation and otherwise, we impress upon the executive branch our feelings that in the past the right kind of administrators have not been selected, and that we insist on improvements being made insofar as the future is concerned.

Again, there is no short cut to the attainment of this desirable objective. It can only be achieved by constant and careful study of our civil-service law, and by the strengthening of that law wherever and whenever that seems to be desirable. When that is done, Mr. President, it will be done by the Civil Service Committees of both Houses. Clearly, the proper approach to the handling of this situation is to call upon the Civil Service Committee of the Senate of the United States to inquire into the matter carefully, and then to make specific recommendations to this body. It can never be done through the kind of a device that is suggested by this bill.

Now, having looked at some of the arguments which have been advanced in support of the bill, let us consider some reasons why, clearly, the bill should not be enacted into law.

The President of the United States, in his letter of February 19, 1943, in which he commented on the provisions of this bill, said:

> It would lay all of us open to the charge that we are playing politics with the war program.

I agree with and subscribe to that expression by the President.

Let us be frank about this situation. We know that the President is right. We can dress this bill up in any way we want to, but in the final analysis, whether right or wrong, the country is going to charge us with playing politics at the expense of the war program.

We cannot and must not lay ourselves open to this kind of charge. It will undermine the confidence of the country in the legislative branch, because the country will feel that we are placing selfish political considerations above the winning of the war. It will likewise undermine confidence in the executive branch of the Government because, rightly or wrongly, the country will believe that its war program is being administered by persons who place political considerations ahead of all other considerations.

Whether such charges would be fair or not, is not the issue. The point is that such charges would be made, and the country would believe them. We cannot afford to take such chances at this critical point in the history of the Nation. I should have less objection if legislation of this kind came before the Senate under normal peacetime conditions.

Next, the bill would completely undermine morale in the executive branch of the Government. One can take either the majority or minority versions of the bill, and one will find it absolutely impossible to determine just who is going to be subject to confirmation and who is not. The minority version is an improvement over the majority. It is still, however, full of ambiguities and would result in an absolutely chaotic situation within the executive branch as administrators tried to figure out whether or not certain positions were subject to the provisions of the bill.

For example, take the majority bill. Among other things, it provides for confirmation by the Senate of "heads of bureaus, divisions, sections, and other subdivisions of such departments and agencies." A department may be divided into bureaus, the bureaus into divisions, the divisions into sections, and the sections into units. The supervisor in charge of the smallest subdivision may be a $2,000 a year employee in charge of a few clerks. Yet, under the language of the bill, he, in all probability, and employees like him, would be required to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, a huge and impossible job.

Then there is another provision in the majority bill which specifies that the Senate shall confirm—

> All persons whose duties include participation in conferences or discussions with persons from other departments or agencies, or with persons from other bureaus, divisions, sections, or other subdivisions of their own departments or agencies * * * held for the purpose of determining the policies or methods to be followed in administering and of the functions of any department or agency * * * or * * * subdivision thereof.

Imagine trying to figure out just who would be included in such a provision. Obviously, it might be construed to include any person who has any contact whatever with any other person in his own or another Government department or agency. I submit that the enactment of legislation of this kind would simply result in this body being held up to ridicule by the people of the Nation.

Then, let us consider the minority version of the bill, which is, as previously stated, an improvement over the majority bill. It provides that the Senate shall confirm heads of bureaus, divisions, or other units representing the first subdivision of any such department or agency. In most agencies the establishment of governmental subdivisions is largely a matter of administrative discretion, and is not governed by law. Consequently, the applicability or inapplicability of S. 575 to a particular position would be dependent upon the exercise of administrative discretion in establishing internal organization.

For example, if an agency were subdivided into six separate divisions, the chief of each of these six divisions would be subject to the provisions of the bill.

If, however, the same agency were subdivided into two bureaus and each of these two bureaus into three divisions, presumably only the heads of the two bureaus would be subject to the provisions of the bill, while the chiefs of the six subdivisions presumably would not be.

Under another provision of the minority bill the head of any office in any particular geographic area, however small, would have to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

Let us consider another provision of the majority bill, which specifies that the Senate shall confirm—

> All persons whose duties include participation in conferences * * * with persons from other departments or agencies * * * or * * * subdivisions of their own departments or agencies * * * for the purpose of determining the policies * * * to be followed in administering any of the functions of any department or agency.

This provision could be construed to include any person who participates in any capacity in any conference which is held for the purpose of determining policy.

And so, up to the present time, at least, it has been absolutely impossible to draft this legislation in such a manner as clearly to define the scope of the legislation. Either the very nature of the legislation makes this impossible, or sufficient time and thought have not been given to the matter. In any event, the bill should be referred back to the appropriate committee of the Senate, namely, the Civil Service Committee, for further study and analysis.

Undoubtedly, personnel administration in the Federal Government can be improved by the enactment of the right kind of legislation by the Congress. I know, for example, that the Civil Service Commission believes this to be true. Let us refer this legislation back to the Senate Civil Service Committee so that consideration can be given to the recommendations of the Civil Service Commission and other parts of the executive branch. Let us not, however, try to solve a fundamental problem by slapstick legislation of this character.

In summary, we cannot afford at this time to pass legislation which opens us to the charge that we are playing politics with the war program. This legislation will do just that. The President of the United States has stated that it would. Let us not do it. If it is done, Mr. President, it will not be done without my protest. In my judgment the proposed legislation will be harmful both to the civil service and to the country at large, and the President of the United States stated that to be his opinion. Editorial comment in leading newspapers has clearly indicated that such would be the case. Organizations such as the National League of Women Voters, veterans organizations, and the National Civil Service Reform League, all of whom have made splendid contributions to the improvement of the merit system in the Nation and in the States, are opposed to the passage of the bill, and have very definitely pointed out the objection and indicated the issue.

Furthermore, Mr. President, we cannot afford to pass legislation which would create unheard-of administrative chaos in the executive branch. The Office of Price Administration, the Smaller War Plants Corporation, the War Production Board, and the other new agencies of the Government now have passed their organization period. Future examinations, as I have explained, will be open competitively to all the people.

So, the future will be an improvement on the past, unless this bill is enacted into law. I plead for its substantial defeat. We cannot afford to pass legislation which would create chaos at this time or at any other time. If we pass the bill we will be telling tens of thousands of professional and scientific employees that the question whether they shall continue to hold their jobs is to be an open one. We cannot play fast and loose in this manner with the morale of a great organization such as the United States Government.

Mr. President, let us not be misled by one of the provisions of the bill which seeks to protect those who have a civil service status. Virtually every person holding a key position in the war program at this time has a war-service appointment, not a civil-service status. Consequently, the positions which we would be throwing open as to which we would be subjecting ourselves to a charge of playing politics, and the agencies in which we would be creating most of the confusion, are the positions and the agencies most closely connected with the war program.

Finally, let me read to the Senate the following letter from Thomas Jefferson to James Madison, dated November 29, 1820:

> The enclosed letter from our ancient friend Tenche Coxe, came unfortunately to Monticello after I left it, and has had a dilatory passage to this place, where I received it yesterday, and obey its injunction of immediate transmission to you. We should have recognized the style even without a signature, and although so written as to be much of it indecipherable. This is a sample of the effects we may expect from the late mischievous law vacating every 4 years nearly all the executive offices of the Government. It saps the constitutional and salutary functions of the President, and introduces a principle of intrigue and corruption, which will soon leaven the mass, not only of Senators, but of citizens. It is more baneful than the attempt which failed in the beginning of the Government, to make all officers irremovable but with the consent of the Senate. This places, every 4 years, all appointments under their power, and even obliges them to act on every one nomination. It will keep in constant excitement all the hungry cormorants for office, render them, as well as those in place, sycophants to their Senators, engage these in eternal intrigue to turn out one and put in another, in cabals to swap work; and make of them what all executive directories become, mere sinks of corruption and faction. This must have been one of the midnight signatures of the President, when he had not the time to consider, or even to read the law; and the more fatal as being irrepealable but with the consent of the Senate, which will never be obtained * * *

Everything Thomas Jefferson said about that piece of legislation could and will be said with equal emphasis about the bill now before the Senate if it is ever enacted into law.

Mr. President, I merely want to reiterate the statement I made at the beginning of my remarks. I believe that all the wartime or emergency agencies of the Government should be staffed by a personnel recruited by the recruiting agencies of our Government, and that every man and woman employed in those agencies should have a fair and an equal opportunity to prove his or her ability and qualifications. That is now being done in the agencies, with the exception of the War Manpower Administration, which we have prevented by law from doing. I trust that the pending bill will fail of passage. I hope the Senate will refer the bill to the Committee on Civil Service.

Mr. HATCH obtained the floor.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I had earlier discussed, in advance of the Senator from New Mexico taking the floor, the matter of submitting two proposed perfecting amendments. I talked the matter over with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], all of whom agreed with me that we could very well substitute subsections (d) and (e) of the so-called O'Mahoney amendment for the corresponding subsections in the Judiciary Committee's bill. It was for that purpose that I rose to offer those amendments. I am sure that if they were to be considered and acted upon, no further discussion would be required, and they would be promptly adopted.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I wish to discuss the bill.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. The matter has been discussed between the author of the bill and the author of the report on the bill from the Judiciary Committee. The amendments suggested by the Senator from Connecticut are acceptable to us, and if the question were left to us, we would agree that they might go into the bill.

Mr. DANAHER. I have not offered them, obviously because the Senator from New Mexico has the floor, but if he will yield further and permit me to do so, I will offer them.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator from Connecticut let me see the proposal?

Mr. DANAHER. Certainly.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I know that Senators are anxious to leave. It is growing late in the afternoon. At various times throughout the course of the debate I have expressed my views somewhat generally about the bill. I wish to assure the Senate that I shall not take very much time this afternoon in saying what I shall have to say, but I do think that the bill now pending is of so much importance that I would be unfair to myself and unfair to the Senate if I did not make a very few remarks pointing out, if I can, what is being done by the passage of the pending measure.

Much has been said about the Constitution. It has been said that it is only sought to return to the Constitution. I shall not discuss that question today. I yield to no man in adherence to, faith in, and respect for that document, to which the Senator from Michigan referred the other day as a noted and noble document, but I do not agree at all that there is anything in the Constitution of the United States which even implies that such legislation as this should be passed. On the contrary, the things which the framers of this Government had in mind in drafting the Constitution and in the constitutional debates were contrary to legislation of this kind.

It has been said on the floor of the Senate that under the Constitution no Senator can make an appointment; that he has only the right to ratify, advise, and consent. A few years of life in practical politics, or a few years in the Senate of the United States, would convince anyone that when confirmations are had in the Senate, Senators from the States affected actually make the appointments, leaving the President only a veto power. The right to reject, which the constitutional framers vested in the Senate, has become the right to select.

I am not alone in that statement. Practically every President from Washington down to date has faced the same situation. Perhaps the situation was best expressed by former President Taft, who said:

> In the matters of recommendation and, indeed, of obtaining office, it is leg muscle and lack of modesty which win, rather than fitness and character. The appointing power is in effect in the hands of the Senators. It is subject only to a veto by the President.

Mr. President, whether or not that be true, whether or not Senators would exercise the powers proposed to be conferred by the bill as a patronage grab is unimportant. There is no power in this country that can make the people of America believe otherwise than that the Senate has stopped in the midst of wartime effort to reach out and grab unto itself more power and more patronage. That, Mr. President, will put the Senate and the Congress in a very unenviable light before the people of America.

That is not my only reason for opposing this measure. I have said repeatedly, and I firmly agree, that it is the constitutional concept that the Senate shall confirm appointments of genuine policy-making officials. I have been hopeful that out of this proposed legislation there would come some rule or plan by which that policy could be carried out.

I wish to say to the Senator from Tennessee that his bill at least established some definite plan. He laid down the rule that every Federal employee receiving in excess of $4,500 a year ought to be confirmed. Whether that rule be good or bad, it is at least understandable. The executive department or the Congress would know what was being done under such a rule. I do not believe in it at all. I believe we ought to make some effort to define a policy-making official.

So the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] drafted in the committee his substitute proposal, by which he attempted to define policy-making officials. I do not think the definitions in his proposal are clear by any means. I think that in many instances they go even further than the original McKellar bill. As pointed out by the Civil Service Commission, under those definitions a $2,000-a-year law clerk would have to be confirmed by the Senate. In many instances no one knows who would have to be confirmed and who would not have to be confirmed; and yet all those provisions are in the bill. So indefinite and uncertain are they that at the present moment the Senator from Connecticut is proposing to take a corrected portion of the amendment which the Senator from Wyoming had prepared, and which was voted on today, and insert it in the committee bill, in an effort to correct on the floor of the Senate some of the imperfections which he and I know exist in the bill. If there was confusion in the bill before, there is chaos now.

It has been said that under the McKellar bill from thirty to thirty-five thousand persons would have to be confirmed; but if we add all the indefinite definitions which are at present included in the bill, no one knows who will have to be confirmed.

My argument is simply this: It is an unwise way to legislate, no matter how much one may believe in the need for a bill; no matter how much one may wish to accomplish the thing sought to be accomplished in the original McKellar bill. The bill now presented to the Senate is far worse than it was in the beginning.

Mr. President, in line with what I have just said, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in my remarks a letter written to me at my request by the United States Civil Service Commission, in which a complete analysis of the entire bill is made.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES
CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., May 11, 1943.

Hon. CARL A. HATCH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR HATCH: Reference is made to your recent request for a report of the Commission's views relative to S. 575, a bill to provide that officers in the executive branch of the Government who receive compensation at a rate in excess of $4,500 a year shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, in the manner provided by the Constitution.

S. 575, if enacted into law, would require appointments to the following classes of offices or positions in the executive branch of the Government to be made by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate:

(a) Heads, assistant heads, and head attorneys of all departments and agencies;

(b) Heads of bureaus, divisions, sections, and other subdivisions of such departments and agencies;

(c) Heads and assistant heads of regional, area, or State offices of such departments and agencies;

(d) All persons whose duties include the preparation or issuance of rules, regulations, or orders made or issued under authority of any act of Congress or Executive order;

(e) All persons whose duties include participation in conferences or discussions with persons from other departments or agencies or with persons from other bureaus, divisions, sections, or other subdivisions of their own departments or agencies held for the purpose of determining policies or methods to be followed in the administration of the functions of any department or agency or subdivision thereof; or

(f) Any person receiving $4,500 a year or more, except artisans and craftsmen.

It is obvious from an examination of this portion of the bill that the language used to describe most of the foregoing classifications of employees is so broad that it may be construed to include almost any kind of Government position at all. Paragraph (b), for example, includes the head of any subdivision of any department or agency. A department may be divided into bureaus, the bureaus into divisions, the divisions into sections, and the sections into units. The supervisor in charge of the smallest subdivision may be a $2,000-a-year employee in charge of a few clerks, yet under the language of the bill he would be required to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

While paragraph (b) above is based upon internal subdivisions of a department or agency, paragraph (c) is based on a geographic subdivision of a department or agency. Under paragraph (c), the head of any office for any particular geographic area, however small, would be required to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. Paragraphs (d) and (e), however, are based on the duties of the positions. The words "whose duties include the preparation or issuance of rules," contained in paragraph (d) might be construed to include a law clerk whose only function is to draft rules or regulations and who has no authority or responsibility in determining the policy or the content of such rules, or it may be construed to include even the typist who prepares such rules. The language of paragraph (e) is still more indefinite and might be construed to include any person who has any contact whatever with any other person in his own or another Government department or agency. Paragraph (f) is based on the salary of the person and would of course include many positions which are neither administrative nor policy determining, as, for example, scientists, engineers, etc.

A general criticism of section 2 of the bill, therefore, is that no uniform standard is observed in delineating the group which shall be subject to appointment by the President and confirmation by the Senate. The bill defines the group by applying such diverse standards as the kind of position, the organizational relationship of the position, the geographic location of the position, the duties of the position, and finally the salary of the position. As the size and organizational structure of the several agencies in the executive branch varies greatly, positions in one agency might be subject to the bill whereas similar positions in other agencies would not be.

Section 3 of the bill sets up five groups of employees which are exempt from the requirement of Presidential appointment and confirmation; namely:

(a) Persons appointed with a classified status;

(b) Persons who are on leave of absence for the purpose of performing military service;

(c) Persons restored or reinstated upon completion of military service;

(d) Positions in the Federal Bureau of Investigation;

(e) Positions in the White House office.

Of these exceptions, the meaning of the language of the first is obscure. The specific language is:

"In the case of any person appointed or promoted in accordance with the provisions of the civil-service laws and rules providing at the time of his appointment or promotion for his acquiring a classified (competitive) civil service status by reason of such appointment or promotion and satisfactory service during a probationary period."

While this language would appear to except from the operation of the bill any classified employee who was appointed as a result of a competitive examination and who completed a probationary period, it does not appear to exclude thousands of classified employees who were given a civil-service status noncompetitively by statute and by Executive order. Many such employees who have spent a lifetime in the Federal service would find themselves thrown out of the Government service on June 30, 1943, unless they were nominated by the President for confirmation by the Senate.

Because of the exigencies of the war program, and the unprecedented need for personnel in the Government service, the Commission has since March 16, 1942, been operating under a special set of war-service regulations adopted pursuant to authority granted the Commission by Executive Order No. 9063 of February 16, 1942. Under the war-service regulations, many of the normal civil-service procedures have been modified or suspended, and persons appointed under the war-service regulations acquire neither a classified civil-service status nor a permanent appointment and will not be eligible to continue in the Government service beyond 6 months after the cessation of the war. As section 3 of S. 575 exempts only those appointments under the civil-service laws in which the appointeee acquires a classified (competitive) civil-service status, presumably all persons appointed under the war-service regulations whose positions fall within one of the categories set forth in section 2 would be required to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Under the amendments proposed in the minority report on S. 575 of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, the following classes of offices would be subject to appointment by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate:

(a) The heads, assistant heads, and head attorneys of all departments and agencies;

(b) Heads of bureaus, divisions, or other units representing the first subdivision of any department or agency;

(c) Heads and assistant heads of regional, area, or State offices of such departments and agencies;

(d) All persons whose duties include the determination of provisions to be included in rules, regulations, or orders of such departments or agencies; or

(e) All persons whose duties include participation in conference with persons from other departments or agencies or subdivisions of their own departments or agencies for the purpose of determining policies to be followed in administering any functions of the department or agency.

While these amendments would have some clarifying effect on the language of S. 575, uniformity would still not be achieved. Under subsection (b), for example, the head of the first subdivision of any department or agency would be required to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. In many Government agencies, organizational subdivisions are largely a matter of administrative discretion and are not governed by law. Consequently, the applicability or inapplicability of S. 575 to a particular position would be dependent upon the exercise of administrative discretion in establishing internal organization.

For example, if an agency were subdivided into six separate divisions, the chief of each of these six divisions would be subject to subsection (b) of the bill. If, however, the same agency were subdivided into two bureaus, and each of these two bureaus into three divisions, presumably only the heads of the two bureaus would be subject to subsection (b), while the chiefs of the six subdivisions presumably would not be.

Under subsection (c), the head of any office in any particular geographic area, however small, would have to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

Serious question may, however, arise as to the extent of subsection (d). Probably the most reasonable construction of that subsection would be that only persons who have final authority to promulgate regulations are "persons whose duties include the determination of provisions to be included in rules." In most cases, this would be only the head of the agency involved, who would already be included in subsection (a).

The language of subsection (e), however, is still indefinite, and, given its broadest application, could be held to include any person who participates in any capacity in any conference which is held for the purpose of determining policy.

It can be seen from the foregoing analysis that the enactment of this bill as proposed in either the majority or minority reports would lead to thoroughgoing administrative confusion insofar as determining whether or not specific positions were subject to the provision of senatorial confirmation.

The Commission believes that it is absolutely impossible to amend the bill in such a way as to avoid such confusion.

Even if this were possible, however, the Commission would still be unalterably opposed to the enactment of legislation of this character.

If the legislation as proposed in either the majority or minority reports of the Judiciary Committee were enacted into law, it would seriously disrupt and impair the conduct of the war program. Its effect on the morale of employees of the executive branch who would be subject to its provisions is self-evident. Every one of these employees would be on notice to the effect that his continued employment beyond the date set by the proposed bill would depend upon action by the Senate. No private employer would think of deliberately disrupting the morale of his employees by making their continued employment dependent on something other than the need for an effectiveness of their services. It is unthinkable that the Federal Government, as an employer, would attempt to do something for which we would condemn private employers.

The effect of the legislation as proposed in either the majority or minority reports on the recruitment of persons for key positions in connection with the war program is likewise self-evident. As the President of the United States stated in his letter of February 19, 1943, addressed to the President of the Senate, "It would lay all of us open to the charge that we are playing politics with the war program."

The adoption of either the majority or minority reports by the Congress would immediately lay the Government open to the charge that spoilsmen have taken control of the filing of virtually every key position in every war agency. As soon as this fact became apparent to the American people, they would lose confidence in the manner in which their Government is being operated in time of war. American citizens should be chosen for service in their Government in a war period irrespective of political affiliations. This would not be the case, if the proposed legislation were enacted.

The selection of proper personnel is one of the most difficult processes in the whole realm of government. Over 3,500,000 placements have been made in the Federal Government since May 1940. Undoubtedly, in making this large number of placements, and particularly in view of the speed required, mistakes have been made. Clearly, heads of departments and agencies should move vigorously in the direction of correcting these mistakes.

We should not, however, in our efforts to correct these mistakes, make, as the President also stated in his letter of February 19, "the error of undermining the entire administrative structure that has been erected for the conduct of the war."

This proposal, irrespective of whether the majority or minority version is adopted, again using the words of the President, "is the very antithesis of the merit system and would sweep away years of civil service progress."

By direction of the Commission:

Very sincerely yours,

HARRY B. MITCHELL,
President.

Mr. HATCH. I did not ask the Commission to give me any information one way or the other. I was occupied with other things, and I asked them to take the pending bill section by section and see just how it would affect the Government civil service. I should like to have Senators read the bill as it will appear in the RECORD tomorrow. I, of course, understand that the bill will be passed tonight. I wish it were possible for it to go over until Senators could carefully study these criticisms, which are not fault-finding but merely represent an effort to show what the bill will or will not do.

Mr. President, I wish now to refer to another important subject. One of my chief objections to this type of legislation has been that it would disrupt the civil service, whatever merit system we have in our Government. I am not any too proud of our merit system. I know that it has many defects, but I do not believe the defects will be cured by legislation of this kind.

It has been said that adoption of the committee bill would not affect the civil service, because the civil service is exempted by its provisions. Under the O'Mahoney proposal, which was voted upon a few moments ago, the civil service would be completely exempt, but not so under the committee bill. Allow me to read what is said about the effect on the civil service. I read from the letter from the Civil Service Commission, as follows:

Of these exceptions, the meaning of the language of the first is obscure. The specific language is:

"In the case of any person appointed or promoted in accordance with the provisions of the civil-service laws and rules providing at the time of his appointment or promotion for his acquiring a classified (competitive) civil-service status by reason of such appointment or promotion and satisfactory service during a probationary period."

That is the language from the bill. I continue to read from the letter:

While this language would appear to except from the operation of the bill any classified employee who was appointed as a result of a competitive examination and who completed a probationary period, it does not appear to exclude thousands of classified employees who were given a civil-service status noncompetitively by statute and by Executive order. Many such employees who have spent a lifetime in the Federal service would find themselves thrown out of the Government service on June 30, 1943, unless they were nominated by the President for confirmation by the Senate.

Mr. President, placing employees under the civil service by statute or Executive order is not a new practice. It has been done for many years. As pointed out in the letter from which I have read, perhaps thousands of civil-service employees who have occupied positions under civil service will find themselves thrown out of a job if the pending bill becomes law. I presume they would be reappointed. I do not know, but it merely shows one of the many vices of the bill. My thought has always been that this bill should have gone to the Committee on Civil Service. I thought it would be wise to move to send the pending measure back to the Committee on Civil Service. The Senator from New York has so recommended and I understood he would make a motion to do so. I have sent for him to see if he desires me to make such a motion.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. How retroactive would the bill be in the opinion of the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. HATCH. I have stated how retroactive it would be. Perhaps thousands of persons who have been loyal and efficient employees in the civil service would find themselves confronted with no employment. I do not say that that will occur, and I do not believe the Civil Service Commission actually has said that it will occur, but it has said that the language is so confusing and so obscure that nobody knows what may happen.

Mr. LUCAS. Am I to understand that if an individual has been on the Government pay roll for the last 20 or 25 years and now receives more than $4,500 a year in salary, it will be necessary for the President of the United States to send his name to the Senate for confirmation should the pending bill be enacted into law?

Mr. HATCH. That is the effect of the bill.

Mr. LUCAS. Is that the holding of the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. HATCH. Yes; it is. As I say, however, Mr. President, the Civil Service Commission does not exactly hold that any of these things would occur, but they have pointed out that we do not know they will not occur, and we do not know what will take place. The language of the bill is so indefinite and so obscure that no prediction can be made. Of course, as to employees receiving a salary of more than $4,500, we know what will be required with reference to them, but many civil-service employees receiving less than $4,500 may be affected. There are, as has been pointed out, perhaps $2,000-a-year clerks who would come under some of the provisions of the bill. That is the point I am making.

Mr. President, the Senator from New York is now in the Chamber. I do not care to detain the Senate longer. If the Senator from New York wishes to make a motion, I yield to him.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DANAHER. Is the bill open to further amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been read the third time and is not open to further amendment, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to offer two amendments, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, in reference to the parliamentary situation, I desire to point out that the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] was on his feet demanding recognition, attempting to the best of his ability to attract the attention of the Chair when the Chair announced the third reading of the bill. In view of the fact that the Senator from New York was demanding recognition, and desiring to speak upon the bill, I venture to suggest that there has been no third reading and that an amendment is still in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut asked for unanimous consent.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes; but that might be denied under the circumstances.

Mr. President, I make the point of order that by reason of the fact that the Senator from New York was on his feet demanding recognition to speak upon the bill, there has been no third reading, and the bill is still open to amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York state that he was making such an effort at that time?

Mr. MEAD. The Senator from New York was making the effort and so stated at that particular time. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hold that the bill is still before the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. DANAHER. Then, Mr. President, I withdraw the request for unanimous consent. I now understand that the bill is open to further amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I send forward an amendment to section 2 on page 4, which would strike out clauses (d) and (e) and substitute therefor certain language.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say to the Senator from Connecticut that the amendment is, as he understands, an amendment to the committee amendment which the Chair is informed is not open to amendment, the committee amendment having been agreed to on the 7th day of June.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendment be stated.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I believe the ruling made by the Chair is correct, and I regret exceedingly to be obliged to make objection, but it seems to me now that the bill should go to a vote as soon as possible. Any corrections necessary to be made can be made in the other House. I hope the Senator from Connecticut will not persist in his request for unanimous consent.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, in the light of the persuasive intimation of the Senator from Nevada that he would prefer that I not offer the amendment, I shall not persist. I think the amendments should be printed and incorporated in the RECORD, to the end that they may be available, and I ask unanimous consent that they so appear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, Mr. DANAHER'S proposed amendments were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

From section 2, page 4, strike out clauses "(d)" and "(e)" and insert the following:

"(d) All persons whose duties include responsibility for final action in connection with the preparation and promulgation of rules, regulations, or orders made or issued under authority of any act of Congress or any Executive order.

"(e) All persons whose duties include responsibility for determining the policies to be followed in administering the functions of any department, agency, or subdivision thereof as defined in paragraphs (a), (b), and (c) of this section."

From section 3, page 5, strike out subsection (a) and insert the following:

"(a) In the case of (1) any person appointed or promoted in accordance with provisions of the civil-service laws and rules, as a result of which appointment or promotion and satisfactory service during a probationary period he acquired a classified (competitive) civil-service status; (2) any person who acquired a classified (competitive) civil-service status as in clause (1) and who, having left the service, has been or may be reinstated with restoration of such status; and (3) any person who, subsequent to appointment, acquired a classified status by action of the President or the Civil Service Commission, pursuant to act of Congress or Executive order; or."

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I now move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

Mr. McKELLAR. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Tennessee withhold his suggestion?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, it is my purpose to offer an amendment, but since amendments are not allowable at this time, I should like to have unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a proposed amendment, so that it might be clear what was intended.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I ask the Senator from Michigan whether the amendment which he intended to propose was to the committee amendment or to the bill.

Mr. FERGUSON. It was to the committee amendment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I was about to remark that an amendment to the bill would be in order.

Mr. FERGUSON. I ask that the proposed amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the proposed amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

At the end of each of subsections (a) to (e), inclusive, in section 2, strike out the period, insert a semicolon, and then strike out subsection (f) on page 5, in line 3, and insert in lieu thereof, applicable to all of these subsections, the following proviso: "Provided, That this section shall apply to any such person described in subsections (a) to (e), inclusive (except artisans and craftsmen) only if such person receives compensation amounting to $4,500 or more per annum for his services."

Mr. McKELLAR. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not the amendment of the Senator from Michigan come within the ruling announced by the Chair in the case of the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does.

Mr. McKELLAR. I regret it exceedingly, but I shall have to make the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] that the bill be referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

Mr. McNARY and other Senators asked for the yeas and nays.

Mr. McKELLAR. If we are to have the yeas and nays, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum has been suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

INVESTIGATION RELATING TO SUPPLY AND DISTRIBUTION OF ELECTRIC POWER—AMENDMENT

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, on Saturday, Senate Resolution 155 was agreed to. Previously it had been referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, from which it was favorably reported to the Senate, and thereafter it was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. On Saturday, the resolution was favorably reported to the Senate by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and was agreed to.

The matter was called to my attention hastily, and was considered by the committee only casually. I have noticed an oversight in the resolution. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the resolution was agreed to be reconsidered for the purpose of permitting consideration of an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Montana? The Chair hears none; and, without objection, the vote by which the resolution was agreed to is reconsidered.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I now propose the following amendment:

On page 1, lines 1 and 2, after the word "That", strike out the words "a special committee of five Senators to be appointed by the President of the Senate", and insert in lieu thereof "the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof."

I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I have just returned from the House of Representatives, where I had gone in connection with a certain matter. The resolution was agreed to by the Senate; was it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was agreed to on Saturday last.

Mr. MCNARY. Has the vote by which it was agreed to been reconsidered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been.

Mr. MCNARY. The resolution now goes to the calendar; does it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Request has been made for unanimous consent to have an amendment to the resolution considered.

Mr. NcNARY. But the resolution remains on the calendar; does it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not been on the calendar.

Mr. MCNARY. I have no objection to having the resolution go back on the calendar for reconsideration. An amendment might be pending; and when the calendar is called, it will come up for consideration. But I do not want to consent to having the amendment agreed to this afternoon, without further consideration.

Mr. WHEELER. That will be perfectly agreeable.

Mr. MCNARY. I assumed it would be, of course. In other words, the resolution will go back on the Senate Calendar; and the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana will be pending, to be considered at the time when the resolution is reached during the call of the calendar. That is the status I want fixed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection having been made to the present consideration of the amendment, the amendment will be printed and will be pending, and the resolution will be placed on the calendar.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I may advise the Senate that the plan is to take up the State, Justice, and Commerce appropriation bill the first thing tomorrow. If consideration of the measure is completed in time, as we think it will be, request will be made for consideration of unobjected-to bills on the calendar.

PREVENTION OF DESECRATION OF THE FLAG

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, today is Flag Day. The Senate on more than one occasion has passed measures providing punishment for misuse and for desecration of the flag of the United States but the Senate bills have failed in the other House. The national flag is the national emblem. Forty-six States of the Nation have passed legislation on the subject of the use of the flag and punishment for its abuse.

I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate bill 369, Calendar No. 303.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 369) to prevent desecration and mutilation of the flag of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I hesitate to object; but tomorrow the calendar is to be called. On two other occasions today I have had to make similar objection in view of the fact that tomorrow—only 1 day from today—we are to have the call of the calendar.

Will not the Senator agree to postpone until tomorrow his request for present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I have no objection at all to the course suggested by the Senator. I made the request particularly in view of the fact that today is Flag Day. However, I have no objection to having the course suggested by the Senator followed.

Mr. MCNARY. I thank the Senator. I should have no objection to having the bill presently considered except for the fact that tomorrow the calendar is to be called.

BASEBALL'S CONTRIBUTION TO THE WAR EFFORT

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, baseball, the great national sport of our country, furnished additional proof last week, if any were needed, that it can and does play an important role in our war effort.

At a luncheon at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, at New York City, on June 8, 1943, in what promises to be only the preliminary in the greatest incentive yet devised for the sale of War bonds, 37 players representing the Dodgers, the Yankees, and the Giants were "auctioned" off to patriotic organizations, individuals, and business concerns for the staggering sum of $123,850,000. The amounts pledged by unsuccessful bidders brought the total of war purchases to nearly $184,000,000 in bonds.

The luncheon was sponsored by the New York Chapter of the Baseball Writers Association, and the War bond rally was jointly conducted with the Treasury Department. This novel idea, credited to Jack Callan, of Caldwell, N. J., who is connected with the war stamp sales department, pledges the "purchaser" of the player to purchase War bonds in the amount of the bid, plus additional amounts during the remainder of the season, based on the performance of the player in each game. Each "purchaser" of a player is to sponsor a club named after his player, to encourage bond purchases by the "fans" who then can "vote" for their favorite players by purchasing War bonds at booths to be set up in the ball parks. It is expected that this patriotic plan will spread to all the major league cities and will create a War bond baseball league that will rival in interest the pennant races.

In commenting on the results of the first baseball bond rally in New York, Dan Daniel, the well-known sports writer, stated that baseball men predict that probably 200 baseball stars will be striving to pile up bond sales which, by October, might show a total of $500,000,000, and that the plan would prove to be the strongest incentive to bond purchasers, outside our military successes. He also made this significant observation:

> They saw the War bond baseball league sweeping the country and furnishing still another argument, the strongest one of all, in favor of continuing the game in the major leagues right through the war.

Frank Graham, noted sports commentator, writing in the New York Sun, had this to say about the idea:

> This luncheon marked the beginning, only the beginning, at $100,000,000, mind you, of a movement that may be the most successful effort on the part of any sport to aid the prosecution of the war.
> It is also hoped that the idea will spread to other major league cities. If it does—and there is every reason why it should—baseball, through its patriotic friends, should launch a few battle wagons, put many a plane in the sky, and send many a jeep rolling across the battle grounds of Europe and the Orient. Out of the ballroom of the Waldorf already has come a mightly blast right in "der fuehrer's face."

Milt Miller, sports writer for PM, had this to say about the drive:

> Starting today, all baseballdom, including the fans, executives, employees, and the sports writers, is on its way to show how hard it can slug the Axis.

Baseball fans showed a tremendous interest in the annual all-star game, when the players were selected by popular vote, and there are many who believe that the privilege of selecting the players for the all-star game should be returned to the fans instead of having the present system of selections by the rival managers. I believe that we can evolve out of this War bond baseball league a truly great all-star game, the players to be selected on the basis of the War bond purchases made in their names.

From the outbreak of the war organized baseball has wholeheartedly participated in the war effort. In 1942 it turned over a sum in excess of $1,300,000 as contributions to Army and Navy relief societies and the ball-and-bat fund. In addition, over 500 baseball movies are in circulation for the entertainment of our men and women in the service in all parts of the world.

Treasury officials and baseball management, writers, players, and fans are to be commended for this fine patriotic undertaking.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

As in executive session,

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting a judicial nomination, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(For nomination this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

RECESS

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until tomorrow at 12 o'clock noon.

NOMINATION

Executive nomination received by the Senate June 14 (legislative day of May 24), 1943:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY

James B. M. McNally, of New York, to be United States attorney for the southern district of New York, vice Mathias F. Correa, resigned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JUNE 14, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we praise Thee that Thou art united to us by the power of soul life, threading our thoughts into Thy thoughts, thus answering the call to victorious destiny.

Today inspire us with a nobler citizenship, a higher public spirit, and with a more universal justice. We thank Thee for the voices of the past which set the standards of human values and established the processes of free government; grant that they may be infinitely more to our country than idle tales. Though treachery beset our forefathers and criticism buffeted them, yet the heroism of their intrepid souls challenges the admiration of liberty-loving men around the world. O God of the nations, be with America. No outer victory is worth an inner defeat and we can ill afford to win a war by losing our soul. We prayerfully beseech Thee that the symbolism of our flag may live in the very depths of all hearts: human freedom, equal rights, and good will to all men. O grant us a common faith and a common brotherhood in the name of man.

"Your flag and our flag,
And how it floats today
O'er your land and my land,
And half the world away.

"Blood-red and rose-red,
Its stripes forever gleam;
Snow white and soul white
Our good forefathers' dream.

"The one flag, the great flag,
The flag for me and you,
Glorified, all else beside,
The red and white and blue."

Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, June 11, 1943, was read and approved.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Coast Guard Auxiliary and Reserve Act of 1941, as amended, is hereby further amended as follows:

Section 402, strike out "That there shall not be more than 1 officer in the grade of lieutenant commander; nor more than 18 officers in the grade of lieutenant; and that the number of officers in the grade of lieutenant (junior grade) shall not exceed 35 percent of the total number of commissioned officers: And provided further."

Section 404, strike out "and shall be restricted to the performance of shore duty within the continental United States only."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, strike out lines 5 to 10, inclusive, and page 2, lines 1, 2, and 3, inclusive, and insert the following:

"Section 402, change to read as follows:

"'SEC. 402. Members of the Women's Reserve may be commissioned or enlisted in such appropriate ranks and ratings, not above the rank of captain, corresponding to those of the Regular Coast Guard, as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, or by the Secretary of the Navy while the Coast Guard is operating as a part of the Navy: Provided, That the military authority of officers commissioned under the provisions of this title may be exercised over women of the Reserve only and is limited to the administration of the Women's Reserve.'

"Section 404, strike out 'and shall be restricted to the performance of shore duty within the continental United States only.'

"Strike out sections 406 and 408.

"Section 407, change 'SEC. 407' to read 'SEC. 406.'"

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I offer a substitute, adopted by the committee, to take the place of the amendment formerly reported to bring the bill in line with the bill for the WAVES which was passed the other day. The SPAR bill was on the Consent Calendar and was withheld in order to make it conform to the bill as passed.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The purpose of this amendment is to make the bill conform with the law with reference to the other services?

Mr. BLAND. Yes; it will conform exactly with the other services, and the only change is that purpose.

Mr. WELCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. WELCH. The amendment is unanimously reported by the committee.

The Clerk read the substitute, as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLAND to H. R. 1616: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following in lieu thereof:

"That the Coast Guard Auxiliary and Reserve Act of 1941, as amended, is hereby further amended as follows:

"'Strike out section 402 and substitute therefor the following:

"'"SEC. 402. Members of the Women's Reserve may be commissioned or enlisted in such appropriate ranks and ratings, not above the rank of captain, corresponding to those of the Regular Coast Guard, as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, or by the Secretary of the Navy while the Coast Guard is operating as a part of the Navy: Provided, That there shall not be more than one officer in the grade of captain: Provided further, That military authority of officers commissioned under the provisions of this title may be exercised over women of the Reserve only and is limited to the administration of the Women's Reserve."

"'Strike out section 404 and substitute therefor the following:

"'"SEC. 404. Members of the Women's Reserve shall not be assigned to duty on board vessels of the Navy or Coast Guard, or in combat aircraft at any time. No such member who is qualified to fill an available billet at Coast Guard Headquarters proper at Washington shall be assigned to duty outside the continental United States."

"'Strike out section 406, and renumber sections 407 and 408 as 406 and 407 respectively.

"'"SEC. 2. Each member of the Women's Reserve who was enlisted or commissioned therein on or prior to the date this act is approved shall be restricted to the performance of shore duty within the continental United States, unless and until she shall voluntarily sign a general waiver of said restriction."'"

The substitute was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman withhold his point of order to allow the gentleman from New York to submit a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. RANKIN. I will withhold it until we see what the request is.

MOSES TENNENBAUM

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2456) for the relief of Moses Tennenbaum.

This bill, as the title indicates, would permit the entrance into this country of the father of two boys in our armed forces who on a technicality cannot secure a visa to join his boys in the United States. The father is in Cuba. The committee unanimously, without reservation, endorsed this bill. The Department has approved the bill. It is a private bill and has nothing to do with the other bills on the calendar. The boys in uniform came before the committee and said they had been separated from their father and mother for almost 5 years on a technicality. The Department suggested this bill and the committee endorsed it.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think this bill should go to the Committee on Rules. I am not in favor of breaking down our immigration laws by piecemeal. I am not in favor of breaking them down by collateral attack; I am not in favor of using the Chinese as a smoke screen to break them down; I am not in favor of using the war as an excuse to destroy the immigration laws that it took us so long to build up, and that the American people expect us to sustain and not destroy.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I object to this request. Let the bill go to the Rules Committee.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. KLEIN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on June 12, 1943, present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 1258. An act to name certain locks in the St. Mary's River at the falls, Michigan; and

H. R. 2753. An act making supplemental appropriations to carry out the provisions of an act to promote the defense of the United States, approved March 11, 1941, as amended, and for other purposes.

OUR FLAG DAY—JUNE 14

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, when the early immigrants to our shores caught their first glimpse of Old Glory fluttering in the clean free wind of the New World, their eyes filled with tears of gratitude to Almighty God, and their hearts were lifted up with fresh hope and faith and courage and resolution.

Even as they fled the ancient oppressions and quarrels of the Old World to defend and enjoy the privileges and opportunities of the New World, so today once more their sons and their sons' sons—yes, and their daughters, too—are fighting and dying all over the world under the same glorious flag to preserve for us and our children and the countless generations as yet unborn those same privileges and opportunities.

What did our gallant marines, storming the blood-stained beach head at Guadalcanal, think and feel as they followed that banner into battle; followed Old Glory through the perilous murk and mist of the tropic dawn; followed through shot and shell and ambush and death—until that flag floated in triumph over the Solomons? It was no mere piece of colored cloth to them; not just a sheet of striped silk waving gracefully before their grim eyes. Ah, no, it was far, far more than that. It was the visible symbol and memory and meaning of the American creed and American courage.

Listen with hushed and thankful hearts as Old Glory whispers the inspiring message of Bunker Hill. Listen as it shouts the deathless heroism of Gettysburg. Listen as it sings the crimson bravery of Belleau Wood. Listen as it storms the stubborn cliffs of Tunisia or the fog-shrouded ridges of Attu. Listen as it keeps the lonely watch with the sailor at sea or the sentry at his post.

To all of them and all of us it speaks with one voice as the banner of one people, united in war and in peace; the grandest banner that ever hallowed the winds of the world. It speaks, declaring in effect: "I am Old Glory. For more than eightscore years I have been the banner of hope and freedom for generation after generation of Americans. Born amid the first flames of America's fight for freedom, I am the symbol of a country that has grown from a little group of Thirteen Colonies to a united Nation of 48 sovereign States. Planted firmly on the high pinnacle of American faith, my gently fluttering folds have proved an inspiration to untold millions. Men have followed me into battle with unwavering courage. They have looked upon me as a symbol of national unity. They have prayed that they and their fellow citizens might continue to enjoy the life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness which have been granted to every American as the heritage of freemen. So long as men love liberty more than life itself; so long as they treasure the priceless privileges bought with the blood of our forefathers; so long as the principles of truth, justice, and charity for all remain deeply rooted in human hearts, I shall continue to be the enduring banner of the United States of America. I am Old Glory."

Indeed, we can with profit take a lesson from the flag pledge of the Boy Scouts of America:

My flag! Whether floating proudly in the sunshine before the Capitol at Washington, or fluttering from the stern of a battleship ready to protect our liberties, or borne in loyal peace in school, church, or civic occasion, my flag. The flag of my America, home of liberty, soil of opportunity, tower of power rightly used. My America. * * * The blue of my flag represents justice, like the eternal blue of the star-filled heavens; its white is for purity, cleanness of purpose, of word or deed; its red is the red lifeblood of brave men and women, ready to die or to live worthily for their country.

Let us this day, and all our days, remember that if we look to our flag for the guarantee of our cherished four freedoms, our flag looks to us for the full discharge on our part of the corresponding four responsibilities. From every citizen who finds in its glorious folds the benefits and blessings of the American way of life—our flag, I insist, has a right to expect the fulfillment, without evasion or half-hearted compromise, of the four responsibilities, namely: Service, sacrifice, tolerance, and patriotism.

For, in the eloquent words of President Woodrow Wilson, uttered during the darkest days of the last war:

This flag, which we honor and under which we serve, is the emblem of our unity, our power, our thought and purpose as a Nation. It has no other character than that which we give it from generation to generation. The choices are ours. It floats in majestic silence above the hosts that execute these choices, whether in peace or in war. And yet, though silent, it speaks to us—speaks to us of the past, of the men and women who went before us, and of their records they wrote upon it.

We celebrate the day of its birth; and from its birth until now it has witnessed a great history, has floated on high the symbol of great events, or a great plan of life worked out by a great people. * * *

Woe to the man, or group of men, that seek to stand in our way in this day of high resolution, when every principle we hold dearest is to be vindicated and made secure for the salvation of the Nation. We are ready to plead at the bar of history, and our flag shall wear a new luster. Once more we shall make good with our lives and fortunes the great faith to which we were born, and a new glory shall shine in the face of our people.

In that same spirit and with that same fortitude and noble resolve, we, here in the Capital of the Nation, as well as in the humblest American home, shall hold Old Glory high in our hearts, shall follow that beloved flag to new victories and triumphs, and shall, in the end, under God, enjoy a just and lasting peace.

PERMITTING NATURALIZATION OF CERTAIN PERSONS NOT CITIZENS WHOSE SONS OR DAUGHTERS SERVED IN THE ARMED FORCES OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 226.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1941) permitting the naturalization of certain persons not citizens whose sons or daughters have served with the land or naval forces of the United States.

That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

PERMITTING NATURALIZATION OF CERTAIN PERSONS NOT CITIZENS WHOSE SONS OR DAUGHTERS SERVED IN THE ARMED FORCES OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the resolution just called up is to make in order consideration of H. R. 1941, which is an immigration bill. I do not know whether the House wants this bill or not, but because its purpose is to do something for a certain class of our soldiers, your Committee on Rules felt constrained to report it for House consideration. Should the House see fit to take it up it will probably want to amend the bill in one slight respect. I think it would have to be amended in order for me to give it my support.

On reading the report one gets the impression that the purpose of the bill is to aid parents of soldiers who are aliens but now residing in the United States in their effort to become citizens of the country. I think the bill is broader that than. It is my opinion that the language of the bill would waive the provision of law with respect to the filing of declaration of intent by alien parents irrespective as to where they might be living; in other words, the language is broad enough to cover not only parents now living within the United States, but parents residing in any part of the world.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. That means people who are in the United States unlawfully, does it not? People who came here in violation of our immigration laws, does it not?

Mr. COX. The author of the bill and the committee sponsoring it insist that it waives nothing, except the filing of the declaration of intention to become citizens.

Let me read the language of the bill and it will make it easier for the gentleman to make his question more pertinent than it might otherwise be:

SEC. 801. Any person not a citizen of the United States whose son or daughter is a citizen of the United States and has served or is serving honorably in the military or naval forces of the United States during the present war and who, if separated from such service, was separated under honorable conditions, may be naturalized upon compliance with all the requirements of the naturalization laws, except that no declaration of intention shall be required, and the provisions of section 326 of this act shall not apply to a petition filed under this section: Provided, That the petition is filed not later than 1 year after the termination of the present war.

Now, let me quote from a letter written by the Attorney General embodied in the committee report in which he sets forth in a single paragraph that part of the section of the statute which is waived.

This paragraph reads as follows:

Under existing law, a person seeking United States citizenship must file a declaration of intention, to become a citizen of the United States at least 2 years prior to the filing of his petition for naturalization (U. S. C., title 8, sec. 731). An alien who is a native of a country with which the United States is at war may not become a naturalized citizen of the United States unless his declaration of intention was filed more than 2 years prior to the beginning of the war or unless the President after investigation and report by the Department of Justice establishing the loyalty of such alien to the United States, excepts such alien from the classification of "alien enemy" (U. S. C., title 8, sec. 726).

In that paragraph there is set forth the provisions of the law that are waived by the bill.

Mr. RANKIN. In other words, in violation of the immigration law that it took the American Legion, and the American people, years and years to get passed, you virtually reach out and destroy it as to multitudes of people who have never seen this country, or who are in this country in violation of those laws.

Mr. COX. It does not destroy it. You are only amending the law insofar as the filing of declaration of intent is concerned.

Mr. RANKIN. Having seen the Attorney General's ridiculous fiasco in Mississippi I must say that I am not in position to accept his opinions with very much grace. I may say further to the gentleman from Georgia that I helped to put these immigration laws on the statute books, and, so far as I am concerned, I am in favor of closing the gates of immigration until this war is over and until our boys who are in this war get back home and have a right to vote as to who shall come to the Congress and pass on propositions of this kind.

Mr. COX. This much, at least, must be said for the Attorney General: He did raise objections to the bill as it was originally drawn and made certain recommendations which the committee saw fit to adopt. If the rule is adopted I think this bill ought to be amended so as to apply only to parents of soldiers who are now residing within the United States and should not be broad enough to cover those living in all other parts of the world.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. Under the provisions of this bill a person whose parents were aliens may have been drafted into the Army as soon as the draft law went into effect and for some reason or other, either on account of inaptitude or expiration of his term or for something else he may have been discharged before the United States entered the war on December 7, 1941; still his parents who may have been here for 30 years and never even filed a declaration of intention to become citizens, who were never interested in becoming citizens, would be allowed to come in as citizens now without even filing a declaration of intention.

Mr. COX. They would be relieved of the requirement of filing a declaration.

Mr. MOTT. Can the gentleman tell us just why these people want to be exempted from filing a declaration? What is the reason given for that?

Mr. COX. I do not know that it applies specifically to parents who have been long-time residents of the United States. The purpose of the bill may be to let in parents who are residents of other countries, who are anxious to become citizens, I do not know.

Mr. MOTT. It may let hordes of aliens flock into this country.

Mr. COX. It will probably let in a goodly number.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. I may say that the statement the gentleman just made was absolutely foreign to the committee hope in reporting the bill. I think the gentleman from Georgia knows that I would be the last one in the world to agree to let in a horde of people.

Mr. COX. Of course, I know that. I know the gentleman's attitude on this question.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. If the bill is not clear enough to cover only people who are actually residing here and have been residing here a good long time, then I want to do just that.

Mr. COX. But the gentleman will find it is not so restricted, and it has been publicized as being broad enough to take in the parents of soldiers now in the service no matter where the parents may reside. I think the gentleman as a member of the committee might well sponsor such an amendment.

Mr. RANKIN. I notice also that this bill changes the date of the war by 2 years. The Attorney General says that "for the purposes of this section the present war shall be deemed to have commenced on December 7, 1941," while this bill says that "for the purposes of this section the present war shall be deemed to have commenced on December 1, 1939." So they have moved the beginning of the war back 2 years. It looks to me as if every subterfuge on earth is being resorted to in order to wreck our immigration laws.

Mr. COX. That is a provision of the bill that ought to be stricken out.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I have reference to the same question that was asked here about the person who has attempted during a period of 20 or 30 years to gain citizenship but has been refused by the court for no other reason than he failed to answer the questions by the court.

Under this bill they would be blanketed in.

Mr. COX. They would have to comply with the law, with the exception of filing a declaration of intent.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Pursuing that proposition further, there is another bill in this series which will waive those educational requirements. If this bill is passed, there is another bill to be considered this afternoon that waives those educational requirements.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. The gentleman from Alabama made the point I wanted to make, that there is another bill pending here which would grant citizenship to people 50 years of age or over regardless of educational qualifications. If the two bills going together are adopted, then the mothers and fathers, 50 years of age or over, of anybody serving in the Army or the Navy would be eligible to citizenship. It likewise sets aside existing law under which the President could order an investigation as to the loyalty of any aliens through the Federal Bureau of Investigation. This bill would set all that aside.

Mr. COX. That is true.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES of Kansas. May I say to the gentleman from Georgia that the intention of this measure is only to give the parents who are lawfully residents of the United States and who are not citizens the right to what is known as the waiving of the filing of the declaration of intention. We do have a group of people here who are admitted to citizenship without the necessity of filing a declaration of intention. The reason for this is simply that it is assumed that if mothers and fathers have sons in the armed forces who are serving honorably, they should have the right to have the filing of the declaration of intention waived, but they would come into court just the same as anybody else and would have a hearing before the court the same as anyone else. It is simply that they would not have to file a declaration of intention, that is all.

Mr. COX. The gentleman makes a very excellent statement, and I thank him. I am sure his statement reflects the attitude and is the expression of the purpose of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. I would suggest, however, that the gentleman make sure that the bill is limited to the purpose of the committee as stated by him, that he might offer an amendment to the bill when we reach that point making that certain.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I am sure the committee will offer such an amendment; in fact, I shall offer amendments myself to take care of the two points in question, one to provide that the parents shall have been lawfully admitted and be residing in the United States, and the second to provide, if there is a question about it, that we shall move the date to December 7, 1941.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman not think it might be well to do that anyway?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. I have two points here. In the first place, in reply to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES], if these people are legally here, there is no reason why they should not file a declaration of intention. Further, my attention has been called to the fact that moving this date back 2 years would give 2 years more to put them on the old-age pension rolls, for the people of the various States to keep them up.

Mr. COX. Will not the gentleman agree that if the bill is so amended as to make certain that it is limited to the purposes stated by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES], which he said was the intention of the committee, that this House might under the circumstances well afford to accept it?

Mr. RANKIN. As far as I am concerned, I must confess to the gentleman from Georgia that "all the perfumes of Arabia" could not sweeten this bill for me.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Will this bill apply to the parents of Japanese?

Mr. COX. The bill as written applies to all parents whose sons or daughters are soldiers of the United States in the present war.

Mr. PHILLIPS. There are Japanese soldiers in our Army in the present war.

Mr. COX. I am not prepared to say that the bill amends our exclusion laws.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Would this apply to their parents?

Mr. COX. It would, if their sons and daughters are in the armed forces of the United States, and if the bill amends by implication our exclusion laws, which I doubt.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. Let the House understand that clearly. Does the gentleman mean to say that if this bill is passed that parents of Japanese soldiers in the armed forces of the United States may be admitted to citizenship?

Mr. COX. As written the bill relieves all parents of the necessity of filing a declaration of intent.

Mr. MOTT. I want to know just how far this goes.

Mr. LESINSKI. Under the Exclusion Act, no Japanese or person of any other Oriental race can become a citizen.

Mr. COX. The gentleman probably is right in that.

Mr. PHILLIPS. The gentleman from Georgia forgets that we have another bill in the committee to suspend the exclusion laws.

Mr. COX. Yes, I understand that.

Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I largely agree with my colleague from Georgia that the bill in principle is correct but it needs considerable amendment. The bill was introduced by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HARTLEY], on this side. It is his bill, he sponsored it. It was reported unanimously by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, and also by the Committee on Rules. It is before the House for the House to work its will upon, and I have absolute faith in the judgment and confidence in the abiity of the House of Representatives to legislate according to its own wishes.

I agree thoroughly with the gentleman from Georgia that there are two or three provisions in this bill that must be amended or the bill should be defeated, but I am for the bill in principle because I do not believe we can go too far in trying to do something for those soldiers and sailors who are serving in the armed forces of the United States in time of war. I have had this view ever since the last war, and I do not believe in lip service, saying nothing is too good for the soldiers, and then doing nothing about it, particularly when they come back home and we do nothing to get their jobs back for them. We have a chance today to do something for their immediate families, not for their aunts and uncles and second cousins and in-laws, and so on, but for the mothers and fathers of the boys and girls, the men and women in our armed forces fighting in defense of America.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. MOTT. To ask the gentleman if he believes that Japanese ought to serve in the United States Army at all?

Mr. FISH. The gentleman asks my belief. I do not know that I have given any thought to the matter. Certainly the General Staff does, and in view of the fact that the General Staff has decided they should, I hold no views to the contrary. I had nothing to do with it originally, and I do not know enough about it to criticize their action.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman knows also that the General Staff and particularly General DeWitt is not in favor of allowing any Japanese under any circumstances to come back to the Pacific coast, and he knows that the War Reallocation Authority was so strong it was able to override him and that they are coming back.

Mr. FISH. There is nothing in this bill that refers directly or indirectly to what the gentleman is talking about.

Mr. MOTT. Oh, yes. This only leads up to another bill.

Mr. FISH. The exclusion laws do not permit the naturalization of Chinese and Japanese, and we are not amending those laws.

Mr. MOTT. That is exactly what I want to ask the gentleman.

Mr. FISH. Then go ahead and ask it.

Mr. MOTT. Because I have great respect for the gentleman's opinion on matters of this kind.

Mr. FISH. I am not an expert on such issues but I shall answer the gentleman's question if I can.

Mr. MOTT. Whether or not this does not modify the Japanese Exclusion Act, I call the gentleman's attention to the specific language of the bill.

Mr. FISH. Let me answer the gentleman in this way. Before I took the floor I went around to members of the committee and they informed me, the members who had this bill under consideration and acted favorably upon it, that it does not change the Exclusion Act. That is all I can say to the gentleman. If the gentleman thinks otherwise he will have to take it up in general debate, and not on the time of the Rules Committee, because I say again to the gentleman that I have to rely upon the committee to that extent and I cannot give any other answer than what they told me, and they say that it does not.

Mr. MOTT. Then I want to ask the gentleman what difference the individual opinion of the members of the committee makes in view of the plain language of the first section of this bill, which says:

> Any person not a citizen of the United States whose son or daughter is a citizen of the United States and has served or is serving honorably in the military or naval services—

I ask the gentleman whether or not that would not permit the citizenship of alien parents of Japanese citizens of the United States serving in our armed forces?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the chairman of the committee to answer the question directly.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. In the first place, we are assuming something that does not exist. Under the present exclusion law no Japanese or Chinese or any other oriental can come here for permanent residence. Therefore that question answers itself.

Mr. MOTT. I do not agree with the gentleman. The Exclusion Act was passed long ago, and this is specific legislation on a specific subject, and it repeals that portion so far as the parents of Japanese soldiers are concerned.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. It does not. It has nothing to do with the question at all. It only deals with persons legally in the country under our immigration laws, complying with all of the requirements, and those are the persons affected by this bill, by just waiving the 2 years of the declaration of intention.

Mr. MOTT. The language of the bill does not say so.

Mr. FISH. If the gentleman has any doubt about it all he has to do is to offer an amendment, and I am quite sure the House will support him.

Mr. MOTT. Certainly that amendment should be made, but I am afraid that there are more loopholes in this bill that the House will never catch up with.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Does not the gentleman know that this is just the first of a series of bills which, if adopted, and the others are adopted, will throw the whole question open—this Pandora's box? For instance, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] is actually championing two bills which would repeal the Chinese Exclusion Act, and he has been ably seconded by some Members on the floor here, and if we pass this bill and we pass the Chinese Exclusion Act, then it will apply.

Mr. FISH. All that the gentleman has to do is to offer an amendment, and I do not see how the chairman of the committee after what he has said could possibly object to it himself.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I want to suggest in this connection the obvious danger of attempting to change the status quo during this war. China is fighting on the same side with us and does anyone think that this character of discussion in connection with this particular bill is going to help our relationship with China or anyone else? It seems to me that as intelligent statesmen, in a situation of this sort, we ought to hold things in status quo until we have won this war.

Every time a bill of this sort comes to the floor of this House something is said that is bound to irritate the people whom we are seeking to hold in unity with ourselves until we get through. The mothers and fathers of these boys are not being deprived of anything. They have an opportunity, if they are fit to be citizens. Citizenship in this country is not something one can inherit. It is not something you get by having a boy or girl in the armed forces. It is an individual opportunity to be a part in a great system of free government.

Mr. FISH. I will say to the gentleman, although there is a great deal of weight in what he has to say and a great deal of logic, it would be much more effective in our relations with China if we would make more of an effort to find a way to get arms and equipment and airplanes into China to help win the war. That is what they are interested in. Everyone knows that if we do not do it they may not last another year. To me that is what the Chinese are interested in and not in any discussions here in the House on bills of this nature which affect our sovereign rights and which we propose to exert always in our own interests, regardless of the Chinese, the Japanese, Fascists, Nazis, or anyone else.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. JENNINGS. Under the law as it now exists, any one of these men and women, parents of these boys in the armed services, could follow the same procedure that every other foreigner has followed who has been naturalized heretofore?

Mr. FISH. There is not any question about it.

Mr. JENNINGS. And is this not the opening wedge of a general drive to tear down our exclusion laws and flood this country with aliens?

Mr. FISH. There are two other bills following this one. I do not know all the provisions of those bills, but in this bill we are doing something for those serving in our armed forces, those men who are fighting our battles in the front lines. Some of them are dying and some have already been killed. Does not the gentleman think that the father or mother of a boy who has been killed in our armed forces has some rights and some preferences? This is a mere preference. This does not make them citizens. This gives them a small advantage to become citizens. I am tired of lip service about what we are going to do for the boys in the service and not doing it when we have the opportunity.

However, I believe the bill should be carefully considered and amended.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is another provision in this bill that I will never support and I will never support it in any bill in which it is placed. I refer to the concluding paragraph of this bill. I call the attention of every Member of this House, Republican and Democrat, to this language, because it is the most unsound, the most unwise, the most untrue, the most totally false statement that I know of. If true, one-haf of the Members of this House are traitors to their country. That last sentence reads this way:

> For the purposes of this section, the present war shall be deemed to have commenced on September 1, 1939, and shall continue until such time as the United States shall cease to be in a state of war.

Everybody knows that this war did not begin until the Congress of the United States, under the Constitution, declared war on December 8, 1941. No one else can declare war. Yet in this bill we change the date of the declaration of war and we say for the purpose of this act that the present war shall be deemed to have commenced on September 1, 1939. If that is written into the law all of you Members who tried to stay out of this war are traitors to your country, if we now say that this war began over 2 years before, or on September 1, 1939.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. In the first place, no one could get us into war except the Congress of the United States.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman is absolutely correct.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. In the second place, the platforms of both political parties in 1940 contained statements that we should remain out of the war.

Mr. FISH. Do everything short of war.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. They provided that we were going to stay out of war, and both candidates for the Presidency, Mr. Willkie and Mr. Roosevelt, stated that we were going to stay out of the war and not send our boys abroad.

Mr. FISH. Again, and again, and again. Now, this committee wants us to change the date of the war.

Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult for the Congress to consider bills of this kind without a great deal of emotion and sentiment and perhaps prejudice. I have always been inclined—I do not know what I will do on the other two bills, but I have always tried to do something for the servicemen who are fighting our battles. We do not make their parents citizens by this bill. We just let them waive the first papers. That is all. They must be in this country legally. They must comply with all our laws. It bars Communists and Nazis and Fascists. It merely waives the first papers. But they must be in this country legally, and if there is any doubt about it, let us amend the bill so that there can be no mistake that they must be legally in this country and not in some foreign land.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman enlighten us as to why the date September 1, 1939, was put in there in any event?

Mr. FISH. I must ask some member of the Committee on Immigration, because I am merely an humble member of the Rules Committee and have no knowledge of the reason. I cannot imagine what was in their minds. We do not want the parents of those who were in 1 or 2 years before we went to war to be given any preference. I only want to give these benefits to those who are fighting our battles, after the Congress declared war. That is what the bill does, except with reference to this date.

Mr. CELLER. Perhaps it has something to do with the Selective Training and Service Act?

Mr. FISH. I am for this bill in principle, but unless it is amended I will oppose it. I will oppose it certainly if this date, September 1939, is not stricken out. This reflects on 100,000,000 people in America, or 80 percent of our people, who tried to keep out of war or were opposed to going into war until we were attacked by the Japs at Pearl Harbor.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. GEARHART. I just want to supply information in answer to the question of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] in reference to inserting the date, September 1939: That is when Hitler ordered the beginning of the march into Poland, and I suppose that accounts for that date.

Mr. FISH. As I understand, at that time certain nations were guaranteeing the territorial integrity of Poland, and now some nations are talking about taking away a third of Poland.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to my colleague from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. May I say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] and the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART] that if you are going to move the date back to September 1939, as the date the war began, for God's sake let us move it back to the time Mussolini invaded Ethiopia.

Mr. FISH. I do not think the gentleman goes far enough; it would be better to go back to the time Hitler came to power, in 1933.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 additional minutes.

In view of the fact that one of the purposes of the bill is to do justice to those in the armed forces, many who are fighting in Africa, in New Guinea, and the far Pacific, in the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force, let me refer to the fact that 24 American bombers were lost last night, involving probably a loss of 240 men, many of whom were officers. I would like to take this occasion to ask some member of the House Military Affairs Committee what is being done to draft the 840,000 men on the Government pay rolls away from their desks here in Washington or elsewhere into the armed forces of the United States? While we are discussing now doing something for those who are already in, what are we doing to put some 840,000 who are qualified to serve in the armed forces, but who are now holding soft, safe jobs in the Government? Are we going on to the 10th of July and adjourn without doing something about that? Are we not competent to consider that? Are we going to wash our hands like Pontius Pilate; are we going to remain silent now and let these slackers hide away in Government dugouts. If I had my way, I do not care if the individual involved were a Cabinet officer, if he were 40 years old or younger, or an undersecretary of a department, or anyone else, because the higher the official position the more reason he should set an example. I would see that he was called into the service without further delays or deferments. I understand 89,000 deferments have been granted to Federal employees and that is exactly 89,000 too many.

Mr. Speaker, let us do something about this before we adjourn if we want to give encouragement to the men in service. There should be not one single deferment given to any of the bureaucrats or men on the Government pay roll except for physical disability.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS].

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I have been listening to the discussion of this rule, to what is being said, which, when printed, becomes public property susceptible of being used in the world-wide propaganda battles being carried on. This bill ought not to be considered now. The rule ought not to be adopted. It ought to be the general policy now to avoid the consideration of items of legislation not important, not emergency, but provocative utterances on the floor of the House calculated to disturb the good accord existing between this country and the rest of the countries with whom we are fighting this World War. That is fundamentally sound.

With reference to this particular item of legislation, it is urged that we must do this for the men who are fighting on our side, must give to their alien parents an opportunity to become citizens of this country without filing the application to become citizens required now by our law. All other applicants are required to file an application and presumably for good reasons. I would like to stress this. You cannot tell me that the observations that have already been made on the floor of this House and those that will probably be made if this rule is voted upon will tend to strengthen the good accord between this country and China, for instance, or even such loyal Japanese as we may have in this country. What is the use of this sort of business?

Here are men among our armed forces with parents who are not American citizens. These soldiers have the same interest in preserving liberty for themselves and their parents that other soldiers have. We have a good system now for the people who desire to become citizens of this country, assuming they are in this country. What is the use of disturbing that now? What is the hurry about it? Is there any reason why any man who is fit to be an American citizen should not be grateful for the opportunity of his parents to be in this country, if they are here now, who otherwise would be abroad—who are here now and are protected and are being offered citizenship if they comply with the requirements of the law? The men who are fighting on our side in this war, whom we have admitted to citizenship, will not be offended if we in America do not disturb this situation during the war, or if we adopt the policy I have suggested of leaving in status quo these relatively unimportant controversial matters until we shall have won the war. It is time to watch our step all along the line. There is much loose, inconsiderate talk; things said in the heat of debate might be used to much disadvantage in these dangerous times of great nerve stress everywhere. Too much talk. There are some people who know all about what we should do after the war. They have everything figured out, talking their heads off—a world remade on paper in their own private libraries. All sorts of arguments are going on and all sorts of advantages are being taken of the fact we are at war, in order to promote various pet theories, some of them to the great hurt of our own solidarity.

The great dominating purpose in America now should be to win this war. It is not won yet. We not only should avoid doing hurt to solidarity and good accord with our fighting allies but avoid the premature consideration of things calculated to provoke internal bickering and discord. Our smart boys ought to restrain themselves in some of their talking as far as possible until we win the war. It is a pity that in the distribution of intelligence, a few people were given what others do not have, the wisdom to penetrate the curtain of battle smoke that enshrouds the earth and know now what the resources of the world are going to be, and who is going to sit at the head of the council table. It is all right to be thinking about these things, but the principal thing for all of us to concentrate on now is not post-war, but winning the war, keeping all controversial and distracting things out of the picture until the war is won. The psychological reaction that every time we take a little island in the neighborhood of Italy we are winning this war is bad.

The psychology that we are bound to win this war is bad. It is much like a political campaign. The Members here know something about that. There is no psychology on earth more dangerous than that you have got a political cinch. The same thing is true in war. The best psychology on earth when you have a fight on your hands is that you are fighting a dangerous foe and could lose. There is no vitalizing unifying force like that. All this talk about what we are going to do after the war as though we had it all but won, is not good. These items of legislation in here, calculated to provoke dangerous controversies and dangerous utterances, are not good. We are at war. We must make ourselves, the American people, conscious of our danger. We should stop going around peddling the idea that we are bound to win this war. We must be careful here where unfortunate words spoken may do irreparable hurt. I hope I am not appearing as though I am trying to lecture anybody. I was never more certain of a thing in my life than that we ought to adopt a general policy in the Congress of holding in status quo things such as this bill proposes to deal with, and many others, until we get through this war.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES], a member of the committee.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I should like, if I can, to clarify things a little. The only intention of the committee in proposing this legislation was to give to noncitizen parents of boys now serving in our armed forces the right to an immediate hearing for citizenship if they want such hearing. It is said that these parents feel there is a sort of stigma against them as alien enemies, or at least, as aliens, yet their own sons are fighting in our forces in all parts of the world just the same as sons of American citizens. That is the intention of the bill, and we will amend it if necessary with that in mind. If you do not think this is the kind of legislation you want in this country, good and well; vote against it; but let us go at this thing sanely and not get all excited about it; and let us not misunderstand the intent and purpose of the bill as we go along.

I appreciate the statement the gentleman from Texas made just now and I would go even further than he did: There are a lot of things we can put off until after this war is over that we are doing these days; but that is another question. The thing for us to bear in mind now is whether we want this particular legislation or whether we do not.

This legislation does not confer any immediate citizenship on these people; they have to make application and have a hearing in court just the same as has always been the case. The only thing this bill provides is that they do not have to file declarations of intention. They do, however, have to file petitions, to go into court and have exactly the same kind of hearing as anybody else who makes application. Their applications are investigated just the same as anybody else's and they have the same kind of hearing. Then the court decides whether they should become citizens or not. From the discussion here today one would think that the mere passage of this legislation would make these people citizens. This is not correct at all. The bill just states that they may come in now if they are qualified rather than wait 2 years to have the hearing; that is all. We have similar legislation on the statute books at the present time providing that certain other groups may do that same thing. I am certainly not in favor of letting the bars down on this immigration question. I do not think this legislation does it. If I thought so, I would oppose it.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI].

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the Members to the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] with reference particularly to the date September 1, 1939. Public Law 507 passed in the Seventy-seventh Congress for the purpose of dealing with American-born boys who served in the Canadian and English Armies is based on the date September 1, 1939. As far as the date is concerned I assure the gentleman that we could just as well make it December 8, 1941.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LESINSKI. I yield.

Mr. BROOKS. Does not the gentleman think it wiser to wait until the war is over before we take up these questions of citizenship?

Mr. LESINSKI. As far as citizenship is concerned I assure the gentleman that these people have worked on farms, in sawmills, and coal mines and did not have the advantages of people living in cities. That is the reason for this bill.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

BILL PREMATURELY BEFORE THE HOUSE

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill is prematurely before the House. Its provisions are asked for on the basis of honorable service by the sons of these people who would be naturalized. We will not know whether or not their services have been honorable until the war is over. Under this bill, if enacted into law, a young man enters the service today, his parents may apply for naturalization tomorrow and possibly after naturalization—I am not presuming this will happen, but it is possible—that young man could be dishonorably discharged for sabotage of the war effort, yet the parents would be and would remain naturalized citizens of the United States. There is no way to tell or to determine whether or not the service of one during this way has been honorable until the service has been performed, and it will not be performed until this war is over. The exact language of the bill is as follows:

SEC. 801. Any person not a citizen of the United States whose son or daughter is a citizen of the United States and has served or is serving honorably in the military or naval forces of the United States during the present war and who, if separated from such service, was separated under honorable conditions, may be naturalized upon compliance with all the requirements of the naturalization laws, except that no declaration of intention shall be required, and the provisions of section 326 of this act shall not apply to a petition filed under this section: Provided, That the petition is filed not later than 1 year after the termination of the present war. For the purposes of this section, the present war shall be deemed to have commenced on September 1, 1939, and shall continue until such time as the United States shall cease to be in a state of war.

ONLY BILLS THAT WILL AID WAR EFFORT SHOULD BE BROUGHT IN BY THIS COMMITTEE

I regret that the committee brings in bills of this type during the war. I think there is one major bill that should be considered and that is a bill that will aid in the prosecution of the war. I refer to the bill to amend the Chinese Exclusion Act. If this Congress fails to take the action that is necessary to cultivate good will with China and then Japan succeeds in getting more Chinese soldiers on her side—she has 2,000,000 on her side now—and eventually wins China over and we lose a lot of men over there by reason of that, the parents of these young men who are lost will possibly blame the Congress for not cultivating good will with China and keeping China in the war when it was possible for her to help do our fighting.

Since this bill is not in aid of the prosecution of the war it should not be brought up until after the war is over.

RULE SHOULD BE DEFEATED

Mr. Speaker, I hope the rule on this bill is defeated and at the same time I hope serious consideration will be given to the bill that will aid in the prosecution of the war and that is the bill to amend the Chinese Exclusion Act. I believe that is a very serious matter and I know that all the parents in this country who have sons in the service would like to see China do all the fighting that China wants to do. We cannot expect to have her do that fighting unless we cultivate good will and keep China in the war. As long as that act remains upon the statute books unchanged the Japanese can use it to very fine advantage in propagandizing China and creating prejudice against the United States, eventually causing an alliance between China and Japan which we want to prevent if we can.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Does the gentleman go so far in his opinion as to believe that we ought to grant to Orientals the right to come here and become citizens?

Mr. PATMAN. I am willing to help China now. We need China in this war. I am not afraid of letting down the immigration bars on the quota basis so far as China is concerned. We can deal with this problem as it arises, but we need to do something about it now.

Mr. DEWEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DEWEY. I am particularly interested in the statement the gentleman from Texas has made in regard to establishing good relations with China. I wonder if the gentleman has considered the possible aftermath of the war. Here is a great country that is about to enter an industrial revolution, with four to five hundred million people, who have an economic situation complementary to our own. Winning the war is our No. 1 problem now.

Mr. PATMAN. We can deal with that problem when we get to it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS].

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I want to address myself not only to this particular measure now before us but to two other bills that are scheduled to follow immediately, namely, H. R. 1291 and H. R. 1295. When I speak in opposition to these three measures I am not only speaking for myself but I am authorized to speak for the American Legion.

Any fair-minded person who looks back over our history of immigration and naturalization will, I believe, confess that it is more by dint of great good fortune than because of good sense and long-range planning that America has profited richly through its acquisition of peoples of foreign stock.

Even though we have had almost unlimited resources to develop, a tremendous industrial expansion to feed, and a vast geographical empire to absorb a rapid population growth, the evidence is plain that we have somewhat poorly assimilated the great mass of foreign peoples who have been attracted, for one reason or another, to seek a home in America.

The principal trouble is that we have not had a consistent, far-sighted national immigration policy. Personal and private interest, rather than the general welfare and the national interest, has been the guiding factor in such controls and restrictions as we have exercised. If there has ever been a national viewpoint expressed, it has been how fast can we absorb foreign stock economically, rather than in what volume can we assimilate newcomers ethnologically, socially, and politically. For several decades we have been rather proud to think of America as the "great melting pot" and have deluded ourselves in the belief that there was something in the American atmosphere which just automatically makes desirable, devoted, productive citizens from any kind of raw material.

That we have been wrong hardly needs argument, and it is no reflection on our foreign-born citizens or Americans of foreign stock who are so fully worthy of their citizenship to say so. Neither does it successfully contradict my viewpoint to offer in evidence the tremendous contributions which the comparative newcomers have made in every generation toward the growth and expansion of America. That is universally understood, and I know no reasonable person who does not gladly recognize the prominent part these men and women have taken in our development.

There still remains on the debit side of our immigration history a great many unsolved racial, social, and political problems and difficulties which are largely traceable to our failure to assimilate the immigrants we have admitted. You need look no further than these proposals we are now considering for the proof. As example, it is proposed here that we drop practically every qualifying requirement and grant citizenship almost automatically to aliens 50 years of age or over who have resided in this country since 1924. I say to you that there is something wrong with the individual or with the national policy, or something wrong with both, when we have to admit that there are aliens of long-term residence in America who cannot meet the childishly simple qualifying requirements we impose for citizenship. Any person who is so little interested or so mentally limited as to be unable after 20 years to speak, read, and write simple English, and to pass a mental examination that would be easy for any normal child of grade-school age seems to me to be hardly worthy of the precious privilege of American citizenship.

In opposing such purely sentimental proposals as this, I want to stress the fact that citizenship for the foreign born is indeed a privilege; and nothing more than a privilege. It is in no sense a right of any alien, but merely an opportunity which may be granted at the discretion of the American people in return for certain assurances, among them that the individual will offer his undivided loyalty and devotion to the country of his adoption, and that he may reasonably be expected to live as a self-supporting, productive unit in the national family of which he asks to become a part.

Wherever national, rather than private, interest has influenced our immigration and naturalization policies, I am afraid it has always been emotional, rather than rational. Keenly aware of our own priceless privileges and opportunities, we have always been generous in our willingness to share with peoples less fortunate. Now, when suffering, degradation, and despair are the lot of whole nations, compassion may very easily sway sound, far-sighted judgment. We already have numerous proposals to relax our restrictions, and will doubtless face a growing pressure to offer a haven to all suffering people.

We naturally want to deal as generously as possible, but we will be doing the world and ourselves a disservice if we forget for a minute that our first duty is to our own people, and our first responsibility is to insure our own security and welfare during the remainder of the war and the difficult readjustment period still ahead.

Mr. Speaker, this rule should be voted down, because the proposal is purely emotional, it does not help our national interest, it does not serve our country. We are at war. All of these proposals to amend our immigration and naturalization laws should be delayed until after the war when we can consider the problem in the light of conditions existing at that time.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield for an observation?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes; I feel it is historically true that America has been blessed throughout her history by this intermixture of nationalities. Ours has been a glorious melting pot, but at times we have had too much "slag" in the pot. I think the gentleman is correct. Now is the time to call a halt and view this matter with great caution. Now the whole world wants to come here. We must guard the gates. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SADOWSKI. I want to make this observation to the gentleman. I do not like to disagree with the gentleman in what he says, because I recognize the gentleman as a very fine and able Member of this body. But here is a true fact: A Rumanian family or an Italian family, that may be just as loyal and patriotic as the gentleman or I am, is definitely labeled as alien enemies; are they not, right now? Here is a Rumanian father and mother who would not go back to Rumania and do not want to see any part of it, who have a son serving in our armed forces.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. I decline to yield any further.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman one-half additional minute.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Of course, many of these aliens are loyal and patriotic. The President, by Executive order, has excepted from the classification "alien enemy" all persons whom the Attorney General of the United States "shall, after investigation fully establishing their loyalty, certify as persons loyal to the United States." I can, therefore, see no good reason for the particular measure.

Mr. SADOWSKI. But they are labeled as enemy aliens.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. I would not want to waive existing law as this bill would do, and give preference to this particular class of aliens. I hope that the rule will be defeated.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of the time to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT].

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, there are certain bills which in wartime should not be brought before the Congress of the United States for debate. This bill is one of them. The other two bills which are to follow this one, if the rule should be adopted, are of that class. The proposal to repeal the Chinese Exclusion Act is another. To debate highly controversial bills of this kind in Congress while we are at war is calculated to create disunity and dissension, both among ourselves and our allies, to a greater extent almost than anything else the Congress could do. No possible good can come to the people whom the legislation is supposed to benefit. On the other hand it may cause great harm to them.

I would not for anything in the world criticize any committee of this House, but I am going to take this occasion to be quite frank. I am going to speak about the general policy of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization in respect to liberalizing the established requirements both for the immigration and naturalization of aliens. Those of you who have been here for a considerable time, as I have, cannot help being aware of the fact that year after year the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization has been continuously bringing to this House for its consideration bills which have had for their purpose the lowering of immigration and naturalization standards. I think definitely that this bill is one of them.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES of Kansas. The gentleman has just made a statement that this committee has brought in legislation letting down the bars. What about the Nationality Act of 1940? Has the gentleman read that measure?

Mr. MOTT. I did not say that the committee had never brought in good legislation.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I understand that, but the implication as I gathered it was that the committee was trying to let down the bars.

Mr. MOTT. I simply stated as a fact, with which I believe a majority of the House will agree, that the general policy of this committee has been to let down or reduce the long-established and thoroughly tested immigration and naturalization requirements. I say that that has been the tendency. That tendency is plainly evident in this bill. That is the purpose of the bill and the rule on this bill, therefore, should be voted down.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DICKSTEIN) there were—ayes 33, noes 122.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the preferential motion that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DICKSTEIN) there were—ayes 106, noes 28.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 54 minutes p. m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, June 15, 1943, at 11 o'clock a. m.
